And towards others, or those who are within as well as those who are without; *Let your speech be always with grace, v. 6. Let all your discourse be as becomes Christians, and with a deference to your profession; savoury, discreet, seasonable. Though it be not always of grace, it must be always with grace; and though the matter of our discourse be that which is common, yet there must be an air of piety upon it, and it must be in a Christian manner, seasoned with salt. Grace is the salt which seasons our discourse, makes it savoury, and keeps it from corrupting. That ye may know how ye ought to answer every man. One answer is proper for one man, and another for another man, Prov. 26. 4, 5. We have need of a great deal of wisdom and grace to give proper answers to every man; particularly in answering the questions and objections of adversaries against our religion; giving the reasons of our faith, and shewing the unreasonableness of their exceptions and cavils, to the best advantage for our cause, and least prejudice to ourselves. Be ready always to give an answer to every man, who asketh a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear, 1 Pet. 3. 15.

7. All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellow-servant in the Lord: 3. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts; 9. With Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here. 10. Aristarchus, my fellow-prisoner, saluteth you; and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him;) 11. And Jesus, who is called Justus; who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. 12. Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. 13. For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

14. Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you. 15. Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house. 16. And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. 17. And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it. 18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

In the close of this epistle the apostle does several of his friends the honour to leave their names upon record, with some some respect, which will be spoken of wherever the gospel comes, and last to the end of the world.

1. Concerning Tychicus, v. 7. By him this epistle was sent; and he does not give them an account in writing of his present state, because Tychicus would do it by word of mouth more fully and particularly. He knew they would be glad to hear how it fared with him. The churches cannot but be concerned for good men, and they are a constant state. He gives him this character, A beloved brother and faithful minister. Paul, though a great apostle, owns a faithful minister for a brother and a beloved brother. Faithfulness in any one is truly lovely, and renders him worthy our affection and esteem. And a fellow-servant in the Lord. Ministers are servants of Christ, and fellow-servants to one another. They have one Lord, though they have different stations and capacities of service. Observe, It adds much to the beauty and strength of the gospel-ministry, when ministers are thus loving and condescending one to another, and by all just means support and advance one another's reputation. Paul sent him not only to tell them of his affairs, but to bring him an account of their's; Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts, 3. He was sent back from Rome along with Tychicus. This was he whom Paul had befriended in his bonds, (Philemon 10.) who had been servant to Philemon, and who was a member, if not a minister, of their church. He was converted at Rome, whither he had fled from his master's service; and is now sent back, it is probable, with the epistle to Philemon, to introduce him again into his master's familiars. Observe, Though he was a poor servant, and had been a bad man, yet, being now a convert, Paul calls him a faithful and beloved brother. The finest circumstances of life, and greatest wickedness of former life, makes no difference in the spiritual relation among sincere Christians: they partake of the same privileges, and are entitled to the same regards. The righteousness of God by faith of Jesus Christ is unto all, and upon all, them that believe; for there is no difference, (Rom. 3. 22.) and there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 28. Perhaps this was sometime after he was converted, and sent back to Philemon; and by this time he had entered into the ministry, because Paul calls him a brother.
3. Aristarchus, a fellow-prisoner. They who join in services and sufferings, should be thereby engaged to one another in holy love, and endeavored to one another. Paul had a particular affection for his fellow-servants; and it was befitting and just that they should return affection. They would have been religionists and lovers of the religious, if they had not been such to one another. See 2 Tim. 4. 10. 25.

4. Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas. This is supposed to be the same who wrote the gospel which bears his name. If he come unto you, receive him. Paul had a quarrel with Barnabas upon the account of this Mark, who was his nephew, and thought not good to take him with them; because he departed from them Pamphylia, and went not with them to Cyprus. 15. 38. He would not take Mark with him, but took Silas, because Mark had deserted them; and yet Paul is not only reconciled to him himself, but recommends him to the respect of the churches, and gives a great example of a truly Christian and forgiving spirit. If men have been guilty of a fault, it must not be always remembered against them. We must forget as well as forgive. If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual, restore such one in the spirit of meekness, Gal. 6. 1.

5. Here is one who is called Jesus, which is the Greek name for the Hebrew Joshua. If Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day, Heb. 4. 8. Who is called Justus. It is probable that he changed it for the name of Justus, in honour to the name of the Redeemer. Or else Jesus was his Jewish name, for he was of the circuit of Jews, and Justus is Rod to or Latin name. These are my fellow-labourers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. Observe what comfort the apostle had in the communion of saints and ministers. One is his fellow-servant, another his fellow-prisoner, and all his fellow-workers, who were working out their own salvation, and endeavouring to promote the salvation of others. Great minis...of those who are their fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God. Their friendship and converse together are a great refreshment under the sufferings and difficulties in their way.

6. Epaphras, (v. 12.) the same with Epaphroditus. He is one of you, one of your church; he salutes you, or sends his service to you, and his best affections and wishes. Always labouring fervently for you, in the prayer of petition for you, as he was commanded of Paul to be much in prayer for his friends. Observe here,

(1.) In what manner he prayed for them. He laboured in prayer; laboured fervently; and always laboured fervently for them. They who would succeed in prayer, must take pains in prayer; and we must be earnest in prayer, not only for ourselves, but for others also. It is the effectual fervent prayer which is the prevailing prayer, and availeth much; (Jam. 5. 16.) and Elias prayed earnestly that it might not rain, v. 17.

(2.) What is the matter of this prayer; That ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Observe, To stand perfect and complete in the will of God, is what we should earnestly desire both for ourselves and others. We must stand complete in the will of God; in the will of his precepts, by a universal obedience; and in the will of his providence, by a cheerful submission to it; and we stand perfect and complete in both by constancy and perseverance unto the end. The apostle was witness for Epaphras, that he had a great zeal for them; "I bear record; I can testify for him that he has a great concern for you, and罹 him, he does it with a spirit from a warm desire for your good." And his zeal was great about them; to them who are in Laodicea and Hierapolis. He had a great concern for the Christian interest in the neighbouring places, as well as among them.

7. Luke is another here mentioned, whom he calls the beloved physician. This is he who wrote the Gospel and Acts, and was Paul's companion. Observe, He was both a physician and an evangelist. Christ had given him both taught and healed, and was the great Physician as well as Prophet of the church. He was the beloved Physician; one who recommended himself more than ordinary to the affections of his friends. Skill in physic is a useful accomplishment in a minister, and may be improved to more extensive usefulness and greater esteem among Christians.

8. Demas. Whether this was written before the second epistle to Timothy, or after, is not certain. There we read, (2 Tim. 4. 10.) Demas has forsaken me, having loved this present world. Some have thought that this epistle was written after; and then it is an evidence, that though Demas forsook Paul, yet he did not forsake Christ; or he forsook him but for a time, and recovered himself again, and Paul forgave him, and owned him as a brother. But others think more probable, that this epistle was written before the other; this is an usage of the ancients, that and then it is an evidence, that as a man Demas was, who yet afterward revolted. Many who have made a great figure in profession, and gained a great name among Christians, have yet shamefully apostatized; They went forth from us, because they were not of us, 1 John 2. 19.

9. The brethren in Laodicea are here mentioned. They may very well have the name of brethren, because they send salutations to them, and orders that this epistle should be read in the church of the Laodiceans; (v. 16.) that a copy of it should be sent thither, to be read publicly in their congregation. And some think Paul sent another epistle at this time to Laodicea, and ordered them to send for that from Laodicea, and read it in their church; And that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. If so, that epistle is now lost, and did not belong to the canon; for all the epistles which the apostles ever wrote, were not preserved, any more than all the words and actions of our blessed Lord; There are many other things which Jesus did, which if they should be written every one, I suppose the world itself could not contain the books which should be written; John 21. 25. But some think it was the epistle to the Ephesians, which is still extant. Acts 19. 35. And as Demas is mentioned, (v. 15.) as one who lived at Colosse, and had a church in his house; either a religious family, where the several parts of worship were daily performed; or some part of the congregation met there, when they had no public places of worship allowed, and they were forced to assemble in private houses for fear of their enemies. The disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews; John 20. 19.) and the apostle preached in his own lodging and hired house, Acts 28. 29. 30. In the former sense it shewed his exemplary piety; in the latter his zeal and public spirit.

11. Concerning Archippus, who was one of their ministers at Colosse. They are bid to admonish him, to mind his work as a minister, to take heed to it and to fulfil it; to be diligent and careful of all the parts of it, and to persevere in it unto the end. They may send in design of their ministry, without troubling themselves or the people with things foreign to it, or of less moment. Observe, (1.) The ministry we have received, is a great honour; for it is received in the Lord, and is by his appointment and command. (2.) They who have received it, must fulfil it, or do the full duty of it. They bravely took it up; and will have account at last, who do this work of the Lord negligently. (3.) Their people may put their ministers in mind of their duty, and excite them to it; Say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry; though, no

After the introduction, (v. 4.) the apostle begins with a thanksgiving to God for the saving benefits bestowed on them, v. 2. 5. And then mentions the sure evidences of the good success of the gospel among them, which was notorious and famous in several other places, v. 6. 10.

1. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians.

THESSALONICA was formerly the metropolis of Macedonia; it is now called Salonichi, and is the best peopled, and one of the best towns for commerce, in the Levant. The apostle Paul, being diverted from his design of going into the provinces of Asia, properly so called, and directed after an extraordinary manner to preach the gospel in Macedonia, (Acts 16. 9. 10.) in obedience to the call of God went from Tarsus to Samothracia, from thence to Neapolis, and from thence to Philippi, where he had good success in his ministry; but met with hard usage, being cast into prison with Silas his companion in travel and labour; from whence being wonderfully delivered, they comforted the brethren there, and departed. Passing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where the apostle planted a church that consisted of some believing Jews, and many converted Gentiles, Acts 17. 1—4. But a tumult being raised in the city by the unbelieving Jews, and the lewd and baser sort of the inhabitants; Paul and Silas, for their safety, were sent away by night unto Berea; and afterward Paul was conducted to Athens, leaving Silas and Timotheus behind him, but sent directions that they should come to him with all speed.

When they were come, Timotheus was sent to Thessalonica, to inquire after their welfare, and to establish them in the faith, (1 Thess. 3. 2.) who returned to Paul while he tarried at Athens, and was sent again, together with Silas, to visit the churches in Macedonia. So that Paul, being left at Athens alone, (1 Thess. 3. 1.) departed from the city to Corinth, where he continued a year and a half; in which time Silas and Timotheus returned to him from Macedonia, (Acts 18. 5.) and then he wrote this epistle to the church of Christ at Thessalonica; which, though it is placed after the other epistles of this apostle, is supposed to be first in time of all Paul's epistles, and to be written about A. D. 51.

The main scope is to express, the thankfulness of this apostle for the good success his preaching had among them, to establish them in the faith, and persuade them to a holy conversation.

12. Concerning Paul himself; (v. 18.) The salutation of me Paul. Remember my bonds. He had a scribe to write all the rest of the epistle, but these words he wrote with his own hand; Remember my bonds. He does not say, "Remember I am a prisoner, and send me supply," but, "Remember I am in bonds as the apostle of the Gentiles, and let that confirm your faith in the gospel of Christ:" it adds weight to his exhortation; I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you to walk worthy, Eph. 4. 1. "Grace be with you. The free favour of God, and all good, the blessed fruits and effects of it, be with you, and your portion."

ans which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

In this introduction we have,

1. The inscription; where we have, (1.) The persons from whom this epistle came, or by whom it was written: Paul was the inspired apostle and writer of this epistle, though he makes no mention of his apostleship, which was not doubted by the Thessalonians, or opposed by any fasle apostles among them. He joins Silvanus [or Silas] and Timotheus with himself; (who were now come to him with an account of the prosperity of the churches in Macedonia;) which shews this great apostle's humility, and how desirous he was to put honour upon the ministers of Christ who were of an inferior rank and standing. A good example this is to such ministers as are of greater abilities and reputation in the church than some others.

(2.) The persons to whom this epistle is written, namely, the church of the Thessalonians, the converted Jews and Gentiles in Thessalonica: and it is observable, that this church is said to be in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: they had fellowship with the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, 1 John 1. 3. Therefore they were a Christian church, because they believed in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ. They believed the principles both of natural and revealed religion. The Gentiles among them were turned to God from idols, and the Jews among them believed Jesus to be the promised Messiah. All of them were devoted and dedicated to God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: to God as their chiefest Good and highest End: to Jesus Christ as their Lord and Mediator between God and man. God the Father is the Original and Centre of all natural religion; and Jesus Christ is the Author and Centre of all revealed religion. Ye believe in God, says our Saviour, believe also in me, John 14. 1.

2. The salutation or apostolical benediction; Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the same for substance as in the other epistles. Grace and peace are well joined together; for the free Grace and favour of God are the spring and fountain of all the peace and prosperity we do or can enjoy; and where there are gracious dispositions in us, we may hope for peaceful thoughts in our own breast: both grace and peace, and all spiritual blessings, come to us from God the Father and the Lord, Jesus Christ; from God the Original of all good, and from the Lord Jesus the Purchaser of all good for us; from God the Father, and so our Father in covenant, because he is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Note, As all good cometh from God, so no good can be hoped for by sinners but from God in Christ. And the best good may be expected from God as our Father for the sake of Christ.

2. We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers; 3. Remembering without ceasing our work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father; 4. Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God. 5. For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

I. The apostle begins with thanksgiving to God. Being about to mention the things that were matter of joy to him, and highly praise-worthy in them, and greatly for their advantage, he chooses to do this by way of thanksgiving to God, who is the Author of all that good that comes to us, or is done by us, at any time. God is the Object of all religious worship, of prayer and praise. And thanksgiving to God is a great duty, to be performed always or constantly: even when we do not actually give thanks to God by our words, we should have a grateful sense of God's goodness upon our minds. Thanksgiving should be often repeated; and not only should we be thankful for the favours we ourselves receive, but for benefits bestowed on others also; upon our fellow-creatures and fellow-Christians. The apostle gave thanks not only for those who were his most intimate friends, or most eminently favoured of God, but for them all.

II. He joined prayer with his praise or thanksgiving; When we in every thing by prayer and supplication make our requests known to God, we should join thanksgiving therewith, Phil. 4. 6. So when we give thanks for any benefit we receive, we should join prayer. We should pray always, and without ceasing; and should pray not only for ourselves, but for others also; for our friends, and should make mention of them in our prayers. We may sometimes mention their names, and should make mention of their case and condition; at least, we should have their persons and circumstances in our minds; remembering them without ceasing.

Note, As there is much that we ought to be thankful for on the behalf of ourselves and our friends, so there is much occasion of constant prayer for their further supplies of good.

III. He mentions the particulars for which he was so thankful to God; namely,

1. The saving benefits bestowed on them. These were the grounds and reasons of his thanksgiving.

(1.) Their faith, and their work of faith. This, he tells them, (v. 8.) was very famous, and spread abroad. This is the radical grace; and their faith was a true and living faith, because a working faith. Note, Wherever there is a true faith, it will work; will have an influence upon heart and life; it will put us upon working for God and for our own salvation. Then we have comfort in our own faith and the faith of others, when we perceive the work of faith. Shew me thy faith by thy works, Jam. 2. 18.

(2.) Their love and the labour of love. Love is one of the cardinal graces; it is of great use to us in this life, and will remain and be perfected in the life to come. Such works of love: it shews itself in the exercise of love to God, and love to our neighbour. As love will shew itself by labour, it will put us upon taking pains in religion.

(3.) Their hope, and the patience of hope: We are saved by hope: This grace is compared to the soldier's helmet and sailor's anchor, and is of great use in times of danger. Wherever there is a well-grounded hope of eternal life, that will appear by the exercise of patience. In the exercise of the graces of the present time, and a patient waiting for the glory to be revealed. For if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it, Rom. 8. 25.

(4.) The apostle not only mentions these three cardinal graces, faith, hope, and love, but also takes notice,

[1.] Of the Object and efficient Cause of these graces, our Lord Jesus Christ.

[2.] Of the sincerity of them—being in the sight of God even our Father. The great motive to sincerity is the apprehension of God's eye as always upon us; and it is a sign of sincerity, when in all we do we endeavour to approve ourselves to God; and that is right, which is so in the sight of God. Then is the work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope, sincere, when it is done as under the eye of God.

3. He mentions the fountain from whence these graces flowed—God's electing love; knowing brethren beloved, your election of God, v. 4. Thus he runs up these streams to the fountain, and that was God's eternal election. Some by their election of God would understand only the temporary separation of the Thessalonians from the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles in their conversion; but this was according to the eternal purpose of him who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will, Eph. 1. 11. Speaking of their election, he calls them, brethren beloved: for the original of the brotherhood that is between Christians, and the relation wherein they stand one to another, is, election. And that is a good reason why we should love one another, because we are all loved of God, and were loved of him in his counsels when there was not any thing in us to merit his love. The election of these Thessalonians was known to the apostle, and therefore recorded by him. He knew, that as fruits and effects thereof—their sincere faith, and hope, and love; by the successful preaching of the gospel among them. Observe, First, All those who in the fulness of time are effectually called and sanctified, were from eternity elected and chosen to salvation.

Secondly, The election of God is of his own good pleasure and mere grace, not for the sake of any merit in them who are chosen.

Thirdly, The election of God may be known by the fruits thereof.

Fourthly, Whenever we are giving thanks to God for his grace either to ourselves or others, we should run up the streams to the fountain, and give thanks to God for his electing love, by which we are made to differ.

2. Another ground or reason of the apostle's thanksgiving, is, the success of his ministry among them. He was thankful on his own account as well as their's, that he had not laboured in vain. He had the seal and evidence of his apostleship hereby, and great encouragement in his labours and sufferings. Their ready acceptance and entertainment of the gospel he preached to them was an evidence of their being elected and beloved of God. It was by this way that he knew their election. It is true, he had been in the third heavens; but he had not searched the records of eternity, and found their election there, but knew this by the success of the gospel among them, (v. 5.) and he takes notice with thankfulness,

(1.) That the gospel came to them also not in word only, but in power; they not only heard the sound of it, but submitted to the power of it. It did not merely tickle the ear and please the fancy; fill their heads with notions, and amuse their minds for a while; but it affected their hearts: a divine power went along with it, for convincing their consciences and amending their lives. Note, By this we may know our election, if we not only speak of the things of God by rote as parrots, but feel the influence of those things in our hearts, mortifying our lusts, weaning us from the world, and raising us up to heavenly things.

(2.) It came in the Holy Ghost, that is, with the powerful energy of the divine Spirit. Note, Wherever the gospel comes in power, it is to be attributed to the operation of the Holy Ghost; and unless the Spirit of God accompanies the word of God, to render it effectual by his power, it will be to us but as a dead letter; and the letter killeth, the Spirit giveth life.

3. The gospel came to them in much assurance Thus did they entertain it by the power of the Holy Ghost. They were fully convinced of the truth of it, so as not to be easily shaken in mind by objections and doubts; they were willing to leave all for Christ, and to venture their souls and everlasting condition on the very word of the gospel-revelation. The word was not to them, like the sentiments of some philosophers, about matters of opinion and doubtful speculation, but the object of their faith and assurance. Their faith was the evidence of things not seen; and the Thessalonians thus knew what manner of men the apostle and his fellow-labourers were among them, and what they did for their sake, and with what good success.

4. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost: 7. So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. 8. For from you sounded the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing. 9. For they themselves shew us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; 10. And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come.

In these words we have the evidence of the apostle's success among the Thessalonians, which was notorious and famous in several places. For,

1. They were careful in their holy conversation to imitate the good examples of the apostle and ministers of Christ, v. 6. As the apostle took care to demean himself well, not only for his own credit's sake, but for the benefit of others, by a conversation suitable to his doctrine, that he might not pull down with one hand what he built up with the other; so the Thessalonians, who observed what manner of men they were among them, how their preaching and living were all of a piece, shewed a conscientious care to be followers of them, to imitate their good example. Herein they became also followers of the Lord, who is the perfect example we must strive to imitate; and they should be followers of others no further than they are followers of Christ. (1 Cor. 11. 1.) The Thessalonians acted thus, notwithstanding their afflictions, that much affliction which the apostles and themselves also were exposed to. They were willing to share in the sufferings that attended the embracing and professing Christianity. They entertained the gospel, notwithstanding the troubles and hardships which attended the preachers and professors of it. It happens this made the word more precious, being dear-bought; and the examples of the apostles shined very bright under their afflictions; so that the Thessalonians embraced the word cheerfully, and followed the example of the suffering apostles joyfully, with joy in the Holy Ghost; such solid and spiritual and lasting joy as the Holy Ghost is the Author of, who, when our afflictions do abound, maketh our consolations much more abound.

II. Their zeal prevailed to that degree, that they were themselves examples to all about them, v. 7, 8. Observe here,

1. Their example was very effectual to make good
I. THESALONIANS, II.

In this chapter, the apostle puts the Thessalonians in mind of the manner of his preaching among them, v. 1. 6. Then of the manner of his conversation among them, v. 7. 12. Afterward of the success of his ministry, with the effects had on himself and believers (v. 13. 16.) and then apologizes for his absence, v. 17. 20.

1. FOR yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain: 2. But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. 3. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanliness, nor in guile: 4. But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts. 5. For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; God is witness: 6. Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

Here we have an account of Paul's manner of preaching, and his comfortable reflection upon his entrance in among the Thessalonians. As he had the testimony of his own conscience witnessing to his integrity, so he could appeal to the Thessalonians how faithfully he, and Silas and Timotheus, his fathers in Christ, had discharged their office; Ye yourselves, brethren, knew our entrance in unto you. Note, It is a great comfort to a minister, to have his own conscience and the consciences of others witnessing for him, that he set out well, with good designs and from good principles; and that his preaching was not in vain, or, as some read it, was not vain. The apostle here comforts himself either in the success of his ministry, that it was not in vain; or, (whether we refer it to our translation,) or, as others think, reflecting upon the sincerity of his preaching, that it was not vain and empty, or deceitful and treacherous. The subject-matter of the apostle's preaching was not vain and idle speculations about useless niceties and foolish questions, but sound and solid truth, such as was most likely to profit his hearers. A good example this, to be imitated by all the ministers of the gospel. Much less was the apostle's preaching vain or deceitful. He could say to these Thessalonians what he told the Corinthians; (2 Cor. 4. 2.) We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully. He had no sinister or worldly design in his preaching; which he puts them in mind to have been.

With courage and resolution; We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God, v. 2. The apostle was inspired with a holy boldness, nor was he discouraged at the afflictions he met with, or the opposition that was made against him. He had met with ill usage at Philippi, as these Thessalonians well knew; there it was that he and Silas were shamefully entreated, being put in the stocks; yet no sooner were they set at liberty than they went to Thessalonica, and preached the gospel with much boldness as ever. Note, Suffering in a good cause should rather sharpen than blunt the edge of holy resolution. The gospel of Christ, at its first setting out in the world, met with much opposition; and they who preached it, preached it with contention, with great agony: which denoted either the apostles' striving in their preaching, or their striving against the opposition they met with. The apostle's comfort, he was neither daunted in his work, nor driven from it.

II. With great simplicity and godly sincerity; Our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanliness, nor in guile, v. 3. This, no doubt, was matter of the greatest comfort to the apostle—the consciousness of his own sincerity; and was one reason of his success. It was the sincerest, (and uninterrupted gospel he preached, and exhorted them to believe and obey. His design was not to set up a faction to draw men over to a party, but to promote pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father. The gospel he preached, was without deceit, it was true and faithful; it was not fallacious, nor a cunningly devised fable. Nor was it of uncleanliness. His gospel intentions were expressed in a manner simple, and sincerely, and without deceit.

pel was pure and holy, worthy of its holy Author, tending to discountenance all manner of impurity. The word of God is pure. There should be no corrupt mixtures therewith; and as the matter of the apostle's exhortation was true and pure, the manner of his speaking was without guile. He did not pretend one thing, and intend another. He believed and therefore he spoke. He had no sinister and secular aims and views, but was in reality what he seemed to be. The apostle not only asserts his sincerity, but subjoins the reasons and evidences thereof. The reasons are contained, v. 4.

1. They were stewards; put in trust with the gospel: and it is required of a steward, that he be faithful. The gospel which Paul preached, was not his own, but the gospel of God. Note, Ministers have a great favour shown them, and honour put upon them, and trust committed to them. They must not dare to corrupt the word of God: they must diligently make use of what is intrusted with them, so as God hath allowed and commanded, knowing they shall be called to an account, when they must be no longer stewards.

2. Their design was to please God, and not men. God's will is the truth, and requires truth in the inward parts; and if sincerity be wanting, all that we do cannot please God. The gospel of Christ is not accommodated to the vain fancies and lusts of men, to gratify their appetites and passions: but, on the contrary, it was designed for the mortifying of their corrupt affections, and delivering them from the power of fancy, that they might be brought under the power of faith. If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ, Gal. 1. 10.

3. They acted under the consideration of God's omniscience, as in the sight of him who tries our hearts. This is indeed the great motive to sincerity, to consider, God not only seeth all that we do, but knoweth our thoughts afar off, and searcheth the heart. He is well acquainted with all our aims and designs, as well as our actions. And it is from this God who trieth our hearts, that we must receive our reward.

The evidences of the apostle's sincerity follow; and they are these:

(1.) He avoided flattery; Neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, v. 5. He and his fellow-labourers preached Christ and him crucified, and did not aim to gain an interest in men's affections for themselves, by glowing, and fawning, and flatter; nor did they smear men's sins; nor did they flatter men in their sins; nor tell them, if they were of his party, they might live as they listed. He did not flatter them with vain hopes, or indulge them in any evil work or way, promising them life, and so dawning with untempered mortar.

(2.) He avoided covetousness. He did not make the ministry a cloak, or a covering, for covetousness, as God was wisdom, v. 5. His design was not to enrich himself by preaching: so far from that, he did not condition with them for bread. He was not like the false apostles, who, through covetousness, with jeoned words made merchandise of the people, 2 Pet. 2. 3.

(3.) He avoided ambition and vain-glory; nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, v. 6. They expected neither people's purses nor their caps, neither the honour and reward, nor care for their gear, by them, and called Rabbi. This apostle exhorts the Galatians, (ch. 5. 26.) not to be desirous of vain-glory; his ambition was to obtain that honour which comes from God, John 5. 44.

He tells them, they might have used greater authority as apostles, and expected greater esteem, and demanded maintenance, which is meant by the phrase of being burdensome; because perhaps some would have thought this too great a burthen for them to bear.

7. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children: 8. So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. 9. For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for, labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God. 10. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe: 11. As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12. That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

In these words the apostle reminds the Thessalonians of the manner of their conversation among them. And,

1. He mentions the gentleness of their behaviour; We were gentle among you, v. 7. He shewed great mildness and tenderness, who might have acted with the authority of an apostle of Christ. Such a behaviour greatly recommends religion, and is most agreeable to God's gracious dealing with sinners, in and by the gospel. This great apostle, though he abhorred and avoided flattery, was most condescending to all men. He accommodated himself to all men's capacities, and became all things to all men. He shewed the kindness and care of a nurse that cherishes her children. This is the way to win people, rather than to rule with rigour. The word of God is indeed powerful; and as it comes often with awful authority upon the minds of men, as it always has enough in it to convince every impartial judgment, so it comes with the more pleasing power, when the ministers of the gospel recommend themselves to the affections of the people. And as a nursing mother bears with frowardness in a child, and condescends to mean offices for its good, and draws out her breast, cherishing it in her bosom; so in like manner should the ministers of Christ behave toward their people. The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, and patient, 2 Tim. 2. 24. This gentleness and goodness the apostle expressed several ways.

1. By the most affectionate desire of their welfare; Being affectionately desirous of you, v. 8. The apostle had a most affectionate love to their persons, and sought them, not their's; themselves, not their goods; and to gain them, not to be a gainer by them, or to make a merchandise of them: it was their spiritual and eternal welfare and salvation that he was earnestly desirous of.

2. By great readiness to do them good; willingly imparting to them, not the gospel of God only, but also their own souls, v. 9. See here the manner of Paul's preaching. He spared no pains therein. He was willing to run hazards, and venture his soul, or life, in preaching the gospel. He was willing to spend and be spent in the service of men's souls; and as they who give bread to the hungry from a charitable principle, are said to impart their souls in what they give, (Isa. 58. 10.) so did the apostles in giving forth the bread of life; so dear were these Thessalonians in particular to this apostle, and so great was his love to them.

3. By bodily labour to prevent their charge; or that his ministry might not be expensive and burdensome to them; Ye remember our labour and travail; for, labouring night and day, &c. v. 9. He denied himself the liberty he had of taking wages from the churches. To the labour of the ministry he added that of his calling, as a tent-maker, that he might be an example to them; and here we are to suppose that the apostle spent the whole night and day in bodily labour, or work, to supply the necessities of his body; for then he would have had no time for the work of the ministry. But he spent part of the night, as well as the day, in this work; and was willing to forego his rest in the night, that he might have an opportunity to do good to the souls of men in the day. The work of God is a good work; it is the work of salvation for the souls of men, before the ministers of the gospel, to be industrious for the salvation of men’s souls: though it will not follow that they are always obliged to preach freely. There is no general rule to be drawn from this instance; either that ministers may at no time work with their hands, for supply of their outward necessities, or that they ought always so to do.

4. By the holiness of their conversation concerning which Paul only speaks to them, but to God also; (v. 10.) Ye are witnesses, and God also. They were observers of their outward conversation in public before men, and God was witness not only of their behaviour in secret, but of the inward principles from whence they acted. Their behaviour was holy toward God, just towards all men, and unblamable, without giving cause of scandal or offence; and they were careful to give no offence either to them who were without, or to them who believed, that they might give no ill example; that their preaching and living might be all of a piece. Herein, said this apostle, do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men, Acts 24. 16.

II. He mentions their faithful discharge of the work and office of the ministry, v. 11, 12. Concerning this also, he could appeal to them as witnesses. Paul and his fellow-labourers were not only good Christians, but faithful ministers. And we should not only be good as to our general calling as Christians, but in our particular callings and relations. Paul exhorted the Thessalonians, not only informing them in their duty, but exciting and quickening them to the performance of it, by proper motives and arguments. And he comforted them also, endeavouring to cheer and encourage them in this, under difficulties and discouragements they might meet with. And this he did not only publicly, but privately also, and from house to house; (Acts 20. 20.) and charged every one of them by personal addresses: this, some think, is intended by the similitude of a father’s charging his children. This expression also denotes the affectionate and compassionate temper in which Paul administered this apostolic exhortation. He was their spiritual father; and as he cherished them like a nursing mother, so he charged them as a father, with a father’s affection rather than a father’s authority. As my beloved sons, I warn you, 1 Cor. 4. 14.

The manner of this apostle’s exhortation ought to be regarded by ministers in particular for their imitation; and it is the manner of the most faithful and successful ministers of the gospel. It is the manner in which God’s word is truly, wise, just, and faithful work, like its Author, lives and abides for ever. Let us accordingly receive and regard it.

2. By the wonderful operation of this word they received; It effectually worketh in them that believe, v. 13. They who by faith receive the word, find it profitable. It doeth good to them that walk uprightly, and by its wonderful effects evidences itself to be the word of God. This converts their souls, and enlightens their minds, and rejoices their to that end. 2. What is our great gospel-duty—that we walk worthy of God; that the temper of our minds and tenour of our lives be answerable to this call, and suitable to this privilege. We should accommodate ourselves to the intention and design of the gospel, and live suitably to our profession and privileges, our hopes and expectations, as becomes those who are called with such a high and holy calling.

15. For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe. 14. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews; 15. Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men; 16. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

Here observe, I. The apostle makes mention of the success of his ministry among these Thessalonians, (v. 13.) which is expressed,

1. By the manner of their receiving the word of God; When ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God. Where note, (1.) The word of the gospel is preached by men like ourselves, men of like passions and infirmities with others; We have this treasure in earthen vessels. The word of God, which these Thessalonians received, they heard from the apostles. (2.) However, it is in truth the word of God. Such was the word the apostles preached by divine inspiration, and such is that which is left upon record, written in the scriptures by divine inspiration; and such is that word which in our days is preached, being either cemented, or evidenced founded on, or deduced from, these sacred oracles. (3.) They are greatly to blame, who give out their own fancies or injunctions for the word of God. This is the vilest way of imposing upon people, and to deal unfaithfully. (4.) They are also to blame, who, in hearing the word, look no further than to the ministry of men, or the words of men, who are only, or chiefly, pleased with the eloquence of the style, or the beauty of the composition, or the voice and manner in which the word is preached, and expect to receive their advantage herein. (5.) We should receive the word of God as the word of God, with affections suitable to the holiness, wisdom, verity, and goodness, thereof. The words of men are frail and perishing, like themselves, and sometimes false, foolish, and fickle; but God’s word is truly, wise, just, and faithful work, like its Author, lives and abides for ever. Let us accordingly receive and regard it.

2. By the wonderful operation of this word they received; It effectually worketh in them that believe, v. 13. They who by faith receive the word, find it profitable. It doeth good to them that walk uprightly, and by its wonderful effects evidences itself to be the word of God. This converts their souls, and enlightens their minds, and rejoices their

1. hearts; (Ps. 19.) and such as have this inward testimony of the truth of the scriptures, the word of God, by the effectual operations thereof on their hearts, have the best evidence of their divine original to themselves, though this is not sufficient to convince others who are strangers thereto.

2. He mentions the good effects which his successful preaching had, 1. Upon himself and fellow-labourers. It was a constant cause of thankfulness; For this cause, thank we God without ceasing, v. 13. The apostle expresses his thankfulness to God so often upon this account, that he never could be sufficiently thankful that God had counted him faithful, and put him into the ministry, and made his ministrations successful.

2. Upon themselves. The word wrought effectually in them, not only to be examples unto others in faith and good works, (which he had mentioned before,) but also in constancy and patience under sufferings and trials for the sake of the gospel; Ye became followers of the churches of God, and have suffered like things as they have done, (v. 14.) and with like courage and constancy, with like patience and hope. Note, The cross is the Christian's mark: if we are called to suffer, we are called only to be followers of the churches of God; so persecuted they the prophets that were before you, Matt. 5. 12. It is a good effect of the gospel, when we are enabled to suffer for its sake. The apostle mentions the sufferings of the churches of God in Judea were in Christ Jesus. Those in Judea first heard the gospel, and they first suffered for it: for the Jews were the most bitter enemies Christianity had, and were especially enraged against their countrymen who embraced Christianity. Note, Bitter zeal and fiery persecution will set countrymen at variance, and break through all the bonds of nature as well as of civil and religious. In every city where the apostles went to preach the gospel, the Jews stirred the inhabitants up against them. They were the ringleaders of persecution in all places; so in particular it was at Thessalonica; (Acts 17. 5.) The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar. Upon this occasion, the apostles were obliged to leave the Jewish country, (v. 15.) enough to justify their final rejection, and the ruin of their place, and church, and nation, which was now approaching.

1. They killed the Lord Jesus, and impudently and presumptuously wished that his blood might be on them and their children.

2. They killed their own prophets: so they had done all along; their fathers had done so: they had been a people, a race, a generation, a nation, ever since the murder of the Lord Jesus, which was now approaching.

3. They hated the apostles, and did them all the mischief they could. They persecuted them, and drove and chased them from place to place: and no marvel, if they killed the Lord Jesus, that they persecuted his followers.

4. They pleased not God. They had quite lost all sense of religion, and due care to do their duty to God. It is that same mistake he thinks that they did God service by killing God's servants. Murder and persecution are most hateful to God, and cannot be justified on any pretence; it is so contrary to natural religion, that no zeal for any true or only pretended institution of religion can ever excuse it.

5. They were contrary to all men. Their persecuting spirit was a perverse spirit; contrary to the light of nature, and contrary to humanity; contrary to the welfare of all men, and contrary to the sentiments of all men not under the power of bigotry.

6. They had an implacable enmity to the Gentiles, and envied them the offers of the gospel; for bidding the apostles to speak to them, that they might be saved. The means of salvation had long been confided to the Jews. Salvation is of the Jews, says our Saviour. And they were envious against the Gentiles, and angry that they should be admitted to share in the means of salvation. Nothing provoked them more than our Saviour's speaking to them at any time concerning this matter; this enraged the Jews at Jerusalem, when, in his defence, Paul told them, he was sent unto the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. They heard him patiently till he uttered these words, but then could endure no longer; but lifted up their voice, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth, for he is not fit that he should live from the earth. Thus did the Jews fill up their sins; and nothing tends more to any person or people's filling up the measure of their sins, than opposing the gospel, obstructing the progress of it, and hindering the salvation of precious souls. For the sake of these things, wrath is come upon them to the uttermost; that is, wrath was determined against them, and would soon overtake them. It was not many years after this, that Jerusalem was destroyed, and the Jewish nation cut off by the Romans. Note, When the measure of any man's iniquity is full, and he has sinned to the uttermost, then comes wrath, and that to the uttermost.

17. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. 18. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us. 19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? 20. For ye are our glory and joy.

In these words the apostle apologizes for his absence.

Here observe,
1. He tells them they were involuntarily forced from them; We, brethren, were taken from you, v. 17. Such was the rage of his persecutors. He was unkindly sent away by night to Beroea, Acts 17. 10.
2. Though he was absent in body, yet he was present in heart. He had still a remembrance of them, and great care for them.
3. Even his bodily absence was but for a short time; (the time of an hour;) time is short, all our time on earth is short and uncertain, whether we are present with our friends, or absent from them. This world is not a place where we are always, or long, to be together. It is in heaven that holy souls shall meet, and never part more.
4. He earnestly desired, and endeavoured to see them again; We endeavoured more abundantly to see your face with great desire, v. 17. So that the apostle, at least, intended his absence should be but for a short time. His desire and endeavour were to return again very soon to Thessalonica. But men of business are not masters of their own time. Paul did his endeavours, and he could do no more, v. 18.
5. He tells them, Satan hindered his return; (v. 18.) that is, either some enemy or enemies, or the great enemy of mankind, who stirred up opposition to Paul, either in his return to Thessalonica, when he intended to return thither, or stirred up such contentions or dissensions in those places whither he went, as made his presence necessary. Note, Satan is a constant enemy to the work of God, and does all he can to obstruct it.
6. He assures them of his affection and high esteem for them, though he was not able, as yet, to be present with them, according to his desire. They were his hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing; his glory and joy. These are expressions of great and endured affection and high estimation. And it is happy, when ministers and people have such mutual affection and esteem of each other; and especially if they shall thus rejoice, if they that sow, and they that reap, shall then rejoice together, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming.

This chap. more puts the Thessalonians in mind, that though he could not come to them as yet, and though he should never be able to come to them, yet our Lord Jesus Christ will come, nothing shall hinder that. And further, when he shall come, all must appear in his presence, or before him. Ministers and people must all appear before him, and faithful people will be the glory and joy of faithful ministers in that great and glorious day.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, the apostle gives further evidence of his love to the Thessalonians, reminding them of his sending Timothy to them, with the mention of his design therein, and his inducements so to do, v. 1—5. He acquainted them also with his great satisfaction at the return of Timothy, with good tidings concerning them, v. 6—9. He concludes with fervent prayers for them, v. 11, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone; 2. And sent Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith; 3. That no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that we are appointed thereby. 4. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know. 5. For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter had tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

In these words the apostle gives an account of his sending Timothy to the Thessalonians: though he was hindered from going to them himself, yet his love was such, that he could not forbear sending Timothy to them: though he was very useful to him, and could not well spare him, yet he was content, for their good, to be left alone at Athens. Note, Those ministers do not duly value the establishment and welfare of their people, who cannot deny themselves in many things for that end. Observe,

1. The character he gives of Timothy; (v. 2.) We sent Timotheus, our brother. Elsewhere he calls him his son, here he calls him brother. Timothy was Paul's junior in age, his inferior in gifts and graces, and of a lower rank in the ministry: for Paul was an apostle, and Timothy but an evangelist; yet Paul calls him brother. This was an instance of the apostle's humility, and shewed his desire to put honour upon Timothy, and to recommend him to the esteem of the churches. He calls him also a minister of God. Note, Ministers of the gospel of Christ are ministers of God, to promote the Kingdon of God among men. He calls him also his fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ. Note, Ministers of the gospel must look upon themselves as labourers in the Lord's vineyard; they have an honourable office and hard work, yet a good work. This is a true saying, If any man desire the office of a bishop, he desires a good work, 1 Tim. 3. 1. And ministers should look upon one another as fellow-labourers; and should therefore love one another, and strengthen one another's hands, not strive and contend one with another, (which will hinder their work,) but strive together to carry on the great work they are engaged in, that is, to preach and publish the gospel of Christ, and to persuade people to embrace and entertain it, and live suitably thereto.

2. The end and design why Paul sent Timothy to establish them, and comfort them concerning their faith, v. 2. Paul had converted them to the Christian faith, and now he was desirous that they might be confirmed and comforted; that they might be confirmed in the choice they had made of the Christian religion, and be comforted in the profession and practice of it. Note, The more we are comforted, the more we shall be confirmed; because, when we see ourselves hail a guilty, a miserable people, and have to endure all our losses, and reward all our labours.

III. The motives inducing Paul to send Timothy for this end—a godly fear or jealousy, lest they should be moved from the faith of Christ, v. 3. He was desirous that no man, no one among them, should be moved or shaken in mind; that they should not apostatize, or waver in the faith. And yet he apprehended there was danger, and feared the consequence. 1. There was danger by reason of affliction and persecution for the sake of the gospel, v. 3. These Thessalonians could not but perceive what afflictions the apostle and preachers of the gospel met with, and that might possibly stumble them; and also those who made profession of the gospel, were persecuted, and without doubt these Thessalonians themselves were afflicted. 2. By reason of the tempter's subtlety and malice. The apostle was afraid, lest by some means the tempter had tempted them, v. 5. The Devil is a subtle and unwearying tempter, who seeks an opportunity to beguile and destroy us, and takes all advantages against us, both in a time of prosperity and adversity; and has often been successful in his attacks upon persons under afflictions. He has often prejudiced the minds of many against religion, on account of the sufferings its professors are exposed to. We have reason therefore to be jealous over ourselves and others, lest we be insnared by him. The consequence the apostle feared, was, lest his labour should be in vain. And thus it would have been, if the tempter had tempted them, and prevailed against them, to move them from the faith. They had lost what they had wrought, and the battle were lost, and what he laboured for. Note, It is the Devil's design, to hinder the good fruit and effect of the preaching of the gospel. If he cannot hinder ministers from labouring in the word and doctrine, he will, if he be able, hinder them of the success of their labours. Note also, Faithful ministers are much concerned about the success of their labours. No one would willingly labour in vain; and ministers are loth to spend their strength, and pains, and time, for nought.

To prevent this danger, with its bad consequence, the apostle tells them what care he took in sending Timothy. (1.) To put them in mind of what he had told them before concerning suffering tribulation, v. 4. He says, (v. 3.) We are appointed therefore that is, unto afflictions. So is the will and purpose of God, that through many afflictions we must enter into his kingdom. Their troubles and persecutions did not come by chance, not merely from the wrath and malice of the enemies of religion, but by the appointment of God. It only came to pass according as God had determined, and they knew he had told them before it would be so; that they should not think it strange, and, being fore-warned, they should be fore-armed. Note, The apostles were so far from flattering people with an expectation of worldly prosperity in religion, that, on the contrary, they told them plainly they must count upon trouble in the flesh. And herein they followed the example of their great Master, the Author of our faith. Besides, it might prove a confirmation of their faith, when they perceived, that it only happened to them as was predicted before.

(2.) To know their faith: that so he might inform the apostles, whether they remained steadfast under all their sufferings, whether their faith failed or not. Because, if their faith did fail, they would be able to stand their ground against the tempter and all his temptations: their faith would be a shield, to defend them against all the fiery darts of the wicked, Eph. 6. 16.

6. But now, when Timothy came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you; 7. Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you, in all our affliction and distress, by your faith: 8. For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. 9. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God; 10. Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith!

Here we have Paul's great satisfaction upon the return of Timothy with good tidings from the Thessalonians. In which we may observe,

I. The good report Timothy made concerning them, v. 6. Without question, he was a willing messenger of the good tidings. Concerning their faith, concerning their steadfastness in the faith, that they were not shaken in mind, nor turned aside from the profession of the gospel. Their love also continued; their love to the gospel, and the ministers of the gospel. For they had a good and a kind remembrance of the apostles, and that constantly, or always. Their names were very dear to them; and the thoughts of them, and what they had received from them, were very precious, insomuch that they desired greatly to see them again, and receive some spiritual gift from them; and there was no love lost, for the apostle was as desirous to see them. It is happy where there is such mutual love between minister and people. This tends to promote religion, and the success of the gospel. The world hates them, and therefore they should love one another.

II. The great comfort and satisfaction the apostle had concerning their faith; (v. 7. 8.) Therefore, brethren, we were comforted in all our affliction and distress. The apostle thought this good news of them was sufficient to balance all the troubles he met with. It was easy to him to bear affliction, or persecution, or fightings from without, when he found the good success of his ministry, in the constancy of the converts he had made to Christianity; his distress of mind on account of his fears within, lest he had laboured in vain, was now in a good measure over, when he understood their faith, and the perseverance of it. This put new life and spirit into the apostle, and made him vigorous and active in the work of the Lord. Thus he was not only comforted, but greatly rejoiced also; Now we have proof, says the apostle, v. 8. It would have been a killing thing to the apostle, if the professors of religion had been unstedfast, or proved apostates, whereas nothing was more encouraging than their constancy.

III. The effects of this were thankfulness and prayer to God on their behalf.

1. Observe, How thankful the apostle was, v. 9. Heavens full of joy, and full of praise and thanksgiving. When their faith was most cheerful, we should be most thankful. What we rejoice in, we should give thanks for. This is to rejoice before our God, to spiritualize our joy. Paul speaks, as if he could not tell how to express his thankfulness to God, or his joy and rejoicing for their sakes. But he was careful God should not lose the glory of the comfort he received in the welfare of his friends. His heart was enlarged to love to them, and with thanksgiving to God. He was willing to express the one and the other, as well as he could. That he was thankful to God, this especially is very imperfect in the present state; but when we come to heaven, we shall do this work better than now we can.

2. He prayed for them night and day, (v. 10.) evening and morning, or very frequently; in the midst of the business of the day, or slumber of the night, lifting up his heart to God in prayer. Thus we should therefore always. And Paul's prayer was fervent prayer. He prayed exceedingly, and earnest in his supplication. Note, When we are most thankful, we should also give ourselves to prayer; and those we give thanks for, have need to be prayed for. Those whom we most rejoice in, and who are our greatest comforts, must be our constant care, while in this world of temptation and imperfection. There was something still lacking in their faith; Paul desired that this might be perfected, and to see their face in order thereto. Note,

(1.) The best of men have something wanting in their faith; if not as to the matter of it, there being some mysteries or doctrines not sufficiently known or believed by them, yet as to the clearness and certainty of their faith, there being some remaining darknesses and doubts, at least as to the effects and operations of it, though being not so conspicuous and perfect as they should be.

(2.) The ministry of the word and ordinances is helpful, and to be desired and used for the perfecting of that which is lacking in our faith.

11. Now God himself and our Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you. 12. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: 13. To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

In these words we have the earnest prayer of the apostle. He desired to be instrumental in the further benefit of the Thessalonians, and the only way to do so while at a distance, was by their faith in them, together with his writing or sending to them. He desired that their faith might be perfected, which he could not be the proper cause or author of; for he pretended not to dominion over their faith, nor to have the donation of it, and he therefore concludes with prayer for them. In which observe,
I. Who he prays to, namely, God and Christ. Prayer is a part of religious worship, and all religious worship is due unto God only. Prayer is here made to God, even the Father and our Father; and also to Christ, even our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore Jesus Christ our Lord is God, even as God our Father is God. Prayer is to be offered to God as our Father. So Christ taught his disciples to pray; and so the Spirit of adoption prompteth them to pray, to cry, Abba, Father. Prayer is not only to be offered in the name of Christ, but offered up to Christ himself, as our Lord and our Saviour.

II. He prays for, and with respect to himself and his fellow-labourers, then on behalf of the Thessalonians.

1. He prays that they might have a prosperous journey to them by the will of God; that their way might be directed to them, v. 11. The taking of a journey to this or that place, one would think, is a thing depending so much on a man’s own will, and lies so much in his own power, that Paul needed not by prayer to go to God about it. But the apostle knew that in God we live, and move, and have our being; that we depend upon God in all our motions and actions, as well for the continuance of life and being; that Divine Providence orders all our affairs, and that it is owing thereto if we prosper therein; that God our Father directs and orders his children whether they shall go, and what they shall do; that God Jesus Christ in particular, Jn III. 16. directs the motion of his faithful ministers, those stars which he holds in his right hand. Let us acknowledge God in all our ways, and he will direct our paths.

2. He prays for the prosperity of the Thessalonians. Whether he should have an opportunity of coming to them or not, yet he earnestly prays for the prosperity of their souls. And there are two things he desired for them, which we should desire for ourselves and others:

(1.) That they might increase and abound in love, (v. 12.) in love to one another, and in love to all men. Note, Mutual love is required of all Christians; and not only that they love one another, but that they also have a charitable disposition of mind, and due-concern for the welfare of all men. Love is of God, and is the fulfilling of the gospel as well as of the law. Love is an obedient symbol of their faith, yet something was lacking therein; and of their charity and love, yet the apostle prays that that might increase and abound. Note, We have reason to desire to grow in every grace; and have need of the Spirit’s influence in order to growth in grace; and the way to obtain that, is, prayer. We are beholden to God not only for the stock put into our hands at first, but for the improvement of it after. And to our prayer we must add endeavour. To excite this in the Thessalonians, the apostle again mentions his love, his abounding love, toward them. The more we are beloved, the more affectionate we should be.

(2.) That they might be established unblamable in holiness, v. 13. This spiritual benefit is mentioned as an effect of increasing and abounding love; to that, therefore, we must now direct and direct our prayers. Note, The more we grow and abound in grace, and particularly in the grace of love, the more we are established and confirmed in it. Note also, Holiness is required of all those who would go to heaven, and that therein we must be unblamable; we must act in every thing so that we may not in the least contradict the profession we make of holiness. Our desire should be to have our hearts established in holiness before God, and be preserved safe to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and that we may be unblamable before God, even the Father, now, and be presented blameless before the throne of his glory, when the Lord Jesus will come with all his saints. Note, [1.] The Lord Jesus will certainly come, and come in his glory. [2.] When he comes, his saints will come with him; they shall appear with him in glory. [3.] Then the excellency as well as the necessity of holiness will appear; because, without this no hearts shall be established at that day, nor shall any one be unblamable, or avoid everlasting condemnation.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, the apostle gives earnest exhortations to abound in holiness, with a caution against uncleanness, enforcing some duties, v. 1. He then mentions the great duties of brotherly love, and quietness with industry in our callings, v. 9. And concludes with comforting them who mourned for their relations and friends that died in the Lord, v. 15.

1. FURTHERMORE then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you, by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. 2. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. 3. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: 4. That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; 5. Not in the list of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles who know not God: 6. That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. 7. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

Here we have,

1. An exhortation to abound in holiness, to abound more and more in that which is good, v. 1, 2. In which we may observe,

1. The manner in which the exhortation is given —very affectionately. The apostle treats them as brethren; he calls them so, and loved them as such. Because his love to them was very great, he exerted them very earnestly. We beseech and exhort you. The apostle was unwilling to take any denial, and therefore repeats his exhortation again and again.

2. The matter of his exhortation; that they would abound more and more in holy walking, or excel in those things that are good, in good works. Their faith was justly famed abroad, and they were already examples to other churches; yet the apostle would have them yet further to excel others, and to make further progress in holiness. Note, (1.) Those who most excel others, fall short of perfection. The very best of us should forget those things which are behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before. (2.) It is not enough that we abide in the faith of the gospel, but we must abound in the work of faith. We must not only persevere to the end, but we should grow better, and walk more evenly and closely with God.

3. The arguments with which the apostle enforces his exhortation. (1.) They had been informed of their duty. They knew their Master’s will, and could not plead their ignorance as an excuse. Now as faith, so knowledge, is dead without practice. They had received of them who had converted them to Christianity, or been taught of them, how they ought to walk. Observe, The design of the gospel is, to teach men not only what they should believe, but also how they ought to live: so not much to fill men's minds with notions, as to regulate their temper and behaviour. The apostle taught them how to walk, not how to talk. To walk well without living well, will never bring us to heaven: for the character of those who are in Christ Jesus, is this; (2.) They walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. (3.) Another argument is, that the apostle taught and exhorted them in the name, or by the authority, of the Lord Jesus Christ. He was Christ's minister and ambassador, declaring to them that which was the will and commandment of the Lord Jesus. (3.) Another argument is this. Herein they would please God. Holy walking is most pleasing to the holy God, who is glorious in holiness. This ought to be the aim and ambition of every Christian, to please God, and to be accepted of him. We should not be menpleasers, or flesh-pleasers, but should walk so as to please God. (4.) The rule according to which they were to live was what Christ had given them by the Lord Jesus Christ; which were the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ himself, because given by authority and direction from him, and such as were agreeable to his will. The apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ were only commissioned by him to teach men to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them, Matt. 28. 20. Though they had great authority from Christ, yet that was to teach men what Christ had commanded, not to give forth commandments of their own. They did not act as lords over God's heritage, (1 Pet. 5. 3.) nor should any do so, that pretend to be their successors. The apostle could appeal to the Thessalonians, who knew what commandments he gave them, that they were no other than what he had received from the Lord Jesus.

II. A caution against uncleanness, that being a sin directly contrary to sanctification, or that holy walking which he so earnestly exhorts them to. This caution is expressed, and also enforced by many arguments.

1. It is expressed in these words; That ye should abstain from fornication, v. 3. By which words we are to understand all uncleanness whatsoever, either in a married or unmarried state. Adultery is of course included, though fornication is particularly mentioned. It is very great uncleanness, and forbidden, of which it is a shame even to speak, though they are done by too many in secret. All that is contrary to chastity in heart, speech, and behaviour, is contrary to the command of God in the decalogue, and contrary to that holiness which the gospel requires.

2. There are several arguments to enforce this caution against uncleanness.

1. This branch of sanctification in particular, is the will of God, v. 3. It is the will of God in general, that we should be holy, because he that called us is holy, and because we are chosen unto salvation through the sanctification of the Spirit. God requires holiness in the heart, and also purity in our bodies, and that we should cleanse ourselves from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Whose the body be, it ought to be devoted to God, and dedicated and set apart for him, it should be kept clean and pure for his service. And as chastity is one branch of our sanctification, so this is one thing which God commands in his law, and what his grace effects in all true believers.

2. This will be greatly for our honour; so much is plainly implied, v. 4. Whereas the contrary will be a great dishonour; And his reproach shall not be wiped away, Prov. 6. 33. The body is here called the vessel of the soul, that dwells therein, (so 1 Sam. 21. 5.) and that must be kept pure from defiling lusts. Every one should be careful in this matter, as he values his own honour, and will not be contemptible on this account; that his inferior appetites and passions gain not the ascendant, tyrannize over his reason and conscience, and enslave the superior faculties of his soul. What can be more dishonourable than for a rational soul to be enslaved by bodily affections and brutal appetites? (3.) To indulge the lusts of concupiscence, is to live and act like heathens; even as the Gentiles who know not God, v. 5. The Gentiles, and especially the Greeks, were commonly guilty of some sins of uncleanness, which were not so evidently forbidden by the light of nature. But they did not know God, or his mind and will, so well as the Jews did, and should know, this his will, namely, our sanctification in this branch of it. It is not so much to be wondered at, therefore, if the Gentiles indulge their fleshly appetites and lusts; but Christians should not walk as unconverted Gentiles, in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banqueting, &c. (1 Pet. 4. 3.) because they who are in Christ, have crucified the flesh with its appetites and lusts.

4. The passage next to the following, is a piece of unjustice that God will be the Avenger of; so we may understand those words, That no man go beyond or defraud his brother (v. 6.) in any matter—εἰ γὰρ σφαγματίζει, in this matter of which the apostle is speaking in the preceding and following verses, namely, the sin of uncleanness. Some understand these words as a further warning and caution against injustice and oppression, all fraud and deceit in our dealings with one another, which are certainly criminal, and contrary to the gospel. And Christians should not impose upon the ignorance and necessity of those they deal with, and so go beyond them, nor should they by equivocations or lying arts defraud them: and although this may be practised by some, and be long undiscovered, and so go unpunished among men, yet the righteous God will render a recompense. But the meaning may rather be, to show the injustice and wrong that in many cases are done by the sin of uncleanness. Not only are fornication and other acts of uncleanness sins against his own body who commits them, (1 Cor. 6. 18.) not only are they very injurious to the sinner himself both in soul and body; but sometimes they are very injurious, and no less than defrauding, acts of injustice to others; particularly to them who are joined together with him in the marriage-covenant, and the deeds of uncleanness are very precious. And as this sin is of such a heinous nature, so it follows, that God will be the Avenger of it. Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, Heb. 13. 4. This the apostle had forewarned and testified by his gospel; which, as it contained exceeding great and precious promises, so also it revealed from heaven the wrath of God against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, Eph. 2. 1. And the sin of uncleanness is contrary to the nature and design of our Christian calling; For God hath called us not unto uncleanness, but unto holiness, v. 7. The law of God forbids all impurity, and the gospel requires the greatest purity; it calls us from uncleanness unto holiness. (6.) The contempt therefore of God's law and gospel is the contempt of God himself. It is that deserveth that divorce which God man only. Some might possibly make light of the exceptions of purity and holiness, because they heard them from men like themselves; but the apostle lets them know that they were God's commands, and to violate them was no less than to despise God. He adds, God hath given Christians his Spirit; intimating that all sorts of uncleanness do in an especial manner grieve the Holy Spirit, and will provoke him to withdraw from us; and also the Holy
I. THESSALONIANS, IV.

Spirit is given unto us, to arm us against these sins, and to help us to mortify these deeds of the body, that we may live, Rom. 8. 13.

9. But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. 10. And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more: 11. And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; 12. That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

In these words the apostle mentions the great duties.

I. Of brotherly love. This he exhorts them to increase in yet more and more. The exhortation is introduced, not with a compliment, but with a commendation; because they were remarkable in the exercise of it, which made it less needful that he should write to them about it, v. 9. Thus by his good opinion of them he insinuated himself into their affections, and so made way for his exhortation to them. Note, It should be our aim in all our thoughts, acts, and words, to be so good, to their praise, that by so doing we may lay engagements upon them to abound therein more and more. Observe,

1. What it is that the apostle commends in them. It was not so much their own virtue as God's grace; yet he takes notice of the evidence they shewed of the grace of God in them. (1.) It was God's grace that he took special notice of: that God had taught them this good lesson; Ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another, v. 9. Whoever do that which is good, are taught of God to do it, and God must have the glory. All who are savaging taught of God, are taught this lesson, to love one another. This is the livery of Christ's family. Note also, The teaching of the Spirit exceeds the teachings of men; and as no man should teach contrary to what God teaches, so none can teach so effectually as he teaches; and men's teaching is vain and useless, unless God teach also. (2.) The Thessalonians gave good evidence of their being taught of God, by their love to the brethren in all Macedonia, v. 10. They not only loved those of their own city and society, or such as were near them, and just of their own sentiments; but their love was extensive. And a true Christian is so to all the saints, though distant from him in place, and differing from him in some opinions or practices of less moment.

2. The exhortation itself is, to increase more and more in this great grace and duty of brotherly love, v. 10. Though these Thessalonians had in some sense no need of an exhortation to brotherly love, as if it were wholly wanting; yet they must be exhorted to pray for more, and labour for more. There are none on this side heaven, who love in perfection. Those who are eminent in any other grace, have need of increase therein, as well as of perseverance unto the end.

II. Of quietness, and industry in their callings. Observe,

1. The apostle exhorts to these duties; that they should study to be quiet, v. 11. It is a most desirable thing, that we keep calm and quiet temper, and to be of a peaceable and quiet behaviour. To this we much to our own and others' happiness; and Christians should study how to be quiet. We should be ambitious and industrious how to be calm and quiet in our minds, in patience to possess our own souls, and to be quiet towards others; or of a meek and mild and gentle and peaceable disposition, not given to strife, contention, or division. Satan is very busy to disquiet us; and we have that in our own hearts, that disposes us to be unquiet; therefore let us study to be quiet. It follows, Do your own business; when we go beyond that, we expose ourselves to a great deal of inquietude. Those who are busy-bodies, meddling in other men's matters, generally have but little quiet in their own minds, and cause great disturbance of mind among their neighbours; at least, they seldom mind the other exhortation, to be diligent in their own calling, to work with their own hands. And yet this was what the apostle commanded them, and what is required of us also. Christianity does not discharge us from the work and duty of our particular callings, but teaches us to be diligent therein.

2. The exhortation is enforced with a double argument: Namely, (1.) So we shall live creditably. Thus we shall walk honestly, or decently, and creditably, toward them that are without, v. 12. This will be to act as becomes the gospel, and will gain a good report from them that are strangers, yea enemies to it. Note, It is a great ornament to a religion, when the professors of it are of meek and quiet spirits, diligent to do their own business, and not busy-bodies in other men's matters. (2.) We shall live comfortably, and have lack of nothing, v. 12. People often by their slothfulness bring themselves into narrow circumstances, and reduce themselves to great straits, and are liable to many wants; when such as are diligent in their own business, live comfortably, and have lack of nothing. They are not burdened to their friends, nor scandalous to strangers. They earn their own bread, and have the greatest pleasure in so doing.

13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. 14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 15. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. 16. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: 17. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. 18. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

In these words the apostle comforts the Thessalonians who mourned for the death of their relations and friends that died in the Lord. His design is to dissuade them from excessive grief, or inordinate sorrow, on that account. All grief for the death of friends is far from being unlawful; we may weep at least for ourselves if we do not weep for them, weep for our own loss, though that may be their gain. Yet we must not be immoderate or excessive in our sorrows, because.

1. This looks as if we had no hope, v. 13. It is to act too much like the Gentiles, who had no hope of a better life after this; whereas we Christians, who have a most sure hope, the hope of eternal life after this, which God, who cannot lie, hath promised us, should moderate all our joys and our sorrows on account of any worldly thing. This hope is more than enough to balance all our griefs upon the account of any of the crosses of the present time.

II. This is an effect of ignorance concerning those who are dead, v. 13. There are some things which we cannot but be ignorant of, concerning them that are dead, even concerning the state of the dead, there is no account of the dead, except to say, that they are in a land of darkness, which we know but little of, and have no correspondence with. To go among the dead, is to go among we know not whom, and to live we know not how. Death is an unknown thing, and the state of the dead, or the state after death, we are much in the dark about; yet there are some things concerning them especially who die in the Lord, that we need not, and ought not, to be ignorant of; and if these things are rightly understood and duly considered, they will be sufficient to allay our sorrow concerning them.

1. They sleep in Jesus. They are asleep, v. 13. They are fallen asleep in Christ, 1 Cor. 15. 18. Death does not annihilate them. It is but a sleep to them. It is their rest, an undisturbed rest. They are retired out of this troublesome world, to rest from the labor and heat of it, as they slept in Jesus, v. 14. Being still in union with him, they sleep in his arms, and are under his special care and protection. Their souls are in his presence, and their dust under his care and power; so that they are not lost, nor are they losers, but great gainers, by death, and their removal out of this world is into a better.

2. They shall be raised up from the dead, and awakened out of their sleep, for God will bring them with him, v. 14. They then are with God, and are better where they are than when they were here; and when God cometh he will bring them with him. The doctrine of the resurrection, and the second coming of Christ, is a great antidote against the fear of death, and inordinate sorrow for the death of our Christian friends; and this doctrine we have a full assurance of, because we believe that Jesus died and rose again, v. 14. It is taken for granted, that as Christians they knew and believed this. The death and resurrection of Christ are fundamental articles of the Christian religion, and give us hope of a joyful resurrection: for Christ, being risen from the dead, is become the first-fruits of them that slept; and therefore they who are fallen asleep in him, are not perished or lost, 1 Cor. 15. 18, 20. His resurrection, as well as all the other things, is said in the gospel, or by the word of the Lord, which has brought life and immortality to light.

3. Their state and condition shall be glorious and happy at the second coming of Christ. This the apostle informs the Thessalonians of by the word of the Lord, (v. 13.) by divine revelation from the Lord Jesus: for though the resurrection of the dead, and future state of blessedness, were part of the creed of the Gentiles, they must remain hid until the time of the end, and be plainly revealed in and by the gospel. By this word of the Lord we know, (1.) That the Lord Jesus will come down from heaven in all the pomp and power of the upper world; (v. 16.) The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout. He ascended up into heaven after his resurrection, and is passed through these material heavens into the third heavens, and must remain there until the coming of the Lord, that all things; and then he will come again, and appear in his glory. He will descend from heaven into this our air, v. 17. The appearance will be with pomp and power, with a shout—the shout of a king, and the power and authority of a mighty King and Conqueror, with the voice of the archangel; an innumerable company of angels will attend him; perhaps one, as General of those hosts of the Lord, shall give notice of his approach, and the glorious appearance of this great Redeemer and Judge shall be proclaimed and ushered in by the triumph of God. For the trumpet shall sound, and that will wake them that sleep in the dust of the earth, and shall summon all the world to appear. For,

(2.) The dead shall be raised; The dead in Christ shall rise first, (v. 16.) before those who are found alive at Christ’s coming, shall be changed; and so it appears that those who shall then be found alive, shall not prevent them that are asleep, v. 15. The first care of the Redeemer in that day, will be about his dead saints; he will raise them before the great change passes on them that shall be found alive; so that those who did not sleep in death, will have no greater privilege or joy at that day than those who fell asleep in Jesus.

(3.) They shall be found alive, will then be changed. They shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, v. 17. At, or immediately before, this rapture into the clouds, those who are alive will undergo a mighty change, that will be equivalent to dying. This change is so mysterious, that we cannot comprehend it, we know little or nothing of it, 1 Cor. 15. 51. This rapture in the fourth verse of 1 Thess. is the thing, and immortality; and these bodies shall be made fit to inherit the kingdom of God, which flesh and blood in its present state are not capable of. This change will be in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, (1 Cor. 15. 52.) in the very instant, or not long after the raising up of them that sleep in Jesus. And these who are raised, are thus changed, shall meet together in the clouds and there meet with their Lord, to congratulate him on his coming, to receive the crown of glory he will then bestow upon them, and to be assessors with him in judgment, approving and applauding the sentence he will then pass upon the prince of the power of the air, and all the wicked who shall be doomed to destruction with the Devil and his angels.

(4.) Here is the bliss of the saints at that day; they shall be ever with the Lord, v. 17. It will be some part of their felicity, that all the saints shall meet together, and remain together for ever: but the principal happiness of heaven is this, to be with the Lord, to see him, live with him, and enjoy him, for ever. This should comfort the saints upon the death of their pious friends: that although death has made a separation, yet their souls and bodies will meet again; and we and they shall meet together again: we and they with all the saints shall meet our Lord, and be with the Lord for ever, v. 18. This will be from him or from another for ever. And the apostle would have us comfort one another with these words, v. 18. We should endeavour to support one another in times of sorrow; not deaden one another’s spirits, or weaken one another’s hands, but should comfort one another; and that may be done by serious consideration and discourse on the many good reasons there are to expect the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, the second coming of Christ, and the glory of the saints in that day.

CHAP. V.

The apostle, seeming spoken in the end of the foregoing chapter concerning the resurrection of the dead, the second coming of Christ, proceeds to speak concerning the uselessness of inquiring after the particular time of Christ’s coming, which would be sudden and terrible to the wicked, but comfortable to the saints, v. 1. He then proceeds to the duties of watchfulness; sobriety, and the exercise of faith, love, and hope, as being suitable to their state, v. 6. 10. In the next words he exhorts them to several duties they owed to others, or to one another: v. 11. 15. afterward to several other Christian duties of great importance: (v. 16. 22.) and then concludes this epistle, v. 23. 25.
1. BUT of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. 2. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. 3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. 4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. 5. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

In these words, observe,
1. The apostle tells the Thessalonians, it was needless or useless to inquire about the particular time of Christ's coming; 2. Of the times and seasons, ye need not that I write unto you, v. 1. The thing is certain that Christ will come, and there is a certain time appointed for his coming; but there was no need that the apostle should write about that, and therefore he had no revelation given him; nor should they or we inquire into this secret, which the Father has reserved in his own power. Of that day and hour knoweth no man, not the angels of heaven, nor the Son of man; but the Father shall shew him when he will, 23:36. It was not to be unfolded to thae apostles, nor to any, 14:22. This was a thing of eternal consequence to them from the presence of the Lord, who to them that look for him will appear without sin unto their salvation, and will come to them as a friend in the day, not as a thief in the night.

6. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. 7. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken are drunken in the night. 8. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation. 9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. 10. Who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

On what had been said, the apostle grounds seasonable exhortations to several needful duties.

1. To watchfulness and sobriety, v. 6. These duties are distinct, yet they mutually befriend one another. For while we are compassed about with so many temptations to intemperance and excess, we need not only sobriety, but we must be upon our guard; and unless we keep sober, we shall not long watch.

1. Then let us not sleep, as do others, but let us watch; we must not be secure and careless, or indulge spiritual sloth and idleness. We must not be off our watch, but continually upon our guard against sin, and temptation to it. The generality of men are too careless of their duty, and regardless of their spiritual enemies. They slight holiness, and are not in the greatest danger; doze away their precious moments, on which eternity depends, indulging idle dreams; and have no more thoughts and cares about another world than men that are asleep have about this. Either they do not consider the things of another world at all, because they are asleep; or they do not consider them arieh, because they dream. But let us watch, and let men that are awake, and that stand upon their guard.

2. Let us also be sober, or temperate and moderate. Let us keep our natural desires and appetites after the things of this world, within due bounds. Sobriety is usually opposed to excess in meats and drinks, and here particularly it is opposed to drunken enness: but it also extends to all other temporal things. Thus our Saviour warned his disciples, to take heed lest their hearts should be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come on them unawares, Luke 21. 34. Our moderation then, as to all temporal things, should be known to all men, because the Lord is at hand.

Beside this, watchfulness and sobriety are most suitable to the Christian's character and privilege, as being children of the day; because they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken, are drunken in the night, v. 7. It is a most preposterous thing for men to sleep away the day which is for work, and for sleep in the day when so many eyes are upon them, to behold their shame. It was not so strange if those who had not the benefit of divine revelation suffered themselves to be lulled asleep by the Devil in carnal security, and if they laid the reins upon the neck of their appetites, and indulged themselves in all manner of riot and excess; for it was night-time with them, they were not sensible of their danger, therefore they slept; they were not sensible of their duty, therefore they were drunk: but it ill becomes Christians to do thus. What! shall Christians, who have the light of the blessed gospel shining in their faces, be careless about their souls, and unmindful of another world? They who have so many eyes upon them, should conduct themselves with peculiar propriety.

II. To be well armed as well as watchful: to put on the whole armour of God. And this is necessary in order to such sobriety as becomes us, and will be a preparation for the day of the Lord; because our spiritual enemies are many, and mighty, and malicious; they draw many to their interest, and keep them in it, by making them careless, secure, and presumptuous, by making them drunk; drunk with pride, drunk with passion, drunk and giddy with self-conceit; drunk with the gratification of sense; so that we have need to arm ourselves against their attempts, by putting on the spiritual breastplate, to keep the heart, and the spiritual helmet, to secure the head; and this spiritual armour consists of the three great graces of Christians, faith, love, and hope, v. 8.

1. We must live by faith, and that will keep us warm and sober. If we believe that the eye of God (who is a spirit) is always upon us, that we have spiritual enemies to grapple with, that there is a world of spirits to prepare for, we shall see reason to watch and be sober. Faith will be our best defence against the assaults of our enemies.

2. We must get a heart inflamed with love; and this also will be our defence. True and fervent love to God, and the things of God, will keep us watchful and sober, and order our apostasy in times of trouble and temptation.

3. We must make salvation our hope, and should have a lively hope of it. This good hope, through grace, of eternal life, will be as a helmet to defend the head, and hinder our being intoxicated with the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season. If we have hope of salvation, let us take heed of doing any thing that may hinder our hope, or render us unworthy of it, for the great salvation we hope for. Having mentioned salvation and the hope of it, the apostle shews what grounds and reasons Christians have to hope for this salvation; as to which, observe, he says nothing of their meritizing it. No, the doctrine of our merits is altogether unscriptural and antiscritural; there is no foundation of any good hope upon that account. But our hopes are to be grounded, (1.) Upon God's appointment; because God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, v. 9. If we would trace our salvation to the first cause, that is, God's appointment. Those who live and die in darkness and ignorance, who sleep and are drunken as in the night, it is but too plain that they are appointed to wrath; but as for those who are of the day, if they watch and be sober, it is evident that they are appointed to obtain salvation. And the sureness and firmness of the divine appointment are the great support and encouragement of our hope. Were we to obtain salvation by our own merit or power, we could have but little or no hope of it: but seeing we are to obtain it by virtue of God's appointment, which we are sure cannot be shaken, (for his purpose, according to election, and the establishment of his grace,) or that we build an unshaken hope, especially when we consider, (2.) Christ's merit and grace, and that salvation is by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us. Our salvation therefore is owing to, and our hopes of it grounded on, Christ's atonement as well as God's appointment: and as we should think on God's gracious design and purpose, so also on Christ's death and sufferings, for this end, that whether we wake or sleep, whether we live or die, for death is but a sleep to believers, (as the apostle had before intimated,) we should live together with Christ, live in union and in glory with him for ever. And as it is the salvation that Christians hope for, to be for ever with the Lord, so one foundation of their hope is, their union with him. And if they are united with Christ, and live in him, and live to him, here, the sleep of death will be no prejudice to the spiritual life, much less to the life of glory hereafter. On this account all Christians are said, we have no more cause to die, that, living and dying, we might be his; that we might live to him while we are here, and live with him when we go hence.

11. Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do. 12. And we beseech you, brethren, to know them who labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; 13. And to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves. 14. Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 15. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

In these words the apostle exhorts the Thessalonians to several duties. I. Toward those who were nearly related one to another. Such should comfort themselves, or exhort one another, and edify one another, v. 11.

1. They must comfort or exhort themselves and one another; for the original word may be rendered both these ways. And we may observe, As those are most able, and likely to comfort others, who can comfort themselves; so the way to have comfort ourselves, or to administer comfort to others, is, by complying with the exhortation of the Lord. Note, We should not only be careful about our own comfort and welfare, but to promote the comfort and welfare of others also. He was a Cain, that said, Am I my brother's keeper? We must bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. 2. They must edify one another, by following after those things whereby one may edify another, v. 14. Therefore the Thessalonians are lively stones built up together a spiritual house, they should endeavour to promote the good of the whole church by promoting the work of grace in one another. And it is the duty of every one of us, to study that which is for the edification of those with whom we converse; to please all men for their real profit. We should communicate our knowledge and experiences one to another. We should join in prayer and praise one with another. We should set a good example one before another. And it is the duty of those especially who live in the same vicinity and family, the more to come and stand and render the decision of the best neighbourhood, the best means to answer the end of society. Such as are nearly related together, and have affection for one another, as they have the greatest opportunity, so they are under the greatest obligation, to do this kindness one to another. This the Thessalonians did, (which also ye do,) and this is what they are exhorted to continue and increase in doing. Now, Those who do that which they are exhorted to, and try their duty, by exhortations to excite them to do good, to do more good, as well as continue in doing what they do.

II. He shews them their duty toward their ministers, v. 12, 13. Though the apostle himself was driven from them, yet they had others who laboured among them, and to whom they owed these duties. The apostle here exhorts them to observe the ministers, and shew their gratitude described by the work of their office; and they should rather mind the work and duty they are called to, than affect venerable and honourable names that they may be called by. Their work is very weighty, and very honourable and useful. (1.) Ministers must labour among their people, labour with diligence, and unto weariness; (so the word in the original imports) They must labour in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5. 17. They are called labourers, and should not be loiterers. They must labour with their people, to instruct, comfort, and edify them. And, (2.) Ministers are to rule their people also, so the word is rendered, 1 Tim. 5. 17. They must rule, not with rigour, but with love. They must not exercise dominion as temporal lords; but rule as spiritual guides, by setting a good example to the flock. They are over the people in the Lord, to distinguish them from civil magistrates, and to denote also that they are but ministers under Christ, appointed by him, and must rule the people by Christ's laws, and not by laws of their own. This may also intimate the end of their office and all their labour; namely, the service and honour of the Lord. (3.) They must also admonish the people, and that not only publicly, but privately, as there may be occasion. They must instruct them to do well, and should reprehend them when they do ill; not only to bring good counsel, but also to give admonition: to give warning to the flock of the dangers they are liable to, and reprove for negligence or what else may be amiss. 2. What the duty of the people is toward their ministers. There is a mutual duty between ministers and people. If ministers should labour among the people, and shew their gratitude, as the people should. As the shepherd should know his flock, so the shepherd must know their shepherd. They must know his person, hear his voice, acknowledge him for their pastor, and pay due regard to his teaching, ruling, and admonitions. (2.) They must esteem their ministers highly in love; they should greatly value the office of the ministry, honour and love the persons of ministers, and esteem the interest of the church in all proper ways, and this for their work's sake, because their business is to promote the honour of Christ, and the welfare of men's souls. Note, Faithful ministers ought to be so far from being lightly esteemed because of their work, that they should be highly esteemed on account thereof. The work of the ministry is so far from being a disgrace to them who upon other accounts deserve esteem, that it puts an honour upon them who are faithful and diligent, which otherwise they could lay no claim to; and will procure them that esteem and love among good people, which otherwise they could not expect.

III. He gives divers other exhortations touching the duty Christians owe to one another. 1. To avoid all suspicions, v. 13. Some understand this exhortation, (according to the reading in some copies,) as referring to the people's duty to their ministers, to live peaceably with them, and not raise and promote dissensions at any time between minister and people, which will certainly prove a hinderance to the success of a minister's work, and the edification of the people. This is certain, that ministers and people should avoid every thing that is contrary to the teaching of God another. And the people should be at peace among themselves, doing all they can to hinder any differences from raising or continuing among them, and using all proper means to preserve peace and harmony. 2. To warn the unruly, v. 14. There will be in all societies some who walk disorderly, who go out of their ranks and station; and it is not only the duty of ministers, but of private Christians also, to warn and admonish them. Such should be reproved for their sin, warned of their danger, and told plainly of the injury they do their own souls, and the hurt they may do to others. Such should be put in mind of what they should do, and be reproved for doing otherwise. (2.) To comfort the feeble-minded, v. 14. By these are intended the timorous and faint-hearted, or such as are dejected and of a sorrowful spirit. Some are cowardly, afraid of difficulties, and disheartened at the thoughts of hazards and losses, and afflictions; now such should be encouraged; we should not despise them, but comfort them; and who knows what good a kind and comfortable word may do them? 4. To support the weak, v. 14. Some are not well able to perform their work, nor bear up under their burdens; we should therefore support them, help their infirmities, and lift at one end of the burden, and so help to bear it. It is the grace of God, indeed, that must strengthen and support such; but we should tell them of that grace, and endeavour to minister of that grace to them. 5. To be patient towards all men, v. 14. We must bear and forbear. We must be long-suffering, and suppress our anger, if it begins to rise upon the apprehension of affronts. For we must not fail to moderate our anger, and this duty must be exercised towards all men, good and bad, high and low. We must not be high in our expectations and demands, or harsh in our reproofs, or hard in our impositions, but think the best we can of every thing, and think the best we can of every body. 6. Not to receive evil for evil to any man, v. 15. This we must look to, and be very careful about, that is, we must by all means forbear to avenge ourselves. If others do us an injury, that will not justify us in returning it, in doing the same, or the like, or any other injury to them. It becomes us to forgive, as those that are, and that hope to be, forgiven of God. 7. Ever to follow that which is good, v. 15. In general, we must study to do what is our duty, and pleasing to God, in all circumstances, whether men do us good turns or ill turns; whatever men do to us, we must do good to others. We must always endeavour to be beneficent and instrumental to promote the welfare of others, both among ourselves, (in the first place to them that are of the household of faith,) and then, as we have opportunity, unto all men, Gal. 6. 10.
16. Rejoice evermore. 17. Pray without ceasing. 18. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. 19. Quench not the Spirit. 20. Despise not prophesying; 21. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. 22. Abstain from all appearance of evil.

Here we have divers short exhortations, that will not burden our memories, but will be of great use to direct the motions of our hearts and lives; for the duties are of great importance; and we may observe, how they are connected together, and have a dependence upon one another.

1. Rejoice evermore, v. 16. This must be understood of spiritual joy: for we must rejoice in our creature-comforts, as if we rejoiced not, and must not expect to live many years, and rejoice in them all; but if we do rejoice in God, we may do that evermore. In him our joy will be full; and it is our fault if we have not a continual feast. If we are sorrowful upon any worldly account, yet still we may always rejoice, 2 Cor. 6. 10. Note, A religious man is comforted in all condition.

2. Pray without ceasing, v. 17. Note, The way to rejoice evermore, is, to pray without ceasing. We should rejoice more, if we prayed more. We should keep up stated times for prayer, and continue instant in prayer. We should pray always, and not faint; pray without weariness, and continue in prayer, till we come to that world where prayer shall be swallowed up in praise. The meaning is not, that the men should do nothing but pray, but that nothing else we do should hinder prayer in its proper season. Prayer will help forward, and not hinder, all other lawful business, and every good work.

3. In every thing give thanks, v. 18. If we pray without ceasing, we shall not want matter for thanksgiving, in every thing. As we must in every thing make our requests known to God by supplications, so we must not omit thanking. Phil. 4. 6. We should be thankful in every condition, even in adversity as well as prosperity. It is never so bad with us, but it might be worse. If we have ever so much occasion to make our humble complaints to God, we never can have any reason to complain of God, and have always much reason to praise and give thanks: the apostle says, This is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us, that we give thanks, seeing God is reconciled to us in Christ Jesus; in him, through him, and for his sake, he allows us to rejoice evermore, and appoints us in every thing to give thanks. It is pleasing to God.

4. Quench not the Spirit; (v. 19.) for it is this Spirit of grace and supplication, that helpeth our infirmities, that assisteth us in our prayer and thanksgivings. Christians are said to be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. He worketh as fire, by enlightening, enlivening, and purifying the souls of men. We must be careful not to quench this holy fire. As fire is put out by withdrawing fuel, so we quench the Spirit, if we do not stir up our spirits, and all that is within us, to comply with the motions of the good Spirit; and as fire is quenched by pouring water, or putting a great quantity of dirt upon it, so we must be careful not to quench the Holy Spirit, by indulging carnal lusts and affections, or minding only filthy things.

5. Despise not prophecysings; (v. 20.) for if we neglect the means of grace, we forfeit the Spirit of grace. By prophecysings here we are to understand the preaching of the word, the interpretation and applying of the scriptures; and this we must not despise, but should prize and value, because it is the ordinance of God, appointed of him for our furtherance and increase in knowledge and grace, and holiness and comfort. We must not despise preaching, though it be plain, and not with enticing words of men's wisdom, and though we are told no more than what we knew before. It is useful, and many times needful, to have our minds stirred up, our affections and resolutions excited, to those things that we knew before to be our interest and our duty.

6. Prove all things, but hold fast that which is good, v. 21. This is a needful caution, to prove all things; for though we must put a value on preaching, we must not take things upon trust from the preacher, but try them by the law and the testimony. We must search the scriptures, whether what they say be true or not. We must not believe every spirit, but must try the spirits. But we must not be always trying, always unsettled; no, at length we must be settled, and hold fast that which is good. When we are satisfied, that any thing is right, and true, and good, we must hold it fast, and not let it go, whatever opposition or whatever persecution we meet with for the sake thereof. Note, The doctrines of human infallibility, implicit faith, and blind obedience, are not the doctrines of the Bible. Every Christian has, and ought to have, the judgment of discretion, and should have his sense sharpened in the discerning between good and evil, truth and falsehood, Heb. 5. 13. 14. And proving all things must be in order to the holding fast that which is good. We must not always be seekers, or fluctuating in our minds, like children tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

7. Abstain from all appearance of evil, v. 22. This is a good means to prevent our being deceived with false doctrines, or unsettled in our faith; for our Saviour has told us, (John 7. 17.) If a man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. Corrupt affections indulged in the heart, and evil practices allowed of in the life, will greatly tend to promote fatal errors in the mind, whereas purity of heart, and integrity of life, will dispose men to receive the truth in the love of it. We should therefore abstain from evil, and all appearances of evil, from sin, and that which looks like sin, leads to it, and borders upon it. He who is not shy of the appearances of sin, who shuns not the occasions of sin, and who avoids not the temptations and approaches to sin, will not long abstain from the actual commission of sin.

23. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 24. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. 25. Brethren, pray for us. 26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. 27. I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. 28. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

These words conclude this epistle. In which observe.

1. Paul's prayer for them, v. 23. He had told them, in the beginning of this epistle, that he always made mention of them in his prayers; and now that he is writing to them, he lifteth up his heart to God in prayer for them. Take notice.

(1.) To whom the apostle prays, namely, The very God of peace. He is the God of grace, and the God of peace and love. He is the Author of peace, and Lover of concord; and by their peaceableness and unity, from God as the Author, those things would best be obtained, which he prays for.

(2.) The things he prays for on behalf of the Thessalonians, are, their sanctification, that God would sanctify them wholly: and their preservation, that they might be preserved blameless. He prays that they might be wholly sanctified, that the whole man might be sanctified; and then that the whole man, spirit, soul, and body, might be preserved: or, he prays, that they might be wholly sanctified, more perfectly, for the best are sanctified but in part, while in this world: and therefore, we should pray for and press toward complete sanctification. Where the good work of grace is begun, it shall be carried on, be protected and preserved; and all those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus, shall be preserved to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. And because, if God did not carry on his good work in the soul, that would miscarry; we should pray to God, to perfect his work, and preserve us blameless, free from sin and impurity, till at length we are presented faultless before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy.

2. His comfortable assurance that God would hear his prayer; Faithful is he who calleth you, who will also do it, v. 24. The kindness and love of God had appeared to them in calling them to the knowledge of his truth, and the faithfulness of God was their security, that they should persevere to the end; and therefore the apostle assures them, God would do what he desired: he would effect what he had promised; he would accomplish all the good pleasure of his goodness toward them. Note, Our fidelity to God depends upon his faithfulness to us.

3. His request of their prayers; Brethren, pray for us, v. 25. We should pray for one another; and brethren should thus express brotherly love. This great apostle did not think it beneath him to call the Thessalonians brethren, or to request their prayers. Ministers stand in need of their people's prayers; and the more people pray for their ministers, the more good ministers may have from God, and the people may receive by their ministry.

4. His salutation; Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss, v. 26. Thus the apostle sends a friendly salutation from himself, and Silvanus, and Timothy; and would have them salute each other in their names: and thus he would have them signify their mutual love and affection to one another by the kiss of charity, (1 Pet. 5.14.) which is here called a holy kiss, to intimate how cautious they should be of all impurity in the use of this ceremony, then commonly practised; as it should not be a treacherous kiss like that of Judas, so not a lascivious kiss like that of the harlot, Prov. 7. 13.

5. His solemn charge for the reading of this epistle, v. 27. This is not only an exhortation, but an adjuration by the Lord. And this epistle was to be read to all the holy brethren. It is not only allowed to the common people, to read the scriptures, and what none should prohibit, but it is their indispensable duty, and what they should be persuaded to do. In order to this, these holy oracles should not be kept concealed in an unknown tongue, but translated into the vulgar languages; that, all men being concerned to know the scriptures, they all may be able to read them, and be acquainted with them. The public reading of the law was one part of the worship of the sabbath among the Jews in their synagogues, and the scriptures should be read in the public assemblies of Christians also.

6. The apostolical benediction that is usual in other epistles; The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen, v. 28. We need no more to make us happy, than to know that grace which our Lord Jesus Christ has manifested, be interested in that grace which he has purchased, and profited of that grace which dwells in him as the Head of the church. This is an ever-flowing and over-flowing fountain of grace to supply all our wants.
wrong use which some among them might make of those expressions of his, that were agreeable to the dialect of the prophets of the Old Testament; and informs them that there were many intermediate counsels yet to be fulfilled before that day of the Lord shall come, though, because it is sure, he had spoken of it as near. There are other things that he writes about for their consolation under sufferings, and exhortation and direction in duty.

II. THESALONIANS, I.

CHAP. I.

After the introduction, (v. 1, 2.) the apostle begins this epistle with an account of his high esteem for these Thessalonians, v. 3, 4. He then comforts them under their afflictions and persecutions, v. 5...10. And tells them what his prayers were to God for them, v. 11, 12.

1. PAUL, and Sylas, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: 2. Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: 3. We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith growth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; 4. So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure;

Here we have,

I. The introduction, (v. 1, 2.) in the same words as in the former epistle. From whence we may observe, That as the apostle did not count it grievous to him to write the same things (Phil. 3. 1.) in this epistle, that he had delivered in preaching; so he willingly wrote the same things to one church that he did to another. The occurrence of the same words in the second epistle as in the former, shews us, that ministers ought not so much to regard the variety of expression and elegance of style, as the truth and usefulness of the doctrines they preach. And great care should be taken, lest, from an affection of novelty in method and phrases, we advance new notions or doctrines, contrary to the principles of natural or revealed religion, upon which this church of the Thessalonians was builded, as all true churches are; namely, in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

II. The high esteem this apostle had for them. He not only had a great affection for them, (as he had expressed in his former epistle, and now again in his pious wish of grace and peace for them,) but he also expresses his great esteem for them. Concerning which observe,

1. How his esteem of them is expressed.

(1.) He glorified God on their behalf; We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, v. 3. He chooses rather to speak of what was praise-worthly in them, in a way of thanksgiving to God, than by commendation of them; and as what he mentions was matter of his rejoicing, he accounted it matter of thanksgiving, and it was meet or fit it should be so; for we are bound, and it is our duty, to be thankful to God for all the good that is found in us or others: and it not only is an act of kindness to our fellow-Christians, but our duty, to thank God on their behalf.

(2.) He also glorifies in them before the churches of God, v. 4. The apostle never flattered his friends, but he took pleasure in commending them, and speaking well of them, to the glory of God, and for the excitement and encouragement of others. Paul did not glory in his own gifts, or his labour among them, but he gloried in the grace of God which was bestowed upon them, and so his glorying was good; because all the commendation he gave to them, and the pleasure he took himself, centred in the praise and glory of God.

2. For what he esteemed them and thanked God; namely, the increase of their faith, and love, and charity. In his former epistle, (ch. 1. 3.) he gave thanks for their faith, love, and charity here he gives thanks for the increase of all those graces, that they were not only true Christians, but growing Christians. Note, Where there is the truth of grace, there will be increase of it. The path of the just is as a shining light, which shines more and more unto the perfect day. And where there is the increase of grace, God must have all the glory of it. We are as much indebted to him for the improvement of grace, and the progress of that good work, as we are for the first work of grace, and the very beginning of it. We may be tempted to think, that though when we were bad we could not make ourselves good, yet when we are good we can easily make ourselves better; but we have as much dependence on the grace of God for increasing the grace we have, as for planting grace when we had it not. The matter of the apostle's thanksgiving and glorying on behalf of the Thessalonians, was,

(1.) That their faith grew exceedingly, v. 3. They were more confirmed in the truth of gospel-revelations, confided in gospel-promises, and had lively expectations of another world. The growth of their faith appeared by the works of faith; and where faith grows, all other graces grow proportionably.

(2.) Their charity abounded, (v. 3.) their love to God and man. Note, Where faith grows, love will abound, for faith works by love; and not only the charity of some of them, but of every one to each other, did abound. There were no such divisions among them as in some other churches.

(3.) Their patience as well as faith increased in all their persecutions and tribulations. And then patience has its perfect work, when it extends itself to all trials. There were many trials which the Thessalonians endured for the sake of righteousness, as well as other troubles which they met with in this calamitous life; yet they endured all these, by faith seeing him that is invisible, and looking to the recompense of reward; and endured them with patience, not with an insensibility under them, but with a patient bearing them, and that from Christian principles, which kept them quiet and submissive, and afforded them inward strength and support.

5. Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer: 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; 7. And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels. 8. In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: 9. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; 10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

Having mentioned their persecutions and tribulations, which they endured principally for the cause of Christ, the apostle proceeds to offer several things for their comfort under them. In short, he tells them that the present happiness and advantage of their sufferings, v. 5. Their faith, being thus tried, and patience exercised, were improved by their sufferings, insomuch that they were counted worthy of the kingdom of God. Their sufferings were a manifest token of this, that they were worthy or meet to be accounted Christians indeed, seeing they could suffer for Christianity. And the truth is, Religion, if it is worth anything, is worth every thing, and those either have no religion at all, or none that is worth having, or know not how to value it, that cannot find in their hearts to suffer for it. Besides, from their patient suffering, it appeared that, according to the righteous judgment of God, they should be counted worthy of the heavenly glory: not by worthiness of condignity, but of congruity only; not that they could merit heaven, but they were made meet for heaven. We cannot by all our sufferings amass more than by our services, merit heaven as a debt; but by our patience under our sufferings, we are qualified for the joy that is promised to patient sufferers in the cause of God.

II. He tells them next of the future recompense that shall be given to persecutors, and persecuted.

1. There will be a punishment inflicted on persecutors; God will recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, v. 6. And there is nothing that more infallibly marks a man for eternal ruin, than a spirit of persecution, and enmity to the name and people of God: as the faith, patience, and constancy of the saints are to them an earnest of everlasting rest and joy, so the pride, malice, and wickedness of their persecutors are to them an earnest of everlasting misery: for every man carries about with him, and carries out of the world with him, either his heaven or his hell. God will recompense a recompense, and will trouble them that trouble his people. This he has done sometimes in this world, witness the dreadful end of many persecutors; but especially this he will do in the other world, where the portion of the wicked will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

2. There is a reward for them that are persecuted; God will recompense their trouble with rest, v. 7. There is a rest that remains for the people of God: a rest from sin and sorrow. Though many may be the troubles of the righteous now, yet God will deliver them out of them all. The future rest will abundantly recompense all their present troubles. The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed.

There is enough in heaven, to counteract all that we may lose or suffer for the name of Christ in this world. The apostle says, To you who are troubled, rest with us. In heaven, ministers and people shall rest together, and rejoice together, who suffer together here; and the meanest Christian shall rest with the greatest apostle, and the most illustrious martyr. For he that suffereth for Christ, we shall also reign with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12. Concerning this future recompense we are further to observe,

(1.) The certainty of it, proved by the righteousness and justice of God; It is a righteous thing with God, (v. 6.) to render to every man according to his works. The thoughts of this should be terrible to wicked men and persecutors, and the great support of the righteous. And such as are persecuted for the name of Christ, seeing there is a righteous God, there will be a righteous recompense, and God's suffering people shall lose nothing by their sufferings, and their enemies will gain nothing by their advantages against them.

(2.) The time when this righteous recompense shall be made; When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, v. 7. That shall be the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God; for then will God judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath appointed, even Jesus Christ the righteous Judge. The righteousness of God does not so visibly appear to all men in the procedure of his providence, as it will in the process of the great judgment-day. The scripture has made known to us the judgment to come, and we are bound to receive the revelation here given concerning it. As,

[1.] The Lord Jesus will in that day appear from heaven. Now the heavens retain him, they conceal him; but then he will be revealed and made manifest. He will come in all the pomp and power of the upper world, from whence we look for the Saviour.

[2.] He will be revealed with his mighty angels, (v. 7.) or the angels of his power: these will attend upon him, to grace the solemnity of that great day of his appearance; they will be the ministers of his justice and mercy in that day; they will summon the criminals to his tribunal, and gather in the elect, and be employed in executing his sentence.

[3.] He will come in flaming fire, v. 8. A fire goeth before him, that shall consume his enemies. The earth, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. This will be a true fire, not that of wood, and earth, and fire, but of the consuming works; a refining fire, to purify the saints, who shall share in the purity, and partake of the felicity, of the new heaven and the new earth; a consuming fire to the wicked. His light will be piercing, and his power consuming, to all those who in that day shall be found as chaff.

[4.] The effects of this appearance will be terrible to some, and joyful to others. First, They will be terrible to some; for he will then take vengeance on the wicked.

1. On those that sinned against the principles of natural religion, and rebelled against the light of nature; that know not God, (v. 8.) though the invisible things of him are manifest in the things that are seen.

2. On those that rebel against the light of revelation, that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. This is the great crime of multitudes—the gospel is revealed to them, and they will not believe it; or if they pretend to believe it, they will not obey it. Nee, The believing the truths of the gospel is in order to our obeying the freegifts of the gospel: there must be the obedience of faith. To such persons as are here mentioned, the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ will be terrible, because of their dooms, which is mentioned, v. 9. Where observe,

(1.) They will then be punished. Though sinners may be long reprieved, yet they will be punished at last. Their doom will be the punishment for their crimes, and only what they have deserved. They did sin's work, and must receive sin's wages.

(2.) Their punishment will be no less than destruction, not of their being, but of their bliss; not that of the body alone, but both as to body and soul.

(3.) This destruction will be everlasting. They shall be always dying, and yet never die. Their miseries will run parallel with the eternity of the fire everlasting fire. It must needs be so, since the punishment is inflicted by an eternal God, fastening upon an immortal soul, set out of the reach of divine mercy and grace.

(4.) This destruction shall come from the presence of the Lord, that is, immediately from God himself. Here God punishes sinners by creatures, by instruments; but then he will take the work into his own hands. It will be destruction from the Almighty, more terrible than the consuming fire which consumed Nadab and Abihu, which came from before the Lord.

(5.) It shall come from the glory of his power, or from his glorious power. Not only the justice of God, but his almighty power, will be glorified in the destruction of sinners; and he who exercises the power of his Almighty, will cast them into hell.

Secondly, It will be a joyful day to some, even to the saints, unto them that believe and obey the gospel. And then the apostle's testimony concerning this day, will be confirmed and believed; (v. 10.) in that bright and blessed day.

1. Christ Jesus will be glorified and admired by his saints. They shall behold his glory, and admire it with pleasure; they will glorify his grace, and admire the wonders of his power and goodness toward them, and sing hallelujahs to him in that day of his triumph, for their complete victory and happiness.

2. Christ will be glorified and admired in them. His grace and power will then be manifested and magnified, when it shall appear what he has purchased for, and wrought in, and bestowed upon, all those who believe in him. As his wrath and power shall be known in and by the destruction of his enemies; so his grace and power will be magnified in the salvation of his saints. Note, Christ's dealings with those who believe, will be what the world one day shall wonder at. Now, they are a wonder to many; but how will they be wondered at in this great and glorious day; or rather, how will Christ, whose name is Wonderful, be admired, when the mystery of God shall be finished! Christ will not be much admired in the glorious day; but he will bring from heaven with him; as in the many saints, the many sons, that he will bring to glory.

11. Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power: 12. That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

In these verses the apostle again tells the Thessalonians of his earnest and constant prayer for them. He could not be present with them, yet he had a constant remembrance of them; they were much upon his thoughts, he wished them well, and could not express his good will and good wishes to them, better than in earnest constant prayer to God for them; Wherefore also we pray, &c. Note, The believing thoughts and expectation of the second coming of Christ should put us upon prayer to God for ourselves and others. We should watch and pray, so our Saviour directs his disciples, (Luke 21. 36.) Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be counted worthy to stand before the Son of man. Observe,

1. What the apostle prayed for, v. 11. It is a great concern, to be well instructed what to pray for; and without divine instruction we know not what to pray for, as without divine assistance we shall not pray in such a manner as we ought. Our prayers should be suitable to our expectations. Thus the apostle prays for them.

(1.) That God would begin his good work of grace in them; so we may understand this expression; That our God would count you (or as it might be read, make you) worthy of this calling. We are called with a high and holy calling; we are called to God's kingdom and glory; and no less than the inheritance of the saints is the hope of our calling, nothing less than the cure of all sin and guilt and felicity which shall be revealed when Christ is glorified. Now, if this be our calling, our great concern should be, to be worthy of it, or meet and prepared for this glory: and because we have no worthiness of our own, but what is owing purely to the grace of God, we should pray that he would make us worthy, and then count us worthy, of this calling, or that he would make us meet to partake of the inheritance of the saints in light, Col. 1. 12.

(2.) That God would carry on the good work that is begun, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness. The good pleasure of God denotes his gracious purposes toward his people, which flow from his goodness, and are full of goodness toward them; and it is from thence that all good comes to us. If there be any good in us, it is the fruit of God's good-will to us, it is owing to the good pleasure of his goodness, and therefore is called grace. Now, there are various and manifold purposes of grace and good-will in God toward his people; and the apostle prays, that all of them may be fulfilled or accomplished toward these Thessalonians. There are several good works of grace begun in the hearts of God's people, which proceed from this good pleasure of God's goodness, and we should desire that they may be completed and perfected. In particular, the apostle prays, that God would fulfill and carry on the work of faith with power. Note, [1.] The fulfilling the work of faith is in order to the fulfilling of every other good work. And, [2.] It is the power of God, that not only begins, but carries on, and perfects, the work of faith.

2. Why the apostle prayed for these things; (v. 12.) That the name of the Lord Jesus may be glorified; this is the end of the Lord Jesus Christ; and the work of faith with power. Note, [1.] The fulfilling the work of faith is in order to the fulfilling of every other good work. And, [2.] It is the power of God, that not only begins, but carries on, and perfects, the work of faith.

coming of Christ, as being very near, v. 1–3. Then he precedes to confute the error he cautioned them against, by telling them of great events that were antecedent to the coming of Christ—A general apostasy, and the revelation of antichrist, concerning whom the apostle tells them many remarkable things, about his name, his character, his rise, his fall, his reign, and the ruin of his subjects, v. 3–12. He then comforts them against the terror of this apostasy, and exhorts them to steadfastness, v. 13–15. And concludes with a prayer for them, v. 16, 17.

1. NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, 2. That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 3. Let no man deceive you by any means:

From these words it appears, that some among the Thessalonians had mistaken the apostle’s meaning, in what he had written in his former epistle about the coming of Christ, by thinking that it was near at hand; that Christ was just ready to appear, and come to judgment. Or, it may be, some among them pretended that they had the knowledge of this by particular revelation from the Spirit, or from some words they had heard from the apostle, when he was with them, or some letter he had written, or they pretended to have heard or seen the same elsewhere; hereupon, the apostle is careful to rectify this mistake, and to prevent the spreading of this error. Observe, If errors and mistakes arise among Christians, we should take the first opportunity to rectify them, and hinder the spreading thereof; and good men will be especially careful to suppress errors that may arise from a mistake of their words and actions, though that which was spoken was genuine and sincere; and insinuate themselves into their affections. And this is the best way to deal with men, when we would preserve or recover them from errors, to deal gently and affectionately with them: rough and rigorous treatment will but exasperate their spirits, and prejudice them against the reasons we may offer. He obtests, and even conjures them in the most solemn manner, by the coming of Christ, &c. The words are in the form of an oath; and his meaning is, that if they believed Christ would come, and if they desired he would come, and rejoiced in the hope of his coming, they should be careful to avoid the error, and the evil consequence hereof, that he was now cautioning them against. From this form of obtestation used by the apostle, we may observe,

1. It is most certain that the Lord Jesus Christ will come to judge the world, that he will come in all the pomp and glory of the world, on the last day, to execute judgment upon all. Whatever uncertainty we are at, or whatever mistakes may arise about the time of his coming, his coming itself is certain. This has been the faith and hope of all Christians in all ages of the church; nay, it was the faith and hope of the Old Testament saints, ever since Enoch walked from Adam, who said, Behold, the Lord cometh, &c. Jude, 8, 9.

2. At the second coming of Christ, all the saints will be gathered together to him; and this mention of the gathering of the saints together unto Christ at his coming, shews, that the apostle speaks of Christ’s coming to judgment at the last day, and not of his coming to destroy Jerusalem. He speaks of it not as a metaphor, but literally; and as it will be part of Christ’s honour in that day, so shall be the completing of the happiness of his saints.

3. That they all shall be gathered together. There will then be a general meeting of all the saints, and none but saints; all the Old Testament saints, who got acquaintance with Christ by the dark shadows of the law, and saw this day at a distance; and all the New Testament saints, to whom life and death are both brought forth in the gospel; they will all be gathered together. There will then come from the four winds of heaven, all that are, or ever were, or ever shall be, from the beginning to the end of time. All shall be gathered together.

4. That they shall be gathered together to Christ. He will be the great Centre of their unity. They shall be gathered together to him, to be attendants on him, to be represented by him to the Father, to be with him for ever, and altogether happy in his presence to all eternity.

5. The doctrine of Christ’s coming, and our gathering together to him, is of great moment and importance to Christians; otherwise it would not be the proper matter of the apostle’s exhortation. We ought therefore not only to believe these things, but highly to account of them also, and look upon them as things in which we are greatly concerned in, and should be most anxiously affected.

II. The thing itself the apostle cautions the Thessalonians against, is, that they should not be deceived about the time of Christ’s coming, and so be shaken in mind, or be troubled. Note, Errors in the mind tend greatly to weaken our faith, and cause us trouble; and such as are weak in faith and troubled minds, are oftentimes apt to be deceived, and false professors not to be suspected.

1. The apostle would not have them be deceived; Let no man deceive you by any means, v. 3. There are many who lie in wait to deceive, and they have many ways of deceiving; we have reason therefore to be cautious, and stand upon our guard. Some deceivers will pretend new revelations, others misinterpret scripture, and others will be guilty of gross forgeries; divers means and artifices of deceit men will use, to confound the eyes of the ungodly; and to deceive us by any means. The particular matter in which the apostle cautions them not to be deceived, is about the near approach of Christ’s coming, as if it was to have been in the apostle’s days; and harmless as this error might have seemed to many, yet, because it was indeed an error, it would have proved of bad consequence to many persons. Therefore,

2. He gives them warning, and would not have them soon shaken in mind, or be troubled.

(1.) He would not have their faith weakened. We should firmly believe the second coming of Christ, and be settled and established in the faith of this; but there was danger lest the Thessalonians, if they apprehended the coming of Christ was just at hand, upon finding that they, or others whom they too much regarded, were mistaken as to the time, should therupon question the truth or certainty of the thing itself; whereas they ought not to waver in their minds, as to this great thing, which is the faith and hope of all the saints. False doctrines are like the winds that toss the water to and fro, and they are apt to unsettle the minds of men, who are sometimes as unstable as water. Then,

(2.) He would not have their comforts lessened, that they should not be troubled or affrighted with the thought of Christ’s coming. It is common that the thought of Christ was represented in so much terror, as to trouble many serious Christians among them; though in itself it should be matter of the believer’s hope and joy; or else many might be troubled with the thought, how surprising this day would be, or with the fear of their unpreparedness, or upon the reflection on their mistake about the time of Christ's coming: we should always watch and pray, but must not be discouraged, or uncomfortable at the thought of Christ's coming.

3.—For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; 4. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. 5. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? 6. And now ye know what withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time. 7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way. 8. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: 9. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, 10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. 11. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: 12. That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

In these words the apostle confutes the error he had cautioned them against, and gives the reasons why they should not expect the coming of Christ as just at hand. There were several events previous to the second coming of Christ; in particular, he tells them

I. There would be a general apostasy, there would come a falling away first, v. 3. By this apostasy we are not to understand a defection in the state, or from civil government, but in spiritual or religious matters, from sound doctrine, instituted worship and church government, and a holy life. The apostle speaks of some very great apostasy, not only of some converted Jews or Gentiles, but such as should be very general, though gradual, and should give occasion to the revelation or rise of antichrist, that man of sin. This, he says, (v. 5.) he had told them of when he was with them, with design, no doubt, that they should not take offence or be stumbled at it. And let us observe, that no sooner was Christianity planted and rooted in the world, than there began to be a defection in the Christian church. It was so in the Old Testament church; presently after any considerable advance made in religion there followed a defection; soon after the promise there was revolting; soon after men began to call upon the name of the Lord, all flesh corrupted their way; soon after the covenant with Noah the Babel-builders Jude defance to heaven; soon after the covenant with Abraham his seed degenerated in Egypt; soon after the Israelites were planted in Canaan, when the first generation was worn off, they forsook God and serv ed Baal; soon after God's covenant with David his seed revolted, and served other gods; soon after the return out of captivity there was a general decay of piety, as appears by the story of Ezra and Nehemiah; and therefore it was no strange thing, that after the planting of Christianity there should come a falling away.

II. There would be a revelation of that man of sin; (v. 3.) antichrist would take his rise from this general apostasy. The apostle afterward speaks of the revelation of that wicked one, (v. 8.) intimating the discovery which should be made of his wickedness, in order to his ruin: here he seems to speak of his rise, which should be occasioned by the general apostasy he had mentioned; and to intimate that all sorts of false doctrines and corruptions should centre in him. Great disputes have been, who or what is intended by this man of sin and son of perdition; and if it is not certain that the papal power and tyranny are principally or only intended, yet this is plain, What is here said does very exactly agree thereto. For observe,

1. The names of this person, or rather the state and power here spoken of. He is called the man of sin, to denote his very notorious, and general defection, with which he is addicted to, and practises, wickedness himself, but he also promotes, countenances, and commands sin and wickedness in others; and he is the son of perdition, because he himself is devoted to certain destruction, and is the instrument of destroying many others both in soul and body. These names may properly be applied, for these reasons, to the papal state; and thereto agree also,

2. The character here given, v. 4.

(1.) That he opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped; and thus have the bishops of Rome not only opposed God's authority, and that of the civil magistrate, who are called gods, but have exalted themselves above God, and earthly governors, in demanding greater regard to their commands than to the commands of God or the magistrate.

(2.) As God, he sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. As God was in the temple of old, and worshipped there, and is in and with his church now; so the antichrist here mentioned, is some usurper of God's authority in the Christian church, who claims divine honours; and to whom can this better apply than to the bishops of Rome, to whom the most blasphemous titles have been given, as Dominus Deus, Rex Patra, -- Our Lord and God, and the Pope; -- Another God on earth, Idem est Dominium Dei et Papa, -- The dominion of God and the Pope is the same?

3. His rise is mentioned, v. 6, 7. Concerning which, we are to observe two things:

(1.) There was something that hindered or withheld, or let, until it was taken away. This is supposed to be the power of the Roman empire, which the apostle did not judge fit to wickedness; not only at that time; and it is manifest that while this power continued, it prevented the advances of the bishops of Rome to that height of tyranny, which soon afterward they arrived to.

(2.) This mystery of iniquity was gradually to arrive at its height; and so it was in effect, that the universal corruption of doctrine and worship in the Roman church came in by degrees, and the usurpation of the bishops of Rome was gradual, not at once; and thus the mystery of iniquity did the more easily, and almost insensibly, prevail. The apostle justly calls it a mystery of iniquity, because wicked designs and actions were concealed under false shews and pretences, at least they were concealed from the common view and observation. By pretended devotion, superstition and idolatry were advanced; and by a pretended zeal for God and his glory, bickery and persecution were promoted. And he tells us,
This mystery of iniquity did even then begin, or did already work; while the apostles were yet living, the enemy came, and sowed tares; there were then the deeds of the Nicolaitans, persons who pretended zeal for Christ, but really opposed him. Pride, ambition, and worldly interest of church-pastors and church-rulers, as in Diotrephes, and others, were the early working of the mystery of iniquity, which, by degrees, came to that prodigious height, which has been visible in the church of Rome, and in many of the churches of the east and west.

4. The fall or ruin of the antichristian state is declared, v. 8. The head of this antichristian kingdom is called that wicked one, or that lawless person who sets up a human power in competition with, and contradiction to, the divine dominion and power of the Lord Jesus Christ: but as he would thus manifest himself to be the man of sin, so the revelation or discovery of this to the world would be the sure prelude and the means of his ruin. The apostle assures the Thessalonians that the Lord would consume and destroy him; the consuming of him precedes his final destruction, and that is by the Spirit of his mouth, by his word of command; the pure word of God, accompanied with the Spirit of God, will discover this mystery of iniquity, and make the power of antichrist to consume and waste away; and in due time it shall be totally and finally destroyed, and this will be the brightness of Christ's coming. Note, The coming of Christ to destroy the wicked will be with peculiar glory and eminent lustre and brightness.

5. The apostle further describes the reign and rule of this man of sin. Where we are to observe.

1. The manner of his coming or ruling, and working: in general, that it is after the example of Satan, the grand enemy of souls, the great adversary of man. He is the author and master of error and lies, the sworn enemy of the truth as it is in Jesus, and all the faithful followers of Jesus. More particularly, it is with satanical power and deceit; a divine power is pretended for the support of this kingdom, but it is only after the working of Satan; signs and wonders, visions and miracles, are pretended; by these the papal kingdom was first set up, and has all along been kept up, but they have false signs to support false doctrines; and lying wonders, or only pretended miracles that have served their cause, things false in act, and fraudulently managed, to impose upon the people: and the diabolical deceits with which the antichristian state has been supported are notorious. The apostle calls it all deceivableness of unrighteousness, v. 10. Others may call them fias frauds, but the apostle called them unrighteous and wicked frauds; and, indeed, all fraud (which is contrary to truth) is an impious thing. Many are the subtle artifices the man of sin has used, and various are the plausible pretences by which he has beguiled unwary and unstable souls to embrace false doctrines, and submit to his usurped dominion.

2. The persons are described, who are his willing subjects, or most likely to become such, v. 10. They are such as love not the truth, that they may be saved. They heard the truth, (it may be,) but they did not love it; they could not bear sound doctrine, and therefore easily imbibed false doctrines; they had some notion of what was true, but they indulged some powerful prejudices, and so became a prey to seducers: had they loved the truth, they would have persevered in it, and been preserved by it; but no wonder if they easily parted with what they never had any love to. And of these persons it is said, that they perish, or are lost: they are in a lost condition, and in danger to be lost for ever. For,

6. We have the sin and ruin of the subjects as antichrist's kingdom declared, v. 11, 12.

(1.) Their sin is this; They believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness: they did not love the truth, and therefore they did not believe it; and because they did not believe the truth, therefore they had pleasure in unrighteousness, or in wicked actions, and were pleased with false notions. Note, An erroneous mind and vicious life often go together, and help forward one another.

(2.) Their ruin is thus expressed; God shall send them strong delusions. Note, Punish men for their unbelief, and for their dislike of the truth, and love to sin and wickedness; not that God is the author of sin, but in righteousness he sometimes withdraws his grace from such sinners as are here mentioned: he gives them over to Satan, or leaves them to be deluded by his instruments; he gives them up to their own hearts' lusts, and leaves them to themselves, and then sin will follow of course, yet, the worst of wickedness, that shall end at last in eternal damnation. God is just when he inflicts spiritual judgments here, and eternal punishments hereafter, upon those who have no love to the truths of the gospel, who will not believe them, or live suitably to them, but indulge false doctrines in their minds, and wicked practices in their lives and conversations.

13. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: 14. Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15. Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

Here observe,

1. The consolation the Thessalonians might take against the terrors of this apostasy, v. 13, 14. For they were chosen to salvation, and called to the obtaining of glory. Note, When we hear of the apostasy of many, it is matter of great comfort and joy, that there is a remnant according to the election of grace, which does and shall persevere; and especially we should rejoice, if we have reason to hope that we are of that number. The apostle reckoned himself bound in duty to be thankful to God on this account; we are bound to give thanks to God always for you. He had often given thanks on their behalf; and he is still abounding in thanksgiving for them; and there was good reason, because they were beloved by the Lord, as appeared in this matter—their security from apostatizing. This preservation of the saints is owing,

(1.) To the stability of the election of grace, v. 13. Therefore were they beloved of the Lord, because God had chosen them from the beginning. He had loved them with an everlasting love. Concerning this election of God, we may observe, [1.] The eternal date thereof—it is from the beginning; not the duration of the grace, but the laying of the foundation of the grace, world, before the foundation of the world, Eph. 1. 4. Then, [2.] The end to which they were chosen—salvation, complete and eternal salvation from sin and misery, and the full fruition of all good. [3.] The means in order to obtaining this end—sanctification of the spirit, and belief of the truth. The decree of election therefore connects the 2nd and the means, and these must not be separated.

We may not be elected of God, because we were holy, but that we might be holy. Being chosen of God, we must not live as we list; but if we are chosen to salvation... as the end, we must be prepared for it by sanctification as the necessary means to obtain that end; which sanctification is by the operation of the Holy Spirit as the Author, and by faith on our part. There must be the belief of the truth, without which there can be no true justification, or perpetuation in grace, or obtaining of salvation. Faith and holiness must be joined together, as well as holiness and happiness; therefore our Saviour prayed for Peter, that his faith might not fail, (Luke 22. 32.) and for his disciples, John 17. 17. Sanctify them by thy truth; thy word is truth. (2.) To the efficacy of the gospel-call, v. 14. As they were chosen to justification, so were they called thereunto by the gospel. Whom he did predestinate, he also also called, Rom. 8. 50. The outward call of God is by the gospel; and this is rendered effectual by the inward operation of the Spirit. Note, Wherever the gospel comes, it calls and invites men to the obtaining of glory; it is a call to honour and happiness, even the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, the glory he has purchased, and the glory he is possessed of, to be communicated unto them who believe in him, and obey his gospel: such shall be with Christ, to behold his glory, and they shall be glorified with Christ, and partake of his glory. Hereupon there follows, (3.) An exhortation to steadfastness and perseverance; Therefore, brethren, stand fast, v. 15. Observe, he does not say, "Ye are chosen to salvation, and therefore ye may be careless and secure," but therefore stand fast. God's grace in our election and vocation is far from superseding our diligent care and endeavour, that it should quicken and engage us to the greatest resolution and diligence. So the apostle John having told those whom he wrote to, that they had received the anointing which should abide in them, and that they should abide in him, (in Christ,) subjoins this exhortation, Now abide in him, 1 John 2. 27, 28. The Thessalonians are expected to steadfastness in their profession, or to hold fast the traditions which they had been taught, the doctrine of the gospel, which had been delivered by the apostle, by word or epistle. As yet the canon of scripture was not complete, and therefore some things were delivered by the apostles, in their preaching, under the guidance of the infallible Spirit, which Christians were bound to observe as coming from God; other things were afterwards written by the apostles, or by those committed to writing, as the apostle had written a former epistle to these Thessalonians; and these epistles were written, as the writers were moved by the Holy Ghost. Note, There is no argument from hence for regarding oral traditions in our days, now that the canon of scripture is complete, as of equal authority with the sacred writings. Such doctrines and duties as were taught by the inspired apostles, we must steadfastly adhere to; but we have no certain evidence of any thing delivered by them, more than what we find contained in the holy scriptures.

16. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, who hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, 17. Comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work.

In these words we have the apostle's earnest prayer for them: in which observe, 1. To whom he pray—our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father. We may and should direct our prayers, not only to God the Father, through the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ, but also to our Lord Jesus Christ himself; and should pray in his name unto God, not only as his Father, but as our Father in and through him. 2. From what he takes encouragement in his prayer—from the consideration of what God had already done for him and them; Who hath loved us, and given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, v. 16. Where observe, (1.) The love of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for; our election, vocation, justification, and salvation, are all owing to the love of God in Christ Jesus. (2.) From this fountain in particular all our consolation flows. And the consolation of saints is an everlasting consolation. The contents of the saints are not passing things; they shall not die with them: the spiritual blessings God gives, none shall deprive them of; and God will not take them away; because he loves them with an everlasting love, therefore they should have everlasting consolations. (3.) Their consolation is founded on the hope of eternal life. They rejoice in hope of the glory of God, and are not only patient, but joyful, in tribulations; and there is good reason for these strong consolations, because the saints have good hope: their hope is grounded on the love of God, the promise of God, and the experience they have had of the power, the goodness, and the faithfulness of God, and it is good hope through grace; the free grace and mercy of God are what they hope for, and what their hopes are founded on, and not on any worth or merit of their own. 3. What it is that he asks of God for them—that he would comfort their hearts, and establish them in every good word and work, v. 17. God had given them consolations, and he prays that they might have more abundant consolation. There was good hope, through grace, that they should be preserved, and he prays that they might be established; it is observable how comfort and establishment are here joined together. Note therefore, (1.) Comfort is a means of establishment; for the more pleasure we take in the word, and work, and ways of God, the more likely we shall be to persevere therein. And, (2.) Our establishment in the ways of God is a likely means in order to comfort; whereas, if we are wavering in faith, and of a doubtful mind, or if we are halting and faultering in our duty, no wonder if we are strangers to the pleasures and joys of religion. What is it that lies at the bottom of all our unholiness, but our want of comfort? We must be established in every good word and work, in the word of truth and the work of righteousness: Christ must be honoured by our good works and good words; and who are sincere will endeavour to do both; and in so doing they may hope for comfort and establishment, till at length their holiness and happiness be completed.

CHAP. III.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, the apostle had prayed essentially for the Thessalonians, and now he subjoins another petition for them, v. 1. He then proceeds to give them commands and directions for correcting some things he was informed were amiss among them, v. 6. 15. And concludes with benedictions and prayers, v. 16. 18.

1. FINALLY, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you; 2. And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith. 3. But the Lord is faithful, who shall establish you, and keep you from evil. 4. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. 5. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.

In these words observe,

1. The apostle desires the prayers of his friends; Finally, brethren, pray for us, v. 1. He always remembered them in his prayers, and would not have them forget him and his fellow-labourers, but bear them on their hearts at the throne of grace. Note, It is one way by which the communion of saints is kept up, not only by their praying together, or with one another, but by their praying for one another, when they are not together. God will not forsake them that put their trust in him; he will remember them in his thoughts, and account them his friends, whether they are at a great distance, may meet together at the throne of grace; and thus they who are not capable of doing or receiving any other kindness, may yet this way do and receive real and very great kindness.

2. It is the duty of people to pray for their ministers; and not only for their own pastors, but also for all good and faithful ministers. And, 3. Ministers need, and therefore should desire, more and more of the prayers of the people. Here remarkable is the humility, and how engaging the example, of this great apostle, who was so mighty in prayer himself, and yet despised not the prayers of the meanest Christian, but desired an interest in them. Observe, further, what they are desired and directed to pray for; namely,

(1.) For the success of the gospel ministry; that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, v. 2. Note, This was that which Paul was most solicitous about. He was more solicitous that God's name might be sanctified, his kingdom come, and his will be done, than he was about his own daily bread. He desired that the word of the Lord might run, (so it is in the original,) that it might get ground; that the interest of religion in the world might go forward and not backward, and not only go forward, but go on pace. All the forces of hell were about there, more less, disguised and mistered to oppose the word of the Lord, to hinder its publication and success; we should pray, therefore, that oppositions may be removed, that so the gospel may have free course to the ears, the hearts, and the consciences of men, that it may be glorified in the conviction and conversion of sinners, the confutation of gainsayers, and the holy conversation of the saints. God, who magnified the law, and made it honourable, will glorify the gospel, and make that honourable, and so will glorify his own name. And good ministers and good Christians may very well be contented to be little, to be any thing, to be nothing, if Christ be magnified and his gospel be glorified. Paul was now at Athens, or, as some think, at Corinth, and would have the Thessalonians pray that he might have as good success with them as he had at Athens; and it might be as well with others even as it was with them. Note, If ministers have been successful in one place, they should desire to be successful in every place where they may preach the gospel.

(2.) For the safety of gospel ministers. He asks their prayers, not for prelom leaning, but for preservation—that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, v. 2. Note, They who are barren to the preaching of the gospel, and persecutors of the faithful preachers of it, are unreasonable and wicked men. They act against all the rules and laws of reason and religion, and are guilty of the greatest absurdity and impiety. Not only in the principles of atheism and laws of reason, and religion, but also in the practice of vice and impiety, and especially in persecution, there is the greatest absurdity in the world, as well as impiety. There is need of the spiritual protection, as well as the assistance, of godly and faithful ministers, for these are as the standard-bearers, who are most struck at; and therefore all who wish well to the interest of Christ in the world, should pray for them. For all men have not faith; many do not believe the gospel; these will seek to hinder and oppose it, and if such are restless and malicious in their endeavours to oppose the gospel, decry the ministry, and disgrace the ministers of the word: and too many have not common faith or honesty; there is no confidence that we can safely put in them, and we should pray to be delivered from those who have no conscience or honour, who never regard what they say or do. We may sometimes be in as much danger from pretended friends as from open and avowed enemies.

II. He encourages them to trust in God. We should not only pray to God for his grace, but also place our trust and confidence in his grace, and humbly expect what we pray for. Observe,

1. What the good is, which we may expect from the grace of God—establishment, and preservation from evil; and the best Christians stand in need of. And, 2. Ministers may expect, from God, such a blessing as the apostle had prayed for on their behalf, (ch. 2. 17.) and now he encourages them to expect this favour: we stand no longer than God holds us up; unless he hold up our goings, our feet will slide, and we shall fall. (2.) That God will keep them from evil: we have as much need of the grace of God for our perseverance to the end as for the beginning of the good work. The evil of the world is the greatest evil, but there are other evils which God will also preserve his saints from—the evil that is in the world, yea from all evil to his heavenly kingdom.

2. What encouragement we have to depend upon the grace of God; The Lord is faithful. He is faithful to his promises, and is the Lord who cannot lie, who will not alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth. When once the promise therefore is made, performance is sure and certain. He is faithful to his relation, a faithful God, and a faithful Friend; we may depend upon his filling up all the relations he stands in to his people. Let it be our care to be true and faithful in our promises, and to the relations we stand in to this faithful God. He adds,

3. A further ground of hope that God would do this for them, seeing they did and would do the things they were commanded, v. 4. The apostle had this confidence in them, and that was founded upon his confidence in God; for there is otherwise no confidence in man. Their obedience is described by what he and his fellow-labourers had commanded them; which was no other thing than the commandments of the Lord: for the apostles themselves had no further commission than to teach men to observe and to do what the Lord had commanded. And as the experience the apostle had of their obedience for the time past, was one ground of his confidence that they would do the things commanded them for the time to come; so this is one ground to hope, that whatsoever we ask of God we shall receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasant in his sight, 1 John 5. 22.
part of the happiness of heaven itself, where this love shall be made perfect. We can never attain to this, unless God by his grace direct our hearts aright, for our love is apt to go astray after other things. Note, We sustain a great deal of damage by misplaced our affections; it is sin and our misery that we place our affections upon wrong objects.

If God direct our love aright upon himself, the rest of the affections will thereby be rectified. 2. That a patient waiting for Christ might be joined with this love of God. There is no true love of God without faith in Jesus Christ; we must wait for Christ, which supposes our faith in him, that we believe he came once in flesh, and will come again in glory; and we must expect this second coming of Christ, and be careful to get ready for it. There must be a patient waiting, enduring with courage and constancy all that we may meet with in the mean time: and we have need of patience, and need of divine grace, to exercise Christian patience, the patience of Christ, (as some read the word,) patience for Christ's sake and after Christ's example.

6. Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. 7. For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; 8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you: 9. Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. 10. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. 11. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies. 12. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. 13. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. 14. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. 15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.

The apostle, having commended their obedience for the time past, and mentioned his confidence in their obedience for the time to come, proceeds to give them commands and directions to some who were faulty, correcting some things that were amiss among them. Observe, The best society of Christians may have some faulty persons among them, and some things that ought to be reformed. Perfection is not to be found on this side heaven: but evil manners beget bad laws; the disorders that Paul heard of as existing among the Thessalonians, occasioned the good laws we find in these verses, which are of constant use to us, and all others whom they may concern. Observe,

1. That which was amiss among the Thessalonians, which is expressed, 1. More generally; there were some who walked disorderly, not after the tradition they received from the apostle, v. 6. Some of the brethren were guilty of this disorderly walking; they did not live regularly, or govern themselves according to the rules of Christianity, or agreeably to their profession of religion; not according to the precepts delivered by the apostle, which they had received, and pretended to pay a regard unto. Note, We are concerned of those who have received the gospel, and profess a soundness of heart, that they live according to the gospel. If they do not, they are to be counted disorderly persons. 2. In particular, there were among them some idle persons and busy-bodies, v. 11. This the apostle was so credibly informed of, that he had sufficient reason to give commands and directions with relation to such persons, how they ought to behave, and how the church should deal with them. (1.) There were some among them who were idle, not working at all, or doing nothing. It does not appear that they were gluttons or drunkards, but idle, and therefore disorderly people. It is not enough for any to say, they do no hurt; for it is required of all persons that they do good in the places and relations in which Providence has placed them. It is probable that these persons had a notion (by a wrong application of some passages in the former epistle) concerning the near approach of the kingdom of Christ, which served them for a pretence to leave off the work of their callings, and live in idleness. Note, It is a great error, or abuse of religion, to make it a cloak for idleness, or any other sin. If we were sure that the day of judgment were ever so near, we must, notwithstanding, do the work of the day in its day, that when our Lord comes, he may find us so doing. The servant who waits for the coming of his Lord, must be working as his Lord has commanded, that all may be ready when he comes. Or it may be, these disorderly persons pretended that the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free, discharged them from the services and business of their particular callings and employments in the world: whereas they were to abide in the same calling wherein they were called of God, and therein abide with God, I Cor. 7. 20, 24. Industry in our particular callings as men, is a duty required of us by our general calling as Christians. Or perhaps the general charity that was then among Christians to their poor brethren, encouraged some to live in idleness, as knowing the church would maintain them: whatever was the cause, they were much to blame. (2.) There were busy-bodies among them: and it should seem, by the connection, that the same persons who were idle, were busy-bodies also: this may seem to be a contradiction; but so it is, that most commonly those persons who have no business of their own to do, or who neglect that, busy themselves in other men's matters. If we are idle, the Devil and a corrupt heart will soon find us something to do. The mind of man is a busy thing; if it is not employed in doing good, it will be doing evil. Note, Busy-bodies are disorderly persons, such are guilty of vain curiosities, and impertinent meddling with things that do not concern them, and troubling themselves and others with other men's matters. The apostle warns Timothy, (1 Tim. 5. 13.) to beware of such as learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house, and are not only idle, but tattlers also, and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not to speak. II. The good laws which were occasioned by these evil manners. Concerning which we may take notice, 1. Whose laws they are: they are commands of the apostles of our Lord, given in the name of their Lord and our's, the commands of our Lord himself. We command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, v. 6. Again, We command and exhort you by our Lord Jesus Christ, v. 12. The apostle uses words of authority and cutreat; and where disorders are to be rectified or prevented, there is need of both. The authority of Christ should awe our minds to obedience, and his grace and goodness should allure us.

2. What the good laws and rules are. The apostle gives directions to the whole church, commands to those disorderly persons, and an exhortation to those who dwell with them and with us.

(1.) His commands and directions to the whole church, regard, [1.] Their behaviour toward the disorderly persons who were among them; which is thus expressed, (v. 6.) to withdraw themselves from such, and afterward to mark that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed; yet not to count him as an enemy, but to admonish him as a brother. The direction here is, we must act in this matter, how we are to act to disorderly persons. We must be very cautious in church-censures and church-discipline. We must, First, Note that man who is suspected or charged with not obeying the word of God, or walking contrary thereto, that is, we must have sufficient proof of his fault before we proceed further. We must, Secondly, Admonish him in a friendly manner; we must put him in mind of his sin, and of his fault; (Matt. 18. 15.) then, if he will not hear, we must, Thirdly, Withdraw from him, and not keep company with him, that is, we must avoid familiar converse and society with such; for two reasons, namely, that we may not learn his evil ways: for he who follows vain and idle persons, and keeps company with such, is in danger of becoming like them. Another reason is, for the shaming, and so the reforming, of them that observe: that idle and disorderly persons see how their loose practices are disliked by all wise and good people, they may be ashamed of them, and walk more orderly. Love therefore to the persons of our offending brethren, even when we hate their vices, should be the motive of our withdrawing from them; and yet those who are under the censures of the church, must not be accounted as enemies; (v. 15.) for if they be rebuked and reformed, and these things be done by them, they will recover their credit and comfort, and right to church-privileges as brethren.

[2.] Their general conduct and behaviour ought to be according to the good example the apostle and those who were with him had given them; Yourselves know how ye ought to follow us, v. 7. Those who planted religion among them had set a good example before them; and the ministers of the gospel should be examples to the flock. It is the duty of Christians not only to walk according to the traditions of the apostles, and the doctrines they preached, but also according to the good example they set before them; to be followers of them, so far as they were followers of Christ. The particular good example the apostle mentions, was, their diligence, which was so different from that which was found in the disorderly walkers he takes notice of; We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; (v. 7.) we did not spend our time idly, in idle visits, idle talk, idle sports. They took pains in their ministry, in preaching the gospel, and in getting their own living. Neither did we eat any man’s bread for nought, v. 8. Though he might justly have demanded a maintenance, because they who preach the gospel may have right expect to live by the gospel, yet this was not a debt that people owe to their ministers, and the apostle had power or authority to have demanded this; (v. 9.) but he waved his right from affection to them, and for the sake of the gospel, and that he might be an example for them to follow, (v. 9.) that they might learn how to fill up time, and always be employed in somewhat that would turn to good account.

(2.) He commands and directs those that lived idle lives, to reform, and set themselves to their business. He had given commandments to this purport, as well as a good example of this, when he was among them; Even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any man would not work, neither should he eat, v. 10. as a proverbial speech among the Jews. He who does not labour, does not deserve to eat. The labourer is worthy of his meat; but what is the lotter worthy of? It is the will of God that every man should have a calling, and mind his calling, and make a business of it, and not live like useless drones in the world. Such persons do what in them lies to defeat the sentence, In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread. It was not the mere humour of the apostle, who was an active spirit in himself, and therefore would have every body else to be so too, but it was the command of our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness we work, and eat our own bread, v. 12. Men ought some way or other to earn their own living, otherwise they do not eat their own bread. Observe, There must be work or labour, in opposition to idleness; and there must be quietness, in opposition to being busy-bodies in other men’s matters. We must study to be quiet, and do our own business. This is an excellent but rare composition, to be of an active yet quiet spirit; active in our own business, and yet quiet as to other people’s.

(3.) He exhorts those that did well, not to be weary in well-doing; (v. 13.) Go on and prosper. The Lord is with you while you are with him. See that whatever you do, that is good, you persevere therein. Hold on your way, and hold out to the end. You must never give over, nor in your work. It will be time enough to rest when you come to heaven, that everlasting rest which remains for the people of God.

16. Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all. 17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write. 18. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

In this conclusion of the epistle we have the apostle’s benediction and prayers for these Thessalonians. Let us desire them for ourselves and our friends. There are three blessings pronounced upon them, or desired for them.

1. That God would give them peace. Note, (1.) Peace is the blessing pronounced or desired. By peace we may understand all manner of prosperity; here it may signify in particular, peace with God; peace in their own minds and consciences; peace among themselves, and peace with all men. (2.) This peace is desired for them always, or in every thing; and he desired they might have all good things at all times, and that all of them might, as they enjoyed the means of grace, they might with success use all the means and methods of peace too; for peace is often difficult, as it is always desirable.

(4.) That God would give them peace, who is the Lord of peace. If we have any peace that is desirable, God must give it, who is the Author of peace and Lover of concord. We shall neither have peaceable dispositions ourselves, nor find men do not love to be in peace with us, unless the God of peace give us both.

2. That the presence of God might be with them; The Lord be with you all. We need nothing more to make us safe and happy, nor can we desire any thing better for ourselves and our friends, than to have God’s gracious presence with us and them.
This will be a guide and guard in every way that we may go, and our comfort in every condition we may be in. It is the presence of God that makes heaven to be heaven, and that will make this earth to be like to heaven. No matter where we are, if God be with us; nor who is absent, if God be present with us.

3. That the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ might be with them. So this apostle concluded his first epistle to these Thessalonians; and it is through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that we may comfortably hope to have peace with God, and enjoy the presence of God, for he has made them nigh, that were afar off. It is this grace that is all in all to make us happy. This is what the apostle admired and magnified on all occasions, what he delighted and trusted in; and by this salutation or benediction, written with his own hand, as the token of every epistle, (when the rest was written by an amanuensis,) he took care lest the churches he wrote to should be imposed on by counterfeit epistles, which he knew would be of dangerous consequence.

Let us be thankful that we have the canon of scripture complete, and by the wonderful and special care of Divine Providence preserved pure and uncorrupt through so many successive ages; and not dare to add to it, or diminish from it. Let us believe the divine original of the sacred scriptures, and conform our faith and practice to this our sufficient and only rule, which is able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Amen.

AN EXPOSITION,
WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
of the
FIRST EPISODE OF ST. PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

Completed by Mr. Atkinson.

HITHERTO Paul's Epistles were directed to churches; now follow some to particular persons: two to Timothy, one to Titus, and another to Philemon; all three ministers. Timothy and Titus were evangelists, an inferior order to the apostles, as appears by that, (Eph. 4. 11.) Some prophets, some apostles, some evangelists. Their commission and work was much the same with that of the apostles, to plant churches, and water the churches that were planted; and accordingly they were itinerants, as we find Timothy was. Timothy was first converted by Paul, and therefore he calls him his own son in the faith: we read of his conversion, Acts 16. 3.

The scope of these two Epistles, is, to direct Timothy how to discharge his office as an evangelist at Ephesus, where he now was, and where Paul ordered him for some time to reside, to perfect the good work which he had begun there. As for the ordinary pastoral charge of that church, he had very solemnly committed it to the Presbytery, as appears from Acts 20. 28. where he charges the presbyters to feed the flock of God, which he had purchased with his own blood.

I. TIMOTHY, I.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription (v. 1, 2.) we have, I. the charge given to Timothy, v. 3, 4. II. The true end of the law, (v. 5, 11.) where he shows it is entirely agreeable to the gospel. III. He mentions his own call to be an apostle; for which he expresses his thankfulness, v. 12...16. IV. His doctrine, v. 17. V. A renewal of the charge to Timothy, v. 18. And of Hymenius and Alexander, v. 19, 20.

1. PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, who is our hope; 2. Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith: grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

3. As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine.

4. Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.
1. The inscription of the epistle; from whom it is sent. Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, constituted an apostle by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ. His credentials were unquestionable; he had not only a commission, but a commandment, not only from our Saviour, but from Jesus Christ: he was a preacher of the gospel of Christ, and a minister of the kingdom of Christ. Observe, God is our Saviour, Jesus Christ, who is our Hope. Observe, Jesus Christ is a Christian's hope; our hope is in him, our all hope of eternal life is built upon him; Christ is in us the Hope of glory, Col. 1. 27. He calls Timothy his own son, because he had been an instrument of his conversion, and because he had been a son that served him; served with him in the gospel, Phil. 2. 22. Timothy had not been wanting in the duty and observance of a son to Paul, and Paul was not wanting in the care and tenderness of a father to him.

2. The benediction is, grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father. Some have observed, that whereas in all the epistles to the churches, the apostolical benediction is grace and peace; in these two epistles to Timothy, and that to Titus, it is grace, mercy, and peace: as if ministers had more need of God's mercy than other men. Ministers need more grace than others, to discharge their duty faithfully; and they need more mercy than others, to pardon what they do amiss. Observe, a minister, and so eminent a minister, must be indebted to the mercy of God, and need the increase and continuance of it, how much more do we ministers, in these times, who have so little of his excellent spirit!

3. Paul tells Timothy what was the end of his appointing him to this office; I besought thee to abide at Ephesus. Timothy had a mind to have gone—Paul was loth to go from under his wing; but Paul would have it so. It was necessary for the public service; I besought thee, says he. Though he might assume an authority to command him, yet for love's sake he chose rather to beseech him. Now his business was to take care to fix both the ministers and the people of that church; Charge them that they teach no other doctrine than what they have received; that they do not add to the Christian doctrine any new thing, But avoiding profane babblings (as making up the defects of it; that they do not add to it, but cleave to it as it was delivered to them. Observe,

(1.) Ministers must not only be charged to preach the true doctrine of the gospel, but charged to preach no other doctrine. If an Angel from heaven preached any other doctrine, he was an anathema, Gal. 1. 8.

(2.) The times of the apostles there were attempts made to corrupt Christianity; (we are not as many, who corrupt the word, 2 Cor. 2. 17.) otherwise this charge to Timothy might have been spared.

(3.) He must not only see to it, that he did not preach any other doctrine, but he must charge others that they might not add any thing of their own to it, or take any thing from it, but that they preach it pure and uncorrupt. He must also take care to prevent their regarding fables and endless genealogies and strifes of words. This is often repeated in these two epistles, (as ch. 4. 7. 6. 4. 2 Tim. 2. 23.) as well as in the epistle to Titus. As among the Jews there were some who brought Judaism into Christianity; so among the Gentiles there were some who brought Paganism into Christianity. "Take heed of these," says he, "watch against them, it will be the corrupting and ruining of religion among you, for these minister questions rather than edifying." That which ministers questions, is not for edifying; that which gives occasion for doubtful disputes, pulls down the church rather than builds it up. And I think, by a parity of reason, every thing else that ministers questions rather than godly edifying, should be disclaimed and disregarded by us, such as an uninterrupted succession in the ministry from the apostles down to these times, the absolute necessity of episcopal ordination, and the intention of the minister to the efficacy and validity of the sacraments he administers. These are as bad as Jewish fables and endless genealogies, for they involve us in inextricable difficulties, and tend only to make the foundations of a Christian's hope, and to fill his mind with perplexing doubts and fears. Godly edifying is the end ministers should aim at in all their discourses, that Christians may be improving in godliness, and growing up to a greater likeness to the blessed God. Observe further, Godly edifying must be in faith; the gospel is the foundation on which we build; it is by faith that we come to God the first, (Heb. 11. 6.) and it must be in the same, and by the same principle of faith, that we must be edified. Again, Ministers should avoid, as much as may be, what will occasion disputes; and would do well to insist on the great and practical points of religion, about which there can be no disputes; for even disputes about great and necessary truths draw off the mind from the main design of Christianity, and eat out the vitals of religion, which consists in practical and obedience as well as faith, that we may not hold the truth in unrighteousness, but may keep the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

5. Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: 6. From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; 7. Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. 8. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully; 9. Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine; 11. According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.

Here the apostle instructs Timothy how to guard against the judaizing teachers, or others who mingled fables and endless genealogies with the gospel. He shews the use of the law, and glory of the gospel.

1. He shews the end and uses of the law: it is intended to promote love, for love is the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13. 10.

1. The end of the commandment is charity, or love, Rom. 13. 8. The main scope and drift of the divine law are to engage us to obedience to God, and another; and whatever tends to weaken either our love to God, or love to the brethren, tends to defeat the end of the commandment: and surely the gospel, which obliges us to love our enemies, to do good to them that hate us, (Matt. 5. 44.) does not design to lay aside or supersede a commandment
6.35 as those that or through it, and what they so It but By I not The of use, office tended vain the'. of zeal four vantages, TC of the man- dment, very teousness who presence. of brass jangling religion for the the set of a tuition, some us grace and of the law, the must be seated, for and the former more than the latter; for this reason ministers are called stewards, 1 Cor. 4. 1. (2.) It is a glorious trust, because the gospel committed to them is a glorious gospel; it is a trust of very great importance, God's glory is very much concerned in it. Lord! what a trust is committed to us! How much grace do we want to be found faithful in this great trust!

12. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry; 13. Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. 14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. 15. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. 16. Howbeit for this I obtained mercy, that in me first Christ Jesus might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting. 17. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.
But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly, in unbelief. (4.) Here was mercy for a blasphemer, a persecutor, and for an injurious person; "but I obtained mercy, I a blasphemer," &c.

Here he takes notice of the abundant grace of Jesus Christ, v. 14. The conversion and salvation of great sinners are owing to the grace of Christ, his exceeding abundant grace, even that grace of Christ which appears in his glorious gospel, v. 15. This is a faithful saying, before we have the sum of the whole gospel, that Jesus Christ came into the world. The Son of God took upon him our nature, was made flesh, and dwelt among us, John 1. 14. He came into the world, not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, Matt. 9. 13. His errand into the world was to seek and save, and so save, them that were lost, Luke 19. 10. The ratification of this is, that it is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation. It is a good news, worthy of all acceptation; and yet not too good to be true, for it is a faithful saying. It is a faithful saying, and therefore worthy to be embraced in the arms of faith: it is worthy of all acceptation, and therefore to be received with holy love, which refers to the foregoing verse, where the grace of Christ is said to abound in faith and love. In the close of the verse he adds, and appears to himself; Of great mercy and grace. Paul was a sinner of the first rank; so he acknowledges himself to have been, for he breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, &c. Acts 2, 1, 2. Persecutors are some of the worst of sinners: such a one as Paul had been; or, of whom am I chief, that is, of pardoned sinners I am chief. It is an expression of his great humility: he that elsewhere calls himself the least of all saints, Ephes. 3. 8. here calls himself the chief of sinners. Observe,

[2.] He came to save sinners, he came to save those who could not save and help themselves.

[3.] Blasphemers and persecutors are the chief of sinners, so St. Paul reckoned them. (4.) The chief of sinners may become the chief of saints; so this apostle was, for he was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles; (2 Cor. 11. 5.) for Christ came to save the chief of sinners. [5.] This is a very great truth, it is a faithful saying; these are true and faithful words, which may be depended on. [6.] It deserves to be received, to be believed by us all, for our comfort and encouragement.

The mercy which Paul found with God, notwithstanding his great wickedness before his conversion, becomes of

First, For the encouragement of others to repent and believe; (v. 16.) For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe. It was an instance of the long-suffering of Christ, that he would bear so much with one who had been so very provoking; and it was designed for a pattern to all others, that the greatest sinners might not despair of mercy with God.

Note here, 1. Our apostle was one of the first great sinners converted to Christianity. 2. He was converted, and obtained mercy, for the sake of others as well as of himself; he was a pattern to others. 3. The Lord Jesus Christ shews great long-suffering in the conversion of great sinners. Those who obtain mercy, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; for without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. Those who believe on Christ, believe on him to life everlasting; they believe to the salvation of the soul, Heb. 10. 39.

Secondly, He mentions it to the glory of God: having spoken of the mercy he had found with God, he could not go on with his letter, without inserting a thankful acknowledgment of God's goodness to him;
Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen. Observe,
1. That grace which we have the comfort of, God must have the glory of. Those who are sensible of their obligations to the mercy and grace of God, will have their hearts enlarged in his praise. Here is praise ascribed to him, as the King eternal, in-mortal, invisible.
2. When we have found God good, we must not forget to pronounce him great; and his kind thoughts of us must not at all abate our high thoughts of him, but rather increase them. God had taken particular cognizance of Paul, and shewed him mercy, and taken him into communion with himself, and yet he calls him the King eternal, &c. God's gracious dealings with us should fill us with admiration of his glorious attributes. He is eternal, without beginning of days, or end of life, or change of time. He is the Ancient of days, Dan. 7. 9. He is immortal, and the Original of immortality; he only has immortality, (1 Tim. 6. 16.) for he cannot die. He is invisible, for he cannot be seen with mortal eyes, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see. He is (1 Tim. 6. 16.) the only wise God; (Jude 25.) he only is infinitely wise, and the Fountain of all wisdom.
He is immortal, and eternal, and infinitely wise, and he is the King eternal, immortal, invisible.
Let me be for ever employed in giving honour and glory to him, as the thousands of thousands do, Rev. 5. 12, 13.

18. This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare; 19. Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck: 20. Of whom are Hymenaeus and Alexander; whom I have delivered into Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

Here is the charge he gives to Timothy to proceed in his work with resolution, v. 18. Observe here, The gospel is a charge committed to the ministers of it; it is committed to their trust, to see that it be duly applied according to the intent and meaning of it, and the design of its great Author. It seems, there had been prophecies before, concerning Timothy, that he should be taken into the ministry, and should prove eminent in the work of the ministry; this encouraged Paul to commit this charge to him. Observe,
1. The ministry is a warfare, it is a good warfare against sin and Satan: and under the banner of the Lord Jesus, who is the Captain of our salvation, (Heb. 2. 10.) and in his cause, and against his enemies, ministers are in a particular manner engaged.
2. Ministers must war this good warfare: must execute their office diligently and courageously, not withstanding oppositions and discouragements.
3. The prophecies which went before concerning Timothy, are here mentioned as a motive to stir him up to a vigorous and conscientious discharge of his duty; so the good hopes that others have entertained concerning us, should excite us to our duty; that thou by them mightest war a good warfare.

3. Holding faith and a good conscience. We must hold both faith and a good conscience; those that put away a good conscience, will soon make shipwreck of faith. Let us live up to the directions of a renewed enlightened conscience, and keep a conscience void of offence, (Acts 24. 16.) a conscience not debarred by any vice or sin, and that will be the means of preserving us sound in the faith; we must lose to the world as the other, for the maintenance of the faith must be held in a pure conscience, ch. 3.
9. As for those who had made shipwreck of the faith, he specifies two, Hymenaeus and Alexander, who had made a profession of the Christian religion, but had quitted that profession; and Paul had de-lined them to Satan, had declared them to belong to the kingdom of Satan, and, as some think, had,
by an extraordinary power, delivered them to be terribled or tormented by Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme, not to contradict or revile the dctrine of Christ, and the good ways of the Lord.
Observe, The primary design of the highest censures in the primitive church, was, to prevent further sin, and to reclaim the sinner. In this case it was for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. 5. 5.

Observe,
1. Those who love the service and work of Satan, are justly delivered over to the power of Satan; whom I have delivered to Satan. 2. God can, if he pleases, work by contraries: Hymenaeus and Alexander are delivered to Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme, when one would rather think they would learn of Satan to blaspheme the mere.
(3.) Those who have put away a good conscience, and made a shipwreck of faith, will not stick at any thing, blasphemy not excepted. (4.) Therefore let us hold faith and a good conscience, if we would keep clear of blasphemy; for if we once let go our hold of these, we do not know where we shall stop.

CHAP. II.
In this chapter, St. Paul treats, I. Of prayer, with many reasons for it, v. 1. 8. II. Of women's apparel, v. 9, 10.
III. Of their subjection, with the reasons of it, v. 11., 14.
IV. A promise given for their encouragement in childbearing, v. 15.

1. I EXHORT therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; 2. For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.
3. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; 4. Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. 5. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; 6. Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. 7. Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle, (I speak the truth in Christ, and he not,) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity. 8. I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.

Here is,
I. A charge given to Christians, to pray for all men in general, and particularly for all in authority.
Timothy must take care that this was done. Paul does not send him any prescribed form of prayer, as we have reason to think he would if he had intended that ministers should be tied to that way of praying;
but in general, that they should make supplications, supplications, for the averting of evil; prayers, for the obtaining of good; intercessions for others; and thanksgivings for mercies already received. Paul thought it enough to give them general heads; they, having the scripture to direct them in prayer, and the Spirit of prayer poured out upon them, needed not any further directions. Observe, The design of the Christian religion was to promote prayer, and the practice of prayer was to be always, Always with all prayer, Ephes. 6. 18. There must be prayers for ourselves in the first place; this is implied here; we must also pray for all men, for the world of mankind in general, for particular persons who need or desire our prayers. See how far the Christian religion was from being a sect, when it taught men this diffusive charity; to pray, not only for those of their own way, but for all men. Pray for all men (v. 2.) thought the kings at this time were heathens, enemies to Christianity, and persecutors of Christians, yet they must pray for them, because it is for the public good that there should be civil government, and proper persons intrusted with the administration of it, whom therefore we ought to pray for, yea, though we ourselves suffer under them. For kings; and all that are in authority, that is, inferior magistrates; we must pray for them, and we must give thanks for them, pray for their welfare, and for the welfare of their kingdoms, and therefore must not plot against them, that in the peace thereof we may have peace, and give thanks for them and for the benefit we have under their government; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. Here see what we must desire for kings—that God would comfort their hearts, and give grace to use the means of others that they may lead a quiet and peaceable life. He does not say, “that we may get preferments under them, grow rich, and be in honour and power under them;” no, the top of the ambition of a good Christian, is, to lead a quiet and peaceable life, to get through the world unmolested in a low private station. We should desire that we and others may lead a peaceable life in all godliness and honesty; implying, that we cannot expect to be kept quiet and peaceable, unless we keep in all godliness and honesty. Let us mind our duty, and then we may expect to be taken under the protection both of God and the government. In all godliness and honesty. Here we have our duty as Christians summed up in two words; godliness, that is, the right worshipping of God; and honesty, that is, a good conduct toward all men. These two must go together; for if we are not truly honest, if we are not godly, and do not render to God his due; and we are not truly godly, if we are not honest, for God hates robbery for burnt-offering. Here we observe, 1. Christians are to be men much given to prayer; they ought to abound herein, and should use themselves to prayers, supplications, &c. 2. In our prayers we are to have a generous concern for others as well as for ourselves; we are to pray for all. 3. All Christians, ye kings, yourselves, and those who are in authority, must pray for all; that they may have peace, and not confine our prayers or thanksgivings to our own persons or families. 3. Prayer consists of various parts, of supplications, intercessions, and thanksgivings; for we must pray for the mercies we want, as well as be thankful for mercies already received; and we are to deprecate the judgments which our own sins or the sins of others have deserved. 4. All Christians, ye kings, yourselves, and those who are in authority, must pray for all; that they may have peace, and for they have many difficulties to encounter, many snares to which their exalted stations expose them. 5. In praying for our governors, we take the most likely course to lead a peaceable and quiet life. The Jews at Babylon were commanded to seek the peace of the city, whither the Lord had carried them, to bring them in captivity, and to pray to the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof they should have peace, Jer. 29. 7. 6. If we would lead a peaceable and quiet life, we must live in all godliness and honesty; we must do our duty to God and man. He that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it, 1 Pet. 3. 10, 11. Now the reason he gives for this, is, because this is good in the sight of God our Saviour; the gospel of Christ requires this. That which is acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, we should do, and should abound in. II. As a reason why we should in our prayers concern ourselves for all men, he shews God’s love to mankind in general, v. 5. 1. One reason why all men are to be prayed for, is, because there is one God, and that God bears a good will to all mankind. There is one God, (v. 5.) and one only, there is no other, there can be no other, for there can be but one infinite. This one God will have all men to be saved; he desires not the death and destruction of any, (Ezek. 33. 11.) but the welfare and salvation of all. Not that he has decreed the salvation of all, for then all men would be saved; but he has a good will to the salvation of all, and none perish but by their own fault, Matt. 23. 57. He will have all to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth; to be saved in the way that he has appointed, and not otherwise. It concerns us to get the knowledge of the truth, because that is the way to be saved; Christ is the Way and the Truth, and no man cometh into the presence of God save by him. 2. There is a Mediator, and that Mediator gave himself a Ransom for all. As the mercy of God extends itself to all his works, so the mediation of Christ extends itself thus far to all the children of men, that he paid a price sufficient for the salvation of all mankind; he brought mankind to stand upon new terms with God, so that they are not now under the law as a covenant of works, but as a rule of life; they are not delivered, not under the covenant of grace, but under a new covenant; he gave himself a ransom. Observe, The death of Christ was a ransom, a counter-price; we deserved to have died; Christ died for us, to save us from death and hell; he gave himself a Ransom voluntarily, a Ransom for all; so that all mankind are put in a better condition than that of devils. He died to work out a common salvation: in order hereunto, he put himself into the hands of that Mediator between God and man. A mediator supposes a controversy. Sin had made a quarrel between us and God; Jesus Christ is a Mediator who undertakes to make peace, to bring God and man together, in the nature of an Umpire or Arbitrator, a Days-man who lays his hand upon us both, Job 9. 35. He is a Ransom that was to be testified in due time; that is, in the Old Testament-times, his sufferings, and the glory that should follow, were spoken of as things to be accomplished in the last times, 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11. And they are accordingly revealed, Paul himself having been ordained a preacher and an apostle, to publish to the Gentiles the glad tidings of redemption and salvation by Jesus Christ. This doctrine of Christ’s mediation Paul was intrusted to preach to every creature, Mark 16. 15. He was appointed to be a teacher of the Gentiles; beside his general call to the Gentiles, he was commissioned particularly to preach to the Gentiles, in faith and truth, faithfully and truly. Note, (L.) It is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour, that we pray for kings and for all men, and also, that we lead a peaceable and quiet life; and this is a very good reason why we should do the one as well as the other, and desire to be saved, and to be saved from all; so that it is not so much the want of a will in God to save them, as it is a want of will in themselves to be saved in God’s way. Here
I. TIMOTHY, II.

our blessed Lord charges the fault: Ye shall not come unto me, that ye may have life, John 5. 40. I would have you consider this, ye and you could not. (3.) Those who are saved must come to the knowledge of the truth, for that is God's appointed way to save sinners; without knowledge the heart cannot be good; if we do not know the truth, we cannot be ruled by it. (4.) It is observable, that the unity of God is asserted, and joined with the unity of the Mediator; and the church of Rome might as well maintain a plurality of gods as a plurality of mediators. (5.) He that is a Mediator in the New Testament, sense, gave himself a Ransom. Vain then is the pretence of the Romanists, that there is but one Mediator of satisfaction, but many of intercession; for, according to St. Paul, Christ's giving himself a Ransom, was a necessary part of the Mediator's office; and indeed this lays the foundation for his intercession. (6.) St. Paul was ordained a minister, to declare this to the Gentiles, that Christ is the one Mediator between God and men, who gave himself a Ransom for all. This is the substance of which all ministers are to preach, to the end of the world; and St. Paul magnified his office, as he was the apostle of the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 13. Lastly, Ministers must preach the truth, which they apprehend to be so, and they must believe it themselves; they are, like our apostles, to preach in faith and verity, and they must also be faithful and true.

III. A direction how to pray. v. 8.

1. Now, under the gospel, prayer is not to be confined to any one particular house of prayer, but men must pray every where: no place is amiss for prayer, no one place more acceptable to God than another, John 4. 21. Pray every where. We must pray in our closets, pray in our families, pray at our meals, pray when we are on journeys, and pray in the solemn assemblies, whether more public or private. 2. It is the will of God, that in prayer we should lift up holy hands; lifting up holy hands, or pure hands, pure from the pollution of sin, washed in the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness; I will wash my hands, &c. Ps. 26. 6.

3. We must pray in charity; without wrath, or malice, or anger at any person. Pray without anger, vs. 8. 4. We must pray without doubting, (Jam. 1. 6.) or, as some read it, without disputing; and then it falls under the head of charity.

5. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; 10. But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. 11. Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. 12. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. 14. And Adam was not deceived; but the woman, being deceived, was in the transgression. 15. Notwithstanding, she shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

Here is a charge, that women who profess the Christian religion, should be modest, sober, silent, and submissive, as becomes their place. Women must dress with their apparel, not affecting gaudiness, gaiety, or costliness; (you may read the vanity of a person's mind in the gaiety and gaudiness of their habit;) because they have better ornaments with which they should adorn themselves, as becomes women professing godliness, with good works. Note, Good works are the best ornament a woman can wear, to express her agreement with God, of great price. Those that profess godliness, should, in their dress, as well as other things, act as becomes their profession; instead of laying out their money on fine clothes, they must lay it out in works of piety and charity, which are properly called good works.

2. Women must learn—learn the principles of their religion, learn Christ, learn the scriptures; they must not think that their sex excuses them from that learning which is necessary to salvation. 3. They must be silent, submissive, and not usurp authority. The reason given, is, because Adam was first formed, then Eve out of him, to denote her subordination to him, and dependence upon him; and that she was made for him, to be a help-meet for him. And as she was last in the creation, which is the one reason for her subjection; so as she was first in the transgression, and that is another reason. Adam was not deceived, that is, not first; the serpent did not immediately set upon him, but the woman was first in the transgression: (2 Cor. 11. 3.) and it was part of the sentence, Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee, Gen. 3. 16.

But it is a word of comfort, (v. 15.) that they who continue in sobriety, shall be saved in child-bearing, 15. And if any woman among you be a teacher, she must teach jointly with her husband. The Messiah, who was born of a woman, should break the power of the serpent. 3. 15. or, the sentence which they are under for sin, shall be no bar to their acceptance with Christ, if they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety.

Here we observe, (1.) The extensiveness of the rules of Christianity; they reach not only to men, but to women, not only to their persons, but also to apparel, which must be modest, like their sex; and to their circumstances; devout dress. (2.) The woman must be in silence, with all subjection. (2.) Women are to profess godliness as well as men: for they are baptized, and thereby stand engaged to exercise themselves to godliness; and, to their honour be it spoken, many of them were eminent professors of Christianity in the days of the apostles, as the book of Acts will inform us. (3.) Women being more in danger of exceeding in their apparel, it was more necessary to restrain them than men; and, therefore, these best ornaments for professors of godliness, are, good works. (5.) According to St. Paul, women must be learners, and are not allowed to be public teachers in the church: for teaching is an office of authority; whereas she must not usurp authority over the man, but is to be in silence. But, notwithstanding this prohibition, good women may and ought to teach their children at home the principles of religion. Timothy from a child had known the holy scriptures: and who should teach him but his mother and grandmother? 2 Tim. 3. 15. Aquila and his wife Priscilla expounded unto Apollos the way of God more perfectly; but then they did it privately, for they took him unto them, Acts 18. 26. (6.) Here are two very good reasons given for the man's authority over the woman, and her subjection to the man, v. 13, 14. Adam was first formed, then Eve; she was created for the man, and not the man for the woman; (1 Cor. 11. 9.) then she was deceived, and brought the man into the transgression. Lastly, Though the difficulties and dangers of child-bearing are many and great, as they are part of the punishment inflicted on the sex for Eve's transgression, yet here is much for her support and encouragement; Notwithstanding she shall be saved, &c. Though in sorrow, yet she shall bring forth a nation of men, and be a mother of living children: with this proviso, that they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, with so briety: and women under the circumstance of childbearing should by faith lay hold on this promise for their support in the needful time.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, our apostle treats of church-officers. And, 1. He gives us the method more to a person to be admitted to the office of a bishop, v. 1-7. II. He gives us the qualifications of deacons; (v. 8. 10.) and of their wives; (v. 11.) again of the deacons, v. 12.—13. III. He gives us the reasons of his writing to Timothy, whereupon he speaks of the church, and the foundation-truth professed therein, v. 14. to the end.

1. This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. 2. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach; 3. Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; 4. One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; 5. (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) 6. Not a novice, lest, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. 7. Moreover, he must have a good report of them who are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

The two epistles to Timothy, and that to Titus, contain a scripture-plan of church-government, or a direction to ministers. Timothy, we suppose, was an evangelist who was left at Ephesus, to take care of those whom the Holy Ghost had made bishops there, that is, the presbyters, as appears by Acts 20. 28. where the care of the church was committed to the presbyters, and they were called bishops. It seems, they were very loath to part with Paul, especially because he told them, they should see his face no more, (Acts 20. 28.) for their church was but newly planted, they were afraid of undertaking the care of it, and therefore Paul left Timothy with them to set them in order.

And here we have the character of a gospel-minister, whose office it is, as a bishop, to preside in a particular congregation of Christians; If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work, v. 1. The ministry is a work. However the office of a bishop may be now thought a good preferment, then it was thought a good work. Observe,

(1.) The office of a scripture-bishop is an office of divine appointment, and not of human invention; the ministry is not a creature of the state, and it is pitiful that the minister should be at any time the tool of the state. The office of a bishop was in the church before the magistracy conterminous Christianity, for this office is one of the great gifts Christ has bestowed on the church, Ephes. 4. 8. 11. (2.) This office of a Christian-bishop is a work which requires diligence and application; the apostle represents it under the notion and character of a work; not of great honour and advantage, for ministers should not pray for this. 9. But to work more than to the honour and advantage of their office. (3.) It is a good work, a work of the greatest importance, and designed for the greatest good: the ministry is conversant about no lower concerns than the life and happiness of immortal souls; it is a good work, because designed to illustrate the divine perfections in bringing many sons into glory; the ministry is appointed to open men's eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, &c. Acts 46, 18. (4.) There ought to be an earnest desire of the office, in those who would be put into it; if a man desire, he should earnestly desire it, for the prospect he has of bringing greater glory to God, and of doing the greatest good to the souls of men, by this means. This is the question proposed to those who offer themselves to the ministry of the church of England; “Do you think you are moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon you this office?”

In order to the discharge of this office, the doing of this work, the workman must be duly qualified.

1. A minister must be blameless; he must not lie under any scandal; he must give as little occasion for reproach as can be, because that will be a prejudice to his ministry, and will reflect reproach upon his office.

2. He must be the husband of one wife; not having given a bill of divorce to one, and then taking another, or not having many wives at once, as that time was too common both among Jews and Gentiles, especially among the Gentiles.

3. He must be vigilant and watchful against Satan, that subverteth; he must turn his heart over himself, and the souls of those who are committed to his charge, of whom having taken the oversight, he must improve all opportunities of doing them good. A minister ought to be vigilant, because our adversary the Devil goes about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8.

4. He must be sober, temperate, moderate in all his actions, and in the use of all creatures-comforts. Sobriety and watchfulness are often in scripture put together, because they mutually befriend one another: Be sober, be vigilant.

5. He must be of good behaviour, composed and solid, and not light, vain, and frothy.

6. He must be given to hospitality; open-handed to strangers, and ready to entertain them according to his ability, as one who does not set his heart upon the wealth of the world, and who is a true lover of his brethren.

7. Afit to teach. Therefore this is a preaching bishop whom Paul describes, one who is both able and willing to communicate to others the knowledge which God has given him; one who is fit to teach, and ready to take all opportunities of giving instruction; he who is himself well instructed in the things of the kingdom of heaven, and is communicative of what he knows to others.

8. Not brawling; not given to wine. The priests were not to drink wine when they went in to minister, (Lev. 10. 8. 9.) lest they drink and pervert the law.

9. No striker; one who is not quarrelsome, or apt to use violence to any, but does every thing with meekness, love, and gentleness. The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle towards all, &c. 2 Tim. 2. 23.

10. One who is not greedy of filthy lucre; who does not make his ministry to trussle to any secular design or interest; who uses no mean, base, sordid ways of getting money; who is dead to the wealth of this world, lives above it, and makes it appear he is so.

11. He must be patient, and not a brawler; of a mild disposition. Christ, the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls, is so. Not apt to be angry or quarrelsome, as not a striker with his hands, so not a brawler with his tongue; for how shall men teach others to govern their tongues, who do not make conscience of keeping them under good government themselves?

12. Not covetous. Covetousness is bad in any, but it is worst in a minister, whose calling leads him to converse so much with another world.
13. He must be one who keeps his family in good order; that rules well his own house, that he may set a good example to other masters of families, to do so too; and that he may thereby give a proof of his ability to take care of the church of God; For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? Observe, The families of ministers ought to be examples of good to all other families. Ministers must have their children in subjection; then it is the duty of ministers' children to submit to the instructions that are given them. With all gravity. The best way to keep inferiors in subjection, is, to be grave with them. Not having his children in subjection with all austerity, but with all gravity.

14. 6. He must insist a novice; not one newly brought to the Christian religion, or not one who is but meanly instructed in it, who knows no more of religion than the surface of it, for such a one is apt to be lifted up with pride: the more ignorant men are, the more proud they are. Least, being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the Devil. The devils fell through pride, which is a good reason why we should take heed of pride, because it is a sin that turned angels into devils.

15. He must be of good reputation among his neighbours, and under no reproach from former conversation; for the Devil will make use of that to insnare others, and work in them an aversion to the doctrine of Christ, preached by those who have not had a good report.

Now upon the whole, having briefly gone through the qualifications of a gospel-bishop, we may say, (1.) With great reason cry out, as St. Paul does, Who is sufficient for these things? 2 Cor. 2. 16. His labor, how great—This is a work indeed. What piety, what prudence, what zeal, what courage, what faithfulness, what watchfulness over ourselves, our lusts, appetites, and passions, and over those under our charge? I say, what holy watchfulness is necessary in this work! (2.) Have not the best qualified and the most faithful and conscientious ministers just reason to complain against themselves, that so much is requisite by way of qualification, and so much work is necessary to be done? And, alas! how far short do the best come of what they should be, and what they should do! (3.) Yet let those bless God, and be thankful, whom the Lord has enabled, and counted faithful, putting them into the ministry: if God is pleased to make any, in some degree, able and faithful, let him have the praise and glory of it. (4.) For the encouragement of all faithful ministers, we have Christ's gracious word of promise, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, Matt. 28. 20. And if he be with us, he will fit us for our work in some measure, and carry us through the difficulties of it with comfort, graciously pardon our imperfections, and reward our faithfulness with a crown of glory that fadeth not away, 1 Pet. 5. 4.

6. Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; 9. Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. 10. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. 11. Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. 12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. 13. For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to them-
2. The church is the house of God, he dwells there; the Lord has chosen Zion, to dwell there; "This is my rest, here will I dwell, for I have chosen it;" there may we see God's power and glory, Ps. 63. 2.

It is the great support of the church, that it is the church of the living God, the true God in opposition to false gods, dumb and dead idols; the pillar and ground of truth; that is, either,

(1.) The church itself; that is, the pillar and ground of truth. Not that the authority of the scriptures depends upon that of the church, as the papists pretend, for truth is the pillar and ground of the church; but the church holds forth the scripture and the doctrine of Christ, as the pillar, to which therefore a proclamation is affixed, holds forth the proclamation. Even the things done in the flesh, by ministers in heavenly places is made known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. 3. 10.

(2.) Others understand it of Timothy. He, not himself only, but as an evangelist, he and other faithful ministers, are the pillars and ground of truth; it is their business to maintain, hold up, and publish, the truths of Christ in the church. It is said of the apostles, that they seemed to be pillars, Gal. 2. 9.

[1.] Let us be diligent and impartial in our own inquiries after truth; let us buy the truth at any rate, and not think much of any pains to discover it.

[2.] Let us be careful to keep and preserve it; "Buy the truth, and sell it not, (Prov. 23. 23.) do not part with it on any consideration." [3.] Let us take care to publish it, and to transmit it safe and incorruptible unto posterity. [4.] When the church ceases to be the pillar and ground of truth, we may and ought to forsake her; for our regard to truth should be greater than our regard to the church; we are no longer obliged to continue in the church than she continues to be the pillar and ground of truth.

Now what is the truth which the churches and ministers are the pillars and grounds of? He tells us, (v. 16.) that without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. The learned Cameros joins this with what goes before, and then it runs thus, "The pillar and ground of the truth; and without controversy great is the mystery of godliness." He supposes this mystery to be the pillar, &c. Observe,

First, Christianity is a mystery, a mystery that could not have been found out by reason or the light of nature, and cannot be comprehended by reason, because it is above reason, though not contrary thereto. It is a mystery, not of philosophy or speculation; but, Secondly, It is a mystery of godliness, designed to promote godliness; and herein it exceeds all the mysteries of the Gentiles. Thirdly, It is a revealed mystery, not shut up and sealed; and it does not cease to be a mystery, because now in part revealed.

Now what is the mystery of godliness? It is Christ; and here are six things concerning Christ, which make up the mystery of godliness.

1. That he is God manifest in the flesh: God was manifest in the flesh. This proves that he is God, the eternal Word, that was made flesh, and was not made a man. When God was to be manifested to man, he was pleased to manifest himself in the incarnation of his own Son; The word was made flesh, John 1. 14.

2. He is justified in the Spirit. Whereas he was reproached as a sinner, and put to death as a malefactor, he was raised again by the Spirit, and was justified from all calumnies with which he was loaded. He was made Sin for us, and was delivered for our offences; but, being raised again, he was justified in the Spirit; it was made to appear that his sacrifice was accepted, and so he rose again for our justification, as he was delivered for our offences, Rom. 4. 25. He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18.

3. He was seen of angels. They worshipped him, (Heb. 1. 6.) they attended his incarnation, his temptation, his agony, his death, his resurrection, his ascension; this is much to his honour, and shews what a mighty interest he has in the upper world, that angels ministered to him, for he is the Lord of angels.

4. He is preached unto the Gentiles. This is a great part of the mystery of godliness, that Christ was offered to the Gentiles a Redeemer and Saviour; that whereas, before, salvation was of the Jews, the partition-wall was now taken down, and the Gentiles were taken in; I have set thee to be a Light of the Gentiles, Acts 13. 47.

5. That he was believed on in the world, so that he was not preached in vain. Many of the Gentiles welcomed the gospel which the Jews rejected. Who would have thought that the world, which lay in wickedness, should have believed in the Son of God, should have taken him to be their Saviour, who was himself crucified at Jerusalem. But, notwithstanding all the prejudices they laboured under, he was believed on, &c.

II. The character of God.

5. He was received up into glory; in his ascension. This indeed was before he was believed on in the world; but it is put last, because it was the crown of his exaltation, and because it is not only his ascension that is meant, but his sitting at the right-hand of God, where he ever lives, making intercession, and has all power, both in heaven and earth: and because in the apostasy, of which he treats in the following chapter, his remaining in heaven would be denied by those who pretend to bring him down on their altars in the consecrated wafer. Observe,

(1.) He who was manifest in flesh, was God, really and truly God; God by nature, and not only so by office, for this makes it to be a mystery. (2.) God was manifest in flesh, real flesh; forasmuch as children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, Heb. 2. 14. And what is more amazing, he was manifest in the flesh; his word, though he himself was holy from the womb. (3.) Godliness is a mystery in all its parts and branches, from the beginning to the end, from Christ's incarnation to his ascension. (4.) It being a great mystery, we should rather humbly adore it, and plioudly believe it, than curiously pry into it, or be too positive in our explications of it, and determinations about it, further than the holy scriptures have revealed it to us.

CHAP. IV.

St. Paul here foretells, I. A dreadful apostasy, v. 1 . 3 . II. He treats of Christ, v. 4. 5. He diversifies directions with respect to himself, his doctrine, and the people under his care, v. 6, to the end.

1. NOW the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their consciences seared with a hot iron; 3. Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. 4. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgivings: 5. For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

We have here a prophecy of the apostacy of the latter times, which he had spoken of as thing expected and taken for granted among Christians. 2 Thess. 2. In the close of the foregoing chapter, we had the mystery of godliness summed up; and therefore very fitly, in the beginning of this chapter, we have the mystery of iniquity summed up. The Spirit speaks expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith; whether he means the Spirit who spake by the Old Testament, or the Spirit in the prophets of the New Testament, or both. He may be speaking of species concerning antichrist, as well as of the prophecy concerning Christ, came from the Spirit. The Spirit in both spake expressly of a general apostacy from the faith of Christ, and the pure worship of God. This should come in the latter times, during the Christian dispensation, for those are called the latter days; in the following ages of the church, for the mystery of iniquity now began to work. Some shall depart from the faith, or there shall be an apostasy from the faith. Some, not all; for in the worst of times God will have a remnant, according to the election of grace. They shall depart from the faith, the faith delivered to the saints (Jude 3.) which was delivered at once, the sound doctrine of the gospel. Giving heed to seducing spirits; men who pretended to teach, but were guided by the Spirit, 1 John 4. 1. Beloved, believe not every spirit; every one who pretends to the Spirit. Now here observe,

I. One of the great instances of that apostasy, and that is, giving heed to doctrines of demons, or concerning demons; those doctrines which teach the worship of saints and angels, as a middle sort of deities, between the immortal God and mortal men, such as the heathen called demons, and worshipped under that notion. Now this plainly agrees to the church of Rome, and it was one of the first steps toward that great apostasy, the insinthing of the relics of martyrs, paying divine honours to them, erecting altars, burning incense, consecrating images and temples, and making prayers and praises to the honour of saints departed. This demon-worship is paganism revived, the image of the first beast.

II. The instance of them propagating this apostasy and delusion. It will be done by hypocrisy of those that speak lies, (v. 2.) speaking lies in hypocrisy; the agents and emissaries of Satan, who promote these delusions by lies and forgeries and pretended miracles. It is done by their hypocrisy, professing honour to Christ, and yet at the same time fighting against all his anointed offices, and corrupting or profaning all his ordinances. This respects also the hypocrisy of those who have their consciences seared with a hot iron, who are perfectly lost to the first principles of virtue and moral honesty. If men had not their consciences seared as with a hot iron, they could never maintain a power to dispense with oaths for the good of the Catholic cause, could never maintain that no faith is to be kept with them, could never divest themselves of all remains of humanity and compassion, and clothe themselves with the most barbarous cruelty, under pretence of promoting the interest of the church.

Another part of their character is, that they forbid to marry, forbid their clergy to marry, and speak very reproachfully of marriage, though an ordinance of God; and that they command to abstain from meats, and prejudice them in that at certain times and seasons, only to exercise a tyranny over the consciences of men.

1. The apostasy of the latter times should not surprise us, because it was expressly foretold by the Spirit. 2. The Spirit is God, otherwise he could not certainly foresee such distant events, which are to us uncertain and contingent, depending on the tempers, humouris, and lusts of men. 3. The difference between the predictions of the Spirit and the oracles of the heathen is remarkable; the Spirit speaks expressly, but the oracles of the heathen were always doubtful and uncertain. 4. It is comfortable to think that in such general apostasies all are not equally sure, but only some. 5. It is common for seducers and deceivers to pretend to the Spirit, which is a strong presumption that all are convinced that this is the most likely to work in us an approbation of what pretends to come from the Spirit. 6. Men must be hardened, and their consciences seared, before they can depart from the faith, and draw in others to side with them. 7. It is a sign that men have departed from the sound of the word, if they will command what God has forbidden, such as saint and angel or demon-worship; and forbid what God has allowed or commanded, such as marriage and meats.

Upon occasion of the mentioning of their hypocritical fastings, the apostle lays down the doctrine of the Christian liberty which we enjoy under the gospel, of using God's good creatures; that, whereas under the law there was a distinction of meats between clean and unclean (such sort of flesh they might eat, and such they might not eat,) all that is now taken away; and we are to call nothing common or unclean, Acts 10. 15.

1. We are to look upon our food as that which God has created; we have it from him, and therefore must use it for him.

2. God, in making those things, had a special regard to them who believe and know the truth; good Christians, who have a common right to all the creatures; whereas others have only a common right.

3. What God has created, is to be received with thanksgiving. We must not refuse the gifts of God's bounty, or be scrupulous in making differences where God has made none; but take it, and be thankful, acknowledging the power of God the Maker of them, and the bounty of God the Giver of them.

Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, v. 4. This plainly sets us at liberty from all the distinctions of meats appointed by the ceremonial law, as particularly that of swine's flesh, which the Jews were forbidden to eat, but which is allowed to us Christians, by this rule, Every creature of God is good, &c. Observe, God's good creatures are then good, and doubly sweet to us, when they are received with thanksgiving.

For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer, v. 5. It is a desirable thing to have a sanctified use of our creature-comforts. Now they are sanctified to us,

1. By the word of God; not only his permission, allowing us the liberty of the use of these things, but his promise to feed us with food convenient for us. This gives us a sanctified use of our creature-comforts.

2. By prayer, which blesses our meat to us. The word of God and prayer must be brought to our common actions and affairs, and then we do all in faith. Observe,

First, Every creature is God's, for he made all. Every beast in the forest is mine, (says God,) and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains, and the wild beasts of the field are mine, Ps. 50. 10, 11. Secondly, Every creature is God's good: when the blessed God took a survey of all his works, God saw all that was made, and, behold, it was very good, Gen. 1. 31. Thirdly, The blessing of God makes every creature nourishing to us; man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God, (Matt. 4. 4.) and therefore nothing ought to be refused. Fourthly, We ought therefore to ask his blessing by prayer, and so to sanctify the creatures we receive by prayer.

6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereby thou hast attained. 7. But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness. 8. For bodily exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. 9. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation. 10. For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe. 11. These things command and teach. 12. Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. 13. Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. 15. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all. 16. Take heed unto thyself, and unto thy doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

If thou put the brethren in remembrance, &c. He would have Timothy to insist such notions as these into the minds of Christians, which might prevent their being seduced by the judaizing teachers. Observe, There are good ministers of Jesus Christ, who are diligent in their work; not that study to advance new notions, but that put the brethren in remembrance of those things which they have received and heard. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, 2 Pet. 1. 12. And elsewhere, I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, 2 Pet. 3. 1. And, says the apostle Jude, I will therefore put you in remembrance, Jude 5. You see that the apostles and apostolical men reckoned it a main part of their work, to put their hearers in remembrance; for we are apt to forget, and slow to learn and remember, the things of God.

Nourished up in the words of faith and good doctrine, whereby thou hast attained. Observe, 1. Even ministers themselves have need to be growing and increasing in the knowledge of Christ and his doctrine: they must be nourished up in the words of faith. 2. The best way for ministers to grow in knowledge and faith, is, to put the brethren in remembrance, while we teach others, we teach our selves. 3. They whom ministers teach, are brethren, and are to be treated like brethren; for ministers are not lords of God's heritage.

1. Godliness is here pressed upon him and others; Refuse profane and old wives' sayings, v. 7, 8. The Jewish traditions which some people fill their heads with, have nothing to do with them. "But exercise thyself rather unto godliness; mind practical reli tion." Those who would be godly, must exercise themselves unto godliness; it requires a constant exercise. The reason is taken from the gain of godliness; bodily exercise profit little, or for a little time. Abstinence from meats and marriage, and the like, though they pass for acts of mortification and self-denial, yet they profit little, they turn to little account. What will it avail us, to mortify the body, if we do not mortify sin? Observe,

There is a great deal to be got by godliness; it will be of use to us in the whole of our life; for it has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. Observe, The gain of godliness lies much in this promise of the life that now is to godly people relate to the life that now is; but especially they relate to the life which is to come. Under the Old Testament the promises were mostly of temporal blessings, but under the New Testament of spiritual and eternal blessings. If godly people have but little of the good things of the life that now is, yet it shall be made up to them in the good things of the life that is to come. Observe further, There were profane and old wives' fables in the days of the apostles; and Timothy, though an excellent man, was not above such a word of advice, Refuse profane, &c. Again, It is not enough that we refuse profane and old wives' fables, but we must exercise ourselves to godliness; we must not only cease to do evil, but we must learn to do well, (Isa. 1. 16, 17.) and we must make a practice of exercising ourselves to godliness. And those who are truly godly, shall not be losers at last, whatever becomes of those who content themselves with bodily exercise, for godliness has the promise, &c.

II. The encouragement which we have to proceed in the ways of godliness, and to exercise ourselves to it, notwithstanding the difficulties and discouragements that we meet with in it. He had said, (v. 4.) that it is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life which now is. But the question is, "Will the profit balance the loss?" For if it will not, it is not profit. Yes, we are sure it will. Here is another of Paul's faithful sayings, worthy of all acceptance—that all our labours and losses in the service of God and work of religion, will be abundantly recompensed: so that though we lose for Christ, we shall not lose by him; Therefore we labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, v. 10. Observe,

1. Godly people must labour and expect reproach; they must do well, and yet expect at the same time to suffer ill: toil and trouble are to be expected by us in this world, not only as men, but as saints.

2. Those who labour and suffer reproach in the service of God and the work of religion, may depend upon the living God, that they shall not lose by it. Let this encourage them, We trust in the living God. The consideration of this, that God who has undertaken to be our Pay-master, is the living God, who does himself live for ever, and is the fountain of life to all who serve him, should encourage us in all our services and in all our sufferings for him, especially considering that he is the Saviour of all men.

(1) By his procusions he protects the persons, and prolongs the lives, of the children of men.

(2) He has a general good-will to the eternal salvation of all men thus far, that he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. He desires not the death of sinners; he is thus far the Saviour of all men, that none are left in the same desperate condition that fallen angels are in. If he be this the Saviour of all men, we may hence infer, that he must be the Rewarder of those who seek and serve him; if he has such a good-will for all his creatures, much more will he provide well for those who are new creatures, who are born again. He is the Saviour of all men, but especially of those that believe; and the salvation he has in store for those that believe, is sufficient to recompense them for all their services and sufferings.

Here we see, [1.] The life of a Christian is a life of labour and suffering; see labour and suffer. [2.] The best we can expect to suffer in the world, is, reproach for our well-doing, for our work of faith and labour of love. [3.] True Christians trust in the living God; for cursed is the man that trusts in man, or in any but the living God; and they that trust in him, shall never be ashamed. Trust in him at all times. [4.] God is the general Saviour of all men, as he has put them into a savable state; but he is in a peculiar manner the Saviour of the believers; there is then a general and a special recommendation.

III. He concludes the chapter with an exhortation to Timothy;

1. To command and teach these things that he had now been teaching him. "Command them that they exercise themselves unto godliness, teach them the profit of it, and that if they serve God, they serve one who will do sure to bear them out.

2. He charges him to commit himself with that gravity and prudence that might gain him respect, notwithstanding his youth; "Let no man despise thy youth; give no man an occasion to despise thy youth." Men's youth will not be despised, if they do not by youthful vanities and follies make themselves despicable; and that men may do, who are old, who may therefore think themselves if they be despised.

3. He charges him to confirm his doctrine by a good example; Be thou an example of the believers, &c. Observe, Those who teach by their doctrine, must teach by their life, else they pull down with one hand what they build up with the other: they must be examples both in word and conversation. Their discourse must be edifying, and that will be a good example; their conversation must be strict, and that will be a good example; they must be examples in charity, or love to God and all good men; examples in spirit, that is, in spiritual-mindedness, in spiritual worship: in faith, that is, in the profession of Christian faith: and in purity or chastity.

4. He charges him to study hard; "Thou hast given attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine, to meditation upon these things, v. 13. Though TI-

5. He had extraordinary gifts, yet he must use ordinary means. Or, they may show by the public reading of the scriptures; he must read and expound, that is, read and expound, read, and press what he read upon them; he must expound it both by way of exhortation, and by way of doctrine; he must teach them both what to do, and what to believe.

Observe, (1.) Ministers must teach and command the things that they are taught and commanded themselves; it is necessary for people to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded, Matt. 28. 20. (2.) The best way for ministers to prevent themselves from being despised, is, to teach and practise the things that are given them in charge. No wonder if ministers are despised, who do not teach these things; or, instead of being examples of good believers, act directly contrary to the doctrine they preach; they must be examples of those that be despised, and despised among men; (2.) Those ministers that are the best accomplished for their work, must yet read and study their books, they may be improving in knowledge; and they must mind also their work; they are to give attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, v. 14. The grace of God will wither, if they be neglected. It may be understood either of the office to which he was advanced, or of his qualifications for that office; if of the former, it was ordination in an ordinary way; if of the latter, it was extraordinary. It seems to be the former, for it was by laying on of hands, &c. Here see the scripture-way of ordination, it was by the laying on of hands, and the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Observe, Timothy was ordained by men in office. It was an extraordinary gift that we read of elsewhere as being conferred on him by the laying on of Paul's hands, but he was invested in the office of the ministry by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

[1.] We may note, the office of the ministry is a gift, it is the gift of Christ; when he ascended up on high, he received gifts for men, and he gave some apostles, and some ministers, and some pastors and teachers; (Eph. 4. 8, 11.) and this was a very kind gift to his church.

[2.] Ministers ought not to neglect the gift bestowed upon them, whether by gift we are here to understand the office of the ministry, or qualifications for that office; neither the one nor the other must be neglected. [3.] Though there was prophecy in the case of Timothy, (the gift was given by prophecy,) yet this was accompanied with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, that is, a number of presbyters; the office was conveyed to him this way; and I should think here is a sufficient warrant for ordination by presbyters, since it does not appear that St. Paul was concerned in Timothy's ordination. It is true, extraordinary gifts were conferred on him by the laying on of the apostle's hands; (2 Tim. 1. 6.) but if he was concerned in his ordination, the presbytery was not excluded, for that is particularly mentioned; whence it seems pretty evident, that the presbytery have the inherent power of ordination.

Having this work committed to him, he must give himself wholly to it; "Be wholly in those things, that thy profession may appear." He was a wise knowing man, and yet he must still be professing, and make it his business to be improved in knowledge. First, Ministers are to be much in meditation; they are to consider beforehand how and what they must speak; they are to meditate on the great trust committed to them, on the worth and value of immortal souls, and on the account they must give at the last. Secondly, Ministers must be wholly in those things, they must mind these things as their principal work and business; "Gifts and callings must be according to their office." By this means their professing will appear in all things, as well as to all persons; this is the way for them to profit in knowledge and grace, and also to profit others.

5. He presses it upon him to be very cautious; "Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine, consider what thou preachest: continue in them, in the truths that thou hast received; and this will be the way to save thyself, and those that hear thee." Observe, (1.) Ministers are engaged in saving work, which makes it a good work. (2.) The care of ministers should be in the first place to save themselves; "Save thyself in the first place, so shalt thou be instrumental to save them that hear thee." Observe, (3.) Ministers in preaching should aim at the salvation of those that hear them, next to the salvation of their own souls. (4.) The best way to answer both these ends, is, to take heed to ourselves, &c.

CHAP. V.

Here the apostle, I. Directs Timothy how to reprove, v. 1, 2. II. Adverts to widows, both elder and younger, v. 3...16. III. To elders, v. 17...19. IV. Treats of public reproof, v. 20. V. Ordinates deacons, v. 21, 22. VI. Refers to his health, (v. 23.) and states men's sins to be very different in their effects, v. 24, 25.

1. REBUKE not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren; 2. The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

Here the apostle gives rules to Timothy, and in him to other ministers, in reproof. Ministers are reprovers by office. Now the rule is,

1. To be very tender in rebuking elders; elders in age, elders by office. Respect must be had to the dignity of their years and place, and therefore they must not be rebuked sharply or magisterially; but Timothy himself, though an evangelist, must entreat them as fathers, for that would be the likeliest way to work upon them, and to win upon them.

2. The younger must be rebuked as brethren, with love and tenderness; not as desirous to spy faults, or pick quarrels, but as those who are willing to make the best of them. There is need of a great deal of meekness in reproofing those who deserve reproof.

3. The elder women must be reproved, when there is occasion; they must be reproved as mothers, Hos. 2. 2. Plead with your mother, plead.

4. The younger women must be reproved, but reproved as sisters, with all purity. If Timothy, so mortified a man to this word to the flesh and the lusts of it, had need of such a caution as this, much more has we. Observe, Ministers are reprovers by office; it is a part, though the least pleasing part, of their office; they are to preach the word, to reprove and rebuke, 2 Tim. 4. 2.

3. Honour widows that are widows indeed. 4. But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

5. Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6. But she that liveth in pleasure, is dead while she liveth. 7. And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless. 8. But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. 9. Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, 10. Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work. 11. But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry; 12. Having damation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13. And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not. 14 I will therefore that the younger women... marry, bear children, guide the house, give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully. 15. For some are already turned aside after Satan. 16. If any man or woman that believeth, have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

Directions are here given concerning the taking of widows into the number of those who were employed by the church, and had maintenance from the church; Honor widows that are in need. When they are in need, maintain, them, admit them into office. There was in those times an office in the church in which widows were employed, and that was, to tend the sick, the aged, to look to them by the direction of the deacons. We read of the care taken of widows, immediately upon the first forming of the Christian church, (Acts 6. 1.) where the Grecians thought their widows were neglected in the daily ministration and provision made for poor widows. The general rule is, to honour widows that are widows indeed, to maintain them, to relieve them with respect and tenderness.

1. It is appointed that those widows only should be relieved by the charity of the church, who were pious and devout, and not wanton widows that lived in pleasure, v. 3, 6. She is to be reckoned a widow indeed, and fit to be maintained at the church's charge, who, living in pleasure, and, sometimes, in hypocrisy, the church may have just reason to question if she be a genuine widow; for, if she be in need, it is probable she is not destitute of the means of living a worldly life. But observe, It is the duty and comfort of those who are desolate, to trust in God. Therefore God sometimes brings his people into such straits, that they have nothing else to trust to, that they may with more confidence trust in him. Widowhood is a desolate estate; but let the widows trust in me, (Jer. 49. 11.) and rejoice that they have a God to trust to. Again, They who trust in God, rather, trusteth in prayer. Observe, If by faith we confide in God, by prayer we must give glory to God, and commit ourselves to his guidance. Anna was a widow indeed, who departed not from the temple, (Luke 2. 37.) but served God with fasting and prayer night and day. But she is not a widow indeed, that lives in pleasure, (v. 6.) or who lives licentiously. A jovial widow is not a widow indeed, not fit to be taken under the church's charge. Some that live in pleasure are made to die sooner; dead while she lives, is no living member of the church, but as a carcasse in it, or a mortified member. We may apply it more generally; those who live in pleasure, are dead while they live, spiritually dead, dead in trespasses and sins; they are in the world to no purpose, buried alive as to the great ends of living.

2. Another rule he gives, is, that the church shall be charged with the maintenance of these widows who had relations of their own, who were able to maintain them. This is mentioned several times; (v. 4.) If any widows have children or nephews, grand-children, or near relations, let them maintain them, and let not the church be burthened. So, v. 16. This is called shewing piety at home, (v. 4.) or shewing piety toward their own families. Observe, The respect of children to their parents, and their care of them, is fitly called piety. This is requiting their parents. Children can never sufficiently requite their parents for the care they have taken of them, and the pains they have taken with them; but, however, they must endeavour to do it. It is the indispensable duty of children, if their parents be in necessity, and they in ability to relieve them, to do it to the utmost of their power, for that is good and acceptable before God. The Pharisees taught that a gift to the altar was more acceptable to God than relieving a poor parent, Matt. 15. 5. But here we are told that this is better than all burnt offerings and sacrifices; this is good and acceptable, &c. He speaks of this again; (v. 8.) If anyone provide not for his own, &c. If any man or woman do not maintain their own poor relations who belong to them, as a part of their charge, God, as part of his design for the design of Christ was to confirm the law of Moses, and particularly the law of the fifth commandment, which is, Honour thy father and mother; so that they deny the faith, who disobey that law, much more if they provide not for their wives and children, which are parts of themselves; if they spend that upon their lusts, which should maintain their families, they have denied the faith, and have increased their sin.

One reason why this care must be taken, that those who were rich, should maintain their poor relations, and not burthen the church with them, is, (v. 16.) that it may relieve them that are widows indeed. Observe, Charity misplaced, is a great hinderance to true charity; therefore there should be prudence in the choice of the objects of charity, that it may not only be get rid of among them, but particularly those who are not proper for it, that there may be left more for those who are real objects of charity.

3. He gives directions concerning the characters of the widows, that were to be taken into the number to receive the church's charity; not under sixty years old, or any who have divorced their husbands, or been divorced from them, and have married again; she must have been the wife of one man, such as had been her husband, good, good parent, hospitality and charity, well reported of for good works. Observe, Particular care ought to be taken to relieve those, when they fall into decay, who, when they had wherewithal, were ready to every good work.

Here are instances of such good works as are proper to be done by good wives; If she have brought up children: he does not say, If she have borne children, (children are a heritage of the Lord,) that depends on the will of God; but if she had not children of her own, yet, if she had brought up children. If she have lodged strangers, and washed the saints' feet; if she have been ready to give entertainment to good Christians and good ministers, when they were in their travels for the spreading of the gospel—washing of the feet of their friends was a part of their entertainments. If she have shewed mercy, that is, had ability, let her be relieved now. Observe, Those who would find mercy when they are in distress, must shew mercy when they are in prosperity.

4. He cautions them to take heed of admitting into the number those who are likely to be no credit to them, v. 11. The younger widows refuse; they will be weary of their employments in the church, and of living by rule, as they must do; so they will marry, and cast off their first faith. You read of a first love, (Rev. 2. 4.) and here of a first faith, that is, the engagements they gave to the church to have well, and as became the trust reposed in them it does not appear that by their first faith is meant their vow not to marry, for the scripture is very silent on that head; besides, the apostle here added the very clause, that is, if she have sinned, (v. 14.) which he would not if hereby they must have broken their vows. Dr. Whitby well observes, "If this faith referred to a promise made to the church not to marry, it could not be called their first faith," v. 13. Withal they learn to be idle, and not only idle, but tattlers, &c Observe, It is seldom that those who are idle, are only idle, they learn to be tattlers and busy-bodies, and to make mischief among neighbours, and to how discord among brethren. Those who had not attained to such a gravity of mind as was fit for the deaconesses, (or the widows who were taken among the church’s poor,) let them marry, bear children, &c. v. 14. Observe, If housekeepers do not mind their business, but are tatters, they give occasion to the adversaries of Christianity to reproach the Christian name, which, it seems, there were some instances of, v. 15.

We learn hence, (1.) In the primitive church there was care taken of poor widows, and provision made for them; the churches of Christ in these days should follow so good an example, as far as they are able. (2.) In the distribution of the church’s charity, or alms, great care is to be taken, that those share in the bounty, who most want it, and best deserve it; a widow was not to be taken into the primitive church, that had relations who were able to maintain a widow, and was not well reported of for good works, but lived in pleasure; but the younger widows refuse, for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry. (3.) The credit of religion, and the reputation of Christian churches, are very much concerned in the character and behaviour of those that are taken into any employment in the church, though of a lower nature, (such as the (or who was not a deaconess) or that received the characters of the church; if they do not behave well, but are tatters and busy-bodies, they will give occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

(4.) Christianity obliges its professors to relieve their indigent friends, particularly poor widows, that the church may not be charged with them, that it may relieve them that are widows indeed: rich people should be ashamed to burden the church with their poor relations, when it is with difficulty that those are supplied, who have no children or nephews, that is, grand-children, who are in a capacity to relieve them.

7. Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine. 18. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The labourer is worthy of his reward. 19. Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses. 20. Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear. 21. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things, without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men’s sins: keep thyself pure. 23. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach’s sake and thine often infirmities. 24. Some men’s sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. 25. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise, cannot be hid.

1. Care must be taken that they be honourably maintained; (v. 17.) Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, of double maintenance, double to what they have had, or to what others have; especially they who labour in the word and doctrine, those who are more laborious than others. Observe, The presbytery ruled, and the same that ruled were those who laboured in the word and doctrine: they had not one to preach to them, and another to rule them, but the work was done by one and the same person.

Some have imagined that the elders that rule well, the apostle means laborers, who were employed, but not in teaching; they were concerned in church-government, but did not meddle with the administration of the word and sacraments; and I confess this is the plainest text of scripture that can be found to countenance such an opinion; but it seems a little strange, that mere ruling elders should be accounted worthy of double honour, when the apostle preferred preaching to baptizing, and much more he would prefer it to ruling the church; and it is more strange, that the church should take no notice of them when he treats of church-officers; but, as it is hinted before, they had not, in the primitive church, one to preach to them, and another to rule them, but ruling and teaching were performed by the same persons, only some might labour more in the word and doctrine than others. Here we have, 1. The work of ministers; 2. The rule of men in Christ’s church; 3. The rule and labouring in the word and doctrine; this was the main business of elders or presbyters in the days of the apostles. 2. The honour due to them who were not idle, but laborious in this work; they were worthy of double honour, esteem, and maintenance. He quotes a scripture to confirm this command concerning the maintenance of ministers, that we would think foreign; but it intimates what a significance there was in many of the laws of Moses, and particularly in that, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, Deut. 25. 4. The beasts that were employed in treading out the corn, (for that way they took instead of threshing it,) were allowed to feed while they did work, so that the more work they did, the more food they had; therefore let the elders that labour in the word and doctrine, be well provided for; for the labourer is worthy of his reward, (Matt. 10. 10.) and there is all the reason in the world that he should have it.

We hence learn, 1. God, both under the law, and now under the gospel, has taken care that his ministers be well provided for. Does God take care for oxen, and will he not take care of his own servants? The ox only treads out the corn, of which they make the bread that perisheth; but ministers breathe in life, and give life, and therefore we should tend to their maintenance as the ox was tended.

The comfortable subsistence of ministers, as it is God’s appointment that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, (1 Cor. 9. 14.) so is their just due, as much as the reward of the labourer; and those who would have ministers starved, or not comfortably provided for, God will require it of them another day.

II. Concerning the accusation of ministers; (v. 19.) After two or three witnesses, elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses: here is the scripture-method of proceeding against an elder, when accused of any crime. Observe, 1. There must be an accusation, it must not be a flying uncertain report; but an accusation, containing a certain charge, must be drawn up. Further, He is not to be proceeded against by way of inquiry; this is according to the word of them that have drawn up articles for men to purge themselves of such crimes, or else to accuse themselves; but, according to the advice of St. Paul, there must be an accusation brought against an elder. 2. This accusation is not to be received, unless supported by two or three credible witnesses; and the accusation must be received before them, that is, the accused must have the accusers face to face, because the reputation of a minister is, in a particular manner, a tender thing; and therefore, before any thing be done in the least to blemish that reputation, great care must be taken that the thing alleged against him be well proved, that he be not reproached upon an uncertain surmise; "but, (v. 20.) they that rebuke before all, thou must not be so tender of other people, but rebuke them publicly." Or, "them that sin before all, rebuke before all, that the platter may be as wide as the wound, and that those who are in danger of sinning by the example of their fall, may take warning by the rebuke given them for it, that others also may fear.

(1.) Public scandalous sinners must be rebuked publicly; their sin has been public, and committed before many, or at least come to the hearing of all, so their reproof must be public, and before all.

(2.) Public rebuke is designed for the good of others, that they may fear, as well as for the good of the party rebuked; as it was ordered under the law, that public offenders should receive public punishment; and all Israel shall hear, and fear, and do no more wickedly.

III. Concerning the ordination of ministers; (v. 22.) Lay hands suddenly on no man, it seems to be meant of the ordaining of men to the office of the ministry, which ought not to be done rashly and inconsiderably, and before due trial made of their gifts and graces, their abilities and qualifications for it.

Some understand it of absolution, "Be not too hasty in laying hands on any, remit not the censure of the church to any, till first time be taken for the proof of their sincerity in their repentance, neither be partakers of other men's sins; implying, that those who are too easy in remitting the censures of the church, encourage others in the sins which are thus connived at, and make themselves thereby guilty. Observe, We have great need to watch over ourselves at all times, that we do not make ourselves partakers of other men's sins. Keep thyself pure, not only from doing the like thyself, but from countenancing it, or being any way necessary to it in others."

Here is, 1. A caution against rash ordination of ministers, or absolution of those who have been under church-censures; "Lay hands suddenly on no man." 2. Those who are rash, either in the one case or the other, will make themselves partakers of other men's sins. 3. We must keep ourselves pure, if we will be pure; the grace of God makes and keeps us pure, but it is by our own endeavours.

The 24th and 25th verses seem to refer to absolution; Some men's sins are often beforehand, going before to judgment, and some follow after, &c. Observe, Ministers have need of a great deal of wisdom, to know how to accommodate themselves to the variety of offences and offenders, that they have occasion to deal with.

(1.) Some men's sins are so plain and obvious, and not found by secret search, that there is no dispute concerning the bringing of them under the censures of the church; they go before to judgment, to lead them to censure.

(2.) Others, they follow after; their wickedness does not presently appear, nor till after a due search has been made concerning it. Or, as some understand it, some men's sins continue after they are censured; they are not reformed by the censure, and in that case there must be no absolution.

(3.) As to the evidences of repentance; The good works of some are manifest beforehand. And they that are otherwise, whose good works do not appear, their wickedness cannot be hid, and so it will be easy to discern, and the sentence be passed, and who are not. [1] There are secret, and there are open sins; some men's sins are open beforehand, and going before unto judgment, and some they follow after.

[2.] Sinners must be differently dealt with by the church. [3.] The effects of church-censures are very different; some are thereby humbled and brought to repentance, so that their good works are public and manifest beforehand, while it is quite otherwise with others. [4.] The incorrigible cannot be hid; for God will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of all hearts.

Lastly, As to Timothy himself.

1. Here is a charge to him to be careful of his office: and a solemn charge it is; I charge thee before God, as thou wilt answer it to God before the holy and elect angels; observe these things without partiality, v. 21. Observe, It ill becomes ministers to be partial, and to have respect of persons, and to prefer one before another upon any secular account. He charges him, by all that is dear, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, to guard against partiality.

2. Ministers must give an account to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, whether, and how, they have observed all things given them in charge: and woe to them if they have been partial in their ministrations, out of any worldly politic view.

3. He charges him to take care of his health; Drink no longer water, &c. It seems, Timothy was a mortified man to the pleasures of sense; he drank water, and he was a man of no strong constitution of body, and for that reason Paul advises him to use wine as the help of his stomach, and the recruiting of his nature. Observe, It is a little wine, for ministers must not be given to much wine; so much as may be for the health of the body, not so as to distemper it; for God has made wine, to rejoice man's heart. (1.) It is the will of God, that people should take all due care of their bodies. As we are not to make them our masters, so neither our slaves; but to use them so as they may be most fit and helpful, as in the service of God. Observe, (2.) Wine is most proper for sickly and weak people, whose stomachs are often out of order, and who labour under infirmities. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that are of heavy hearts, Prov. 31. 6. (3.) Wine should be used as a help, and not a hindrance, to our work and usefulness.

CHAP. VI.

1. LET as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. 2. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

3. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godli- ness, 4. He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions, and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, rackings, evil surmisings, 5. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself.

Here is,

I. The duty of servants. He had spoken before of church-relations, here of our family-relations. Servants are here said to be under that yoke, which denotes both the nature and labour; they are yoked to God, not to be idle. If Christianity finds servants under the yoke, it continues them under it; for the gospel does not cancel the obligations any lie under, either by the law of nature, or by mutual consent. They must respect their masters, count them worthy of all honour, (because they are their masters,) of all the respect, observance, compliance, and obedience, that are due to their own persons. Not that they were to think that of them which they were not; but as their masters they must count them worthy of all that honour which was fit for them to receive, that the name of God be not blasphemed. If servants that embraced the Christian religion, should grow insolent and disobedient to their masters, the doctrine of Christ would be reflected on for their sake, these had much more worse liver than they had been before they had received the gospel. Observe, If the professors of religion misbehave themselves, the name of God and his doctrine are in danger of being blasphemed by those who seek occasions to speak evil of that worthy name by which we are called. And this is a good reason why we should all conduct ourselves well, that we may prevent the occasion which many seek, and will be very apt to lay hold of, to speak ill of religion for our sake.

Or suppose the master were a Christian, and a believer, and the servant a believer too, would not that excise him, because in Christ there is neither bond nor free? No, by no means, for Jesus Christ did not come to dissolve the bond of civil relation, but to strengthen it; They that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; for that brotherhood relates only to spiritual privileges, not to any outward dignity or advantage; (those misunderstand and abuse their religion, who make it a pretence for denying the duties that they owe to their relations;) nay, rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved. They must think themselves the more obliged to serve them, because the faith and love that bespeak men Christians, oblige them to do good; and that is all where the service consists. It is a great encouragement to us in doing our duty to our relations, if we have reason to think they are faithful and beloved, and partakers of the benefit, that is, of the benefit of Christianity. Again, Believing masters and servants are brethren, and partakers of the benefit; for in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 28. It is worthy of applause to teach and exhort them in the knowledge of these things. Ministers must preach not only the general duties of all, but the duties of particular relations.

II. Paul here warns Timothy to withdraw from those who corrupted the doctrine of Christ, and made it the subject of strife, debate, and controversy; If any man teach otherwise, (v. 5—5.) do not preach practically; do not teach and exhort what is in the preaching, (serious godliness;) for if he will not consent to wholesome words, words that have a direct tendency to heal the soul, if he will not consent to these, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe, We are not required to consent to any words as wholesome words, except the words of our Lord Jesus Christ; but those we must give our unfeigned assent and consent to, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness. Observe, The doctrine of our Lord Jesus is a doctrine according to godliness; it has a direct tendency to make people godly; but he that does not act agreeably, is proud, (v. 4.) and contentious, ignorant, and does a great deal of mischief to the church, knowing nothing. Observe, Commonly those are most proud, who know least; for with all their knowledge they do not know themselves, but dote about questions. Those who fall into this of corrupting the doctrine of Christianity, fall in with controversies, which eat out the life and power of religion; they dote about questions and strifes of words, which do a great deal of mischief in the church, are the occasion of envy, strife, railings, and evil surmisings. When men are not content with the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness, but will frame notions of their own, and impose them, and that to the discomfiture of the doctrine of Christ, which teaches, and not in the words which the Holy Ghost teaches, (1 Cor. 2. 13.) they sow the seeds of all mischief in the church. Hence come perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, (v. 5.) disputes that are all subtilety, and no solidity. Observe, Men of corrupt minds are destitute of the truth. The reason why men's minds are corrupt, is, because they do not know the things which are written in the law of Moses, concerning the Lord our God; for knowing that gain is godliness, making religion truckle to their secular interest. From such as these Timothy is warned to withdraw himself.

We observe, (1.) The words of our Lord Jesus Christ are wholesome words, they are the fittest to prevent or heal the church's wounds, as well as to heal a wounded conscience; for Christ has the tongue of the learned, to speak a word in season to them that are the gladsome, (Isa. 50. 4.) The words of Christ are the best to prevent ruptures in the church; for none who profess faith in him, will dispute the aptness or authority of his words, who is their Lord and Teacher; and it has never gone well with the church, since the words of men have claimed a regard equal to his words, and in some cases a much greater. (2.) Whoever teaches otherwise, and does not consent to these wholesome words, he is proud, knowing nothing; other words more wholesome he knew not. (4.) We learn the sad effects of doing about questions and strifes of words; of such doing about questions of the gospel, strife, evil surmisings, and perverse disputings; when men leave the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, they will never agree in other words, either of their own or other men's inventions, but will perpetually wrangle and quarrel about them; and this will produce envy, when they see the words of others preferred to those they have adopted for their own; and this will be attended with jealousies and suspicions. Such doing, where evil words are created in this manner, they will proceed to perverse disputings. (5.) Such persons as are given to perverse disputings, appear to be men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth; especially such as act in this manner for the sake of gain, which is all their godliness, supposing gain to be godliness, contrary to the apostle's judgment, who reckoned godliness great gain. (6.) Good ministers and elders will withdraw themselves from among them; from among them, my people, and be ye separate, says the Lord: from such withdraw thyself.

6. But godliness with contentment is great gain. 7. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. 8. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. 9. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. 10. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. 11. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. 12. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, Whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

From the mention of the abuse which some put upon religion, (making it to serve their secular advantages,) the apostle takes occasion to shew the excellency of contentment, and the evil of covetousness.

I. The excellency of contentment, v. 6–8. Some account Christianity an advantageous profession for this world; in the sense they mean, it is false; yet it is undoubtedly true, that though Christianity is the worst trade, it is the best calling, in the world. Indeed, to make a true trade of this religion, one must turn for this world, will be disappointed, and find it a sorry trade; but they that mind it as their calling, and make a business of it, will find it a gainful calling, for it has the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come. The truth he lays down, is, that godliness with contentment is great gain. Some read it, godliness with a competency; that is, if a man have but a little in this world, yet if he live honest and godly, and makes a godly trade of it, he needs desire no more, his godliness with that will be his great gain; for a little which a righteous man has, is better than the riches of many wicked, Ps. 37. 16. We read it, godliness with contentment; godliness is itself great gain, it is profitable to all things; and wherever there is true godliness, there will be contentment; but those that are arrived at the highest pitch of contentment with their godliness, are certainly the easiest, happiest, and best satisfied men in the world. Godliness with contentment, that is, Christian contentment, (content must come from principles of godliness,) is great gain; it is all the wealth in the world. He that is godly, is sure to be happy in another world; and if withal he do by contentment accommodate himself to his condition in this world, he has enough.

Here we have, 1. A Christian's gain, it is godliness with contentment, this is the true way to gain, yea, it is gain itself. 2. A Christian's gain is great, it is not like the little gain of worldlylings, who are so fond of a little worldly advantage. 3. Godliness is ever accompanied with contentment in a greater or lesser degree; all truly godly people have learned with St. Paul, in whatever state they are, to be content. 4. Godliness must be content with what God alloteth for them, well knowing that it is best for them. Let us all then endeavour after godliness with contentment.

The reason he gives for it, is, For we brought nothing with us into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out, v. 7. This is a reason why we should be content with a little.

(1.) Because we can challenge nothing as a debt that is due to us, for we came naked into the world; whatever we have had since, we are obliged to the providence of God for it; but he that gave, may take what and when he pleases. We had our beings, our bodies, our lives, (which are more than meat, which are more than raiment,) when we came into the world, though we came naked, and brought nothing with us; may we not then be content while our beings and lives are continued to us, though we have not every thing we would have? We cannot bring nothing with us into this world, and yet God provided for us, care was taken of us; we have been fed all our lives long unto this day; and therefore, when we are reduced to the greatest straits, we cannot be poorer than when we came into this world, and yet then we were provided for; therefore let us trust in God for the remaining part of our pilgrimage.

(2.) We must carry nothing with us out of this world; a shroud, a coffin, and a grave, are all that the richest man in the world can have from his thousands. Therefore why should we covet much? Why should we not be content with a little, because, how much soever we have, we must leave it behind us! Excl. v. 15, 16.

From hence he infers, (v. 8.) Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. Food and a covering including habitation as well as raiment. Observe, If God give us the necessary supports of life, we ought to be content therewith, though we have not the ornaments and delights of it. If nature should be content with a little, grace should be content with less; though we have not dainty food, though we have not costly raiment, if we have but food and raiment convenient for us, we ought to be content; this was Agur's prayer, Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me, Prov. 30. 8.

Here we see, [1.] The folly of placing our happiness in these things, when we did not bring any thing into this world with us, and we can carry nothing out. What will these do when death shall strip them of their happiness and portion? And they must take an everlasting farewell of all these things on which they have so much set their hearts. They may say with poor Micah, Ye have taken away my gods; and what have I more? Judges 18. 24. [2.] The necessaries of life are the bounds of a true Christian's desire, and with these he will endeavour to be content; his desires are not insatiable; no, a little, a few comforts of this life, will serve him, and these he may hope to enjoy, having food and raiment.

II. The evil of covetousness; (v. 9.) They that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, that is, that set their hearts upon the wealth of this world, and are resolved, right or wrong, they will have it. It is not said, they that are rich, but they that will be rich, that is, that place their happiness in worldly wealth, that covet it inordinately, and are eager and violent in the pursuit of it. They that are such, fall into temptation and a snare, unavoidably; for when the Devil sees which way their lusts carry them, he will soon bait his hook accordingly. He knew how fond Achan would be of a wedge of gold, and therefore laid that before him. They fall into many foolish and hurtful lusts.

The apostle supposes, 1. Some will be rich; they are resolved upon it, nothing short of a great abundance will satisfy. 2. Such will not be safe or innocent, for they will be in danger of ruining themselves for ever; they fall into temptation and a snare, &c. 3. Worldly lusts are foolish and hurtful, for they drown men in destruction and perdition. 4. It is good for us to consider the mischievousness of worldly fleshly lusts. They are foolish, and therefore we should be ashamed of them; hurtful, and therefore we should be afraid of them, especially considering to what degree they are hurtful, for they drown men in destruction and perdition.

The love of money is the root of all evil, v. 10. What sins will not men be drawn to by the love of money? Particularly this was at the bottom of the apostasy of many from the faith of Christ; while they coveted money, they erred from the faith, they quitted their Christianity, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

(1.) Observe what is the root of all evil; the love of money: people may have money, and yet not love it; but if they love it inordinately, it will push them on to evil. (2.) Covetous persons will quit the company of the saints, and to counsel him to keep in the way of God and his duty, and particularly to fulfill the trust reposed in him as a minister. He addresses himself to him as a man of God. Ministers are men of God, and ought to conduct themselves accordingly in every thing; they are men employed for God, devoted to his honour more immediately. The prophets under the Old Testament were called men of God.

I. Hence he takes occasion both to caution Timothy against their lusts, and to counsel him to keep in the way of God and his duty, and particularly to fulfill the trust reposed in him as a minister. He addresses himself to him as a man of God. Ministers are men of God, and ought to conduct themselves accordingly in every thing; they are men employed for God, devoted to his honour more immediately. The prophets under the Old Testament were called men of God.

They that err from the faith, pierce themselves with many sorrows; those that depart from God, do but treasure up sorrows for themselves.

II. Hence he takes occasion both to caution Timothy against their lusts, and to counsel him to keep in the way of God and his duty, and particularly to fulfill the trust reposed in him as a minister. He addresses himself to him as a man of God. Ministers are men of God, and ought to conduct themselves accordingly in every thing; they are men employed for God, devoted to his honour more immediately. The prophets under the Old Testament were called men of God.

Flee these things. It is ill becoming any man, but especially men of God, to set their hearts upon the things of this world; men of God should be taken up with the things of God.

2. To arm him against the love of the world, he directs him to follow that which is good; follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness; righteousness in his conversation toward men, godliness toward God, faith and love as living principles, to support him and carry him on in the practice both of righteousness and godliness. They that follow after righteousness and godliness, from a principle of faith and love, have need to put on patience and meekness; patience to bear both the rebukes of Providence, and the reproaches of men, and meekness whereunto to instruct gain-sayers, and pass by the affronts and injuries that are done us.

Observe, I. He is not enough that men of God flee these things, but they must follow after what is directly contrary thereto. Further, what excellent persons men of God are, who follow after righteousness! They are the excellent of the earth, and, being acceptable to God, they should be approved of men.

3. He exhorts him to do the part of a soldier; fight the good fight of faith. Note, Those who will get to heaven, must fight their way thither. There must be a conflict with corruption and temptations, and the opposition of the powers of darkness. Again, it is a good fight, it is a good cause, and it will have a good issue; further, it is the fight of faith; we do not war after the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. 2 Cor. 10. 3, 4.

Observe, I. Eternal life is the crown proposed to us, for our encouragement. II. It is a good fight, a good fight of faith, the good warfare. (2.) This we must lay hold on, as those that are afraid of coming short of it, and losing it. Lay hold, and take heed of losing your hold. Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Rev. 3. 11. (3.) We are called to the fight, and to lay hold on eternal life. The 20. Timothy and all faithful ministers make before man, and before God, a good profession; for they profess and engage to fight the good fight of faith, and to lay hold on eternal life; their calling and their own profession oblige them unto this.

13. I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: 15. Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; 16. Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen. 17. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; 18. That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; 19. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. 20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: 21. Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

He charges him to keep this commandment without spot; that is, the whole work of his ministry, all the trust reposed in him, all the service expected from him, he must keep it without spot, unrebukable; he must conduct himself so in his ministry, that he might not lay himself open to any blame, or incur any blemish.

What are the motives to move him to this? I. He gives him a solemn charge; I give thee a charge in the sight of God, that thou do this. He charges him, as he will answer it at the great day to that God whose eyes are upon us all, who sees what we are, and what we do. God, who quicken all things, who has life in himself, and is the Fountain of life. This should quicken us to the service of God, that we serve a God who quickens all things.

Observe, Christ died not only as a Sacrifice, but as a Martyr; and he witnessed a good confession when he was arraigned before Pilate, saying, (John 18. 36, 37.) My kingdom is not of this world: I am come to bear witness unto the truth. That good confession of his before Pilate, My kingdom is not of this world, should be effectual to draw off all his followers, both ministers and people, from the love of this world.

II. He reminds him of the confession that he himself had made; Thou hast professed a good profession before many witnesses; (v. 12.) when he was ordained by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. The obligation of that was still upon him, and he must live up to that, and be quickened by that, to do the work of his ministry.

III. He reminds him of Christ’s second coming; Keep this commandment, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; keep it as long as you can.
livest, till Christ come at death to give thee a discharge. Keep it with an eye to his second coming, (when we must all give an account of the talents we have been intrusted with," Luke 16. 2. 1. The Lord Jesus Christ will appear, and it will be a glorious appearing, not like his first appearing in the days of his humiliation. 2. Ministers should have an eye to this appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ in all their ministrations. 3. Till his appearing they are to keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable.

Mentioning the appearing of Christ as one that loved it, he loves to speak of it, and loves to speak of him who shall then appear. The appearing of Christ is the first grace that minister should seek and give God. Not for us to know the time and season of it, for the Father has kept that in his own power: let this suffice us, that in time he shall shew it, in the time that he thinks fit for it.

Concerning Christ and God the Father he here speaks great things.

(1.) That God is the only Potentate; the powers of earthly princes are all derived from him, and depend for them on those powers that are, are ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. He is the only Potentate that is absolute and sovereign, and perfectly independent.

(3.) He is King of kings, and Lord of lords. All the kings of the earth derive their power from him; he gave them their crowns, they hold them under him, and he has a sovereign dominion over them. This is Christ's title, (Rev. 19. 16.) upon his vesture and his thigh: for he has a name higher than the kings of the earth.

(4.) He only has immortality; he only is immortal in himself, and has immortality as he is the Fountain of it, for the immortality of angels and spirits is derived from him.

(5.) He dwells in inaccessible light; light which no man can approach unto: no man can get to heaven, but those whom he is pleased to bring thither, and admit into his kingdom.

(6.) He is invisible; whom no man hath seen, nor can see. It is impossible that mortal eyes should bear the brightness of the divine glory. No man can see God, and live.

Having mentioned these glorious attributes, he concludes with a doxology; To him be honour and power everlasting. Amen. God having all power and honour to himself, it is our duty to ascribe all power and honour to him.

[1.] What an evil is sin, when committed against such a God, the blessed and only Potentate! The evil of it rises in proportion to the dignity of him against whom it is committed. [2.] He exalts his condescension, to take notice of such mean and vile creatures as we are. What are we then, that the blessed God, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, should seek after us? [3.] Blessed are they who are admitted to dwell with this great and blessed Potentate; Happy are they men, (says the queen of Sheba to king Solomon,) happy are these thy servants. 1 Kings 10. 8. Much more happy are they who are allowed to stand before the King of kings. [4.] Let us love, adore, and praise, the great God; for whom shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy, Rev. 15. 4.

The apostle adds, by way of postscript, a lesson for rich people, v. 17—19. Timothy must charge them that are rich to take care of the temptations, and improve the opportunities, of their prosperous estate.

First, Caution them to take heed of pride. That is a sin that easily besets rich people, whom the world smiles upon. Charge them that they be not high-minded, or think of themselves above what is meet, or be puffed up with their wealth.

Secondly, Caution them against vain confidence in their wealth; Charge them that they trust not in uncertain riches. Nothing is more uncertain than the wealth of this world; many have had much of it one time, and been stripped of all the next. Riches make themselves wings, and fly away as an eagle, &c. Prov. 23. 5.

Thirdly, He must charge them to trust in God, the living God; to make him their Hope, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. They who are rich, He exhorts them to be ready and giving them to enjoy them richly; for many have riches, but enjoy them poorly, not having a heart to use them.

Fourthly, He must charge them to do good with what they have; (for what is the best estate worth, any more than as it gives a man an opportunity of doing so much the more good?) that they be rich in good works. Those are truly rich, who are rich in good works. They must be ready to communicate, willing to communicate: not only to do it, but to do it willingly, for God loves a cheerful giver.

Fifthly, He must charge them to think of another world, and prepare for that which is to come by works of charity—laying up in store a good foundation against the time to come, that they may take hold on eternal life.

Ministers must not be afraid of the rich; be they ever so rich, they must speak to them, and charge them. 2. They must caution them against pride, and vain confidence in their riches, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches. Stir them up to works of piety and charity, that they do good, &c. 3. This is the way for the rich to lay up in store for themselves for the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life; in the way of well-doing works, so are to seek for glory, honor, and immortality, and eternal life will be the end of all. Rom. 2. 7. 4. Here is a lesson for ministers in the charge given to Timothy; Keep that which is committed to thy trust. Every minister is a trustee, and it is a treasure committed to his trust, which he has to keep. The truths of God, the ordinances of God, keep these, avoiding profane and vain babblings; set affecting human eloquence, which the apostle calls vain babblings. The apostle opposes these works, which opposes the truths of God, but keep close to the written word, for that is committed to our trust. Some who have been very proud of their learning, their science, which is falsely so called, have by that been debauched in their principles, and been drawn away from the faith of Christ, which is a good reason why we should keep to the plain word of the gospel, and resolve to live by that which is distributed to us.

Observe, (1.) Ministers cannot be too earnestly exhorted to keep what is committed to their trust, because it is a great trust lodged with them. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust! as if he had said, "I cannot conclude without charg-

our friends. Grace be with them, for grace comprehends in it all that is good, and grace is an earnest, yea a beginning, of glory; for wherever God gives grace, he will give glory, and will not withhold any good thing from him who walketh uprightly.

Grace be with you all. Amen.

AN EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS

SECOND EPISODE OF ST. PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

Completed by Mr. Atkinson.

THIS second epistle Paul wrote to Timothy from Rome, when he was a prisoner there, and in danger of his life; this is evident from these words, I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, ch. 4. v. 6. It appears that his removal out of this world, in his own apprehension, was not far off, especially considering the rage and malice of his persecutors; and that he had been brought before the emperor Nero, which he calls his first answer, when no man stood with him, but all men forsook him, ch. 4. v. 16. And interpreters agree that this was the last epistle he wrote.

Where Timothy now was, is not certain. The scope of this epistle somewhat differs from that of the former, not so much relating to his office as an evangelist, as to his personal conduct and behaviour.

II. TIMOTHY, I.

CHAP. I.

After this introduction, (v. 1, 2.) we have, I. Paul's sincere love to Timothy, v. 3-5. II. Divers exhortations given to him, v. 6-14. III. He speaks of Phygellus and Hermogenes, with others, and closes with Onesiphorus, v. 15, to the end.

1. PAUL an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, 2. To Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. 3. I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; 4. Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy; 5. When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

1. The inscription of the epistle; Paul calls himself an apostle by the will of God, merely by the good pleasure of God, and by his grace, which he professes himself unworthy of, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, according to the gospel. The gospel is the promise of life in Christ Jesus; life the end, and Christ the way, John 14. 6. The life is put into the promise, and both are sure in Christ Jesus the faithful Witness; for all the promises of God in Christ Jesus are yea, and all amen, 2 Cor. 1. 20. He calls Timothy his beloved son; Paul felt the warmest affection for him, both because he had been an instrument of his conversion, and because as a son with his father he had served with him in the gospel.

We here learn, (1.) St. Paul was an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God; as he did not receive the gospel of man, nor was taught it, but had it by the revelation of Jesus Christ, (Gal. 1. 12.) so his commission to be an apostle was not by the will of man, but of God; in the former epistle he says it was by the commandment of God our Saviour, and here by the will of God; God called him to be an apostle. (2.) We have the promise of life, blessed be God for it, in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began, Tit. 1. 2. It is a promise to discover the freeness and certainty of it. (3.) This, as well as all other promises, is in and through Jesus Christ; they all take their rise from the mercy of God in Christ, and they are sure, that we may safely depend on them. (4.) The grace, mercy, and peace, which even St. Paul's dearly beloved son Timothy wanted, comes from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord; and therefore the case, as well as the other is the Giver of these blessings, and ought to be applied to for them. Lastly, The best want these blessings, and they are the best we can ask for our dearly beloved friends, that they may have grace to help them in the time of need, and mercy to pardon what is amiss, and so may have peace with God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

Thanks be to God for Timothy's faith and holiness; he thanks God that he remembered Timothy in his prayers. Observe, Whatever good we do, and whatever good office we perform for our friends, God must have the glory of it, and we must give him thanks. It is he who puts it into our hearts to remember such and such in our prayers. Paul was much in prayer, he prayed night and day; in all his prayers he was mindful of his friends, he particularly prayed for good ministers, he prayed for Timothy, and had remembrance of him in his prayers night and day; he did this without ceasing; prayer was his constant business, and he never forgot his friends in his prayers, as we often do. Paul served God from his forefathers with a pure conscience. It was a comfort to him, that he was born in God's house, and was of the seed of those that served God; as likewise that the Lord called him to a pure conscience, according to the best of his light; he had kept a conscience void of offence, and made it his daily exercise to do so, Acts 24. 16. He greatly desired to see Timothy, out of the affection he had for him, that he might have some conversation with him, being mindful of his tears at their last parting. Timothy was sorry to part with Paul, he wept at parting, and therefore Paul desired to see him again, because he had perceived by that what a true affection he had for him. He thanks God that Timothy kept up the religion of his ancestors, v. 5. Observe, The entail of religion descended upon Timothy by the mother's side; he had a good mother, and a good grandmother: they believed, though his father did not, Acts 16. It is a comfortable thing when children imitate the faith and holiness of their godly parents and grandparents, 2 Tim. 1. 5. Be not like your grandmother and thy mother, and I am persuaded that in thee also. Paul had a very charitable opinion of his friends, was very willing to hope the best concerning them; indeed he had a great deal of reason to believe well of Timothy, for he had no man like-minded, Phil. 2. 10.

Observe, (1.) We are, according to St. Paul, to serve God with a pure conscience, so did his and our pious forefathers; this is to dwell near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, Heb. 10. 22. (2.) In our prayers we are to remember without ceasing our friends, especially the faithful ministers of Christ; St. Paul had remembrance of his dearly beloved son Timothy in his prayers night and day. (3.) The faith that dwells in real believers, is unfainting, it is without hypocrisy, it is a faith which will stand the trial, and it dwells in them as a living principle. It was the matter of St. Paul's thanksgiving, that Timothy inherited the faith of his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois, and ought to be ours, whenever we see the like; we should rejoice wheresoever we see the grace of God; so did Barnabas, Acts 11. 23, 24. I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, 2 John 4.

6. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. 7. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. 8. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; 9. Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; 10. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: 11. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. 12. For which cause I also suffer these things; nevertheless I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

13. Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. 14. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us.

Here is an exhortation and excitation of Timothy to his duty; (v. 6.) I put thee in remembrance: the best men need remembrance, and by what we know we should be reminded of; (2 Pet. 3. 1.) I write this, to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

I. He exhorts him to stir up the gift of God that was in him. Stir it up as fire under the embers. It is meant of all the gifts and graces that God had given him, to qualify him for the work of an evangelist, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, the extraordinary gifts that were conferred by the imposition of the apostle's hands. These be the means, he must stir them up, he must exercise them, and so increase them: he must use them, and give gifts; to him that hath shall be given; (Matt. 25. 29.) he must take all opportunities to use these gifts, and so stir them up, for that is the best way of increasing them.

Whether the gift of God in Timothy was ordinary or extraordinary, (though I incline to the latter,) he must stir it up, otherwise it would decay. Further, you see that this gift was in him by the putting on of the apostle's hands, which I take to be distinct from his ordination, which was performed by the hands of the presbytery, 1 Tim. 4. 14. It is probable that Timothy had the Holy Ghost, in his extraordinary gifts and graces, conferred on him by the laying on of the apostle's hands, (for I reckon none: but the apostles had the power of giving the Holy Ghost,) and afterward, being thus richly furnished for the work of the ministry, was ordained by the presbytery.

The great hinderance of usefulness in the increase of our gifts, is, slavish fear; therefore he warns him against this: God hath not given us the spirit of fear; (v. 7.) it was through base fear that the evil servant buried his talent, and did not trade with it, Matt. 25. 25. Now God hath therefore armed us against the spirit of fear, by often bidding us fear not; "Fear not the face of man; fear not the dangers you may meet with in the way of your duty." God hath delivered us from the spirit of fear, and hath given us the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The spirit of power, of courage and resolution, to encounter difficulties and dangers; the spirit of love to God, which will carry us through the opposition we may meet with, as Jacob made nothing of the hard service he was to endure for Rachel. The spirit of hope will cheer us in the fear of God, and all the hurt that man can do us. And the spirit of a sound mind, or quietness of mind, a peaceable enjoyment of ourselves, for we are oftentimes discouraged in our way and work by the creatures of our own fancy and imagination, which a sober, solid thinking mind would obviate, and would easily answer.

The Spirit God gives to his ministers, is not a fearful, or a devouring, or a reviving, or a regenerating Spirit; it is a Spirit of power, for they speak in his name who has all power, both in heaven and earth; and it is a Spirit of love; for love to God and the souls of men must inflame ministers in all their service; and it is a Spirit of a sound mind, for they speak the words of truth and soberness.

II. He exhorts him to count upon afflictions, and get ready for them; "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of thy fellowship in his sufferings, but joyfully bearing it to the end. For it is a testimony of the gospel, of the testimony thou hast borne to it." The gospel of Christ is what we have none of us reason to be ashamed of. We must not be ashamed of those who are suffering for the gospel of Christ. Timothy must not be ashamed of good old Paul, though he was now in bonds. As he must not be afraid of suffering himself, so he must not be afraid of owning those who were sufferers for the gospel of Christ.

1. The gospel is a testimony of our Lord; in and by that he bears testimony of himself to us, and by professing our adherence to it we bear testimony of him and for him. 2. St. Paul was the Lord's prisoner; for his sake he was bound with a chain, Eph. 4. 1. 3. We have no reason to be ashamed either of the testimony of our Lord, or of his prisoners; if we are ashamed of either, Christ will be ashamed of us hereafter; "But be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God, expect afflictions for the gospel's sake, prepare for them, count upon them, be willing to take thy lot with the suffering saints in this world. Be partaker of the afflictions of the gospel;" (or, as it may be read, Do thou suffer with the gospel;) not only sympathize with those who suffer for it, but be ready to suffer with them, and suffer with them. If at any time the gospel be in distress, he who hopes for life and salvation by it will be content to suffer with it. Observe, (1.) Then we are likely to bear afflictions well, when we fetch strength and power from God to enable us to bear them: "Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, according to the power of God." (2.) All Christians, but especially ministers, must expect afflictions and persecutions from the world, and from the world; (3.) These shall be proportioned, according to the power of God (1 Cor. 10. 13.) resting upon us.

Mentioning God and the gospel, he takes notice what great things God has done for us by the gospel, v. 9, 10. To encourage him to suffer, he urges two considerations.

1. He shews him the nature of that gospel which he was called to suffer for, and the glorious and gracious designs and purposes of it. Paul, when he mentions Christ, and the gospel of Christ, to digress from his subject, and enlarge upon them; so full was he of that which all our salvation, and ought to be all our desire. Observe, First, The gospel aims at our salvation; he has saved us, and we must not think much to suffer for that which we hope to be saved by. He has begun to save us, and will complete it in due time; for God calls those things that are not, that are not yet completed, as though they were; (Rom. 4. 17.) therefore he says, who has saved us.

Secondly, It is designed for our sanctification, and called us with a holy calling, called us to holiness. Christianity is a calling, a holy calling; it is the calling wherewith we are called, it is the calling to which we are called, to labour in it. Observe, All who shall be saved hereafter, are sanctified now. Wherever the call of the gospel is an effectual call, it is found to be a holy call, making those holy, who are effectually called.

Thirdly, The rise of it is the free grace and eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus. If we had merited it, it had been hard to suffer for it; but our salvation by it is of free grace, and not according to our works, and therefore we must not think much to suffer for it. This grace is said to be given us before the world began, that is, in the purpose and design of God from all eternity; in Christ Jesus, for all the gifts that come from God to sinful man, come in and through Christ Jesus.

Fourthly, The gospel is the manifestation of this purpose and grace, by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who had lain in the bosom of the Father from eternity, and was perfectly apprised of all his gracious purposes; by his appearing that gracious purpose was made manifest to us. Did Jesus Christ suffer for it, and shall we think much to suffer for it?

Fifthly, By the gospel of Christ death is abolished; he has abolished death, not only weakened it, but taken it out of the way, has broken the power of death over them that were in bondage till death, (for the sting of death is sin, 1 Cor. 15. 56.) in altering the property of it, and breaking the power of it.

Death now of an enemy is become a friend, and is the gate by which we pass out of a troublesome, vexatious, sinful world, into a world of perfect peace and purity; and the power thereof is broken, for death does not triumph over those that are saved by the gospel, but they triumph over it. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? 1 Cor. 15. 55.

Lastly, He has brought life and immortality to light by the gospel; he has shewed us another world, more clearly than it was before discovered under any former dispensation, and the happiness of that world, the certain recompence of our obedience by faith well wrought with our face, as in a glass, beholding the glory of God. He has brought to light, not only set it before us, but offered it to us, by the gospel.

Let us value the gospel more than ever, as it is that whereby life and immortality are brought to light, for herein it has the pre-eminence above all former discoveries; so that it is the gospel of life and immortality, as it discovers them to us, and directs us in the ready way that leads thereto, as well as possesses the most weighty motives to excite our endeavours in seeking after glory, honour, and immortality.

[2.] Consider the example of blessed Paul, v. 11, 12. He was appointed to preach the gospel, and particularly appointed to teach the Gentiles. He thought it a cause worth suffering for, and why should not Timothy think so too? No man needs to be afraid or ashamed to suffer for the cause of the gospel; for Paul, says, for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.

Observe, First, Good men often suffer many things for the best cause in the world; for which cause I suffer these things; that is, "for my preaching, and adhering to the gospel." Secondly, They need not to be ashamed the cause will bear them out; but those who oppose it, shall be clothed with shame.
Observe, Thirdly, Those who trust in Christ, know whom they have trusted. He speaks with a holy triumph and exultation, as much as to say, "I stand on firm ground." I know I have lodged the great trust in the hands of the best Truster. Be not persuaded, &c. What must we commit to Christ? The salvation of our souls, and their preservation to the heavenly kingdom; and what we so commit to him he will keep. There is a day coming, when our souls will be inquired after; "Man! Woman! thou hadst a soul committed to thee, what hast thou done with it? To whom was it offered, to God or Satan?" And in the service of sin, or in the service of Christ?" There is a day coming, and it will be a very solemn and awful day, when we must give an account of our stewardship, (Luke 16. 2.) give an account of our souls; now if by an active obedient faith we commit it to Jesus Christ, we may be sure he is able to keep it, and it shall be forthcoming to our comfort in that day.

III. He exHORTS him to hold fast the form of sound words, v. 13.

1. "Have a form of sound words;" (so it may be read,) "a short form, a catechism, an abstract of the first principles of religion, according to the scriptures; a scheme of sound words, a brief summary of the Christian faith, in a proper method, drawn out by thyself from the holy scriptures for thy own use," or rather, by the form of sound words, I understand the holy scriptures themselves.

2. "Having it, hold it fast," remember it, retain it, adhere to it. Adhere to that, in opposition to all heresies and false doctrine, which corrupt the Christian faith. Hold that fast which Christ taught, and communicated, and hath given to the church.

3. It is good to adhere to those forms of sound words which we have in the scriptures; for those, we are sure, were divinely inspired. That is sound speech, which can neither be moved, nor be ashamed. But how must it be held fast? In faith and love; we must asent to it as a faithful saying, and bid it welcome as worthy of all acceptation. Hold it fast in a good heart, that it is the ark of the covenant, in which the tables both of law and gospel are most safely and profitably deposited, Ps. 119. 11. Faith and love must go together; it is not enough to believe the sound words, and to give an assent to them, but we must love and hold them, and guard the good love and worthiness of them, and the goodness, and we must propagate the form of sound words in our love; speaking the truth in love, Eph. 4. 15. Faith and love which are in Christ Jesus; it must be Christian faith and love; faith and love fasting upon Jesus Christ, in and by which God speaks to us, and to us. Timothy, as a minister, must hold fast the form of sound words, for the benefit of others. Of healing words, so it may read; there is a healing virtue in the word of God; he sent his word, and healed them. To the same purport is that, (v. 14.) That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost, which dwelleth in us. That good thing was the form of sound words, the Christian doctrine, which was committed to Timothy in his baptism and education as he was a Christian, and in his ordination as he was a minister.

The Christian trust committed to us; it is committed to Christians in general, but to ministers in particular; it is a good thing, of unspeakable value in itself, and which will be of unspeakable advantage to us; it is a good thing indeed, for it is an inestimable jewel, for it discovers to us the unsearchable riches of Christ, Eph. 3. 8. It is committed to us, to be preserved pure and entire, and to be transmitted to those who shall come after us, and must keep it, and not contribute any thing to the corrupting of its purity, the weakening of its power, or the diminishing of its perfection; Keep it by the Holy Ghost that dwelleth in us. Observe; Even those who are ever so well taught, cannot keep what they have learned, any more than they could at first learn it, without the assistance of the Holy Spirit. We must not think to keep it by our own strength, but keep it by the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost dwells in all good ministers and Christians; they are his temples, and he enables them to keep the gospel pure and uncorrupt; and yet they must use their best endeavours to keep this good thing, for the assistance and indwelling of the Holy Ghost do not exclude men's endeavours, but they very well consist together.

15. This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia, are turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. 16. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain: But when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day; and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well. Having exhorted Timothy to hold fast, (v. 13, 14.) the apostle mentions,

The apostacy of divers from the doctrine of Christ, v. 15, 16. The apostacy of the most and purest ages of the church, there were those that had embraced the Christian faith, and yet afterward revolted from it, nay there were many such. He does not say that they were turned away from the doctrine of Christ, (though it should seem they were,) but they were turned away from him, they had turned their backs upon him, and disowned him in the time of his distress.

And should we wonder at it, when many turned their backs on a much better than St. Paul? I mean the Lord Jesus Christ, John 6. 66.

2. He mentions the constancy of one that adhered to him, that was Onesiphorus; for he often refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain, v. 16.

Observe. (1.) What kindness Onesiphorus had shewed to Paul: he refreshed him, he oft refreshed him with his letters, and counsels, and comforts, and he was not ashamed of my chain. He was not ashamed of God's service, though he was then in distress, and was now under. He was kind to him not once or twice, but often; not only when he was at Ephesus among his own friends, but when Onesiphorus was at Rome; he took care to seek Paul out very diligently, and found him, v. 17. Observe, A good man will seek opportunities of doing good, and will not shun any that offer. At Ephesus he had ministered to him, and been very kind to him; Timothy knew it. (2.) How Paul returns his kindness, v. 16-18. He that receives a prophet, shall have a prophet's reward. He repays him with his prayers; The Lord give mercy to Onesiphorus. It is probable that Onesiphorus was now absent from home, and in company with Paul; he therefore prays that his house might be kept during his absence.

though the Papists will have it that he was now dead; and from what I have been saying from the beginning, I think it very possible, that they might find mercy, they conclude the warrantableness of praying for the dead; but who told them that Onesiphorus was dead? And can it be safe to ground a doctrine and practice of such importance on a mere supposition and very great uncertainty?

He prays for Onesiphorus himself, as well as for his house, that he might find mercy in that day, in the day of death and of judgment. When Christ will account all the good offices done to his poor members as done to himself. Observe, [1.] The day of death:
and judgment is an awful day, which may be emphatically called that day. [2.] We need desire no more to make us happy, than to find mercy of the Lord in that day, when those that have shewed no mercy, will have judgment without mercy; [3.] The best Christians will want mercy in that day, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, Jude 21. [4.] If you would have mercy then, you must seek for it now of the Lord. [5.] It is of and from the Lord that we must have mercy; for unless the Lord has mercy on us, in vain will be the pity and compassion of men or angels. [6.] We are to seek and ask for mercy, the Lord, who is the Giver; and do not want it of him; for the Lord Christ has satisfied justice, that mercy might be displayed. We are come to a throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in the time of need. Finally, The best thing we can ask, either for ourselves or our friends, is, that the Lord will grant to them, that they may find mercy of the Lord in that day, when they must pass out of time into eternity, and exchange this world for the other, and appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; the Lord then grant unto all of us, that we may find mercy of the Lord in that day.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, our apostle gives Timothy many exhortations and directions, which may be of great use to others, both ministers and Christians, for whom they were designed as well as for him. 1. He encourages him in his work, and sheweth he can have none to help, v. 1. II. He must take care of a succession in the ministry, that the office might not die with him, v. 2. III. He exhorts him to constancy and perseverance in this work, as a soldier, and as a husbandman, considering what would be the end of all his sufferings, &c. v. 3.,15. IV. He must shun profane and vain babblings, (v. 16. 17.) for they will be pernicious and mischievous. V. He speaks of the foundation of faith, and of those things, v. 18. 19. 20. 21. VI. What he is to avoid—youthful lusts, and foolish and unlearned questions; and what to do, v. 22, to the end.

1. THOU therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. 2. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also. 3. Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. 4. No man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. 5. And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully. 6. The husbandman that laboureth, must be first partaker of the fruits. 7. Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

Here,

1. Paul encourages Timothy to constancy and perseverance in his work; (v. 1.) Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Those who have work to do for Christ, must stir up themselves to do it, and strengthen themselves for it. Being strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, may be understood,

1. In opposition to the weakness of grace. Where there is the truth of grace, there must be a labouring after the strength of grace. As our trials increase, we had need to grow stronger and stronger in that which is good; our faith stronger, our resolution stronger, our love to God and Christ stronger.

2. In opposition to our being strong in our own strength; “Be strong, not confiding in thy own sufficiency, but in the grace that is in Jesus Christ.” Compare Eph. 6. 10. Be strong in the Lord, and in the faith; and let your boasting be in the Lord. 8. He was not premised to die for Christ than to deny him, he was strong in his own strength; had he been strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, he had kept his standing better.

1. There is grace in Christ Jesus: for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, John 1. 17. There is grace enough in him for all of us. (2.) We must be strong in this grace, and to do ourselves, in our own strength, or the grace we have already received, but in the grace that is in him, and that is the way to be strong in grace. (3.) As a father exhorteth his son, so does St. Paul exhort Timothy with great tenderness and affection; Thou, therefore, my son, &c. Timothy must count upon sufferings, even unto blood, and therefore, First, He must train up others to succeed him in the ministry of the gospel, v. 2. He must instruct others, and train them up for the ministry; and so commit to them the things which he had. Secondly, He must exhort them to the ministry, lodge the gospel as a trust in their hands, and so commit to them the things which he had heard. Two things he must have an eye to in ordaining ministers.

1. Their fidelity and integrity; “Commit them to faithful men, who will sincerely aim at the glory of God, the honour of Christ, the welfare of souls, and the advancement of the kingdom of the Redeemer among men.”

2. Their ministerial ability. They must not only be knowing themselves, but able to teach others also, and be apt to teach. Here we have, (1.) The things Timothy was to commit to others; what he had heard of the apostle among many witnesses; he must not deliver any thing but that which St. Paul delivered to him and others, he had received of the Lord Jesus Christ. (2.) He was to commit them as a trust, as a sacred deposit, which they are to keep, and to transmit pure and uncorrupt unto others. (3.) Those to whom he was to commit these things, must be faithful, trustworthy men, and who were skilful to teach others. (4.) Though men were both faithful and able to teach others, yet these things must be committed to them by Christ’s own minister, a man in office; for none must intrude themselves into the ministry, but must have these things committed to them by those already in that office.

1. He must endure hardness; (v. 3.) Thou therefore, &c. 1. All Christians, but especially ministers, are soldiers of Jesus Christ; they fight under his banner, in his cause, and against his enemies, for he is the Captain of our salvation, Heb. 2. 10. 2. The soldiers of Jesus Christ must approve themselves good soldiers; faithful to their Captain, resolute in his cause, and must not give over fighting till they are made more than conquerors, through him that loved them, Rom. 8. 37.

3. Those who would approve themselves good soldiers of Jesus Christ, must endure hardness; that is, we must expect it, and count upon it in this world; must endure and accustom ourselves to it, and both bear and forbear all that comes, and not be moved by it from our integrity.

II. He must not entangle himself in the affairs of this world, v. 4. A soldier, when he is enlisted, leaves his calling, and all the business of it, that he may attend his captain’s orders. If we have given up ourselves to be Christ’s soldiers, we must sit loose to this world; and though there is no remedy, but we must employ ourselves in the affairs of this life, while we are here, (we have something to do here,) yet we must not entangle ourselves with those vail, so as by them to be diverted and drawn aside from our duty to God, and the great concerns of our Christianity. They who will war the good warfare, must sit loose to this world, that we may please him and hath chosen us to be soldiers. Observe, It is the great care of a soldier should be to please his general; so the great care of a Christian should be to please Christ, to approve ourselves to him.

Observe further, The way to please him who hath chosen us to be soldiers, is, not to entangle ourselves with the affairs of this life, but to be free from such entanglements as would hinder us in our holy warfare.

IV. We must see to it, that in warring our spiritual warfare we go by rule; we observe the laws of war; (v. 5.) If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully. We are striving for mastery, to get the mastery of our lusts and corruptions, to excel in that which is good, but we cannot expect the prize unless we observe the laws. In doing that which is good, we must take care that we do it in a right manner, that our good may not be evil spoken of. We observe here,

1. A Christian is to strive for masteries; he must aim at mastering his own lusts and corruptions. 2. Yet he must strive according to the laws given to him; he must strive lawfully. 3. Those who do so, shall be crowned at last, after a complete victory is obtained.

We must be willing to wait for a recompense; (v. 6.) The husbandman that laboureth, must be first partaker of the fruits. Or, as it should be read, The husbandman labouring first, must partake of the fruits, as appears by comparing it with Jam. 5. 7. If we would be partakers of the fruits, we must labour; if we would gain the prize, we must run the race.

And further, we must first labour as the husbandman does, with diligence and patience, before we are partakers of the fruit; we must do the will of God, before we receive the promises, for which reason we have need of patience, Heb. 10. 36.

Consider what Isay, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things, v. 7. Here,

1. Paul commands Timothy to consider these things that he admonished him about, Timothy must be reminded to use his considering faculties about the things of God. Consideration is as necessary to a good conversation as to a sound conversion.

2. He prays for him, The Lord give thee understanding in all things. Observe, It is God who gives understanding. The most intelligent men need more and more of this gift. If he who gave the revelation in the word, does not give the understanding in the heart, we are nothing.

Together with our prayers for others, that the Lord would give them understanding in all things, we must exhort and stir them up to consider what we say, for consideration is the way to understand, remember, and practise, what we hear or read.

8. Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to my gospel. 9. Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound. 10. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. 11. It is a faithful saying; For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: 12. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us: 13. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself.

I. To encourage Timothy in suffering, the apostle puts him in mind of the resurrection of Christ. (v. 8.) Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead, according to my gospel. This is the great proof of his divine mission, and therefore a great confirmation of the truth of the Christian religion; and the consideration of it should make us faithful to our Christian profession, and should particularly encourage us in suffering for it. Let suffering saints remember this.

Observe, We are to look to the Author and Finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the throne of God, Heb. 12. 2. The incarnation and resurrection of Jesus Christ, heartily believed and rightly considered, will support a Christian under all sufferings in the present life.

II. Another thing to encourage him in suffering, was, that he had Paul for an example; (v. 9.) Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer; and let not Timothy the son expect any better treatment than Paul the father. Paul was a man who did good, and yet suffered as an evil-doer: we must not think it strange if those who do well fare ill in this world, and if the best of men meet with the worst of treatment; but this was his comfort, that the word of God is not bound. Paul and the other pious persecutors may silence ministers and restrain them, but they cannot hinder the operation of the word of God upon men's hearts and consciences; that cannot be bound by any human force. This might encourage Timothy not to be afraid of bonds for the testimony of Jesus; for the word of Christ, which ought to be dearer to him than liberty, or life itself, should in the issue suffer nothing by those bonds.

Here we see, 1. The good apostle's treatment in the world. I suffer trouble; to this he was called and appointed. 2. The pretence and colour under which he suffered; I suffer as an evil-doer; so the Jews said to Pilate concerning Christ, If he was not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up to thee, John 18. 30. 3. The real and true cause of his suffering trouble as an evil-doer; wherein, that is, in or for the sake of the gospel. 4. The apostle suffered trouble; we are to look to afterward he resisted into blood, striving against sin, Heb. 12. 2. Though the preachers of the word are often bound, yet the word is never bound.

I endure all things for the elect's sake, v. 10. Observe, Good ministers may and should encourage themselves in the hardest services and the hardest sufferings, with this, that God will certainly bring good to his church, and benefit to his elect, out of them; that they may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. Next to the salvation of our own souls, we should be willing to do and suffer anything, to promote the salvation of the souls of others.

Observe further, The elect are designed to obtain salvation; God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation, I Thess. 5. 9. Again, This salvation is in Christ Jesus; in him as the Fountain, the Purchaser, the Centre, and the Rewarder of all good; and it is accompanied with eternal glory; there is no salvation in Christ Jesus without it. Lastly, The sufferings of our apostles were for the elect's sake, for their confirmation and encouragement.

III. Another thing with which he encourages Timothy, is, the prospect of a future state.

1. Those who faithfully adhere to Christ and to his truths and ways, whatever it costs them, will certainly have the advantage of it in another world.

If we be dead with him, we shall live with him, v. 11 If, in conformity to Christ, we be dead to this world and its pleasures, profits, and honours, we shall go to live with him in a better world, to be for ever with him. Nay, though we be called out to suffer for him, we shall not lose by that. They who suffer for Christ on earth, shall reign with Christ in heaven, v. 12. They who suffered with David in his humiliation, were preferred with him in his exaltation: so it will be with the Son of David.
II. Timothy, II.

2. It is a great prerogative to be faithful to him; If we deny him, he also will deny us. If we deny him before man, he will deny us before his Father, Matt. 10. 33. And that man must needs be for ever miserable, whom Christ disowns at last.

This will certainly be the issue, whether we believe it or no; (v. 13.) If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself; he is faithful to his threatenings, faithful to his promises neither one nor the other shall fall to the ground, so not the least jot or tittle of them. If we be faithful to Christ, he will certainly be faithful to us. If we be false to him, we shall be faithful to his threatenings; he cannot deny himself, cannot recede from any word that he hath spoken, for he is Yea, and Amen, the faithful Witness.

Observe, (1.) Our being dead with Christ, precedes our living with him, and is connected with it, the one is in the other; so our suffering for him is the way to reign with him. Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. 19. 28. (2.) This is a faithful saying, and may be depended on, and ought to be believed. But, (3.) If we deny him, out of fear, or shame, or for the sake of some temporal advantage, he will deny and disown us; and will not deny himself, but will continue faithful to his word when he threatens as well as when he promises.

14. Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. 15. Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 16. But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness. 17. And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom are Hymenæus and Philetus. 18. Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some.

Having thus encouraged Timothy to suffer, he comes in the next place to direct him in his work. 1. He must make it his business to edify those who were under his charge, to frame them into the ways of those things which they did already know; for that is the work of ministers; not to tell people that which they never knew before, but to put them in mind of that which they do know, charging them that they strive not about words. Observe, Those that are disposed to strive, commonly strive about matters of very small moment. Strifes of words are very destructive to the things of God. That they strive not about words to no profit. If people did but consider of what little use most of the controversies in religion are, they would not be so zealous in their strife of words, to the subverting of the hearers, to the drawing of them away from the great things of God, and occasioning unchristian heats and animosities, by which truth is often in danger of being lost.

Observe, People are very prone to strive about words, and such strife never answers any other ends than to shake some and subvert others; they are not only useless, but they are very hurtful, and therefore ministers are to charge them that they do not strive about words, and then they are most likely to be regarded; when they charge them before the Lord, as, in this place, he did; and when they produce their warrant for what they say.

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, v. 15. Observe, The care of ministers must be to approve themselves unto God, to be accepted of him, and to shew that they are so approved unto God. In order therunto, there must be constant care and industry; Study to shew thyself such a one, a workman that needs not be ashamed. Ministers must be workmen, that are either skilful, or faithful, or wise, and will perform the work that are either unskilful, or unfaithful, or lazy, have need to be ashamed; but those who mind their business, and keep to their work, are workmen that need not be ashamed. And what is their work? It is rightly to divide the word of truth. Not to invent a new gospel, but rightly to divide the gospel that is committed to their trust. To speak terror to those whose terror belongs, comfort to whom comfort; to give every one his portion in due season, Matt. 24. 25.

Observe here, 1. The word which ministers preach, is the word of truth, for the Author of it is the God of truth. 2. It requires great wisdom, study, and care, to divide this word of truth rightly; Timothy must study in order to do this well.

II. He must take heed of that which would be a hinderance to him in his work, v. 16. He must take heed of error; Shun profane and vain babblings. The heretics, who boasted of their notions and their arguments, thought their performances such as might recommend themselves; but the apostle calls them profane and vain babblings; when once men take to be fond of such, they will increase unto more ungodliness. The way of error is down-hill; one absurdity being granted or contended for, a thousand follow; their word will eat as doth a canker: or gnoereone; when errors or heresies come into the church, the infecting of one often proves the infecting of many, or the infecting of the same person with one error often proves the infecting of him with many errors. Upon this occasion, the apostle mentions some who had lately advanced erroneous doctrines; Hymenæus and Philetus. He names these corrupt teachers, by which he sets a brand upon them, to their perpetual infamy, and warns all people against hearkening to them; they have erred concerning the truth, concerning one of the fundamental articles of the Christian religion, which is truth. The resurrection of the dead is one of the great doctrines of Christ. Now see the subtlety of the serpent and the serpent's seed. They did not deny the resurrection, (for that had been boldly and avowedly to confront the word of Christ;) but they put a corrupt interpretation upon it, and doctrine, saying that the resurrection is past already; that what Christ spake concerning the resurrection, is to be understood mysteriously and by way of allegory, that it must be meant of a spiritual resurrection only. It is true, there is a spiritual resurrection, but from thence to infer that there will not be a true and real resurrection of the body at the last day, is to dash one truth of Christ in pieces against another. By that false doctrine, took them off from the belief of the resurrection of the dead; and if there be no resurrection of the dead, no future state, no recompense of our services and sufferings in another world, we are of all men the most miserable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. What takes away the doctrine of a future state, overthrows the faith of Christians. The apostle bad largely disproved this error, (1
Cor. 15.) and therefore does not here enter into the arguments against it.

1. The babblings Timothy was to shun, were profane and vain; they were empty shadows, and led to profaneness; for they will procure unto more ungodliness. 2. Error is very fruitful and productive, and on that account the more dangerous; it will eat like a gangrene. 3. When men err concerning the truth, they always endeavour to have some plausible pretence for it. Hymenaeus and Philetus did not deny a resurrection, but pretended it was already past. 4. Error, especially that affects the foundation, will overthrow the faith of some.

19. Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. 20. But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood, and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour. 21. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

Here we see what we may comfort ourselves with, in reference to this, and the little errors and heresies that both infect and distress the church, and do mischief.

1. It may be a great comfort to us, that the unbelief of men cannot make the promise of God of none effect. Though the faith of some particular persons be overthrown, yet the foundation of God standeth sure; (v. 19.) it is not possible that they should deceive the elect. Or it may be meant of the truth itself. And the church, though it be encompassed with all the attacks which the powers of darkness have made upon the doctrine of Christ, cannot shake it; it stands firm, and weather all the storms which have been raised against it. The prophets and apostles, that is, the doctrines of the Old and New Testament, are still firm; and they have a seal with two mottoes upon it, one on the one side, and the other on the other, as is usual in a broad seal.

2. Another speaks our comfort—that the Lord knoweth them that are his, and them that are not; knows them, that is, he owns them, so knows them, that he will never lose them. Though the faith of some be overthrown, yet the Lord is said to know the ways of the righteous, Ps. 1. 6. None can overthrow the faith of any whom God hath chosen.

2. Another speaks our duty—that every one who names the name of Christ, must depart from iniquity. Those who would have the comfort of the privilege, must make conscience of the duty. If the name of Christ be called upon us, we must depart from iniquity, else he will not own us; he will say in the great day, (Matt. 7. 22.) Depart from me, I never knew you, ye workers of iniquity. Observe,

[1.] Whatever errors are introduced in the church, the foundation of God standeth sure, his purpose can never be defeated. [2.] God hath some in every church, who are his, and whom he knoweth to be his. [3.] Professing Christians name the name of Christ, are called by his name, and therefore are bound to depart from iniquity; for Christ gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, Tit. 2. 14.

2. Another thing that may comfort us, is, that though there be some who are faithless, there are others who keep their integrity, and hold it fast; (v. 20.) In a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, &c. The church of Christ is a great house, a well-furnished house; now some of the furniture of this house is of great value, as the plate in a house; some of small value, and put to mean uses, as the vessels of wood and earth; so it is in the church of God. There are some professors of religion, that are like the vessels of wood and earth, they are vessels of dishonour; but at the same time all are not vessels of dishonour; there are vessels of gold and silver, that are vessels of honour, that are sanctified and meet for the Master's use. When we are discouraged by the badness of some, we must encourage ourselves by the consideration of the goodness of others. Now we should see to it that we be vessels of honour; we must purge ourselves from these corrupt opinions, that we may be sanctified for our Master's use.

1. Observe, I. the church there are some vessels of honour, and some of dishonour; there are some vessels of mercy, and other vessels of wrath, Rom. 9. 22. 23. Some dishonour the church by their corrupt opinions and wicked lives; and others honour and credit it by their exemplary conversation. 2. A man must purge himself from these before he can be a vessel of honour, or meet for his Master's use. 3. Every vessel must be fit for its Master's use; every one in the church whom God approves, must be devoted to his Master's service, and meet for his use. (4.) Sanctification in the heart is our preparation for every good work. The tree must be made good, and then the fruit will be good.

22. Flee also youthful lusts: but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. 23. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they gender strifes. 24. And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient. 25. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; 26. And that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.
our prayers to God and Christ are not acceptable or successful, except they come out of a pure heart.

II. He cautions him against contention, and, to prevent that, (v. 23.) cautions him against foolish and unlearned questions, that tend to no benefit, strifes of words. They who advanced them, and debated upon them thought them the fruit of their thought and learning; but Paul calls them foolish and unlearned. The mischief of these is, that they gender strifes, that they breed debates and quarrels among Christians and ministers. It is very remarkable how often, and with what seriousness, the apostle cautions Timothy against disputes in religion, which surely was not without some such design as this, to shew us that religion consists more in believing and practicing what is right in religion than in debating about it.

Now the servant of the Lord must not strive, v. 24. Nothing worse becomes the servant of the Lord Jesus, who himself did not strive or cry, (Matt. 12. 19.) but was a pattern of meekness and mildness and gentleness to all, than strife and contention.

The servant of the Lord must be gentle to all men, and thereby shew that he is himself subject to the commanding power of that holy religion which he is employed in preaching and proselytizing, and not to teach. Those are unapt to teach, who are apt to strive, and are fierce and froward. Ministers must be patient, bearing with evil, and in meekness instructing, (v. 25.) not only those who subject themselves, but those who oppose themselves. Observe,

1. Those who oppose themselves to the truth, are to be instructed; for instruction is the scripture-method of dealing with the erroneous, which is more likely to convince them of their errors than fire and faggots; he does not bid us kill their bodies, under pretence of saving their souls. 2. Such as oppose themselves, are to be instructed in meekness, for our Lord is meek and lowly; (Matt. 11. 29.) and this agrees well with the character of the servant of the Lord, (v. 24.) He must not strive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient.

This is the way to convey truth in its light and power, and to overcome evil with good, Rom. 12. 21. That which ministers must have in their eyes, in instructing those who oppose themselves, must be, their recovery; If God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth. Observe,

1. Repentance is God's gift. (2.) It is a gift with a peradventure, in the case of those who oppose themselves to the truth, though we are not to despair of the grace of God, yet we must take heed of presuming upon it. To the acknowledging of the truth. (3.) The same God who gives us the discovery of the truth, does by his grace bring us to the acknowledging of it, otherwise our hearts would continue in rebellion against it, for we are to confess with our mouths as well as to believe with our hearts, Rom. 10. 9, 10. And thus sinners recover themselves, and are saved, out of the wrath that was upon them. [1.] The misery of sinners; they are in the snare of the Devil, and are led captive by him at his will. They are slaves to the worst of task-masters, he is the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2.

They are taken in a snare, and in the worst snare, because it is the Devil's; they are as fishes that are taken in an evil net, and are there consumed in the snare. Further, They are under Ham's curse, (a servant of servants shall he be, Gen. 9. 25.) they are slaves to him who is but a slave and vassal.

[2.] The happiness of those who repent; they recover themselves out of this snare, as a bird out of the snare of the fowler; the snare is broken, and they have escaped; and the greater the danger, the greater the deliverance. When sinners repent, they who before were led captive by the Devil at his will, come to be led into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and have their wills melted into the will of the Lord Jesus. The good Lord recover us all out of the snare.

CHAP. III.

1. The apostle foretells Timothy what the last days would be, with the reasons thereof, v. 1... 9. He frespheres various remedies against them. (v. 10. to the end,) particularly his own example, (But thou hast fully known my doctrine, &c.) and the knowledge of the holy scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation, and will be the best antidote against the corruption of the times we live in. In this chapter, Paul tells Timothy how bad others would be, and therefore how good he should be; and this use we should make of the badness of others, whereby to engage us to hold our own integrity so much the faster.

1. This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. 2. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unholy. 3. Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. 4. Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; 5. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, from such also turn away.

Timothy must not think it strange if there were in the church bad men; for the net of the gospel was to enclose both good fish and bad, Matt. 13. 47, 48. Jesus Christ had foretold (Matt. 24.) that there would come seducers, and therefore we must not be offended at it, or think the worse of religion or the church for it.

Even in gold ore there will be dross, and a great deal of chaff among the wheat when it lies on the floor. Timothy must know that in the last days, (v. 1.) in gospel-times, there would come perilous times. Though gospel-times were times of reformation in many respects, let him know that even in gospel-times there would be perilous times; not so much on the account of persecution from without as on the account of corruptions within. These would be difficult times, wherein it would be difficult for a man to keep a good conscience. He does not say, There would be no sin in the times; but, There would be many sins. The apostle tells us the truth, that "disturbances shall be combined to root out Christianity," but, "perilous times shall come, for such as have the form of godliness (v. 5.) shall be corrupt and wicked, and do a great deal of damage to the church." Two traitors within the garrison may do more hurt to it than two thousand besiegers without. Perilous times shall come for men shall be wicked. Note, Sin makes the times perilous. When there is a general corruption of manners, and of the temper of men, that makes the times dangerous to live in; for it is hard to keep our integrity in the midst of general corruption.

The coming of perilous times is an evidence of the truth of scripture-predictions; if the event in this respect did not answer to the prophecy, we might be tempted to question the divinity of the Bible. We are all concerned in some measure, therefore, to consider it, that we may not be surprised when we see the times perilous; This know also.

Then he tells Timothy what would be the occasion of making these times perilous, or what shall be the marks and signs, whereby these times may be known; v. 2, and following verses.

1. Self-love will make the times perilous. Who is there who does not love himself? But this is meant of an irregular, selfish self-love. Men love their carnal selves better than their spiritual selves. Men love to gratify their own lusts, and make provision for them, more than to please God and do their duty. Instead of Christian charity, which takes care for the good of others, they will mind them only, and prefer their own gratification before the church's edification.

2. Covetousness. Observe, Self-love brings in a long train of sins and miscarriages. When men are lovers of themselves, no good can be expected from them, as all good may be expected from those who love God with all their hearts. When covetousness generally prevails, and every man for what he can, in keeping what he has, this makes men dangerous to one another, and obliges every man to stand on his guard against his neighbour.

3. Pride and vain-glory make the times perilous. When men, being proud of themselves, are boasters and blashphemers, boasters before men whom they despise and look upon with scorn, and blashphemers of God and of his name; when men do not fear God, care will not regard man, and so vice versâ.

4. When children are disobedient to their parents, and break through the obligations which they lie under to them both in duty and gratitude, and frequently in interest, having their dependence upon them, and their expectation from them, that makes the times perilous; for what wickedness will they stick at, who will be abusive to their own parents, and rebel against their neighbours?

5. Unthankfulness and unholiness make the times perilous, and those two commonly go together. What is the reason that men are unholy and without the fear of God, but that they are unthankful for the mercies of God? Ingratitude and impiety go together; for call a man ungrateful, and you can call him by no worse name. Unthankful, and impure, defiled with fleshly lusts, which is an instance of great ingratitude to that God who has provided so well for the support of the body; we abuse his gifts, if we make them the food and fuel of our lusts.

6. The times are perilous when men will not be held by the bonds either of nature or common honesty; when they are without natural affection, and truce-breakers, v. 3. There is a natural affection due to all. Wherever there is the human nature, there should be humanity toward those of the same nature, who are related to each other. Times are perilous when children are disobedient to their parents, (v. 2.) and when parents are without natural affection to their children, v. 3. See what a corruption of nature sin is, how it deprives men even of that which nature has implanted in them for the support of their own kind; for the natural affection of parents to their children, is that which contributes very much to the keeping up of mankind upon the earth, and those who shall not be bound by natural affection, no marvel that they will not be bound by the most solemn leagues and covenants. They are truce-breakers, that make no conscience of the engagements they have laid themselves under. Again, the times are perilous when men are false accusers one of another; to one another; having no regard to the good name of others, or to the religious obligations of an oath, but thinking themselves at liberty to say and do what they please, Ps. 12. 4.

7. When men have no government of themselves and their own appetites: not of their own appetites, for they are incontinent; not of their own passions, for they are fierce; when they have no rule over their own spirits, and therefore are like a city that is broken down, and has no walls; they are soon fired, upon the least occasion.

8. When that which is good and ought to be honoured, is generally despised and looked upon with contempt. It is the pride of persecutors that they look with contempt upon good people, though they are more excellent than their neighbours.

9. When men are generally treacherous, wilful, and haughty, the times are perilous (v. 4.) when men are insinuating, heavy, high-minded. Our Saviour has foretold that the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son; (Matt. 10. 21.) and these are the worst sort of traitors: those who delivered up their Bibles to persecutors, were called traditores, for they betrayed the trust committed to them. When men are petulant and puffed up, carrying it scornfully to all about them, and when this temper generally prevails, then the times are perilous.

10. When men are generally lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God. When there are more epicures than true Christians, then the times are bad indeed. God is to be loved above all; that is a carnal mind, and is full of enmity against him, which prefers any thing before him, especially such a sordid thing as carnal pleasure is.

11. All this notwithstanding, all these have the form of godliness, (v. 5.) are called by the Christian name, baptized into the Christian faith, make a show of religion; but, how plausible soever their form of godliness is, they deny the power of it. When they take upon them the form, which should and would bring along with it the power thereof, they will put asunder what God hath joined together; they will assume the form of godliness, to take away their reproach; but they will not submit to the power of it, to take away their sin.

Observe here, (1.) Men may be very bad and wicked, under a profession of religion; they may be lovers of themselves, &c. yet have a form of godliness. (2.) A form of godliness is a very different thing from the power of it; men may have the one, and be wholly destitute of the other; yea, they deny it, at least practically in their lives. (3.) From such, good Christians must withdraw themselves.

6. For of this sort are they who creak into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, 7. Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. 8. Now as James and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. 9. But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as their's also was.

Here Paul warns Timothy to take heed of certain seducers, not only that he might not be drawn away by them himself, but that he might ariu those who were under the influence of the same seduction.

1. He shows how industrious they were to make proselytes; (v. 6.) they applied themselves to particular persons, visited them in their houses, not daring to appear openly; for they that do evil, hate the light, John 3. 20. They were not forced into houses, as good Christians often were by persecution; but they of choice creak into houses, to insinuate themselves into the affections and good opinion of people, and so to draw them over to their party. And see what sort of people they were, that they gained, and made proselytes of; they were such as were weak, silly women; and such as were wicked, laden with sins, and led away with divers lusts; a foolish head and a filthy heart make persons, especially women, an easy prey to seducers.

2. He shews how far they were from coming to the knowledge of the truth, though they pretend to be ever learning, v. 7. In one sense we must all be ever learning, growing in knowledge, following on to know the Lord, pressing forward; but these were sceptics, giddy and unstable, who were forward to imbibe every new notion, under pretence of advancement in knowledge, but never came to a right understanding of the truth as it is in Jesus.

3. He foretells the certain stop that should be put to their progress, (v. 8, 9.) comparing them to the Egyptian magicians who withheld Moses, they are here named Jannes and Jambres; though the names are not to be met with in the story of the Old Testament, yet they are found in some old Jewish writers. Moses came with a divine commission to fetch Israel out of Egypt, these magicians opposed him, and thus those he forsook resisted the truth, and like them were men of corrupt minds; men who had their understandings perverted, biased and prejudiced against the truth, and reprobate concerning the faith, very far from being true Christians; but they shall proceed no further; or not much further, as some read it. Observe,

(1.) Seducers seek for corners, and love obscurity; for they are afraid to appear in public, and therefore creep into houses. Further, they attack those who are the least able to defend themselves; that is, silly and wicked women. (2.) Seducers in all ages are much alike, their characters are the same, men of corrupt minds, &c. and their conduct much the same, they resist the truth, as Jannes and Jambres withheld Moses, and they will be alike in their dissemblment.

(3.) Those who resist the truth are guilty of folly, yeo of egregious folly, for magna est veritas, et praevalebit—Great is the Truth, and shall prevail.

(4.) Though the spirit of error may be let loose for a time, God has it in a chain. Satan can deceive the nations and the churches no further and no longer than God will permit him; their folly shall be manifest, it shall appear that they are impostors, and every man shall abandon them.

10. But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, 11. Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. 12. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. 13. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.

Here the apostle, to confirm Timothy in that way wherein he walked,

1. Settles his own example, which Timothy had been an eye-witness of, having long attended Paul; (v. 10.) Thou hast fully known my doctrine. The more fully we know the doctrine of Christ and the apostles, the more closely we shall cleave to it; the reason why many sit loose to it, is, because they do not fully know it. Christ's apostles had no enemies but those who did not know them, or know them not, who did know them best, loved and honoured them the most. Now what is it that Timothy had so fully known in Paul?

1. The doctrine that he preached. Paul kept back nothing from his hearers, but declared to them the whole counsel of God, (Acts 20. 27.) so that if it were not their own fault they might fully know it. Timothy had a great advantage in being trained up under such a tutor, and being apprised of the doctrine he preached.

2. He had fully known his conversation; Thou hast known my doctrine, and manner of life; his manner of life was of a-piece with his doctrine, and did not contradict it. He did not pull down by his living what he built up by his preaching. Those ministers are likely to do good, and leave lasting fruits of their labours, whose manner of life agrees with their doctrine; as on the contrary those cannot expect to profit the people at all, that preach well and live ill.

3. Timothy fully knew what was the great thing that Paul had in view, both in his preaching and in his conversation; “Thou hast known my purpose, what I drive at, how far it is from any worldly, carnal, secular design, and how sincerely I aim at the glory of God, and the good of the souls of men.”

4. Timothy knew that, which I might gather from his doctrine, manner of life and purpose; for he gave proofs of his faith, that is, of his integrity and fidelity, or his faith in Christ, his faith concerning another world, by which Paul lived, his long-suffering toward the churches to which he preached, and over which he presided, his charity toward all men, and his patience. These were graces that Paul was eminent for, and Timothy knew.

5. He knew that he had suffered ill for doing well; (v. 11.) “Thou hast fully known the persecutions and afflictions that came unto me;” (he mentions those only which happened to him while Timothy was with him, at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra;) “and therefore let it be no surprise to thee, if thou suffer hard things, it is no more than I have endured here.”

6. He knew what care God had taken of him; notwithstanding, out of them all the Lord delivered me; as he never failed his cause, so his God never failed him. Thou hast fully known my afflictions. When we know the afflictions of good people but in part, they are a temptation to us to decline that cause which they suffer for; when we know only the hardships they undergo for Christ, we may be ready to say, “We will renounce that cause that is like to cost us so dear in the owning of it;” but when we fully know the afflictions, not only how they suffer, but how they are supported and comforted under their sufferings; then, instead of being discouraged, we shall be animated by them; especially considering that we are told before, that we must count upon such things; (v. 12.) All that shall live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. Always; at times more, at times less; he professeth the faith of Christ, who were more exposed to persecution than at other times; but at all times, more or less, they who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. They must expect to be despised, and that their religion will stand in the way of their preferment; they who will live godly, must expect it, especially they who will live godly in Christ Jesus, that is, according to the strict rules of the Christian religion, they who will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. Therefore, if you profess the faith of Christ, you will wear the livery and bear the name of the crucified Redeemer; all who will shew their religion in their conversation, who will not only be godly, but live godly, let them expect persecution, especially when they are resolute in it.

(1.) The apostle's life was very exemplary for three things; for his doctrine, which was according to the will of God; for this he obtained courage to die for his persecutions and sufferings. (2.) Though his life was a life of great usefulness, yet it was a life of great sufferings; and none, believe, came nearer to their great Master for eminent service and great sufferings than St. Paul; he suffered almost in every place; the Holy Ghost witnessed that bonds and afflictions did abide him, Acts 23. 23. Here he mentions his persecutions and afflictions at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, beside what he suffered elsewhere. (3.) The apostle mentions the Lord's delivering him out of all, for Timothy's and our encouragement under sufferings. (4.) We have the practice and treatment of true Christians, they live godly in Jesus Christ, that is their practice; and they shall suffer persecution, that is the usage they must expect in this world.

9. It warns Timothy of the fatal end of seducers, as a reason why he should stick close to the truth as it is in truth, and not suffer himself to be led by bad advice or wicked counsel. For if he is led to walk with wicked persons, he shall go worse and worse, &c. Observe, As good men, by the grace of God, grow better and better, so bad men, through the subtlety of Satan and the power of their own corruptions, grow worse and worse. The way of sin is down-hill; for such proceed from bad to worse, deceiving and being deceived. Those who deceive others, do but deceive themselves; those who draw others into error, ruin themselves. The time of more hardness and youth, and the mistakes, and they will find it so at last, to their cost.

14. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; 15. And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith, which is in Christ Jesus. 16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17. That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

He directs him to keep close to a good education, and particularly to what he had learned out of the holy scriptures; (v. 14, 15.) Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned. Note, It is not enough to learn that which is good, but we must continue in it, and persevere in it unto the end. Then are we Christ's disciples indeed, John 8. 31.

We should not be any more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, Eph. 4. 14. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines; for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, Heb. 13. 9. And for this reason we should continue in the things we have learned from the holy scriptures; not that we ought to continue in any errors and mistakes which we may have been led into, but that we should continue in the things we have learned, upon an impartial inquiry and full conviction, we should forsake; but this makes nothing against our continuing in those things which the holy scriptures plainly assert, and which he that runs may read.

If Timothy would adhere to the truth as he had been taught it, that would arm him against the snares and insinuations of seducers; They are the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of. It is a great happiness to know the certainty of the things wherein we have been instructed, Luke 1. 4. Not only to know what the truths are, but to know that they are of undoubted certainty. What we have learned we must labour to be more and more assured of; that, being grounded in the truth, we may be guarded against error, for certainty in religion is of great importance and advantage; Knowing, in that thou hast had good teachers; consider of whom thou hast learned them; not of evil men and seducers, but good men, who had themselves experienced the power of the truths they taught thee, and been ready to suffer for them, and thereby would give the fullest evidence of their belief of these truths.

II. Knowing especially the firm foundation upon which thou hast built, namely, that of the scripture;

Observe, Those who would acquaint themselves with the things of God, and be assured of them, must know the holy scriptures, for those are the summary of divine revelation. Observe, It is a great happiness to know the holy scriptures from our childhood, and we should become get the knowledge of the scriptures. The age of education is the learning age; and those who would get true learning, must get it out of the scriptures.

Observe further, The scriptures we are to know, are the holy scriptures; they came from the holy God, were delivered by holy men, contain holy precepts, treat of holy things, and were designed to make us holy, and to lead us in the way of holiness. To discover the holy scriptures, they are by that distinguished from profane writings of all sorts, and from those that only treat of morality, and common justice and honesty, but do not meddle with holiness. If we would know the holy scriptures, we must read and search them daily, as the noble Bercians did, Acts 17. 11. They must not lie by us neglected, and seldom or never looked into.

Now here observe, 1. What is the excellency of the scriptures? They are the scripture, which is the word of God; through which the children of Israel were instructed, Deut. 4. 42. They are the rock in the midst of the sea; they are the pillar in the hinder parts of the land, Judges 5. 4. They are the sword expressed in the word of God, James 1. 25. They are a fire kindled, Job 38. 3. They are a mirror that reflecteth the light, 2 Cor. 3. 18. They are the light of the world, Matt. 5. 14. They are a light shining upon the darkness, 2 Pet. 1. 19. They are the light of men, John 8. 12. They are the light of the believing, 2 Cor. 4. 6. They are the light of the world, John 1. 9. They are the light of the new covenant, 2 Cor. 3. 16.

2. What use it will be to us.

(1.) It is able to make us wise to salvation; that is, it is a sure guide in our way to eternal life. Note, These are the wise, the men that are wise to salvation. The scriptures are given to make us true wise, wise for our souls and another world; to make wise to salvation through faith. Observe, The scriptures will make us wise to salvation, if they be mixed with faith, and not otherwise, Heb. 4. 2. For if we do not believe their truth and goodness, they will do us no good.

(2.) It is profitable to us for all the purposes of the Christian life, for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. It is the sum and end of all the ends of divine revelation. It instructs us in that which is true, reproofs us for that which is amiss, directs us in that which is good. It is of use to all, for we all need to be instructed, corrected, and reproved: it is of special use to ministers, who are to give instruction, correction, and reproof; and whence can they fetch it better than from the scripture? That the old men instruct, v. 17. The Christian, the minister, is the man of God. That which finishes a man of God in this world, is, the scripture. By it we are thoroughly furnished for every good work. There is that in the scripture, which suits every case. Whatever duty we have to do, whatever service is required from us, we may find enough in the scriptures to furnish us for it.
II. TIMOTHY, IV.

I. That the eye of God and Jesus Christ was upon him; I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ; that is, "As thou tenderest the favour of God and Jesus Christ; as thou wilt approve thyself to God and Jesus Christ, by the obligations both of natural and revealed religion; as thou wilt make due returns of due obedience, and of the Lord Jesus Christ who redeemed thee."

2. He charges him as he will answer it at the great day: reminding him of the judgment to come, which is committed to the Lord Jesus. He shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, that is, when he appears in his kingdom. It concerns all, both ministers and people, seriously to consider the account that they must shortly give to Jesus Christ of all the trusts reposed in them. Christ shall judge the quick and the dead, that is, those that at the last day shall be found alive, and those who shall be raised to life out of the grave.

Note, (1.) The Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and dead. God hath committed all judgment unto the Son, and hath appointed him the Judge of quick and dead, Acts 10:42. (2.) He will appear; he will come the second time, and it will be with great glory and appearance, as the word two-words. (3.) Then his kingdom shall appear in his glory; at his appearing and kingdom, for he will then appear in his kingdom, sitting on a throne, to judge the world.

II. What is the matter of the charge, v. 2—5. He is charged,

1. To preach the word. That is ministers' business; a dispensation is committed to them. It is not their own notions and fancies that they are to preach, but he's the place, the word of God, and they must not corrupt it, but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, they speak in Christ, 2 Cor. 2:17. To urge what he preached, and to press it with all earnestness upon his hearers; "Be instant in season, out of season, reproye, rebuke, exhort; do this work with all fervency of spirit. Call upon those under thy charge to take heed of sin, to do their duty; call upon them to repent and believe, and live as holy men, and this both in season and out of season. In season, when they are at leisure to hear thee; when some special opportunity offers itself of speaking to them with advantage. Nay, do it out of season, even when there is not that apparent probability of fastening something upon them, because thou dost not know but the Spirit of God may fasten upon them; for the wind bloweth where it listeth; and in the morning we must sow our seed, in the evening we will not withhold our hand," Ecc. 11:6. We must do it in season, that is, let slip no opportunity; and do it out of season, that is, not shift off the duty, under pretence that it is out of season.

3. He must tell people of their faults; "Reprove them, rebuke them. Convince wicked people of the evil and danger of their wicked courses. Endavour, by dealing plainly with them, to bring them to repentance. Rebuke them with severity and authority, in Christ's name, that they may take the displeasure against them as an indication of God's displeasure." He must direct, encourage, and quicken those who began well. "Exhort them; persuade them to hold on, and endure to the end, and this with all long-suffering and doctrine." (1.) He must do it very patiently, with all long-suffering. If thou dost not feel the effect of thy labours, yet do not therefore give up the cause: be not weary of speaking to them. While God shews them to all long-suffering, let ministers exhort with all long-suffering. (2.) He must do it rationally, not with passion, but with doctrine, that is, "In order to the reducing of them to good practices, instil into them good principles. Teach them the truth as it is in Jesus, reduce them to a firm belief of that, and that will be a means both to reclaim them from evil and to bring them to good, as you perceive.

[1.] A minister's work fulfils various parts; he is to breach the word, to reform, rebuke, and exhort.

[2.] He is to be very diligent and careful; he must be instant in season and out of season; he must spare no pains or labour, but must be urgent with them to take care of their souls and their eternal concerns.

5. He must watch in all things; "Seek an opportunity of doing them a kindness; let no fair occasion slip through thy negligence. Watch to thy work; watch against the temptations of Satan, by which thou mayest be diverted from it; watch over the souls of those who are committed to thy charge."

6. He must count upon afflictions, and endure them; make the best of them. Παραποιεώντες; "Endure patiently, be not discouraged by the difficulties thou meetest with, but bear them with an evenness of spirit, endure thyself to hardships."

7. He must remember his office, and discharge that; Do the work of an evangelist. The office of the evangelists was, as the apostles' deputies, to water the churches that they planted. They were not settled pastors, but for some time resided in, and presided over, the churches that the apostles had planted, till they were settled under a standing ministry. They were the Lord's servants. He must fulfil his ministry; Make full proof of it. It was a great trust that was reposed in him, and therefore he must answer it, and perform all the parts of his office with diligence and care.

Observe, (1.) A minister must expect afflictions in the faithful discharge of his duty. (2.) He must endure them patiently, like a Christian hero. (3.) These must not discourage him in his work, for he must remember his office. (4.) The best way to make full proof of our ministry, is, to fulfil it, to fill it up in all its parts with proper work.

III. The reasons to enforce the charge.

1. Because errors and heresies were likely to creep into the church, by which the minds of many professing Christians would be corrupted; (v. 3, 4.) "For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine. Therefore improve the present time, that they will endure it; be busy now, for it is seed-time; when the fields are white unto the harvest, put in the sickle, for the present gale of opportunity will be soon over. They will not endure sound doctrine. There will be those who will heap to themselves corrupt teachers, and will turn away their ears from the truth; and therefore secure as many as thou canst, that when these storms and tempests do arise, they may be well fixed, and their apostasy be prevented."

2. The good must continually be heard, and ministers must preach, for the time to come, and guard against the mischiefs that are likely to arise hereafter, though they do not yet arise. They will turn away their ears from the truth, they will grow weary of the old plain gospel of Christ, and then they will be greedy of fables, and take pleasure in them, and God shall give them up to those strong delusions, because they will not receive the truth in the love of it, Titus. 2, 11, 12. Observe, (1.) These teachers were of their own heaping up, and not of God's sending; but they chose them, to gratify their lusts, and to please their itching ears.

(2.) People do so when they will not endure sound doctrine, that preaching which is searching, plain, and to the purpose; then they will have teachers of their own. (2.) There is a wide difference between the word of God, and the words of such teachers; the one is sound doctrine, the word of truth, the other is only fables. (4.) They that are turned unto fables, first turn away their ears from the truth, for they cannot hear and mind both, any more than they can serve two masters. Nay further, it is said, They shall be turned unto fables. God justly suffers those to turn to fables, who grow weary of the truth, and forsake them up to be led aside from the truth by fables.

2. Because Paul for his part had almost done his work; Do thou make full proof of thy ministry, for I am now ready to be offered. And,

(1.) "Therefore there will be the more occasion for thee." When labourers are removed out of the vineyard, it is no time for them to loiter, that are left behind, but to double their diligence. The fewer hands there are to work, the more industrious those hands must be, that are at work.

(2.) "I have done the work of my day and generation; do thou in like manner do the work of thy day and generation." (3.) The comfort and cheerfulness of Paul, in the prospect of his approaching departure, might encourage Timothy to the utmost industry and diligence and seriousness in his work. Paul was an old soldier of Jesus Christ, Timothy was but newly enlisted. "Come," says Paul, "I have found our Master kind, the cause good, and I can look back upon my warfare with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction, and therefore be not afraid of the difficulties thou must meet with. The crown of life is as sure to thee as if it were already upon thy head; and therefore endure afflictions, and make full proof of the ministry of the gospel, as the apostles of the saints and ministers, and especially dying martyrs, are a great confirmation of the truth of the Christian religion, and a great encouragement to living saints and ministers in their work.

[1.] He looks forward, upon his death approaching; I am now ready to be offered. The Holy Ghost witnessed in every city, that bonds and afflictions did abide him, Acts 20. 25. He was not at Rome, and it is probably that he had particular intimations from the Spirit, that there he should seal the truth with his blood; and he looks upon it now as near at hand; I am already poured out; so it is in the original, Ανεβασμένος; that is, I am already a martyr in affection. It alludes to the pouring out of the drink-offerings; for the blood of the martyrs, though it was not a sacrifice of atonement, yet it was a sacrifice of acknowledgment to the hands of God and his truth. Observe, With what pleasure he speaks of dying. He calls it his departure; though it is probable that he foresaw he must die a violent, bloody death, yet he calls it his departure or his release. Death to a good man is his release from the imprisonment of this world, and his departure to the enjoyments of another world; he does not cease to be, but is only removed from one world to another. Observe, 2. Order; but that pleasure he looks back upon the life he had lived; (v. 7.) I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, &c. He therefore did not fear death, because he had the testimony of his conscience, that by the grace of God he had in some measure answered the ends of living. As a Christian, as a minister, he had fought a good fight. He had done the service, gone through the difficulties of his warfare, and had been instrumental in the deliverance of the people from those mischiefs which the exalted Redeemer over the powers of darkness. His life was a course, and he had now finished it; as his warfare was accomplished, so his race was run. "I have kept the faith. I have kept the doctrines of the gospel, and never betrayed any of them." Note, First, The life of a Christian, but especially of a minister, is a warfare and a race, sometimes compared to the one in the scripture, and sometimes to the other. Secondly, It is a good fight, a good warfare; the cause is good, and the victory is sure,

if we continue faithful and courageous. Thirdly, We must fight this good fight, we must fight it out, and finish our course; we must not give over till we are made more than conquerors through him who hath loved us, Rom. 8. 37. Fourthly, It is a great comfort to a dying saint, when he can look back upon his past life, and say with our apostle, "I have fought, &c. I have kept the faith, the doctrine of faith, and the grace of faith." Toward the end of our days to be able to speak in this manner, what comfort, unspakable comfort, will it afford! Let it then be our constant endeavour, by the grace of God, that we may finish our course with joy, Acts 20. 24.

[3.] With what pleasure he looks forward to the life he was to live hereafter; (v. 8.) Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, &c. He had lost for Christ, but he was sure he should not lose by him, Phil. 3. 8. Let this encourage Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, that there is a crown of life before us, the glory and joy of which will abundantly compensate all the hardships and toils of our present warfare. Observe, It is called a crown of righteousness; because it will be the recompense of our services, which God is not unrighteous to forget; and because our holiness and righteousness will there be perfected, and that will be our crown.

God will give it as a righteous Judge, who will let none lose by him.

And yet this crown of righteousness was not peculiar to Paul, as if it belonged only to apostles, and eminent ministers and martyrs, but to all them also that love his appearing. Observe, It is the character of all the saints, that they love the appearing of Jesus Christ: they loved his first appearing, when he appeared to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself; (Heb. 9. 26.) they love to think of it; they love his second appearing at the great day; love it, and long for it: and with respect to those who love the appearing of Jesus Christ, he shall appear, to their joy; there is a crown of righteousness reserved for them, which shall then be given them, Heb. 9. 28.

We learn hence, First, The Lord is the righteous Judge, for his judgment is according to truth. Secondly, The crown of believers is a crown of righteousness, as the reward of the righteousness of Christ, and bestowed as the reward of the saints' righteousness. Thirdly, This crown, which believers shall wear, is laid up for them; they have it not at present, for here they are but heirs; they have it not in possession, and yet it is sure, for it is laid up for them. Fourthly, The righteous Judge will give it to all who love, prepare, and long for, his appearing; Surely I come quickly, Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus.

9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: 10. For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. 11. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry. 12. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. 13. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments. 14. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works: 15. Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.

1. He bids him hasten to him, if possible; (v. 9.) Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. For Timothy was an evangelist, one who was not fixed pastor of any one place, but attended the motions of the apostles, to build upon their foundation. Paul wanted Timothy's company and help; and the reason he gives, is, because several had left him, v. 10. One from an ill principle, Demas, who abides under an ill name for it, Demas that forsaken me, having loved this present world. He quitted Paul and his interest, either for fear of suffering, (because Paul was now a prisoner, and he was afraid of coming into trouble upon his account,) or being called off from his ministry by secular affairs, which he entangled himself in; his first love to Christ and his gospel was forsaken and forgotten, and he fell in love with the world. Note, Love to this present world is a bad quarrel with the best things of this world, and the ways of Jesus Christ. He is gone off, is departed to Thessalonica; called thither perhaps by trade, or by some other worldly business. Crescens is gone one way and Titus another way, and only Luke was with Paul, v. 11, 12. Was not that enough? Paul did not think it so; he loved the company of his friends.

He speaks respectfully concerning Mark: He is profitable to me for the ministry. It is supposed that this Mark was he about whom Paul and Barnabas contended, Acts 15. 39. Paul would not take him with him to the work, because he had once fluxed and drawn back; but now, says he, "Take Mark, and bring him with thee." By this it appears that Paul was now reconciled to Mark, and had a better opinion of him than he had before. This teaches us to be of a forgiving spirit; those that are profitable and useful, though they may have done amiss, we must not therefore disclaim for ever making use of them.

3. Paul orders Timothy to come to him, bids him as he came through Troas to bring with him from thence those things which he had left behind him there, (v. 13.) the cloak he had left there, which, it may be, Paul had the more occasion for in a cold place. This teaches us to be of a forgiving spirit; those that are profitable and useful, though they may have done amiss, we must not therefore disclaim for ever making use of them.

3. Paul orders Timothy to come to him, bids him as he came through Troas to bring with him from thence those things which he had left behind him there, (v. 13.) the cloak he had left there, which, it may be, Paul had the more occasion for in a cold place. This teaches us to be of a forgiving spirit; those that are profitable and useful, though they may have done amiss, we must not therefore disclaim for ever making use of them.
with much pleasure; for one forsook him, and another did him much evil, and greatly withstood his words. Yet, (2.) At the same time he mentions some with pleasure; the badness of some did not make him forget the goodness of others; such as Timothy, Titus, Mark, and Luke. (3.) The apostle has left a bribe on the names and memory of two persons: the one is Demas, who forsook him, having loved the present world, and the other is Alexander, who greatly withstood his words. (4.)
God will reward evil-doers, particularly apostates, according to their works. Lasty, Of such as are of Alexander's spirit and temper we should beware; for they will do no good, but all the mischief that is in their power.

16. At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray
God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.

18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for and Aquila, and the household of Onesiph orus. 20. Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21. Do thy diligence to come before winter.
Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren. 22. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

Here he gives Timothy an account of his own present circumstances. He had lately been called to appear before the emperor, upon his appeal to Cesar; and then no man stood with him, (v. 16.) to plead his cause, to bear testimony for him, or so much as to keep him in countenance, but all men forsook him. This was strange, that so good a man as he should have nobody to stand by him, even at Rome, where there were many Christians, whose faith was spoken of throughout all the world, Rom.
1. 8. But men are but men. The Christians at Rome were forward to go and meet him; (Acts 28.) but when it came to the pinch, and they would be in danger of suffering with him, then they all forsook him. He prays that God would not lay it to their charge; intimating, that it was a great fault, and God might justly be angry with them, but he prays God to forgive them. See what distinction is put between sins of presumption and sins of infirmity: Alexander the cooper-man, who maliciously withstood Paul, he prays against him;
The Lord reward him according to his works; but respecting these Christians, who through weakness shrank from Paul in time of trial, he says, The Lord lay it not to their charge. He prays that St. Paul had his trials in his friends forsoaking him in a time of danger, as well as in the opposition made by enemies; all forsook him.
2. It was their sin not to appear for the good apro-strate, especially at his first answer; but it was a sin of weakness, and therefore the more excusable. Yet, 3. God might lay it to their charge, but St. Paul endeavours to prevent it by his earnest prayers; Let it not be laid to their charge.

Notwithstanding this, God stood by him, (v. 17.) gave him extraordinary wisdom and courage, to enable him to speak so much the better himself.
When he had nobody to keep him in countenance,
God made his face to shine: that by me the preaching might be fully known, that is, "God brought me out from Egypt, that I might preach the gospel, which is my business," (v. 16.)

Yet, it may be supposed, that as he had been seen, that he might preach the gospel at that time, for Paul knew how to preach at the bar as well as in the pulpit: and that all the Gentiles might hear; the emperor himself and the great men, who would never have heard Paul preach, if he had not been brought before them. And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion, that is, of Nero, (as some think,) or some other judge. Some understand it only as an proverbial form of speech, to signify that he was in imminent danger. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. See how Paul improved his experiences; "He that hath delivered, doth deliver, and we trust he shall yet deliver; shall deliver me from every evil work, from doing any ill myself, and having any ill done to me by others. And shall preserve me to his heavenly kingdom." And for that, He gives glory to God, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

(1.) If the Lord stands by us, he will strengthen us, in a time of difficulty and danger, and his precence will more than supply every one's absence.

(2.) When the Lord preserves his servants from great and imminent danger, it is for eminent work and service. Paul was preserved, that by him the preaching might be fully known, &c. (3.) Former Advantages. Should encourage future honours.
There is a heavenly kingdom, to which the Lord will preserve his faithful, witnessing or suffering servants. Lasty, We ought to give God the glory of all past, present, and future deliveries; To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

He sends salutations to Aquila, and Prisilla, and the household of Onesiphorus, v. 19. He mentions his leaving Trophimus sick at Miletum, (v. 20.) by which it appears that though the apostles healed all manner of diseases miraculously, for the confirmation of their doctrine, yet they did not exert that power upon their own friends, lest it should have looked like a collusion.

He hastens Timothy to come to him before winter,
(v. 21.) because he longed to see him, and because in the winter the journey or voyage would be more dangerous.

He sends commendations to him from Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia, and all the brethren.
The children of the apostles at this time mention one Pudens and his wife Claudia, and says, that Claudia was a Briton; whence some have gathered, that it was this Pudens, and that Claudia here was his wife, and that they were eminent Christians at Rome.

He concludes with a prayer, that the Lord Jesus would be with his spirit. We need no more to make us happy than to have the Lord Jesus Christ with our spirits; for in him all spiritual blessings are summed up. And it is the best prayer we can put up for our friends, that the Lord Jesus Christ may be with their spirits, to sanctify and save them, and to last to receive them to himself; as Stephen the proto-martyr prayed, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit, Acts 7. 59. "Lord Jesus, receive that spirit which thou hast been with while it was united to the body, do not now leave it in its separate state."
Grace be with you. Amen. This was our apostle's token in every epistle; so he wrote; The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. 2 Thess.
3. 17, 18. And if grace be with us here to convert and change us, to make us holy, to keep us humble, and to enable us to persevere to the end, glory will crown us hereafter, for the Lord is a Sun, and a Shield, the Lord will give grace and glory; and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. O Lord of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee, Ps. 84. 11, 12.

Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God our Saviour, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

AN EXPOSITION, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS
OF THE EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO TITUS. completed by Mr. J. Smith.

THIS Epistle of Paul to Titus is much of the same nature with those to Timothy; both were converts of Paul, and his companions in labours and sufferings; both were in the office of evangelists, whose work was to water the churches planted by the apostles, and to set in order the things that were wanting in them: they were vice-apostles, as it were, working the work of the Lord, as they did, and mostly under their direction, though not despotic and arbitrary, but with the concurrend exercing of their own prudence and judgment, 1 Cor. 16. 10, 12. We read much of this Titus, his titles, character, and active usefulness, in many places: he was a Greek, Gal. 2. 3. St. Paul called him his son, (Tit. 1. 4.) his brother, (2 Cor. 2. 13.) his partner and fellow-helper, (2 Cor. 8. 23.) one that walked in the same Spirit, and in the same steps with himself. He went up with the apostles to the church at Jerusalem, (Gal. 2. 1.) was much conversant at Corinth, for which church he had an earnest care, 2 Cor. 8. 16. Paul's second epistle to them, and probably his first also, was sent by his hand, 2 Cor. 8. 16—18, 23. —2. 4.—12. 18. He was with the apostle at Rome, and thence went into Dalmatia, (2 Tim. 4. 10.) after which no more occurs of him in the scriptures. So that by them he appears not to have been a fixed bishop; if such he were, and in those times, the church of Corinth, where he most attended, had the best title to him. In Crete (now called Candia, formerly Hecatombolia, from the hundred cities that were in it) a large island at the mouth of the Ægean Sea, he wrote the gospel had got some footing; and here were Paul and Titus in one of their travels, cultivating this plantation; but the apostle of the Gentiles, having on him the care of all the churches, could not himself tarry long at this place; he therefore left Titus some time there, to carry on the work which had been begun; whereas, probably meeting with more difficulty than ordinary, Paul wrote this epistle to him; and yet perhaps not so much for his own sake, as for the people's, that the endeavours of Titus, strengthened with apostolic advice and authority, might be more significant and effectual among them. He was to see all the cities furnished with good pastors; to reject and keep out the unmeet and unworthy; to teach sound doctrine, and instruct all sorts in their duties; to set forth the free grace of God in man's salvation by Christ; and withal to shew the necessity of maintaining good works by those who have believed in God, and hope for eternal life from him.

TITUS, I.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The preface or introduction to the epistle, shewing from and to whom it was written, with the apostle's salutation and prayer for Titus, wishing all blessings to him, v. 1—4. II. Entrance into the matter, by signifying the end of Titus's being left at Crete, v. 5—III. And how the same should be pursued in reference both to good and bad ministers, from v. 6, to the end.

1. Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness; 2. In hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began; 3. But hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is communicated unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour; 4. To Ti-
A servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ. Here he is described by his relation and office; a servant of God, not in the general sense only, as a minister and a Christian, but on the express intimation, serving God in the gospel of his Son, Rom. 1. 9. This is a high honour; it is the glory of angels that they are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be the heirs of salvation, Heb. 1. 14. Paul is described more especially as a chief minister, an apostle of Jesus Christ; one who had seen the Lord, and was immediately called and commissioned by him, and had his doctrine from him. Observe, There is a marvel in Christ's choice of ministers, to choose what was fit and necessary in man's degenerate and revolted state: therefore the apostles of Jesus Christ were the servants of God, according to the faith of God's elect. Their doctrine agreed with the faith of all the elect from the beginning of the world, and was for propagating and promoting of the same. Observe, There are elect of God, (1 Pet. 1. 2.) and in these the Holy Spirit works precious divine faith, proper to those who are chosen to eternal life; (2 Thess. 2. 13, 14.) God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth: whereof he called you by our gospel. Faith is the first principle of sanctification. And the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness. The gospel is truth; the great, sure, and saving truth, (Col. 1. 5.) the word of the truth of the gospel, is eternal, and not on false reasoning, or probable opinions, but on the infallible word, the truth itself, which is after godliness, of a godly nature and tendency, pure, and purifying the heart of the believer. By this mark judge of doctrines and of spirits, whether they be of God or not; what is impure, and prejudicial to true piety and practical religion, cannot be of divine original; all gospel-truth is after godliness, teaching and nourishing renewal in the word of God, and the obedience to him; it is truth not only to be known, but acknowledged; it must be held forth in word and practice, Phil. 2. 15. 16. With the heart man believes to righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, Rom. 10. 10. 10. Such as retain the truth in unrighteousness, neither know nor believe as they ought. To bring to this knowledge and faith, and to the acknowledging and profession of the truth which is after godliness, is the great end of the gospel-ministry, even of the highest degree and order in it; their teachings should have this chief aim, to beget faith and confirm in it. In (or for) hope of eternal life, v. 2. This is the further intent of the gospel, to beget hope as well as faith; to take off the mind and heart from the world, and to raise them to heaven and the things above. The faith and godliness of Christians have an eternal life, and give hope and well-grounded expectation of it; for God, that cannot lie, hath promised it. It is the honour of God that he cannot lie or deceive; and this is the comfort of believers, whose treasure is laid up in his faithful promises. But, How is he said to promise before the world began? Answer, By promise some understand his decree, he purposed it in his eternal counsels, which was, as it were, an assurance of future things; for God, as we say some, saith to Pharaoh, I will send no sickness before ages, or many ages ago, referring to the promise darkly delivered, Gen. 3. 15. Here is the stability and antiquity of the promise of eternal life to the saints; God, who cannot lie, hath promised before the world began, many ages since. How excellent then is the gospel, which was the matter of divine prom- ises. 'Amen, amen I say unto you, blessed are your eyes, for they see, &c. No wonder if the contempt of it be punished severely, since he has not only promised it of old; but (v. 3.) hath in due time manifested his word through preaching, that is, made that his promise so darkly delivered of old, in due time, (the proper season before appointed,) more plain by preaching; that which some believe after the common faith, has been thus honoured. Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, by the word preached. Which is committed unto me. The ministry is a trust; none taketh this honour, but he who is thereto appointed; and whoever is appointed and called, must preach the word; (1 Cor. 9. 16.) Who is unto me if I preach not the gospel. Unpreaching ministers are none of the apostles' successors. According to the commandment of God our Saviour; preaching is a work appointed by God as a Saviour. See here of Christ's deity, for by him was the gospel committed to Paul when he was converted, (Acts 9. 15, 17. and ch. 22. 10, 14. 15.) and again when Christ appeared to him, v. 17—21. He therefore is this Saviour, not but that the whole Trinity concur therein; the Father saves by the Son, through the Spirit, and all concur in sending ministers. Let us rest upon this, and believe in men's calling, wherein God's; he furnishes, inclines, authorises, and gives opportunity for the work. II. Here is the person written to, described. 1. By his name, Titus, a Gentile Greek, yet called both to the faith and ministry. Observe, The grace of God is free and powerful. What worthiness or preparation was there in one of heathen stock, and education? 2. He is described by his spiritual relation unto the apostle; Mine own (or my genuine) son, not by my natural generation, but by supernatural regeneration. I have begotten you through the gospel, said he to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 4. 15. Ministers are spiritual fathers to those whom they are the means of converting, and will tenderly affect and care for them, and must be answerably regarded by them. "A mine own son, after the common faith; that faith which is common to all the regenerate, and which thou hast in truth, and expresseth to the life." This might be said, to distinguish Titus from hypocrites and false teachers, and to recommend him to the regard of the Cretians, as being among them a lively image of the apostle himself, in faith, and life, and heavenly doctrine. To this Titus, deservedly so clear to the apostle, is addressed. III. The salutation and prayer, wishing all blessings to him; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. Here are, 1. The blessings wished; Grace, mercy, and peace. Grace, the free favour of God, and acceptance with him. Mercy, the fruits of that favour, in pardon of sins, and freedom from all miseries by it, both here and hereafter. And peace, the positive effect, and fruit, of mercy. Peace with God through Christ, who is our Peace, and with the creatures and ourselves; outward and inward peace, comprehending all good whatsoever, the peace of Christ, as the peace of God, or time and eternity. Observe, Grace is the fountain of all blessings. Mercy, and peace, and all good, spring out of this. Get into God's favour, and all must be well; for,

2. These are the persons from whom blessings are wished. From God the Father, the Fountain of all good. Every blessing and comfort comes to us from God as a Father; he is the Father of all by creation, but of the Gentiles by adoption and regeneration. And the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour, as the Way and means of procurement and conveyance. All is from the Father by the Son, who is Lord by nature, Heir of all things, and our Lord, Redeemer, and Head, ordering and ruling his members. All are put under him; we hold of him, as in capite, and owe subjection and obedience to him who is also Jesus and Christ, the anointed Saviour, especially our Saviour, who believe in him, delivering us from annihilation, and bringing us to heaven and happiness.

Thus far is the preface to the epistle; then follows, The entrance into the matter, by signifying the end of Titus's being left in Crete.

5. For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee:

Here is the end expressed,

I. More generally; For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting. This was the business of evangelists, (in which office Titus was,) to water where the apostles had planted; (1 Cor. 3. 6.) furthering and finishing what they had begun; so much import, to order after another. Titus was to go on in settling what the apostle himself had not time for, in his short stay there.

1. Observe the apostle's great diligence in the gospel; when he had set things on foot in one place, he hastened away to another. He was debtor to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, and laboured to spread the gospel as far as he could, and among them all; 2. Observe, too, his faithfulness and prudence. He neglected not the places that he went from; but left some to cultivate the young plantation, and carry on what was begun.

3. Observe his humility; he disdained not to be helped in his work, and that by such as were not of so high a rank in the ministry, nor of so great gifts and furniture, as himself; so that the gospel might be furthered and the good of all promoted, he willingly submitted to it; a fit example for exciting zeal and industry, and engaging to faithfulness and care of the flock, and, present or absent, living and dying, for ministers, as much as they in them, to provide for the spiritual edification and comfort of their people. We may here also, 4. Observe, that Titus, though inferior to an apostle, yet was above the ordinary fixed pastors or bishops, who were to tend particular churches as their peculiar stated charge; but Titus was in a higher sphere, to ordain such ordinary pastors where wanting, and settle things in their first state and form, and then to pass to other places for like service as there might be need. Titus was not only a minister of the catholic church, (as all others also are,) but a catholic minister. Others had power habitual, and in acta primo, to minister any where, upon call and oppor-
of God, over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers. 1. Observe, A church without a fixed and standing ministry in it, is imperfect and wanting. 2. Observe, Where a fit number of believers is, presbyters or elders must be set; their continuance in church is as necessary as their first appointment, for perfecting the saints, and edifying the body of Christ, till all come to a perfect man in Christ, till they, the whole church, be as the chosen be called and united to Christ in one body, and brought to their full stature and strength, and that measure of grace that is proper and designed for them, Eph. 4. 12, 13. Work this is, that must and will be doing to the world's end, to which therefore the necessary and appointed means for it must last. What praise is due to God for such an institution! What thankfulness from those that enjoy the benefits of it! What piety and prayer for such as want it! Pray the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest. Faith comes by hearing, and is preserved, maintained, and made fruitful, through it also. Ignorance and corruption, decays of good and increase of all evil, come by want of a teaching and quickening ministry. On such accounts therefore was Titus left in Crete, to set in order the things that were wanting, and to ordain elders in every city; that this was to do, not ad libitum, or according to his own will or fancy, but according to apostolical direction. Which is, III. The rule of his proceeding; As I had appointed thee, probably when he was going from him, and in the presence and hearing of others; which now he may refer to, not so much for Titus's own sake as for the people's, that they might the more readily yield obedience to Titus, knowing and observing that he was warranted and supported by apostolical injunction and authority. As under the law all things were to be made according to the pattern shewn to Moses in the mount; so under the gospel all must be ordered and managed according to the direction of Christ, and of his chief ministers who were infallibly guided by him. Human traditions and inventions may not be brought into the church of God. Prudent disposals for carrying out the will of Christ's appointments, according to the general rules of the word, such may, yea must be; but none may alter anything in the substance of the faith or worship, or order and discipline, of the churches. If an evangelist might not do any thing but by appointment, much less may others. The church is the house of God, and to him it belongs to appoint the officers and orders of it, as he pleases; 'tis for others to the qualifications and character of the elders that he would ordain; "Ordain elders in every city, as I appointed thee, such as I then described, and shall now again more particularly point out to thee," which he does from the sixth verse to the ninth inclusive. The apostle next gives Titus directions about ordination, shewing whom he should ordain, and whom not. Of those whom he should ordain; he points out their qualifications and virtues; such as respect their life and manners, and such as relate to their doctrine: the former in the sixth, seventh, and eighth verses, and the latter in the ninth.

6. If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly. 7. For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God: not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; 8. But a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; 9. Hold-but to those elders or bishops was committed the full charge of feeding, ruling, and watching over, their flock; they wanted not any powers necessary for carrying on religion and the ministry of it among them, and deriving it down to succeeding ages. Now, being such bishops and overseers of the flock, who were to be examples to them, and God's stewards to take care of the affairs of his house, to provide for and dispense to them things needful, here is great reason that their character should be clear and good, that they should be blameless. How could it be, but that religion must suffer, their work be hindered, and souls prejudiced and endangered, whom they were set to save? These are the qualifications, relative, with the ground of them.

(2.) The more absolute ones are expressed:

[1.] Negatively, shewing what an elder or bishop must not be; not self-willed. The prohibition is of large extent, excluding self-opinion, or overweening conceit of parts and abilities, and abounding in one's own sense; self-love, and self-seeking, making self the centre of all; also self-confidence and trust, and self-pleasing, little regarding or setting by others; not proud, stubborn, froward, inflexible, set on one's own will and way; or churlish, as Nahal: such is the sense expositors have affixed to the term. A great honour it is to a minister not to be thus affected, to be ready to ask and to take advice, to be ready to go through with the ministration of the word and will of others, becoming all things to all men, that they may gain some. Not soon angry, not hasty, not of a hasty angry temper, soon and easily provoked and inflamed. How unit, are they to go and concern a church, who cannot govern themselves, or their own turbulent and unruly passions! The minister must be meek and gentle, and patient towards all men. Not given to wine: there is no greater reproach which a Christian bishop can get than to be one who loves it, and gives himself undue liberty this way, who continues at the wine or strong drink till it inflames him. Seasonable and moderate use of this, as of the other good creatures of God, is not unlawful; Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities, said Paul to Timothy, 1 Tim. 5. 23. But excess therein is shameful in all, especially in a minister. Wine takes away the heart, turns the mind, makes it more apt to the thing that excites the passions of the apostle, (Eph. 5. 18.) Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit. Here is no exceeding, but in the former too easily there may take heed thereof of going too near the brink. No striker, in any quarrelsome or contentious manner, not injuriously or out of revenge, with cruelty or unnecessary roughness. Not given to filthy lucre; not greedy of it, (Acts 20. 31.) whereby is not meant refusing a just return for their labours, in order to their necessary support and comfort; but not making gain their first or chief end; entering into the ministry or managing of it with base worldly views. Nothing is more unbecoming a minister, who is to direct his own and others' eyes to another world, than to be too intent upon this. It is called filthy lucre, from its defiling the soul that inordinately affects or greedily looks after it, as if it were any otherwise desirable than for the good and lawful uses of it. Thus of the negative part of the bishop's character. But,

[2.] Positively he must be, (v. 8.) A lover of hospitality, as an evidence that he is not given to filthy lucre, but is willing to use what he has to the best purposes, not laying up for himself, so as to hinder charitable laying out for the good of others; receiving and entertaining strangers, (as the word imports,) a great and necessary office of love, especially in those times of affliction and distress, when Christians were made to fly and wander for safety from persecution and enemies, or in travelling to and fro where there were not such public houses for reception as in our days; nor, it may be, has many poor saints sufficiency of their own for such uncles to receive and entertain them was good and pleasing to God. And such a spirit and practice, according to ability and occasion, is very becoming such as should be examples of good works. A lover of good men, or of good things; ministers should be exemplary in both; this will evidence their open piety, and likeness to God and their Master Jesus Christ; Do good to all, but especially to them of the household of faith, those who are the excellent of the earth, in whom should be all our delight. Sober, or prudent, as the word signifies; a needful grace in a minister both for his ministerial and personal carriage and management. He should be a wise steward, and one who is not rash, or foolish, or heady; but who can govern well his passions and affections. Just, in things belonging to civil life, and moral righteousness and equity in dealings, giving to all their due. Holy, in what concerns religion; one who reverences and worships God, and is of a spiritual and heavenly conversation. Temperate; it comes from a word that signifies strength, and denotes one who has power over his appetite and affections, or, in things lawful, can, for good ends, restrain and hold them in. Nothing is more becoming a minister than such things as these; sobriety, temperance, justice, and righteousness, being in the manner in respect of himself, just and righteous towards all men, and holy toward God. And thus of the qualifications respecting the minister's life and manners; relative and absolute, negative and positive; what he must not, and what he must, be and do. Now,

II. As to doctrine:

1. Here is his duty; holding fast the faithful word, as he has been taught; keeping close to the doctrine of God, and his word, according to the instructions he has received; holding it fast in his own belief and profession, and in teaching others, (1.) Observe, The word of God, revealed in the scripture, is a true and infallible word; the word of him that is the Amen, the true and faithful Witness, and whose Spirit guided the penmen of it. Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2.) Observe, Ministers must hold fast, and hold forth, the faithful word in the teaching and life. I have kept the faith, was Paul's comfort, (2 Tim. 4. 7.) and not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; there was his faithfulness, Acts 20. 27.

2. Here is the end; that he be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainers, to persuade and draw others to the true faith, and convince the contrary-minded. How should he do this, if he himself were uncertain or unstable, not holding fast that faithful word and sound doctrine; which should be the matter of this teaching, and the means and ground of convincing those that oppose the truth? We see here summarily the great work of the ministry—to exhort those who are willing to know and do their duty; and so convince them that contradic; both which are to be done by sound doctrine, in a rational instructive way, by capturing-arguments and testimonies, which are the infallible words of truth, what all may and should rest and be satisfied in and determined by. And thus of the qualifications of the elders whom Titus was to ordain.

The apostle's directory shews whom he should reject or avoid—men of another character, the mention of whom is brought in as a reason of the care he had recommended about the qualifications of the bishops, why they should be such, and only such, as he had described. The reasons he takes both from bad teachers and hearers among them, from v. 10, to the end.
II. Here is the matter of his testimony,

"The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies; to a proverb, they were infamous for falsehood and lying. 2 Tim. 3:1-3."

1. Those false teachers are described. They were unrighteous, headstrong and ambitious of power, refractory and untractable, (as some render it,) and such as would not bear or submit themselves to the discipline and necessary order in the church, impatient of good government and of sound doctrine. 1 Tim. 6:20; Titus 3:10. And vain talkers and deceivers; conceit them- selves to be wise, but really foolish, and thence great talkers, falling into errors and mistakes, and fond of the sound, and madness and the sordid to draw others into the same. Many such there were, especially they of the circumcision, converts, as they pretend at least, from the Jews, who yet were for mingling Judaism and Christianity together, and so making a corrupt medley. These were the false teachers. And, 2. There is the apostle's direction how to deal with them; (v. 11.) Their mouths must be stopped; nor are the Greek method, nor are those the gospel-methods; but by contumacy and conviction, shewing them their error, not giving place to them even for an hour. In case of obstinacy indeed, breaking the peace of the church, and corrupting other churches, censures are to have place; the last means for recovering the guilty, and preventing the hurt of many. Observe, Faithful min- isters must oppose seducers in good time, that, their folly being made manifest, they may proceed no further.

3. The reasons are given for this. (1.) From the pernicious effects of their errors; They subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not; the necessity of circumcision, and of keeping the law of Moses; so subverting the gospel and soul of men; not some few only, but whole families. It was unjustly charged on the apostles, that they turned the world upside down; but justly on these false teachers, that they drew many from the true faith to their ruin: the mouths of such should be stopped; especially considering, (2.) Their base end in what they do; for filthy lucre's sake, serving a worldly interest under pretence of religion; love of money is the root of all evil. Most fit it is, that such should be resisted, confuted, and put to shame, by sound doctrine, and reasons from the scriptures. Thus of the grounds respecting the bad teachers. In reference to their people or hearers, who are described from ancient testimony given of them. 12. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. 13. This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith; 14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth. 1. Here is the witness; (v. 12.) One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith; 14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth.
reclaim and reform the erroneous and the guilty. 2. Observe, Soundness in the faith is most desirable and necessary. This is the soul's health and vigour, pleasing to God, comfortable to the Christian, and what makes ready to be cheerful and constant in duty. 3. Observe, A special means to soundness in the faith, is, to turn away the ear from fables and the fancies of men; (1 Tim. 1. 4.) Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, that minister questions rather than edifying, which is in faith. So ch. 4. 7. Refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather to godliness. Fancies and devices of men in the worship of God are contrary to truth and piety. Jewish ceremonies and rites, that were at first divine appointments, the substance being come, and their season and use over, are now but unwarranted commands of men, which not only stand not with, but turn from, the truth, the pure gospel-truth and spiritual worship, set up by God instead of that bodily service under the law. 4. Observe, A fearful judgment it is, to be turned away from the truth; to leave Christ for Moses, the spiritual worship of the gospel for the carnal ordinances of the law, or the true divine institutions and precepts for human inventions and appointments. Who hath bewitchéd you, (said Paul to the Galatians, ch. 3. 1.) that ye should not receive the grace of God in the Spirit, are ye made perfect by the flesh? Thus having shewn the end of sharply reproving the corrupt and vicious Cretians, that they might be sound in the faith, and not heed Jewish fables and commands of men, VI. He gives the reasons of this, from the liberty we have by the gospel from legal observances, and the evil and mischief of a Jewish spirit under the Christian dispensation, in the two last verses: 15. Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. 16. They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobrate.

To good Christians that are sound in the faith and thereby purified, all things are pure; meats and drinks, and such things as were forbidden under the law, which observances some still maintain, in these there is now no such distinction, all are pure, lawful and free in their use; but to them that are defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure; things lawful and good they abuse and turn to sin; they suck poison out of that from which others draw sweetness; because their mind and conscience, those leading faculties, are defiled, a taint is derived to all they do. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. And ch. 21. 4. The lifting up of the wicked is sin, not in itself, but as done by him; the carnality of the mind and heart mars all the labour of the hand. They that are not these judaizers, (as ye call them,) men who profess religion, and speak well of God and Christ, and righteousness of life, and should they be so severely taxed? Answer, (v. 16.) They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work reprobrate. There are many who in word and tongue profess to know God, and yet in their lives and conversations deny and reject him; their practice is a contradiction to their profession. They come unto thee as the people cometh, and sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them; with their mouths they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness, Ezek. 33. 31. Being abominable, and disobedient, and to every good work reprobrate. The apostle, instructing Titus to rebuke sharply, does himself rebuke sharply; he gives them very hard words; yet doubtless no harder than their case warranted, and their need required. Being abominable—βασανιζειν, deserving that God and good men should turn away their eyes from them as nauseous and offensive. And disobedient—σκιλουμαι, unpersuadable and unbelieving. They might do divers things; but it was not the obedience of faith, not what was commanded or short of the command. To every good work reprobrate, without skill or judgment to do any thing aightly. See the miserable condition of hypocrites, such as have a form of godliness, but without the power; yet let us not be so ready to fix this charge on others, as careful that it agree not to ourselves, that there be not in us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God; but that we be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God, Phil. 1. 10, 11.

CHAP. II.

The apostle here directs Titus about the faithful discharge of his own office, generally, (v. 1.) and particularly, as to several sorts of persons; (v. 2. 10.) and gives the grounds of these directions, ch. 3. 1—7, (v. 11. 14.) with a summary direction in the close, v. 15.

1. But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:

Here is the third thing in the matter of the epistle. In the chapter foregoing, the apostle had directed Titus about matters of government, and to set in order the things that were wanting in the church. Now here he exhorts him, 1. Generally, to a faithful discharge of his own office. His ordaining others to preach, would not excuse himself from preaching, nor might he take care of ministers and elders only, but he must instruct private Christians also in their duty. The adveserative particle (but) here, points back to the corrupt teachers, who ventured fables, things vain and unprofitable; in opposition to them, says he, "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine, that is agreeable to the word, which is pure and uncorrupt, healthful and nourishing to eternal life." (1.) Observe, The true doctrines of the gospel are sound doctrines, formally and effectually; they are in themselves good and holy, and make the believers so; they make fit for, and vigorous in, the service of God. (2.) Observe, Ministers must be careful to teach only such truths. If the common talk of Christians must be uncorruptable to the use of edifying, such as may minister grace to the hearers, (Eph. 4. 29.) much more must ministers' preaching be such. Thus the apostle exhorts Titus generally. and then,

2. Specially and particularly, he instructs him to apply this sound doctrine to several sorts of persons, from v. 2—10. Ministers must not stay in generals, but must divide of other things, and particular, what belongs to his age or place or condition of life; they must be particular as well as practical in their preaching; they must teach men their duty, and must teach all and each his duty. Here is an excellent Christian directory, accommodated to the old and to the young; to men and women; to the preacher himself and unto servants.

2. That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience:

By aged men some understand elders by office, in ward conduct at all times. Observe, though ex press scripture do not occur, or be not brought, for every word, or look, or fashion in particular; yet general rules there are, according to which all must be ordered; (1 Cor. 10. 31.) Whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God. And Phil. 4. 8. Whatever things are true, whatever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatever things are pure, whatever things are lovely, whatever things are good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, as these things. And here, whatsoever things be beseeming or unbecoming holiness, form a measure and rule of carriage to be looked to. Not false accusers—ου δισβάλοντες, no calum nators or sowers of discord, slandering and backbiting their neighbours, a great and too common fault; not only loving to speak, but to speak ill of people, and to separate very friends. A slanderer is he, whose tongue is set on fire of hell: so much, and so directly, do these do the Devil's work, that for the Devil's name is given to such. This is a sin contrary to the great duties of love, justice, and equity between one another; it springs often from malice and hatred, or envy, and such like evil causes, to be renounced as a very evil effect. Not given to much wise; the word denotes some who abuse themselves as to be under the power and mastery of it.
This is unseemly and evil in any, but especially in this sex and age, and too much to be found among the Greeks of that time and place. How immoral and shameful, corrupting and destroying purity both of body and mind! Of what evil example and tendency, unfitness for the next thing, which is a positive duty of aged matrons, to be teachers of good things! Not publicly, nor privately, that is forbidden, (1 Cor. 14. 34.) I permit not a woman to speak in the church, but otherwise, teach they may and should, that is, by example and good life. Whence observe, Those whose actions and behaviour be come holiness, are thereby teachers of good things, and beside that, they may and should also teach by doctrinal instruction at home, and in a private way.
Prov. 31. 1. The words of King Lemuel, the prophesy-his mother taught him. Such a woman is praised; (v. 26.) She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness. Teachers of good things are opposed to teachers of things corrupt, or to what is trifling and vain, of no good use or tendency; old wives' fables, or superstitious sayings and observances; in opposition to these, their business is, and they may be called on to it, to be teachers of good things.

There are lessons for young women also, which the aged women must teach, and instruct and advise them in, the duties of religion according to their years.

4. That they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, 5. To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

For teaching such things aged women have often better access than the men, even than ministers indeed; and which therefore they must improve in instructing the young women, especially the young wives; for he speaks of their duty to their husbands and children. These young women the more aged must teach.

1. To bear a good personal character; To be sober and discreet, contrary to the vanity and rashness which younger years are subject to: discreet in their judgments, and sober in their affections and behaviour. Discreet and chaste stand well together;
many expose themselves to fatal temptations by that which at first might be but indirection, Prov. 2. 11. Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee from the evil way. Chaste, and keepers at home, are well joined too. Dinah, when she went to see the daughters of the land, lost her chastity. Thereafter she became a woman; it is best that their chastity is their fetters. Not but there are occasions, and will be, of going abroad; but a gadding temper for errant and company sake, to the neglect of domestic affairs, or from uncasiness at being in her place, that is the opposite evil intended, which is commonly accompanied with, or draws after it, other evils. 1 Tim. 3. 13, 14. They learn to be idle, wandering from the faith, and going about for mischief, and to speak evil of them which they ought not. Their business is to guide the house, and should give no occasion to the enemy to speak reproachfully. Good, generally, in opposition to all vice; and specially, in her place, kind, helpful and charitable; as Dorcas, full of good works and almsdeeds. Also it may have, as some think, a more particular sense, one of a meek and yet cheerful spirit, it can be harsh, petty, low, and fretting and galling any; not of a troublesome or jarring disposition, uneasy in herself and to those about her; but of a good nature and pleasing conversation, and likewise helpful by her advice and pains: thus building her house, and doing her husband good, and not evil, all her days. Thus in their personal character sober, discreet, chaste, keepers at home, and good. 1 Tim. 3. 12.

2. In their relative capacities, to love their husbands, and to be obedient to them: and where there is true love, this will be no difficult command. God, in nature, and by his will, hath made this subordination; (1 Tim. 2. 12.) I suffer not a woman to usurp authority over the man: and, (v. 13.) the reason is added; For Adam was first formed, then Eve. Adam was not deceived, but the woman, being deceived, was in the transgression. She fell first, and was the means of seducing the husband. She was given to be a helper, but proved a most grievous hinderer, even the instrument of his fall and ruin, on which, the bond of subjection was confirmed, and tied faster on her; (Gen. 3. 16.) Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee, with less easiness, it may be, than before. It is therefore doubly enjoined: first in innocency, when was settled a subordination of nature, then in transgression, when being first she was then seduced; then the woman being not out of the man; and then upon the fall, the woman being first in the transgression, and seducing the man; here now began to be a subjection not so easy and comfortable, being part of the penalty in her case; yet through Christ is this nevertheless a sanctified state; (Eph. 5. 22.) Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord; as owning Christ's authority in their person, those in subjection; for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the Church; and he is the saviour of the body. God would have a resemblance of Christ's authority over the church, held forth in the husband's over the wife. Christ is the Head of the Church, to protect and save it, and to supply it with all good, and secure or deliver it from evil; and so is the husband's in the person, to prevent her from injuries, and to provide comfortably for her according to his ability. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be unto their own husbands, as is fit in the Lord, (Col. 3. 18.) as stands with the law of Christ, and is for his and the Father's glory. It is not then an absolute, or unlimited, or a slaveish subjection that is required; but a loving subordination, to prevent disorder or confusion, and to further all the ends of the relation. Thus in reference to the husbands, wives must be instructed in their duties of love and subjection to them. And to love their children, not with a natural affection only, but a spiritual; a love springing from a holy sanctified heart, and regulated by the word; not a fond foolish love, indulging them in evil, neglecting due reproof and correction where necessary; but it must be a regular Christian love, shewing itself in their pious education, forming their life and manners aright, taking care of their souls as well as of their bodies, of their spiritual welfare as well as of their temporal; of the former chiefly and in the first place. The reason is added—that the word of God may not be blasphemed. Failures in such relative duties would be greatly to the reproach of Christianity, and to those who are called the new nation? would the infidels be ready to say. The word of God and gospel of Christ are pure, excellent, and glorious, in themselves; and their excellency should be expressed and shewn in the lives and conduct of their professors, especially in relative duties; failures here bring disgrace. Rom. 2. 24. The name of God is blasphemed among the heathens through you. "Judge what a God he is," would they be able to say, "by these his followers; and what his word, and doctrine, and religion, are by these his followers." Thus would Christ be wounded in the house of his friends. Thus of the duties of the younger women.

6. Young men likewise exhort to sober-minded:

They are apt to be eager and hot, thoughtless and precipitate; therefore must be earnestly called upon and exhorted to be considerate, not rash; advisable and submissive, not wilful and headstrong; humble and mild, not haughty and proud; for there are more young people ruined by pride than by any other sin. The young should be grave and solid in their deportment and manners, joining the seriousness of age with the liveliness and vigour of youth. This will make even those younger years to pass to good purpose, and yield matter of comfortable reflection when the latter days come; it will be preventive of much sin and sorrow, and lay the ground for doing and enjoying much good. Such shall not mourn at the last, but have peace and comfort in death, and after it a glorious crown of life. Now with these instructions to Titus, respecting what he should teach others—the aged men and women, and the younger of both sexes, (Titus himself probably at that time a young man also,) the apostle insinuates some directions to himself. He could not expect so successfully to teach others, if he did not conduct himself well both in his conversation and preaching.

7. In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. 8. Sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he who is of the contrary part, may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

1. Here is direction for his conversation; In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works. What was this? He should pull down with one hand what he built with the other. Observe, Preachers of good works must be patterns of them also; good doctrine and good life must go together. Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? A defect here is a great blemish and a great hindrance. In all things; some read above all things, or above all men. Instructing and bringing others in the particulars of their duty, is necessary, and, above all things, example, especially that of the teacher himself, is needful; hereby both light and influence are more likely to go together. "Let them see a lively image of those virtues and graces in thy life, which must be in their's. Example may both teach and impress the things taught; when they see the purity and vanity, soberity and all good life in thee, they may be more easily won and brought thereto themselves; they may become pious and holy, sober and righteous, as thou art." Ministers must be examples to the flock, and the people followers of them, as they are of Christ. And here is direction,

2. For his teaching and doctrine, as well as for his life; in doctrine, shewing uncorruption, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned. The manner of his teaching is purely to advance the honour of God, the interest of Christ and his kingdom, and the welfare and happiness of souls; that this office was not entered into, or used, with secular views, not from ambition or covetousness, but a pure aim at the spiritual ends of its institution. In their preaching therefore, the display of wit or parts, or of human learning or oratory, is not to be affected; but sound speech must be used, which cannot be condemned; scripture-language, as far as well may be, in expressing scripture truths. This is sound speech, that cannot be condemned. We have more than once these duties of a minister set together; (1 Tim. 4. 16.) Take heed to thyself, and to thy doctrine; and 12. of the same chapter, "Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of believers in word, in doctrine, in charity, in spirit, in virtue; grave, serious, and to the use of edifying; and in thy preaching, that it be the pure word of God, or what is agreeable to it, and founded on it; thus be an example in word; and in conversation; the life corresponding with the doctrine. In doing this, thou shalt both have thyself and them that hear thee." In 2 Tim. 3. 10. Thou hast fully known my doctrine and manner of life, (says the same apostle,) how agreeable these have been. And so must it be with others; their teaching must be agreeable to the word, and their life with the teaching. This is the true and good minister; (1 Thess. 2. 9, 10.) Labouring night and day, we preached to you the gospel of God; and ye are our witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly, and unblamably, we behaved ourselves among you. This must be looked to, as the basis of all other things.

3. The reason both for the strictness of the minister's life, and the gravity and soundness of his preaching; That he who is of the contrary part, may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you. Adversaries would be seeking occasion to reflect, and would do so, could they find any thing amiss in doctrine or life; but if both were right and good, such ministers might set calumny itself at defiance; they would have no evil thing to say justly, and so must be ashamed of their opposition. Observe, Faithful ministers will have enemies watching for their halting; such as will endeavour to find or pick holes in their teaching or behaviour; the more need therefore for them to look to themselves, that no just occasion be found against them. Opposition and calumny perhaps may not be escaped, men of corrupt minds will resist the truth, and often reproach the preacher of it, and the listeners of it. If they see that with well-doing they fail to silence the ignorance of foolish men; that when they speak evil of them as evil-doers, they may be ashamed, who falsely accuse their good conversation in Christ. This is the direction to Titus himself, and so of the duties of free persons, male and female, old and young. Then follow the directions respecting servants.

9. Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again; 10. Not pursuing, but shewing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

Servants must not think that their mean and low state puts them beneath God's notice, or the obligations of his laws; that, because they are servants of men, they are thereby discharged from serving of God. No; servants must know and do their duty to their earthly masters, but with an eye to their heavenly one: and Titus must not only instruct and warn earthly masters of their duties, but servants also of theirs, both in his public preaching and private admonition. Servants must attend the ordinary duties of God for them; it is as well for the masters themselves. In this direction to Titus there are the duties themselves, to which he must exhort servants, and a weighty consideration, whereby he was to enforce them.

1. The duties themselves are these:

1. To be obedient to their own masters. This is the prime duty, that by which they are characterized, Rom. 6. 16. His servants ye are to whom ye obey. There must be inward subjection, and dutiful respect and reverence in the mind and thoughts. "If I be a master, where is my fear, the dutiful affection you shew to me, together with the suitable outward significations and expressions of it, in doing what I command you." This must be in servants; their will must be subject to their master's will, and their time and labour at their master's disposal and command. (1 Cor. 7. 12.) Servants must hold your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward. The duty results from the will of God, and the relation in which, by his providence, he has put such; not from the quality of the person. If he be a Master, the duties of a servant are to be paid to him as such. Servants therefore are to be exhorted to be obedient to their own masters. And,

2. To please them well in all things, in all lawful things, and such as belong to them to command; or at least as are not contrary to the will of their great and superior Lord. We are not to understand it either of obeying or pleasing them absolutely, without any limitation; but always with a reserve of God's right, which may in no case be intrenched upon. If this command and the earthly master's come in competition, we are instructed to obey God rather than men; (Rom. 13. 1.) Servants must resolve on the grounds in this, that there is an inconsistency, else they are not held to be excused. And not only must the will of God be the measure of the servant's obedience, but the reason of it also; all must be done with a respect to him, in virtue of his authority, and for pleasing him primarily and chiefly; (Col. 3: 18—24.) Servants, obey in all things your masters acting according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God. And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. In serving the earthly master according to Christ's will, He is served; and such shall be rewarded by him accordingly.

But how are servants to please their masters in all things, and to please the Lord as well? To serve them well, Men-pleasers, in the faulty sense, are such as eye men alone, or chiefly, in what they do, leaving God out, or subordinating him to man; when the will of man shall carry it, though against God's will, or man's pleasure is more regarded than his; when that can content them, that the earthly master is pleased, though God be displeased; or more care, or more satisfaction, is taken in man's being pleased than in God's; this is sinful man-pleasing, which all must take heed of; (Eph. 6. 5—7.) "Servants, be obedient dient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, with singleness of your heart, as unto Christ. Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, who look at nothing but the favour or displeasure of men, or nothing so much as that; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service as to the Lord, and not to men; not to them chiefly, but to him; and not with eyeservice, as men-would, who will reward, any good done, whether by bond or free. Observe therefore, Christian liberty stands well with civil servitude and subjection. Persons may serve men, and yet be the servants of Christ; these are not contrary, but subordinate; so far as serving men is according to Christ's will, and for his sake. Christ came not to destroy or prejudice civil order and differences; Art thou called, being a servant? Care not for it, 1 Cor. 7. 21. Let not that trouble thee, as if we were a condition unworthy of a Christian, or wherein the person so called is less pleasing unto God; for he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman, not free from that service, but free in it; free spiritually, though not in a civil sense. Likewise also he that is called, being free, to Christ's servant; he is bound to him, though he be not under civil servitude; for he is his servant, to whom he pleased, even one in Christ. Servants therefore should not regret or be troubled at their condition, but be faithful and cheerful in the station wherein God hath set them; striving to please their masters in all things. Hard it may be under some churlish Nabals, but it must be endeavoured all that they are able.

(3.) Not answering again; not contradicting them, or disputing it with them; not giving them any disrespectful or provoking language. Job complained of his servants, that he called them, and they gave him no answer; that was faulty another way: Non respondere pro convito est.—Such silence is contempt. but here it is respect, rather to take a check or reproof with humble silence, not making any confident or bold replies. When conscious of a fault, to palliate or stand in justification of it, doubles it. Yet this not answering again excludes not turning away wrath with a soft answer, when season and circumstances admit. Good and wise masters will be ready to hear and do right; but answering unseasonably, or in an unseemly manner, or, where the case admits not excuse, to be pert or confident, shews a want of the humility and meekness, which such relation requires.

(4.) Not forsoaking, but shewing all good fidelity. This is another great essential of good servants, to be honest; never converting that to their own use, which is their masters', nor wasting the goods they are intrusted with: that is forsoaking. They must be just and true, and do for them as they would or should for themselves, Prov. 28. 24. Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is not transgression, the same is the companion of a destroyer; he will not escape, his thought and light thought of taking beyond what is right, though it be from a parent or master, is likely to harden conscience to go further; it is both wicked in itself, and it tends to more. Be it so that the master is hard and strait, scarcely making sufficient provision for servants; yet they must not be their own carvers, or go about by theft to right themselves; they must honestly and properly carry the concern to God for righting and providing for them. I speak not of cases of extremity, for preserving life, the necessaries for which the servant has a right to. Not forsoaking, but shewing all good fidelity; he must not only not steal or waste, but must improve his master's goods, and promote his prosperity and thriving, to his utmost. He that increased not his master's talent, is accused of unfaithfulness, though he had not embezzled or lost it. Faithfulness in a servant lies in the ready, punctual, and thorough execution of his master's orders; keeping his secrets and counsels, dispatching his affairs, and managing with frugality, and to as much just advantage for his master as he is able; looking well to his trusts, and preventing, as far as he can, all spoil, or loss, or damage. This is a way to bring a blessing upon himself, as well as to prevent greater disaster or ruin; (Luke 16. 12.) If we have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own? Thus of the duties themselves, to which servants are to be exhorted. Then,

2. Here is the consideration with which Titus was to enforce them; That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; that they may recommend the gospel and Christ's holy religion to the good opinion of them that are without, by their meek, humble, obedient, and faithful conduct in all things.

Even servants, though they may think that such as they, in so low and inferior a condition, can do little to bring repute to Christianity, or adorn the doctrine of Christ, and set forth the excellencies of his truth and ways; yet, if they are careful to do their duty, it will redound to the glory of God and the credit of religion. The unbelieving masters would think the worst of those who are under their authority, so that it is said, everywhere spoken against, when they found that their servants, who were Christians, were better than their other servants; more obedient and submissive, more just and faithful and diligent in their places. True religion is an honour to the professors of it; and they should see that they do not any dishonour to it, but adorn it rather in all that they are able. Our light must shine among men, so that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father who is in heaven. And thus of the apostle's directions to Titus, about the discharge of his office, in reference to several sorts of persons. Next follow,

3. The grounds or considerations upon which all the directions are urged, taken from the nature and design of the gospel, and the end of Christ's death.

11. For the grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, 12. Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; 13. Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; 14. Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.
and offers and ensures it to believers; salvation from sin and wrath, from death and hell; whence it is called the word of life; it brings to faith, and so to life; the life of holiness now, and of happiness hereafter. The law is the ministration of death, but the gospel the ministration of life and peace. This therefore must be received as salvation, (its rules minded, its precepts obeyed,) and the end of it may be obtained, the salvation of the soul; and more invalu- able will the neglecters of this grace of God bringing salvation, now be, since, (2.) It hath appeared, or shone out, more clearly and illustriously than ever before. The old dispensation was comparatively dark and shadowy; this is a clear and shining light; and as it is now more bright, so more diffused and extensive also. For, the glory of God appeared at Mount Sinai not to the Gentiles only, as the glory of God appeared at mount Sinai to that particular people, and out of the view of all others; but gospel-grace is open to all, and all are invited to come and partake of the benefit of it; Gentiles as well as Jews. The publication of it is free and general; Disciple all nations: Preach the gospel to every creature. The pale is broken down, there is no such inclosure now as formerly; (Rom. 16. 26.) and its seal is broken, that which was kept secret since the world began, now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. The doctrine of grace and salvation by the gospel is for all ranks and conditions of men; slaves and servants, as well as masters; therefore engaging and encouraging all to receive and believe it, and walk suitably to it, addressing it to all things. It teaches, (3.) This gospel-revelation is to teach, and not by way of information and instruction only, as a school-master does his scholars; but by way of precept and command, as a sovereign who gives laws unto his subjects. It directs what to shun, and what to follow; what to avoid, and what to do. The gospel is not for speculation only or chiefly, but for practice and right ordering of life. It teaches, [1.] To abandon sin; Denying ungodliness, and worldly lusts; to renounce and have no more to do with these, as we have had; Put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt; the whole body of sins distributed here into ungodliness and worldly lusts. "Put away ungodliness and irreligion, all unbelief, neglect or disesteem of the Divine Being, not loving, or fearing, or trusting in him, or obscuring him, as we should, neglecting his ordinances, slighting his worship, profaning his name or day. Thus deny ungodliness, hate and put it away; and worldly lusts; all corrupt and vicious desires and affections that prevail in worldly men, and carry out to worldly things: the lusts of the flesh also, and of the eye, and the pride of life; all sensu- ality and fitchiness, covetous desires and ambition, seeking and valuing more the praise of men than of God; put away all these." An earthly sensual conversation suits not a heavenly man. These things, having Christ's, have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. They have done it by covenant-engage- ment and promise, and have initially and prevailing- ly done it in act; they are going on in the work, cleansing themselves more and more from all fitchiness of flesh and spirit. Thus the gospel first teaches that which is evil, to abandon sin; and then, [2.] To make conquest of that which is good: The old commandment which was in the shadow, and the new commandment which is in the light and in the face of God, makes us to endure sorrow, to obey the commandments, and to serve the Lord. God's will and law are not in a hidden way, as before, but clearly and openly expressed, and we have to know and cleave unto that, and to walk in the bright light of God's grace and love. And more invalu- able will the neglecters of this grace of God bringing salvation, now be, since, (3.) It teaches in all to look for the glory of another world, to which a sober, righteous, and godly life in this is preparatory; Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. Hope, by a metonymy, is put for the thing hoped for, that is, heaven and the felicities thereof, called emphatically that which is for us, because it is for us. The apostle bids us look and wait for; and a blessed hope, because, when attained, we shall be completely happy for ever. And the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. This denotes both the time of the accomplishing our hope, and the sure- ness and greatness of it: it will be at the second appearing of Christ, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels, Luke 9. 26. His own glory which he had before the world was; and his Father's, being the express Image of his person, and as God-man, his delegated Ruler and Judge; and of the holy angels, as his ministers and glorious attendants. His first coming was in meekness, to satisfy justice, and purchase happiness; his second will be in majesty to instate his people in it. Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation, Heb. 9. 28. The great God and our Saviour (or even our Saviour) Jesus Christ; for they are not two subjects, but one only, as appears by the single article, τὸν κυρίον θεόν καὶ Σωτήρν, not τὸν κυρίον θεόν καὶ τὸν Σωτήρα. And so if it be rendered, 1 Cor. 15. 24. he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; τῷ θεῷ καὶ Πατρί. Christ then is the great God, not figuratively, as magistrates and others are sometimes called gods, or as appearing and acting in the name of God, but properly and absolutely the true God, 1 John 3. 20. The mighty God, Isa. 9. 6. Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. In his second coming, Christ will come in glory, and bring them to glory with him. First, Observe, There is a common and blessed hope for all true Christians in the other world. If in this life only they had hope in Christ, they were of all men the most miserable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. By hope is meant the thing hoped for, that is, Christ himself, who is called our Hope, (1 Tim. 1. 1.) and blessedness in and through him, even riches of glory, Eph. 1. 18. Hence finally termed here that blessed hope. Secondly, Observe, The design of the gospel is, to stir up all to a good life by this blessed hope; (1 Pet. 1. 13.) Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. To the same purport here, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for the blessed hope; not as mercenaries, but as dutiful and thankful Christians. What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening to the coming of the day of God? 2 Pet. 3. 11, 12. Looking and hastening, expecting and diligently preparing for it. Thirdly, Observe, At, and in, the glorious appearing of Christ will the blessed hope of Christians be attained; for their felicity will be that, To be where he is, and to be with him, John 17. 24. The glory of the great God and our Saviour will then break out as the sun. Though in the exercise of his judicial power he will appear as the Son of Man, yet will he be mightily declared to be the Son of God too. The Divinity, that on earth was much veiled, will shine out then as the sun in its strength. Hence the work and design of the gospel are, to raise the hopes of the world, and wait for this second appearing of Christ. We are begotten by faith, 1 John 3. 7. We are begotten, and we are also promised the Holy Spirit, (Acts 2. 33.) turned to serve the living God, and wait for his Son from heaven, (1 Thess. 1. 10.) Christians are marked by this, expecting their Master's coming, Matt. 24. 45. Loving his appearance, 2 Tim. 4. 8. Let us then look to this hope; let our loins be girt, and our lights burning, and ourselves like those who wait for our Lord; the day or hour we know not, but the hour when he cometh, or when he will not tarry, Heb. 10. 37. Forthwith, Observe, The continuous joy of Christians are, that their Saviour is the great God, and will gloriously manifest himself at his second coming. Power and love, majesty and mercy, will then appear together in the highest histre, to the terror and confusion of the wicked, but to the everlasting triumph and rejoicing of the godly. Were we not thus the great God, and not a mere creature, he could not be their Saviour, or their Hope. Thus of the considerations to enforce the directions for all sorts to their respective duties from the nature and design of the gospel, which is to teach and persuade to those things. And herewith is connected another ground.

2. From the end of Christ's death; (v. 14.) Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from the wrath of God, according to the riches of his grace, or of a peculiar pleasure, zeal of good works. To bring us to holiness and happiness was the end of Christ's death, as well as the scope of his doctrine. Here we have,

1. The Purchaser of salvation; Jesus Christ, that great God and our Saviour, who saves not simply as God, much less as Man alone; but as God-man, two natures in one person; Man, that he might be the Victim; God, that he might be the Saviour. Thus also he shall have to do with us, both as Man and as God, that he might support the manhood, and give worth and efficacy to his undertakings, and have due regard to the rights and honour of the Deity, as well as the good of his creatures, and bring about the latter to the glory of the former. Such a one became us, and this was,

2. The Price of our redemption; He gave himself for us. The Father gave him, but he gave himself too; and in the freeness and voluntariness as well as the greatness of the offering, lay the acceptableness and merit of it; (John 10. 17, 18.) Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. So John 17. 19. "For their sakes I sanctify myself, separate and devote myself to this work, to be both a Priest and a Saviour to God for the sins of men." The human nature was the offering, and the divine the altar, sanctifying the gift, and the whole the act of the Person. He gave himself a Ransom for all, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. He was the Priest and Sacrifice too. We are redeemed, not with silver and gold, but the precious blood of Christ, (1 Pet. 1. 18, 19.) called the blood of God, (Acts 20. 28.) of him who is God.

3. The persons for whom; For us, poor perish- ing sinners, gone off from God, and turned rebels against him. He gave himself for us, not only for our good, but in our stead. Messiah was cut off, not for himself, but for us. He suffered, the Just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. He was made Sin for us, an Offering and Sacrifice, in his own flesh; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. Wondrous condescension and grace! He loved us, and gave himself for us; what can we do less than love and give up ourselves to him? Especially considering,

4. The ends of his giving himself for us. [1.] That he might redeem us from all iniquity. This is fitted to the first lesson, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. Christ gave himself to redeem us from these, that we might live unspotted, and live in sin, is to trample under foot redeeming blood, to despise and reject one of the greatest benefits of it, and to act counter to its design. But how could the short sufferings of Christ redeem us from all iniquity? Answer, Through the infinite dignity of his person. He who was God, suffered, though not as God. The acts and properties of either nature are attributed to the person. God hath to do with his church with his own blood. Acts 20. 28. Could payment be made at once, no need of suffering for ever. A mere creature could not do this, from the finiteness of his nature; but God-man could. The great God and our Saviour gave himself for us; that accounts for it. By one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified, Heb. 9. 25, 26.—10. 14. He needed not to offer himself often, nor could he be holden of death, when he had once undergone it. Happy end and fruit of Christ's death, redemption from all iniquity! Christ died for this: and,

[12.] To shun to himself a peculiar people. This enforces the second lesson; To live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Christ died to purify, as well as to pardon; to obtain grace, to heal the nature, as well as to free from guilt and condemnation. He gave himself for his church, to cleanse it. Thus does he make to himself a peculiar people, by purifying them. Thus are they distinguished from the world, that lies in wickedness; that is, the people of God, and assimilated to him, bear his image, are holy as their heavenly Father is holy. Observe, Redemption from sin and sanctification of the nature go together, and both make a peculiar people unto God: freedom from guilt and condemnation, and from the power of lusts, and purification of soul by the Spirit. These are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, and so a peculiar people. And,

[3.] Zealous of good works. This peculiar people, as they are made so by grace purifying them, so must they be seen to be so, by doing good, and a zeal therein. Observe, The gospel is not a doctrine of licentiousness, but of holiness and good life. We are redeemed from our vain conversation, to serve God in holiness and righteously all the days of our life. Let us see then that we do good, and have zeal, and do good. Zeal must be guided by knowledge and spirited with love, directed to the glory of God, and always in some good thing. And thus of the motive to the duties directed, from the end of Christ's death. Then,

[4.] The apostle closes the chapter (as he began it) with a summary direction to Titus upon the whole.

15. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee.

Here is the matter and manner of ministers' teaching, and a special instruction to Titus in reference to himself.

1. The matter of ministers' teaching; These things, that is, the before-mentioned: not Jewish fables and traditions, but the truths and duties of the gospel, of avoiding sin, and living soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Observe, Ministers in their preaching must keep close to the word of God; (1 Pet. 4. 11.) If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God, and not the figments and inventions of his own brain.

2. The manner; by doctrine, and exhortation, and reproof with all authority, 2 Tim. 3. 16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness; to teach sound doctrine, to convince of sin, and refute error, to reform the life, and to carry forward in what is just and good, that the man of God, Christian or minister, may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works that are to be practised by himself, or to be taught others. Here is what will furnish for all parts of his duty, and the right discharge of them. "These things speak, or teach; shun not to declare the whole counsel of God." The great and necessary truths and duties of the gospel, especially, these speak and exhort, are spoken, press with much earnestness. Ministers must not be cold and lifeless in delivering heavenly doctrine and precepts, as if they were indifferent things or of little concern; but they must urge them with earnestness suitable to their nature and importance; they must call upon persons to mind and heed, and not be hearers only, deceiving themselves; but doers of the word, that they may be blest therein. And rebuke; convince and reprove such as contradict or gainsay, or neglect and receive not, the truth, as they should, or retain it, in unrighteousness; those who hear it not with such a believing and obedient mind and heart as they ought; but, instead of that, (it may be,) live in contrary practices, shewing themselves stubborn and disobedient, and to every good work reprobrate. Rebuke with all authority, as coming in the name of God, and armed with his threatenings and discipline, which whoever make light of, at their peril it will be. Ministers are reprovers in the gate.

2. Here is a special instruction to Titus in reference to himself; "Let no man despise thee; give no occasion to do so, nor suffer it without reproof, considering that he who despiseth, despiseth not man, but God." Or thus, "Speak and exhort these things; press them upon all, as they may respectively be concerned; with boldness and faithfulness reprove sin; and carefully look to thyself and thy own conduct, and then none will despise thee." The most effectual way for ministers to secure themselves from contempt, is, to keep close to the doctrine of Christ, and imitate his example; to preach and live well, and do their duty with prudence and courage; this will best preserve both their reputation and comfort.

Perhaps too an admonition might be here intended to the people; that Titus, though young, and but an usher in the ministerial estate, yet should not be con- tenned by them, but considered and respected as a faithful minister of Christ, and encouraged and supported in his work and office; (1 Thess. 5. 12, 13.) "Know them that labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. Mind their teaching, respect their persons, support them in their function, and, what in you lies, further their endeavours for the honour of God and the salvation of souls.

CHAP. III.

Of duties which concern Christians more in common, and the reasons of them, v. 1. to 8. What Titus in teaching should avoid, and how he should deal with a heretic, with some other directions; (v. 9. to 14.) and salutations in the close, v. 15.

1. P ut them in mind to be subject to principalties and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work.

2. To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men.

Here is the fourth thing in the matter of the epistle. The apostle had directed Titus in reference to the particular and special duties of several sorts of persons; now he bids him exhort to what concerned them more in common—to quietness and submission to rulers, and readiness to do good, and to equitable and gentle behaviour towards all men; things comely and ornamental of religion; he must therefore put them in mind of such things. Ministers are people's remembrancers of their duty. As they are remembrancers for the people to God in prayers, (Isa. 62. 6.) so are they from God to them in preaching; (2 Pet. 1. 12.) I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance. Forgetfulness of reminding and quickening them thereto. Here are the duties themselves, and the reasons of them.

1. The duties themselves, which they were to be reminded of.

1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalties and and patience, to obey magistrates. Magistracy is God's ordinance for the good of all, and therefore must be regarded and submitted to by all; not for wrath and by force only, but willingly and for conscience-sake. Principalities, and powers and magistrates, all civil rulers, whether supreme and chief, or subordinate, in the government under which they live, of whatever form it be; that they be subject to them and obey them, in things lawful and honest, and which it belongs to their office to require. The Christian religion was at first suppressed by its adversaries, as prejudicial to the rights of princes and civil powers, and tending to faction and sedition, and to rebellion against lawful authority; therefore to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, and stop the mouths of malicious enemies. Christians must be reminded to shew themselves examples rather of all due subjection and obedience to their lawful governors, than to resist. Natural desire of liberty must be guided and bounded by reason and scripture. Spiritual privileges do not make void or weaken, but confirm and strengthen, their obligations to civil duties: Remind them therefore to be subject to principalities and powers, and to obey magistrates. And,

2. To be ready to every good work. Some refer this to such good works as are required by magistrates, only to be done: but it rather seems, "Whatever tends to good order, and to promote and secure public tranquility and peace, be not backward, but ready, to promote such things." But this be included, if not first intended, yet is it not to be hereto restrained. It regards doing good in all kinds, and on every occasion that may offer, whether respecting God, ourselves, or our neighbours; what may bring credit to religion in the world. Whatever tends to good order, and to promote public tranquility and peace, is not only to be desired, but on every proper occasion, done, as opportunity offers. If there be any virtue, or if there be any praise, think on those things, (Phil. 4. 8.) to do and follow and further them. Mere harmlessness, or good words and good meanings only, are not enough without good works. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, and keep unspotted the body of the Lord. Not only take, but seek, occasions for doing good, keep fitness and readiness that way, put it not off to others, but embrace and lay hold on it thyself, delight and rejoice therein, put all in mind of this." And,

3. To speak evil of no man; and to be liberal to rebuke, or curse, or blaspheme none; or (as our translation more generally) to speak evil of none, unjustly and falsely or unnecessarily, without call, and when it cannot be done to the good to the person himself or any other. If no good can be spoken rather than speak evil unnecessarily, say nothing. We must never take pleasure in speaking ill of others, or make the worst of any thing, but the best that we can. We must not go up and down as tale-bearers, carrying ill-natured stories, to the prejudice of our neighbour's good name, and destruction of brotherly love. Misrepresentations or ill insinuations of bad intent, wrongly or falsely imputed, all things out of our reach or cognizance, these come within the reach of this prohibition. As this evil is too common, so is it of great malignity; (Jam. 1. 26.) If any man seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain: such loose uncharitable talk is displeasing to God, and hurtful among men; (Prov. 17. 9.) He that covereth a transgression, seeketh love; that is, he hideth by himself this tenderness and charity; or rather, he that reproveth a sin- sor; but he that repeateth a matter, that blazes and tells the faults of another abroad, separateth very friends; he raises dissensions, and alienates his friend from himself, and perhaps from others. This is among the sins to be put off; ( Eph. 4. 31.) for, if indulged, it unfiteth for Christian communion here, and the society of the blessed in heaven; (1 Cor. 6. 10) remind them therefore to avoid this. And,

4. To be no brawlers: μηδαμως μισοεις—no fighters either with hand or tongue, no quarrellers contentious persons, apt to give or return ill and provoking language. A holy contending there is for matters good and important, and in a manner suitable and becoming, not with wrath or injurious violence. Christians must follow the things that make for peace, and that perfect men, not a rebuking and bitter and hurtful way, but as becomes the servants of the God of peace and love; (Rom. 12. 19.) Dearl beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; this is the Christian's wisdom and duty. The glory of a man is to pass over a transgression; it is the duty of a reasonable, and therefore certainly of a Christian man, whose reason is improved and advanced by religion; such may not, will not, present fall foul on one who has offended him: like God, will be slow to anger, and ready to give. Contention and strife arise from men's lusts, and exorbitant unruly passions, which must be curb ed and moderated, not indulged; and Christians need to be reminded of these things, that they do not by a wrathful contentious spirit and behaviour displease: and dishonour God, and discredit religion, preventing fruits in the place where the iniquity and evil is, and that is slow to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city. Wherefore it follows,

5. But gentle: ἀρετικός, equitable and just, or candid and fair in constructions of things, not taking words or actions in the worst sense; and for peace sometimes yielding somewhat of strict right. And,

6. Shewing all meekness to all men. We must be of a mild disposition, and not only have peace in our hearts, but shew it in our speech and conduct. All meekness, meekness in all instances and occasions, not toward friends only, but to all men, though still with wisdom, as James admonishes, ch. 3. 13. Distinguish the person and the sin; pity the one and hate the other. Distinguish between sin and sin; look not on all alike, there are notes and beams. Distinguish also between sinner and sinner; of some he conceiveth that they are hardened in sin, and that they deliberate, and with fear, pulling them out of the fire, thus making a difference, Jude 22, 23. Mind these things; the wisdom that is from above, is pure and peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated. Meekness of spirit and demeanour renders religion amiable; it is a commanded imitation of Christ the grand Exemplar, and what brings its own reward with it, in the ease and comfort of the disposition itself and the blessings accompanying of it. Thus shall we be glad and rejoice, shall be taught and guided in their way, and satisfied with bread, and beautified with salvation. Thus of the duties themselves, which Titus was to put people in mind of: for which,

II. He adds the reasons:

3. For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

1. The reasons are derived from their own past condition. Consideration of men's natural condition is a great means and ground of equity and gentleness, and all meekness toward those who are yet in such a state. This has a tendency to abate pride, and is in the place where it should be, and reference to those who are yet unconverted; We ourselves also were so and so corrupt and sinful, therefore we should not be impatient and bitter, hard and severe, toward those who are but as ourselves once were. Should we then have been willing to be contended, and proudly and rigorously dealt with? No, but treated with gentleness and humanity; and therefore we should now so treat those who are unconverted, according to that rule of equity: Quod ibi non vis fieri, alteri ne feceris—What you would not have done to you, that do not you to another. The past natural condition is set forth in divers particulars. We ourselves also were sometimes,

(1.) Foolish; without true spiritual understanding and knowledge, ignorant of heavenly things. Observe, They should be most disposed to bear with others’ follies, who may remember many of their own; they should be meek and gentle, and patient toward them, who once needed and doubtless then expected to be so treated. We ourselves also were sometimes foolish. And,

(2.) Disobedient; heady and unpersuadable, resisting the word, and rebellious even against the natural laws of God, and those which human society requires. Well are these set together, foolish and disobedient. For what folly like this, to disobey God and his laws, natural or revealed? This is contrary to right reason, and men’s true and greatest interest, and what so foolish as to violate and go counter to these?

(3.) Deceived, or wandering; that is, out of the ways of truth and holiness. Man in this his degenerate state is of a straying nature, thence compared to a lost sheep; this must be sought and brought back, and guided in the right way, Ps. 119. 176. He is weak, and ready to be imposed upon by the wiles and subtleties of Satan, and of men lying in wait to seduce and mislead.

(4.) Serving divers lusts and pleasures; as vassals and slaves under them. [1.] Observe, Men deceived are easily entangled and insnared; they would not otherwise serve divers lusts and pleasures as they do, were they not blinded and beguiled into it. See here too what a different notion the word gives of a sensual and fleshly life from what the world generally has of such and people think they enjoy their pleasures; the word calls it servitude and vassalage; they are very drudges and bond-slaves under them; so far are they from freedom and felicity in them, that they are captivated by them, and serve them as task-masters and tyrants. [2.] Observe, It is the misery of the servants of sin, that they have many masters; one lust hurrying them one way, and another another; pride commands one thing, courtesies another, and often a contrary. What vile slaves are sinners, while they conceal themselves free! The lusts that tempt them, promise them liberty, but in yielding they become the servants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage.

(5.) Living in malice; one of those lusts that bear rule in them. Malice desires hurt to another, and rejoices in it.

(6.) And envy; which grudges and repines at another’s good, frets at his prosperity and success in any thing; both roots of bitterness, whence many evils spring; evil thoughts and speeches, tongues set on fire of hell, detracting from, and impairing, the just and due praises of others. Their words are swords, wherewith they slay the good name and honour of their neighbour: the sin of Satan, and of Cain, and that enmity which has been brought together, and wherefore slew he him, but of this envy and malice? Because his own works were evil, and his brother’s righteous. These were some of the sins in which we lived in our natural state. And,

(8.) And hating one another. Observe, Those that are sinful, living and allowing themselves in sin, are hateful to God and all good men. Their temper and ways are so, though not simply their persons. It is the misery of sinners, that they hate one another, as it is the duty and happiness of saints to love one another. What contentions and quarrels flow from men’s corruptions; such as were in the nature of those who by conversion are now good, but in their unconverted state made them ready to run like furious wild beasts one upon another. The consideration of its having been thus with us, should moderate our spirits, and dispose us to be more equal and gentle, meek and tender-hearted, toward those who are such. This is the argument from their own past condition here described. And he reasons,

2. From their present state. ‘We are delivered out of that our miserable condition by no merit or strength of our own; but only by the mercy and free grace of God, and merit of Christ, and operation of his Spirit: therefore we have no ground, in respect of ourselves, to condemn those who are yet unconverted, but rather to pity them, and cherish hope concerning them, that they, though in themselves as unworthy and unmeet as we were, yet may obtain mercy, as we have: and so upon this occasion the apostle again opens the causes of our salvation, v. 4—7.

4. But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, 5. Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; 6. Which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour: 7. That, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

I. We have here the prime Author of our salvation; God the Father, therefore termed here God our Saviour. All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, 2 Cor. 5. 18. All things belonging to the new creation, and recovery of fallen man to life and happiness, of which he is there speaking, all these things are of God the Father, as Contriver and Beginner of this work. There is an order in acting, as in subsisting; the Father begins, the Son manages, and the Holy Spirit works and perfects all. God, the Father, is a Saviour by Christ, through the Spirit. John 3. 16. God so loved the world, as to give his only begotten Son, that whoever believes in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. He is the Father of Christ, and through him the Father of mercies; all spiritual blessings are by Christ from him, Eph. 1. 3. We joy in God through Jesus Christ, Rom. 5. 11. And with one mind, and with one mouth, glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

II. The spring and rise of it; the divine philanthropy, or kindness and love of God to man. By grace we are saved from first to last; this is the ground and motive; God’s pity and mercy to man in misery were the first wheel, or rather the Spirit in the wheels, that sets and keeps them all in motion. God is not, cannot, be moved by any thing out of himself; the occasion is in man, his misery and wretchedness. But sin bringing that misery, wrath must be used rather than compassion; but God knowing how to adjust all, that in his meekness and perfections, would pity and save rather than destroy. He delights in mercy: where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. We read of riches of goodness and mercy, Rom. 2. 4. Eph. 2. 7. Let us acknowledge this, and give him the glory of it, not turning it to wantonness, but to thankfulness and obedience.

III. Here is the means, or instrumental cause; the shining out of this love and grace of God in the gesbaptism, called therefore the washing of regeneration. The work itself is inward and spiritual, but this is outwardly signified and sealed in this ordinance. Water is of a cleansing and purifying nature, does away the filth of the flesh, and so was apt to signify the doing away of the guilt and defilement of sin by the blood and Spirit of Christ; though that aptness alone, without Christ's institution, had not been sufficient. This it is that makes it of this signification on God's part, a seal of righteousness, and of faith, as circumcision was, in the place of which it succeeds; and on our's, an engagement to be the Lord's. Thus baptism saves figuratively, and sacramentally, where it is rightly used; (Acts 22. 16.) Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord. So Eph. 5. 26. That he might sanctify and cleanse us by the washing of water by the word. Slight not this outward sign and seal, where it may be had according to Christ's appointment; yet rest not in the outward washing only, but look to the answer of a good conscience, without which the external washing will avail nothing. The covenant sealed in baptism binds to duties, as well as exhibits and conveys benefits and privileges; if the former be not minded, in vain are the latter expected. Siv not what God has joined; in both the outer and inner part is baptism effectual, the outer being the sign and seal of the inner, the debtor to the whole law, (Gal. 5. 3.) so is he that is baptized, to the gospel, to observe all the commands and ordinances thereof, as Christ appointed; (Matt. 28. 19.) Disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. This is the outward sign and seal of salvation, baptism, called therefore the washing of regeneration.

VII. Here is the principal efficient; the Spirit of God, it is the renewing of the Holy Ghost; not excluding the Father and the Son, who in all works without themselves are concurring; nor the use of means, the word and sacraments, by which the Spirit works; through his operation it is that they have their saving effect. In the economy of our salvation, the applying and effecting part is especially distributed to the several persons of the Godhead, whereby the Spirit of God is born in the Spirit; to be quickened and sanctified by the Spirit; to be led and guided, strengthened and helped, by the Spirit. Through him we mortify sin, perform duty, walk in God's ways; all the acts and operations of the divine life in us, the works and fruits of righteousness without us, all are through this blessed and holy Spirit, who is therefore called the Spirit of life, and of grace and holiness; all grace, and life, and holiness, are from him. Earnestly therefore is he to be sought, and greatly to be heeded by us, that we quench not his holy motions, nor resist and oppose him in his workings. Res delicatula est Spiritus—The Spirit is a tender thing; as we act toward him, so may we expect he will to us; if we slight and resist and oppose his workings, he will slacker them; if we continue to vex him, he will retire. Grieve not therefore the Holy Spirit of God, whereof ye have received the seal, the印记 of assurance, the token of regeneration, Eph. 4. 30. The Spirit seals by his renewing and sanctifying, his witnessing and assuring work; he distinguishes and marks out for salvation, fits for it, is his work: we could not turn to God by any strength of our own, any more than we can be justified by any righteousness of our own.

VIII. Here is the manner of God's communicating this spirit in the gifts and graces of it; not with a scanty and niggardly hand, but most freely and plentifully; which he shed on us abundantly. More of the Spirit in its gifts and graces is poured out under the gospel than was under the law; whence it is eminently styled the ministration of the Spirit,
Cor. 3. 8. A measure of the Spirit the church has had in all ages, but more in gospel-times, since the coming of Christ, than before, who gives us grace through faith by Jesus Christ; that is, a more plentiful effusion of grace, fulfilling the promises and prophecies of old; (Isa. 44. 3.) I will pour water upon you, that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thee offering: this greatest and best of blessings, an effusion of grace and of the sanctifying gifts of the Spirit. Joel 2. 28. I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and God hath shed forth this Spirit upon them, which declare the things which shall be hereafter; (Acts 2. 17, 18, 33.) speaking of Christ risen and ascended, having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth (says Peter) this, that ye now see and hear: and ch. 10. 44, 45. The Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the word, Gentiles as well as Jews. Those indeed were, in a great measure, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, but not without the sanctifying graces of it also accompanying many if not all of them. There was then great abundance of common gifts of illumination, outward calling and profession, and general faith, and of more special gifts of sanctification too, such as faith, and hope, and love, and other graces of the Spirit. Let us get a share in these. What will it signify if much be shed forth, and we remain dry? Our condemnation will but be aggravated the more, if under such a dispensation of grace we remain void of all, filled with the Spirit, says the apostle; it is duty as well as privilege, because of the means which God in the gospel is ready to bless and make effectual; this is the manner of God’s communicating grace and all spiritual blessings under the gospel, plentifully; he is not straitened towards us, but we toward him and in ourselves.

IX. Here is the securing Cause of all, namely, Christ, through Jesus Christ our Saviour. He it is who purchased the Spirit and his saving gifts and graces; all come through him, and through him as a Saviour, whose undertaking and work it is to bring to grace and glory; he is our Righteousness and Peace, and our Heid, from whom we have all spiritual life and influences. He is made of God to us Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption. Let us praise God for him above all; let us accept of him, and hold on by faith; Rom. 3, 20, &c.) By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified; but through the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: (Rom. 3. 24.) we are said to be justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ; whom God hath set forth to be a Propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins; that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. God, in justifying a sinner in the way of the gospel, is gracious to him, and yet just to himself and his law; forgiveness being through a perfect righteousness, and satisfaction made to justice, without the interposition of any merit for sin, and not merited by the sinner himself. So it is here; Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy, he saved us: that, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. It is by grace, as the spring and rise, (as was said,) though through the redemption that is in Christ, as making the way, God’s law and justice being thereby satisfied; and by faith accepting that redemption. Acts 13. 39. By him (by Christ) all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. Whence the apostle desires to be found in him, not having his own righteousness, which was of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. Let us not trust therefore in our own righteousness or merit of good works, but in Christ’s righteousness alone, received by faith for justification and acceptance with God. Inherent righteousness we must have, and the fruits of it in works of obedience; not however as our justifying righteousness before God; but as fruits of our justification, and evidences of our interest in Christ, and qualification for life and happiness, and the very beginning and part of it; but the procuring of all that is by Christ, that, being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs. Our justification is by the grace of God, and our justification by that grace is necessary in order to our being made heirs of eternal life; without such justification there can be no adoption and sonship, and so no right of inheritance. John 1. 12. Whoever received him, (namely, Christ,) to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Eternal life is set before us in the promise, the Spirit works faith in us, and hope of that life, and so we are made heirs of it, and have a kind of possession of it even now; faith and hope bring it near, and fill with joy in the well-grounded expectation of it. The meanest believer is a great heir; though he have not his portion in hand, he has good hope through grace, and may bear up under all difficulties; there is a better state in view, he is waiting for an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for him. Now we may comfort ourselves with these words! And now all this gives good reason why we should shew all meekness to all men, because we have experienced so much benefit by the kindness and love of God to us, and many hope that they, in God’s time, may be partakers of the like grace as we are. And thus of the reasons of equal and gentle, meek and tender behaviour towards others; from their own bad condition in time past, and the present more happy state into which they are brought, without any merit or deservings of their own, and whereunto by the same grace others may be brought also.

The apostle, having opened the duties of Christians in common, with the reasons respecting them selves, adds another from their goodness and useful ness to men.

8. This is a faithful saying; and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they who have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

1. Observe, When he has opened the grace of God toward us, he immediately presses the necessity of good works; for we must not expect the benefit of God’s mercy, unless we make conscience of our duty; This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly: this is a true Christian doctrine of highest importance, and which ministers must most earnestly and constantly press and inculcate: that they who have believed in God, do not think that a bare naked faith will save them; but it must be an operative, welling faith, bringing forth the fruit of righteousness; they must make it their care to maintain good works, not to do them occasionally only, and when opportunities come in their way, but to seek opportunities for doing them. These things are good and profitable unto men: these good works, say some, or the teaching of these things, rather than idle questions, as follow. These things are good in themselves, and the teaching of them useful to mankind, making persons a common good in their places.

2. Observe, Ministers, in teaching, must see that they deliver what is sound and good in itself, and profitable to them that hear; all must be to the use of edifying both of persons and societies.

Here is the fifth and last thing in the matter of the epistle: what Titus should avoid in teaching; how he should deal with a heretic; with some other directions.

9. But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law: for they are unprofitable and vain.

1. That the apostle's meaning here might be more clear and full, and especially fitted to the time and state of things there, and the many judaizers among them, he tells Titus what, in teaching, he should shun. There are needful questions to be discussed and cleared, such as make for improvement in useful knowledge; but idle and foolish inquiries, tending neither to God's glory nor the edification of men, these must be shunned. Some may have a shew of wisdom, but are vain, as many among the Jewish doctors, as well as of latter schoolmen, who abound with questions of no moment or use to faith or practice; avoid these. And genealogies of the gods, say some, that the heathen poets made such noise about; or rather those that the Jews were so curious in: some lawful and useful inquiries might be made into these things, to see the fulfilling of the scriptures in some cases, and especially in the descent of Christ the Messiah; but all that served to pomp only, and to feed vanity, in boasting of a long pedigree, and much more such as the Jewish teachers were ready to busy themselves in, and trouble their hearers with, even since Christ was come, and that division of families and tribes had been taken away, as if they would build again that polity which now is abolished; these Titus must withstand as foolish and vain. And contentions, and strivings about the law. There were those who were for the Mosaic rites and ceremonies, and would have them continued in the church; though by the gospel and coming of Christ those were superseded and done away. Titus must give no countenance to these, but avoid and oppose them; for they are unprofitable and vain: this is to be referred to all those foolish questions and genealogies, as well as those strivings about the law. They are so far from instructing and building up in godliness, that they are hindrances of it rather: the Christian religion and good works, which are to be the fruit of faith, hereby be weakened and prejudiced; the peace of the church hereby be disturbed, and the progress of the gospel staid. Observe, Ministers must not only teach things good and useful, but shun and oppose the contrary, what would corrupt the faith, and hinder godliness and good works; nor should people have itching ears, but love and embrace sound doctrine which tends most to the use of edifying.

2. But because, after all, there will be heresies and heretics in the church, the apostle next directs Titus what to do in such a case, and how to deal with such.

10. A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition reject; 11. Knowing that he that is such, is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

He who forsakes the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and broaches false doctrines, and propagates them to the corrupting of the faith in weighty and momentous points, and breaks the peace of the church about them, let such a one be rejected, after due means used to reclaim him. Admonish him once and again, that if possible, he may be brought back, and thou mayest gain thy brother; but if that will not reduce him, that others be not hurt, cast him out of the communion, and warn all Christians to avoid him. Knowing that he that is such, is subverted, turned off from the foundation, and sinneth grievously, being self-condemned. Those who will not be reclaimed by admonitions, but are obstinate in their sins and errors, are subverted and self-condemned: they effect that punishment upon themselves that the governors of the church should inflict upon them: they throw themselves out of the church, and throw off its communion, and so are self-condemned. 1. Observe, How great an evil proper heresy is, not lightly therefore to be charged upon any, though greatly to be taken heed of by all. Such a one is subverted or perverted; a metaphor from a building so ruined, that it is hard, if possible, to repair and raise it again. Propriety heretics have seldom been recovered to the true faith: not so much defect of judgment, as perverseness of the will, being in the case, through pride, or ambition, or self-willfulness, or covetousness, or such like corruption, which therefore must be taken heed of; "Be humble, love the truth, and practise it, and damning heresy will be escaped." 2. Observe, That prudence and patience must be used about these, that err most grievously. They are not easily and soon to be given up and cast off, but competent time and means must be tried for their recovery. 3. Observe, The church's means even with heretics are persuasive and rational. They must be admonished, instructed, and warned; so much Heretics imports. 4. Observe, Upon continued obstinacy and irrecoverableness, the church has power, and is obliged, to preserve its own purity, and as much a corrupt member, which discipline may by God's blessing become effectual to reform the offender, or leave him the more inexcusable in his condemnation. The apostle subjoins some further directions.

12. When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter. 13. Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

Here are two personal things enjoined:

1. That Titus should hold himself ready to come to Paul at Nicopolis, (a city of Thrace, as is reckoned, on the borders of Macedonia,) so soon as Artemas or Tychicus should be sent to Crete, to supply his place, and take care of the churches there when he should leave them. This I tell you, Paul adds, and that ye have them in your young age and weak state be not without one or other of chief-sufficiency, to guide and help them. Titus, it seems, was not their ordinary fixed bishop or pastor, but an evangelist, otherwise Paul would not have called him so much from his charge. Of Artemas we read little, but Tychicus is mentioned in many occasions with respect. Paul calls him a beloved brother, and faithful minister, and fellow-servant in the Lord: one fit therefore for the service intimated. When Paul says to Titus, Be diligent to come to me to Nicopolis, for I have determined there to winter, it is plain that the epistle was not written from Nicopolis, as the postscript would have it, for then he would have said, I determined here, not there, to winter.

2. The other personal charge to Titus, is, that he would bring two of his friends on their journey diligently, and see them furnished, so that nothing should be wanting to them. This was to be done, not as a piece of common civility only, but of Christian piety, out of respect both to them and the work they were sent about, which probably was to preach the gospel, or to be some serviceable to the churches. Zenas is styled the lawyer, whether in reference to the Roman or the Mosaic law, as having some time been his profession, is doubtful. Apollos was an eminent and faithful minister. Accompanying such part of their way, and accommodating them for their work and journeys, was a pious and needful service. And to further this, and lay in for it, what the apostle had before bid Titus teach, (v. 8.) he repeats here.

14. And let our's also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.

Let Christians, those who have believed in God, learn to maintain good works, especially such as these, supporting ministers in their work of preaching and spreading the gospel, hereby becoming fellow-workers to the truth, 1st epistle of John, v. 6—8. That they be not unfruitful. Christianity is not a fruitless profession; the professors of it must be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God. It is not enough that they be harmless, but they must be profitable, doing good, as well as eschewing evil. "Let our's set up and maintain some honest labour and employment, to provide for themselves and their families, that they be not unprofitable burthens on the earth," so some understand it. Let them not think that Christianity gives them a writ of ease; no, it lays an obligation upon them to seek some honest work and calling, and therein to abide with God. This is of good report, will credit religion, and be good to mankind; they will not be unprofitable members of the body, or burdensome and chargeable to others, but enabled to be helpful to those in want. To maintain good works for necessary uses; not living like drones on the labours of others, but themselves fruitful to the common benefit.

The apostle concludes with salutations and benedictions.

15. All that are with me, salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Though perhaps not personally known, (some of them at least,) yet all by Paul testify their love and good wishes to Titus, owning him thereby in his work, and heartening him to go on therein. Great comfort and encouragement it is to have the heart and prayers of other Christians with and for us. Greet them that love us in the faith, or for the faith, who are our loving fellow-Christians. Holiness, or the image of God in any, is the great endeavoring thing, what gives strength to all other bonds, and is itself the best. Grace be with you all. Amen. This is the closing benediction, not to Titus alone, but to all the faithful with him: which shews, that though the epistle bears the single name of Titus in the inscription, yet it was for the use of the churches there, and they were in the eye, and upon the heart, of the apostle, in the writing of it. "Grace be with you all, the love and favour of God, with the fruits and effects thereof, according to need; spiritual ones, especially, and the increase and feeling of them more and more in your souls." This is the apostle's wish and prayer, shewing his affection to them, his desire of their good, and a means of obtaining for them, and bringing down upon them, the thing requested. Observe, Grace is the chief thing to be wished and begged for, with respect to ourselves or others; it is, summarily, all good. Amen shuts up the prayer, expressing desire and hope, that so it may, and so it shall be.

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO PHILEMON.

Completed by Mr. J. Smith.

THIS epistle to Philemon is placed the last of those with the name of Paul to them, perhaps because the shortest, and of an argument peculiar and different from all the others; yet such as the Spirit of God, who indited it, saw would, in its kind, be very instructive and useful in the churches. The occasion of it was this—Philemon, one of note, and probably a minister in the church of Colosse, a city of Phrygia, Vol. vi. — A S had a servant named Onesimus, who, having purloined his goods, ran away from him, and in his rambles came to Rome, where Paul was then a prisoner for the gospel, and providentially coming under his preaching there, was, by the blessing of God, converted by him; after which he ministered awhile to the church in bonds, and might have been further useful to him; but understanding him to be another man's servant, he would not, without his consent, detain him, but sends him back with this letter commendatory, wherein he earnestly sues for his pardon and kind reception.

BEFORE we enter on the exposition, such general things as follow may be taken notice of from the epistle, and what relates to it; namely,

I. The goodness and mercy of God to a poor wandering sinner, bringing him by his gracious providence under the means, and making them effectual to his conversion. Thus came he to be sought of him that asked not for him, and to be found of him that sought him not, Isa. 65. 1.

II. The great and endearing affection between a true convert and him whom God used to be the instrument of his conversion. Paul regards this poor fugitive now as his son in the faith, and terms him his own bondman; and Onesimus readily serves Paul in prison, and would gladly have continued to do so, would duty have permitted; but, being another's servant, he must return and submit himself to his master, and be at his disposal.

III. The tender and good spirit of this blessed apostle Paul. With what earnestness does he concern himself for the poor slave! Being now, through his preaching, reconciled to God, he labours for reconciliation between him and his master. How pathetic a letter does he here write in his behalf! Scarcely any argument is forgotten, that could possibly be used in the case; and all pressed with such force, that, had it been the greatest favour to himself that he was asking, he could not have used more.

IV. The remarkable providence of God in preserving such a servant writing as this, that might be thought of little concern to the church, being not only a letter to a particular person, (as those to Timothy, and Titus, and Gaius, and the elect lady, likewise were,) but of a private personal matter, namely, the receiving of a poor fugitive servant into the favour and family of his injured master. What in this is there that concerns the common salvation? And yet over this has there been a special divine care, it being given (as the other scriptures were) by inspiration of God, and, in some sort, as they are, profitable for doctrine, for refutation, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness. God would have extant a proof and instance of his rich and free grace for the encouragement and comfort of the meanest and vilest of sinners, looking to him for mercy and forgiveness; and for instruction to ministers and others not to despise any, much less to judge them as to their final state, as if they were utter cast-aways; but rather to attempt their conversion, hoping they may be saved; likewise how to behave toward them. Joy must be on earth, as well as there is in heaven, over one sinner who repenteth; they must now be loved and helped and confirmed in good, and furthered in it; and in their outward concerns, their comfort and welfare must be considered and promoted as much as possible. And on their part, they must be humble and grateful, acknowledging God and his instruments, in what good they have received, ready to all suitable returns, making what reparation they can in case of injuries, and living a life of thankfulness and obedience. To such purposes may this epistle have been written and preserved. And perhaps,

V. There may be something further in all this; at least, by way of allusion, it is applicable to the mediation and intercession of Christ for poor sinners. We, like Onesimus, were revolters from God's service, and had injured him in his rights; Jesus Christ moves us, and by his grace works a change in us, and then intercedes for us with the Father, that we may be received into his favour and family again, and past offences may be forgiven; and we are sure that the Father heareth him always. There is no reason to doubt but Paul prevailed with Philemon to give and receive Onesimus; and more reason have we to be confident that the intercession of Christ with the Father is prevalent for the acceptance of all whose case he takes in hand, and recommends to him. From these general observations we come to the epistle itself.

PHILEMON.

In this epistle, we have, 1. The preface, v. 1. 7. II. The substance and body of it, v. 8. 21. And then the conclusion, v. 22, to the end.

1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer, 2. And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-soldier, and to the church in thy house.

In these two first verses of the preface are the persons from and to whom it is written, with some annexed note or title, implying somewhat of argument to the purpose of the letter.

1. The persons writing: Paul, the principal, who calls himself a prisoner of Jesus Christ, that is, for Jesus Christ. A prisoner simply is no comfort or honour; but such as Paul was, for the faith and preaching of the gospel, this was true glory, and proper to move Philemon upon the request made to him by such a one. A petition from one suffering for Christ and his gospel, surely would be tenderly regarded by a believer and minister of Christ, and especially when strengthened too with the concurrence of Timothy, one eminent in the church, sometimes called by Paul his son in the faith, but now, it is likely, grown more in years, he styles him his brother. What could be denied to two such petitioners? Paul is not slighting in serving a poor convert; he gets all the additional help he could in it.

2. The persons written to, are, Philemon and Apphia, and with them Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house. Philemon, the master of Onesimus, was the principal, to whom the letter is inscribed; the head of the family, in whom were the authority and power of taking in or shutting out, and whose property Onesimus was; with him therefore chiefly lay the business. To Philemon, our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer; a good man he was, and probably a minister; and on both accounts dearly beloved by Paul. A lover of good men is one property of a good minister, (Tit. 1. 8.) and especially must such love those who labour with them in the work of the gospel, and who are faithful therein. The governing order, then, both in the church, and in the congregation, is this, that he who are Christians; but when conjunction in the special calling as ministers is added, this will be further endearing. Paul, in the highest degree of ministry, not only calls Timothy, an evangelist, his brother, but Philemon, an ordinary pastor, his dearly beloved fellow-labourer; an example of humility and condescension, and of all affectionate regards, even in those that are highest in the church, towards others that are labourers in the same special mean, even calling. With Philemon Apphia is joined, probably his yoke-fellow; and having a concern in the domestic affairs, the apostle directs to her likewise. She was a party offended and injured by Onesimus, and therefore proper to be taken notice of in a letter for reconciliation and forgiveness. Justice and prudence would direct Paul to this express notice of this minister's house from his friend called and esteemed so much by him; Paul might think him one whom Philemon would advise with, and who might be capable of furthering the good work of peace-making and forgiveness, and therefore might judge fit to put him in the inscription of the letter, with the adjunct of fellow-soldier. He had called Philemon his fellow-labourer. Ministers must look on themselves as labourers and soldiers, who must therefore take pains and be diligent and watchful, and not give place to the devil; and Paul puts himself and Philemon, and all the Philippians, as one another as fellow-labourers, and fellow-soldiers, who must stand together, and strengthen one another's hands and hearts in any work of their holy function and calling: they need see to it, that they be provided with spiritual weapons, and skill to use them; as labourers, they must minister the word, and sacraments, and discipline, and watch over souls; and those that must give an account of them; and as soldiers, they must fight the Lord's battles, and not entangle themselves in the things of this life, but attend to the pleasing of him who hath chosen them to be soldiers, 2 Tim. 2. 10. And to the church in thy house, his whole family, in which the worship of God was kept up, so that he had, as it were, a church in his house. Observe, Paul thought it necessary to give the churches in general, and in particular, order and constitution, and to direct how they should be ordained and constituted, so that they might be always in order and concord, and be a blessing to those that were in them. They were such as the apostle gives, as guides and governors to the church, for the religious worship and order that were kept up in it; and such should all families be—nurseries of religion, societies where God is called on, his word read, and sabbaths observed, and the members instructed in the knowledge of him and of their duty to him: neglect of this is followed with ignorance and all corruption. Wicked families are nurseries for hell, as good ones are for heaven. Masters and others of the family must think it enough to be good, singly and severally in their several capacities, but they must be socially so; as here Philemon's house was a church; and Paul, for some concern that all might have in this matter of Onesimus, directs to them all; that their affection, as well as Philemon's, might return to him; and that in their way and place they might further, and not stand still. The affection wished and sought. Desirable it is, that all in a family be well affected towards one another, for furthering their particular and the common good and benefit of all. On such accounts might it be, that Paul inscribes his letter here so generally, that all might be the more ready to own and receive this poor convert, and to behave affectionately toward him. Next to this inscription is, the apostle's salutation of those named by him.

3. Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

This is the token in every epistle; so the apostle writes. He is a hearty well-wisher to all his friends, and wishes for them the best things; not gold or silver, or any earthly good, in the first or chief place, but grace and peace from Christ. Paul does not give them himself, but he prays for them from him who can bestow them. Grace, the free favour and good-will of God, the Spring and Fountain of all blessings: and peace, all good, as the fruit and effect of that grace. To you, that is, be bestowed on you, and continued to you, with the comfortable feeling and sense of it in yourselves. From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit also understands, though not named: for all acts toward the creatures are of the whole Trinity: from the Father, who is our Father in Christ, the first in order of acting as of subsisting; and from Christ, his favour and good-will as God, and the fruits of it through him as Mediator God-man; it is in the beloved that we are accepted, and through him we have peace and all good things; who is, with the Father and Spirit, to be looked to, and blessed and praised in all names, not only as Jesus and Christ, but as Lord also. In 2 Cor. 13. 14, the apostle's benediction is full; The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen. Observe, Spiritual blessings are first and especially to be sought for ourselves and others. The favour of God and peace with him, as in itself it is the best and most desirable good, so is it the cause of all other, and what puts sweetness into every mercy, and can make happy even in the want of all earthly things. Though there be no herb in the stall, and the labour of the olive fail, yet may such rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation, Hab. 3. 17, 18. There are many that say, Who will shew us any good? But if God lift up the light of his countenance, that will put more joy and gladness in his people, than all earthly increase, Is. 60. 7. And Num. 6. 26. The Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. In this is summarily all good, and from this one Fountain, God the Father, Son, and Spirit, all comes. After this salutation of the apostle to Philemon, and his friends and family, for better making way still for his suit to him, he expresses the singular affection he had for him, by thanksgiving and prayer to God in his behalf, and the great joy for the many good things he knew and heard to be in him, in the four next following verses.

4. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, 3. Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints; 6. That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus. 7. For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

The apostle's thanksgiving and prayer here for Philemon are set forth by the object, circumstance, and manner thereof, with the way whereby much of the knowledge of Philemon's goodness came to him.

1. Here is the Object of Paul's praises and prayers for Philemon; I thank my God, making mention of thee in my prayers. (1.) Observe, God is the Author of all the good that is in any, or that is done by them, (Hos. 14. 8.) From me is thy fruit found. (2.) Observe, To him therefore is all the praise due; (1 Chron. 29. 13, 14.) But [or for] whom I have, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come of thee, both wherewith to offer, and the will and heart to do it. On this account (says he) we thank thee our God, and praise thy glorious name. (3.) Observe, It is the privilege of good men, that in their praises and prayers they come to God as their God: Our God, we thank thee, said David; and what thank who God, said Paul. (4.) Observe, Our prayers and praises should be offered up to God, not for ourselves only, but for others also. Private addresses should not be altogether with a private mind, minding our own things only, but others must be remembered by us; we must be affected with joy and thankfulness for any good in them, or done by them, or bestowed on them, as far as is known to us, and seek for them what they need. In this lies no little part of the communion of saints. St. Paul, in his private thankgivings and prayers, was often particular in remembering his friends; I thank my God, making mention of thee in my prayers; sometimes it may be by name, or however having them particularly in his thoughts; and God knows who is meant, though not named. This is a means of exercising love, and obtaining good for others. Strive with me, by your prayers, for me, said David; and what thank who God, said Paul. (5.) Observe, God is the Author of all effects. God, and by our communion, or fellowship in our prayers and praises, doth make mention of them; and so they are acknowledged as well in this life, as in the world to come; and that all who have been affected with the grace of God in them, shall be known to God, and shall be judged to their right, unless they have neglected it against their knowledge; for, (Rom. 2. 29.) All who have been remembered, by the prayers of others, in the world of God, shall be known as such. (6.) Observe, God is the Author of all good effects; by our prayers and praises we shall make mention of them, and they shall be acknowledged as such. Pray one for another, says St. James, 5. 16.

2. Here is the circumstance; Always making mention of thee. Always, usually, not once or twice only, but frequently. So must we remember Christian friends, much and often, as their case may need, bearing them in our thoughts, and upon our hearts, before our God.

3. Here is the matter both of his praises and prayers, in reference to Philemon.

(1.) Of his praises.

(1.) He thanks God for the love which he heard Philemon had toward the Lord Jesus. He is to be loved as God superlatively, as his divine perfections require; I have a right to it, to the Lord, and our Lord, our Maker, Redeemer, and Saviour, who loved us, and gave himself for us. Paul thanks God for what he heard of this, the signal marks and expressions of it in Philemon. And,

(2.) For his faith in Christ also. Love to Christ, and faith in him, are prime Christian graces, for which there is great ground of praise to God, where he has been pleased to grant them us. Paul thanks God for what he heard of this, the signal marks and expressions of it in Philemon. And,

(3.) Of his prayers.

(3.) He prays God for his love to all the saints. These two must go together; for love to him that beget, must and will love them also that are begotten of him. The apostle joins them in that, (Col. 1. 3, 4.) We give thanks to God since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints. This bear the image of Christ, which will be loved by every Christian. Different sentiments and ways in what is not essential, will not make difference of affection, as to the truth; though difference in the degrees of love will be according as more or less of the image is discerned. More external differences are nothing here. Paul calls a poor converted slave his bowels.
We must love, as God does, all saints. Paul thanked God for the good that was not only in the churches, but in the particular persons he wrote to; though this too was known to him merely by report; Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints. This was what he inquired after concerning his friends, the truth, and growth, and fruitfulness of their graces, their faith in Christ, and love to him and to all the saints.
Love to saints, if it be sincere, will be catholic and universal love towards all saints; but faith and love, though in the heart they are hidden things, are known by the effects of them. Therefore,

(2.) The apostle joins prayer with his praises, that the fruits of Philemon's faith and love might be more and more conspicuous, so as that the communication of them might constrain others to the acknowledgement of all the good things that were in him and in his house toward Christ Jesus; that their light might so shine before men, that they, seeing their good works, might be stirred up to imitate them, and to glorify their Father which is in heaven.
Good works must be done, not of vain-glory to be seen, yet such as may be seen to God's glory and the good of men.

4. He adds a reason, both that of his prayer and praises; (v. 7.) For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother. The good thou hast done and still dost, is abundant matter of joy and comfort to me and others, who therefore desire ye may continue and abound in such good fruits more and more; that ye may abound in the work of faith.
(2 Cor. 9. 12.) The ministration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thankings unto God."

Thus far is the preface to this epistle. Now,
He comes to that which is the main business of it — to plead with Philemon in behalf of Onesimus, to receive him and be reconciled to him. Many arguments he urges to this purpose, from v. 8, to 21, inclusive.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, 9. Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such a one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

Here is the 1st Argument, from what was before noted, and is carried in the illative wherefore; "Seeing so much good is reported of thee and found in thee, especially thy love to all saints, now let me see it on a fresh and further occasion; refresh the bowels of Onesimus and mine also, in forgiving and receiving him who is now a convert, and so a saint indeed, and meet for thy favour and love." Observe, A disposition to do good, together with past instances and expressions of it, is a good handle to take hold on for pressing on more. "Be not weary of well-doing, go on, as thou art able, and as new objects and occasions occur, to do the same still."

2d Argument, is, from the authority of him that is now making this request to him; I might be much hold in Christ, to enjoin thee that which is convenient. The apostles had under Christ great power in the church over the ordinary ministers, as well as the members of it; for edification; they might require of them what was fit, and were therein to be obli-ged, which Philemon should consider; this was a matter within the compass of the apostle's power to require, though he would not in this instance act up to it. Observe, Ministers, whatever their power be in the church, are to use prudence in the exercise of it; they may not unseasonably, or, further than is requisite, put it forth; in all they must use godly wisdom and discretion. Wherefore this may be a

3d Argument, Waving the authority which yet he had to require, he chooses to entreat it of him; (v. 9.) Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee. Observe, It is no dispensation for those who have power to be condensing, and sometimes even to beseech, where, in strictness of right, they might command; so does Paul here, though an apostle: he entreats where he might enjoin. It is a sign of love rather than authority, which doubtless must carry engaging influence with it. And especially which may be a

4th Argument, When any circumstance of the person pleading gives additional force to his petition, as here; Being such a one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ. Years bespeak respect; and the motions of such, in things lawful and fit, should be received with regard. The request of an aged apostle, and now suffering for Christ and his gospel, should be tenderly considered. "If thou wilt do any thing for a poor aged prisoner, to comfort me in my bonds, and make my chain lighter, grant me which I desire: hereby in a manner you do honour to Christ, in the person of an aged suffering servant of his, which doubtless he will take as done to himself." He makes also a

5th Argument, By the spiritual relation now between Onesimus and himself. 10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds:

"Though of right and in civil respect he be thy servant; yet in a spiritual sense he is now a son to me, God having made me the instrument of his conversion, even here where I am a prisoner for Christ's sake." So does God sometimes honour and comfort his suffering servants, not only working good in themselves by their sufferings, exercising and improving thereby their own graces, but making them a means of much spiritual good to others, either by displaying their graces, or of their confirmation and strengthening, as Phil. 1. 14. Many brethren, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word of the Lord without fear. When God's servants are bound, yet his word and Spirit are not bound; spiritual children may then be born to them. The apostle lays an emphasis here: My son whom I have begotten in my bonds; he was dear to him, and he hoped would be so to Philemon, under that consideration. Prison-mercies are sweet, and much set by. Paul makes an argument to Philemon from this dear relation that now was between Onesimus and him, his son begotten in his bonds. And a

6th Argument, is, from Philemon's own interest.

11. Which in time past was to thee un-profitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

(1.) Observe, Unsanctified persons are un-profitable persons; they answer not the great end of their being and relations. Grace makes good for something; "In time past unprofitable, but now profitable, inclined and fitted to be so, and will be so to thee, his master, if thou receive him, as he has since his conversion been here to me, ministering to me in my confinement." There seems an allusion to the name Onesimus, which signifies profitable. Now he would do him a service. It may be noted also how the apostle speaks in this matter, not as Onesimus's former case and conduct might warrant; he had wronged his master, and ran away from him, and lived as if he were his own, and not his; yet as God covers the sins of penitents, forgives and does not upbraid, so should men. How softly does Paul here speak! Not that Onesimus's sin was small, or that he would have any, much less himself, to take it so; but, having been humbled for it, and doubtless taken shame to himself on account thereof, the apostle now would not sink his spirit by continuing to load and burden him therewith, but speaks thus tenderly when he was pleading with Philemon not to make severe reflections on his servant's misconduct, but to forgive. (2.) Observe, What happy changes conversion makes; of evil, good; of unprofitable, useful! Religious servants are a treasure in a family. Now profitable to thee and to me. Such will make conscience of their time and trusts, promoting the interests of those whom they serve, and managing all they can for the best. This then is the argument here urged; "It will now be for thy advantage to receive him: thus changed, as he is, thou mayest expect him a dutiful and faithful servant, though in time past he was not so." Whereupon.

7th Argument, He urges Philemon from the strong affection that he had to Onesimus. He had mentioned the spiritual relation before, my son begotten in my bonds; and now he signifies how dear he was to him.

12. Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is mine own bowels,

"I love him as I do myself, and have sent him back to thee for this end, that thou shouldst receive him: do it therefore for love's sake, receive him as one thus dear to me." Observe, Even good men may sometimes need great earnestness and entreaty to lay their passions, let go their resentments, and forgive those who have injured and offended them. Some have thought it to look this way, when Paul is so pathetic and earnest, mustering up so many pleas and arguments to gain what he requests. Philemon, a Phrygian, might perhaps be naturally of a rugged and difficult temper, and thence need no little pains in touching all the springs that might move him to forgiveness and reconciliation; but rather should we strive to be like God, who is slow to anger, and ready to forgive, and abundant in pardons. And again, an 8th Argument, is, from the apostle's denying himself in sending back Onesimus: though he might have pressed upon his name Philemon's leave to detain him longer, yet he would not.

13. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

14. But without thy mind I do no thing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Paul was now in prison, and wanted a friend or servant to act for him, and assist him, for which he found Onesimus. It is just here and therefore it is no wonder that he had now selected him to minister to him, instead of Philemon himself, whom if he had requested to have come to him in person for such purpose, he might have presumed he would not have refused; much less might he have reckoned that he would be unwilling his servant should do this in his stead; yet he would not take this liberty, though his circumstances needed it. I have sent him back to thee, that thou mayest receive him in a manner that is more of necessity, but willingly. Observe, Good deeds are most acceptable to God and man, when done with most freedom. And Paul herein, notwithstanding his apostolical power, would shew what regard he had to civil rights, which Christianity does by no means supersede or weaken, but rather confirm and strengthen. Onesimus, he knew, was Philemon's servant, and therefore without his consent not to be detained from him; in his unconverted state he had violated that right, and withdrawn himself, to his master's wrong; but now that he had seen his sin and repented, he was willing and desirous to return to his duty, and Paul would not hinder this, but rather further it. He might indeed have presumed on Philemon's willingness; but, notwithstanding his need, he would deny himself rather than take that way. And he argues further. 9th Argument. That such a change was now wrought in Onesimus, that Philemon needed not fear his ever running from him, or injuring him any more. There are those of whom Solomon says, If thou deliver them, thou must do it again; (Prov. 19. 19.) but the change wrought in Onesimus was such that he would never again need one thus to intercede for him.

15. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever;

Charity would so hope and judge, yea, so it would be; yet the apostle speaks cautiously, that none might exalt himself, who had no experiment to what might be expected of a like gracious issue. (1.) Observe, In matters that may be wrested to ill, ministers must speak warily, that kind providences of God towards sinners be not abused, to encouragements to sin, or abatements of just abhorrence of it; Perhaps he therefore departed from thee for a season, &c. (2.) Observe, How softly still the sins of penitents are spoken of; he calls it a departure for a season, instead of giving it the term that it deserved; as overruled and ordered by God, it was a departure; but in itself, and in respect of the disposition and manner of the act, it was a criminal going away. When we speak of the nature of any sin or offence as against God, the evil of it is not to be lessened; but in the person of a penitent sinner, as God considers it, so must we. It He departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever; that upon conversion he may return, and be a faithful and useful servant to thee as long as he lives. Brag a fool in a mortar, yet will not his folly depart from him. But it is not so with true penitents, they will not return to folly. (3.) Observe, The wisdom and goodness and power of God, in causing that to end so happily, which was begun and carried on for some time so wickedly; thus regarding a poor vassal, one of such low rank and condition, and so little regarded by men, working so good and great a change in him who was so far gone in evil ways, who had wronged a master so good, had run from a family so pious, from the means of grace, the church in his house, that he should be led into the way of salvation, who had fled from it, and find means made effectual at Rome, who had been hardened under them at Colosse. What riches are shewn by the largeness of God's grace and mercy, as a free gift on the one side, and of the means on the other! So was it in this instance of Onesimus; being returned to God, he now returns to his master, who will have more service and better hold of him than ever—by conscience of his duty and faithfulness in it to his life and soul; his interest therefore it will be now to receive him. So God often brings gain to his people out of their losses. And beside interest, a 10th Argument is taken from the capacity under which Onesimus now would return, and must be received by Philemon.

16. Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord!

"Not now as a servant, that is, not merely or so much, but above a servant, in a spiritual respect, a brother beloved, one to be owned as a brother in Christ, and to be loved as such, upon account of this holy change that is wrought in him, and one therefore who will be useful unto thee upon better principles and in a better manner than before; who will love and promote the best things in thy family, be a blessing in it, and help to keep up the church that is in thy house." (1.) Observe, There is a spiritual brotherhood between all true believers, however differentiated in civil and outward respects; they are all children of the same heavenly Father, have a right to the same spiritual privileges and benefits, must love and do all good offices to and for one another as brethren, though still in the same rank, and degree, and station, wherein they were called. Christianity does not nullify or confound the respective value of civil and religious privileges, he that has strengthened them and directs to a right discharge of them. (2.) Observe, Religious servants are more than mere ordinary servants; they have grace in their hearts, and have found grace in God's sight, and so will in the sight of religious masters; (Ps. 101. 6.) Mine eyes are upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me. He that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me. "Onesimus being now become another, receive and affect him as one that is partaker of the same common faith, and so a brother beloved, specially to me who have been the instrument of his conversion." Good ministers love not so much according to the outward good which they receive, as the spiritual good which they do. Paul called Onesimus his own bowels, and other converts his joy and crown. A brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord; by a double tie therefore, both civil and religious; thy servant, thy property, one of thy house and family, and, in a spiritual respect, now thy brother in Christ; which heightens the engagement, he is God's servant and thine too; here are more ties than he is under to me. How readily therefore should he be received and loved by thee, as one of thy family and one of the true faith, one of thy house and one of thy church in thy house?" This argument is strengthened by another, the 11th Argument, From the communion of saints.

17. If thou count me therefore a partner, receive me as myself.
There is a fellowship among saints; they have interest one in another, and must love and act accordingly. "Now shew thy love to me, and the interest I have in thee, by loving and receiving one another as thyself; own and treat him as thou wouldest me, with a like ready and true, though perhaps not equal, affection."

But why such concern and earnestness for a servant, a slave, and such a one as had misbehaved? Answer, Onesimus being now penitent, it was doubtless to encourage him, and to support him against the fear he might have in returning to a master whom he had so much abused and wronged, to keep him from sinking into despondency and dejection, and hearten him to his duty. Wise and good masters will have great and tender care of young converts, to encourage and hearten them what they can to and in their duty. Objection, But Onesimus had wronged as well as offended his master. The answer to this makes a 13th Argument, A promise of satisfaction to Philemon.

18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on mine account; 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit, I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

Here are three things:
1. Petition of Onesimus's debt to Philemon; If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught. It is not an if of doubting, but of illation and concession; seeing he hath wronged thee, and thereby is become indebted to thee; such an if as Col. 3. 1. and 2 Pet. 2. 4, &c. Observe, True penitents will be ingenuous in owning their faults, as doubtless Onesimus had been to Paul, upon his being awakened, and being brought to repentance; and especially is this to be done in cases of injury to others. Onesimus by Paul owns the wrong. And,

2. Paul here engages for satisfaction; Put that on my account; I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it. Whence, [1.] Observe, The communion of saints does not destroy distinction of property; Onesimus, now converted, and become a brother beloved, is yet Philemon's servant still, and indebted to him for wrongs that he had done, and not only dishonoured but by free and voluntary remission, or on reparation made by himself, or some other in his behalf; which part, rather than fail, the apostle undertakes for him. Upon which, [2.] Observe, Sincerity is not in all cases unlawful, but in some is a good and merciful undertaking. Only know the person and case, be not surety for a stranger; (Prov. 11. 13.) and go not beyond ability; help thy friend thou mayest, as far as will stand with justice and prudence. And how happy for us that Christ would be made the surety of a better covenant, (Heb. 7. 22.) that he would be Made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him! And, [3.] Observe, Formal securities by writing, as well as by word and promise, may be required and given. Persons die, and words sometimes be forgotten; writing being a reserve right and personal, especially to use with good persons, as well as others, in all ages, Jer. 32. 9, &c. Luke 16. 5—7. It was much that Paul, who lived on contributions himself, would undertake to make good all loss by an evil servant to his master; but hereby he expresses his real and great affection for Onesimus, and his full belief of the sincerity of his conversion: and he might have hope, that, not withstanding this generous offer, Philemon would not insist on it, but freely remit all; considering,

(3.) The reason of things between him and Philemon; "Albeit, I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides; thou wilt remember, without my reminding thee, that thou art on other accounts more in debt to me than this comes to."

Modesty in self-praises is true praise. The apostle glances at the benefits he had conferred on Philemon: 'That thou art any thing in grace and acceptance with God, or enjoyest any thing in a right and comfortable manner, it is, under God, owing to my ministry; I have been the instrument in his hand of all that spiritual good to thee; and what thy obligation to me on this account is, I leave to thee to consider. Thy forgiving a pecuniary debt to a poor person ought to be a matter upon my request, and which, however, I now take upon myself to answer, thy remitting it to him, or to me, now surety, thou wilt confess, is not so great a thing; here is more for contra—thou owest to me even thine own self besides." Observe, How great the endearments are between ministers and those toward whom their endeavours have been blessed to their conversion or spiritual edification! If it had been possible, (see Paul to the Galatians,) you would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to them. Col. 4. 15. On the other hand he calls them his children, of whom he travailed again, till Christ was formed in them, that is, the likeness of Christ more fully. So 1 Thess. 2. 8. We were willing to have imparted to you not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. By way of allusion, this may illustrate Christ's undertaking for us; we were redeemed, not with corruptible things, as this world; he had wronged him, but Christ undertakes to make satisfaction, the Just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God. "If the sinner owes thee aught, put it upon my account, I will pay the debt; let his iniquity be laid on me, I will bear the penalty." Further, a

13th Argument, is, from the joy and comfort the apostle hereby would have on Philemon's own account, as well as on Onesimus's, in such a seasonable and acceptable fruit of Philemon's faith and obedience.

20. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh my bowels in the Lord. Philemon was Paul's son in the faith, yet he entreats him as a brother; Onesimus a poor slave, yet he solicits for him as if he were seeking some great service for himself. How pathetic is he! Yea, brother, or O brother! (it is an address of affection or desire;) let me have joy of thee in the Lord. Thou knowest that I am now a prisoner of love, for his sake and cause, and need all the comfort and support that my friends in Christ can give me: now this will be joy to me, I shall have joy of thee in the Lord, as seeing such an evidence and fruit of thy own Christian faith and love, and on Onesimus's account, who hath given himself up to relieved and encouraged."

(1.) Observe, Christians should have an eye to the interest that may joy the hearts of one another, both people and ministers reciprocally; and ministers of their brethren. From the world they expect trouble; and where may they look for comfort and joy but in one another? (2.) Observe, Fruits of faith and obedience in people are the minister's greatest joy, especially the mercy and kindness appears in them to Christ and his members, forgiving all faults and wrongs, being merciful as their heavenly Father is merciful. "Refresh my bowels in the Lord. It is not any carnal selfish respect I am acting by, but what is pleasing to Christ, and that he may have honour therein."

[1.] Observe, The Lord's honour and service are a Christian's chief aim in all things. And, [2.] Observe, It is meat and drink to a good minister to see people ready and zealous in what is good, especially in acts of charity and beneficence, as occasions occur, forgiving injuries, and remitting somewhat of their right and the like. And once more, his last, which is 19. Argument. Lies in his good hope and opinion which he expresses of Philemon.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

Good thoughts and expectations of us more strongly move and engage to do the things expected from us. The apostle knew Philemon to be a good man, and then he persuaded of his readiness to do good, and that not in a scanty and niggardly manner, but with a free and liberal hand.

22. But whilst prepare me also a lodging: for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

But whilst, or moreover. He comes to another thing, yet, as may seem, not without some eye to the matter which he had been upon, that might be furthered by this intimation, that he hoped he should himself soon follow, and know the effect of his epistle, which Philemon would therefore be more stirred up to see that it might be to his satisfaction. Now here is,

1. The thing requested; Prepare me also a lodging; under this all necessaries for a stranger are included. He wills Philemon to do it, intending to be his guest, as most to his purpose. Observe, Hospitality is a great Christian duty, especially in ministers, and toward ministers, such as the apostle was, coming out of such dangers and sufferings for Christ and his gospel. Who would not shew the utmost of affectionate regards to such a one? It is an honourable title that he gives Gaius, (Rom. 16. 23.) My host, and of the whole church. Onesiphorus is also affectionately remembered by the apostle on this account; (2 Tim. 1. 16.) The Lord gave mercy to the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain; and in how many things he ministered to me at Ephesus, thou knowest.

2. Here is the ground of the apostle's request; For I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you. He did not know how God might deal with him, but the benefit of prayer he had often found, and hoped he should again, for deliverance and liberty to come to them. [1.] Our dependence is on God for life and liberty and opportunity of service; all is by divine pleasure. [2.] When abridged of what he or any other desired, our trust and hope must be in God, without fainting or succumbing, while our case is depending. But yet, [3.] Trust must be with the use of means, prayer especially, though no other should be at hand; this hath unlocked heaven, and opened prison-doors. The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous avail much.

4. Prayer of people for ministers, especially when they are in distress or danger, is their great duty, and ministers need and request it. Paul, though an apostle, did so with much earnestness, Rom. 15. 30. 2 Cor. 1. 11. Eph. 6. 18, 19. 1 Thess. 5. 25. The least may this way be helpful to the greatest. Yet,

5. Though prayer obtains, yet it does not merit, the things obtained: they are God's gift, and Christ's purchase. But Paul, in his fervent prayer, did implore that we pray for him, 2 Tim. 4. 13. I shall be freely bestowed on you. What God gives, he will yet be sought to for, that mercies may be valued the more, and known whence they come, and God may have the praise. Ministers' lives and labours are for the people's good; the office was set up for them; he gave gifts for men, apostles, &c. Eph. 4. 8, 11, 12. Their gifts, and labours, and lives, all are for their benefit, 1 Cor. 3. 21, 22. All things are yours, but faith, faith is God's gift. In praying for faithful ministers, people in effect pray for themselves; 'I trust I shall be given unto you; for your service, and comfort, and edification in Christ.' See 2 Cor. 4. 5. [7.] Observe the humility of the apostle; his liberty, should he have it, he would own to be through their prayers, as well as, or more than, his own; he mentions them only through the high thoughts he had of the prayers of many, and the regard God would shew to his praying people. Thus of the first thing in the apostle's conclusion.

2. He sends salutations from one who was his fellow-prisoner, and four more who were his fellow-labourers:

Saluting is wishing health and peace. Christianity is no enemy to courtesy, but enjoins it, 1 Pet. 3. 8. It is a mere expression of love and respect, and a means of preserving and nourishing it. There salute thee Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus. He was of Colosse, and so countryman and fellow-citizen with Philemon; by office he seems to have been an evangelist, who laboured among the Colossians, if he was not the first converter of them, for whom he had special affection. Our dear fellow-servant, (said St. Paul,) and for you a faithful minister of Christ, (Col. 1. 7.) and (ch. 4. 12, 13.) A servant of Christ, always labouring for you in prayers. I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, &c. A very eminent person therefore to himself, and to his master. Observe, Paul was not only a prisoner himself, but a fellow-prisoner with Paul, and labouring in the same work of preaching and propagating the gospel, was confined in the same prison, and for the same cause; both termed prisoners in Christ Jesus, intimating the ground of their imprisonment, not any crime or wickedness, but for the faith of Christ and their service to him. An honour it is to suffer shame for Christ's name. My fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus, is mentioned as his glory and the apostle's comfort; not that he was a prisoner, and so hindered from his work; (that was matter of affliction) but that, seeing God thus permitted and called him to suffer, his providence so ordered it that they suffered together, and so had the benefit and comfort of one another's prayers, and help, it may be, in some things; this was a mercy. So God sometimes lightens the sufferings of his people by the communion of saints, the sweet fellowship they have one with another in their bonds. Never more enjoyment of God have they found than when suffering together for God. So Paul and Silas, when their feet were fast in the stocks, had their tongues set at liberty, and their hearts tuned for the praises of God. Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. The name of these three is manifest, they list them in the business of the latter. How ill would it look by denial of the request of it to slight so many worthy names, as most of these, at least, were! Marcus, cousin of Barnabas, and son of Mary, who was so hospitable to the saints.
at Jerusalem, (Col. 4. 10. Acts 12. 12.) and whose house was the place of meeting for prayer and worship of God. Though some failing seems to have been in him when Paul and he parted, yet in conjunction with Barnabas he went on with his work, and here Paul and he, we perceive, were reconciled, and differences forgotten, 2 Tim. 4. 11. He bids Mark to be brought to him, for he is profitable to me for the ministry, that is, of an evangelist. Aristarchus is mentioned with Marcus, (Col. 4. 10.) and called there by Paul his fellow-prisoner; and speaking there of Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, he adds, touching whom ye received commandments, if he come unto you, receive him: an evidence that he himself had received him, and was reconciled to him. Next is Demas, who hitherto, it seems, appeared not faithful, though (2 Tim. 4. 10.) he is considered as having forsaken Paul, from love of this present world. But how far his forsaking was, whether total from his work and profession, or partial only; and whether he repented, and returned to his duty, scripture is silent, and so must we be: no mark of disgrace lay on him here, but he is joined with others who were faithful, as he is also in Col. 4. 14. Lucas is the last, that beloved physician and evangelist, who came to Rome, companion with Paul, Col. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 4. 11. He was Paul's associate in his greatest dangers, and his fellow-labourer. The ministry is not a matter of carnal ease or pleasure, but of pains; if any are idle in it, they answer not their calling. Christ bids to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers, not loiterers, into his harvest, Matt. 9. 38. And the people are bid to know them that labour among them, and are over them in the Lord, and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake, 1 Thess. 5. 12, 13. My fellow-labourers, says the apostle: ministers must be helpers together of the truth; they serve the same Lord, in the same holy work and function, and are expectants of the same glorious reward; therefore they must be assistant to each other in furthering the interest of their great and common Master. Thus of the salutations, and then,

3. Here is the apostle's closing prayer and benediction.

25. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

Here is,

(1.) What is wished and prayed for; grace, the free favour and love of God, together with the fruits and effects of it in all good things, for soul and body, for time and eternity. Grace is the best wish for ourselves and others; with this the apostle begins and ends.

(2.) From whom; our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, second Person in the Trinity, Lord by natural right, by whom, and for whom, all things were created, (Col. 1. 16. John 1. 1—3.) and who is Heir of all things, and as God-man and Mediatrix, who purchased us, and to whom we are given by the Father, Jesus, the Saviour, Matt. 1. 21. We were lost and undone; he recovers us, and repairs the ruin; he saves by merit, procuring pardon and life for us; and by power, rescuing us from sin, and Satan, and hell, and renewing us to the likeness, and bringing us to the enjoyment, of God: thus is he Jesus, and Christ the Messiah, or anointed, consecrated and fitted to be King, Priest, and Prophet, to his church. To all these offices were there anointings under the law with oil, and to them was the Saviour spiritually anointed with the Holy Ghost, Acts 10. 38. In none but him were all these together and in such eminence: He was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, Ps. 45. 7. This Lord Jesus Christ is our's by original title to us, and by gospel-offers and gift, his purchase of us, and our own acceptance of him; resignation to him, and mystical union with him: Our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe, All grace to us is from Christ: he purchased, and he bestows it. Of his fulness we all receive, and grace for grace, John 1. 16. He filleth all in all, Eph. 1. 23.

(3.) To whom; Your spirit, ενα τι σπυναλς ὧς, not Philemon's only, but of all who were named in the inscription. With your spirit, with you; the soul or spirit being the immediate seat of grace, whence it influences the whole man, and flows out in gracious and holy acts. All the house saluted are here joined in the closing benediction, the more to remind and quicken all to further the end of the epistle.

Amen is added, not only for strong and affectionate summing up the prayer and wish, so let it be; but as an expression of faith that it will be heard, so shall it be. And what need we more to make us happy, than to have the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ with our spirit? This is the usual benediction, but it may be taken here to have some special respect also to the occasion; the grace of Christ with their spirits, Philemon's especially, would sweeten and mollify them, and take off too deep and keen resentments of injuries, and dispose to forgive others as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.
EXPOSITION,
WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
OF THE
EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.
Completed by Mr. W. Tong.

CONCERNING this epistle we must inquire,
I. Into the divine authority of it; for this has been questioned by some, whose distempered eyes could not bear the light of it, or whose errors have been confuted by it; such as the Arians, who deny the Godhead and Self-existence of Christ; and the Socinians, who deny his Satisfaction: but after all the attempts of such men to disparage this epistle, the divine original of it shines forth with those strong and unclouded rays, that he who runs may read it as an eminent part of the canon of scripture. The divinity of the matter, the sublimity of the style, the excellency of the design, the harmony of this with other parts of scripture, and its general reception in the church of God in all ages—these are the evidences of its divine authority.

II. As to the divine amanuensis, or penman of this epistle, we are not so certain; it does not bear the name of any in the front of it, as the rest of the epistles do, and there has been some dispute among the learned to whom they should ascribe it. Some have assigned it to Clemens of Rome; others to Luke; and many to Barnabas, thinking that the style and manner of expression is very agreeable to the zealous, authoritative, affectionate temper that Barnabas appears to be of, in the account we have of him in the Acts of the Apostles; and one ancient father quotes an expression out of this epistle, as the words of Barnabas. But it is generally assigned to the apostle Paul; and some later copies and translations have put Paul's name in the title. In the primitive times it was generally ascribed to him, and the style and scope of it very well agree with his spirit, who was a person of a clear head and a warm heart, whose main end and endeavour was to exalt Christ. Some think that the apostle Peter refers to this epistle, and proves Paul to be the penman of it, by telling the Hebrews, to whom he wrote, of Paul's having written to them, 2 Pet. 3. 15. We read of no other epistle that he ever wrote to them but this. And though it has been objected, that since Paul put his name to all his other epistles, he would not have omitted it here; yet others have well answered, that he, being the apostle of the Gentiles, who were odious to the Jews, might think fit to conceal his name, lest their prejudices against him might hinder them from reading and weighing it as they ought to do.

III. As to the scope and design of this epistle, it is very evident that it was very evident that it was clearly to inform the minds, and strongly to confirm the judgment, of the Hebrews in the transcendent excellency of the gospel above the law, and so to take them off from the ceremonies of the law, to which they were so wedded, of which they were so fond, that they even doted on them. Those of them who were Christians, retained too much of the old leven, and needed to be purged from it; the design of this epistle was to persuade and press the believing Hebrews to a constant adherence to the Christian's faith, and perseverance in it, notwithstanding all the sufferings they might meet with in so doing. In order to this, he speaks much of the excellency of the Author of the gospel, the glorious Jesus, whose honour he advances, and whom he justly prefers before all others, shewing him to be All in all, and this in lofty strains of holy rhetoric. It must be acknowledged that there are many things in this epistle hard to be understood, but the sweetness we shall find therein will make us abundantly amends for all the pains we take to understand it. And, indeed, if we compare all the epistles of the New Testament, we shall not find any of them more replenished with divine, heavenly matter than this to the Hebrews.

HEBREWS, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, we have a twofold comparison stated: I. Between the evangelical and legal dispensation; and the excellency of the gospel above that of the law is asserted and proved, v. 1. 3. II. Between the glory of Christ and that of the highest creatures, the angels; where the pre-eminence is justly given to the Lord Jesus Christ, and clearly demonstrated to belong unto him, v. 4, to the end.

1. GOD, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, 2. Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds;
3. Who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;

Here the apostle begins with a general declaration of the excellency of the gospel-dispensation above that of the law, which he demonstrates from the different way and manner of God's communicating himself and his mind and will to men, in the one and in the other; both these dispensations were of God, and both of them by good, but there is a great difference in the way of their coming from God. Observe,

I. The way wherein God communicated himself and his will to men under the Old Testament. We have here an account, 1. Of the persons by whom God spake his mind under the Old Testament; they were the prophets, that is, persons chosen of God, and qualified by him, for that office of revealing the will of God to others. Hence, 2. Persons to whom God spake by the prophets, to the fathers, to all the Old-Testament saints who were under that dispensation. God favoured and honoured them with much clearer light than that of nature, under which the rest of the world were left. 3. The order in which God spake to men in those times that went before the gospel, those past times; he spake to his ancient people at sundry times and in divers manners. (1.) At sundry times, or by several parts, as the word signifies, which may refer either to the several ages of the Old-Testament dispensation—the patriarchal, the Mosaical, and the prophetic; or to the several gradual openings of his mind concerning the Redeemer: to Adam, that the Messiah should come of the seed of the woman; to Abraham, that he should spring from his loins; to Jacob, that he should be of the tribe of Judah; to David, that he should be of his house; to Micah, that he should be born at Bethlehem; to Isaiah, that he should be born of a virgin. (2.) In divers manners, according to the different ways in which God thought fit to communicate his mind to his prophets; sometimes by the illuminations of his Spirit, sometimes by dreams, sometimes by visions, sometimes by an audible voice, sometimes by miracles, sometimes by his own hand, as when he wrote the ten commandments on tables of stone. Of some of these different ways God himself gave an account in Numb. 12, 6, 7. If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known to him in a dream, and will speak to him in a dream. Not so with my servant Moses: With him I will speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches. Observe, II. God, in giving his mind and will and under the New-Testament dispensation, these last days as they are called, that is, either toward the end of the world, or the end of the Jewish state. The times of the gospel are the last times, the gospel-revelation is the last we are to expect from God: there was first the natural revelation; then the patriarchal, by dreams, visions, and voices; then the Mosaical, in the law given for the time being, the law contained in the writing of the law, and in giving clearer discoveries of Christ: but now we must expect no new revelation, but only more of the Spirit of Christ to help us better to understand what is already revealed. Now the excellency of the gospel-revelation above the former consists in two things:

1. It is the final, the finishing revelation, given forth in the last days of divine revelation, to which nothing is to be added, but the canon of scripture is to be settled and sealed. So that now the minds of men are no longer kept in suspense by the expectation of new discoveries, but they rejoice in a complete revelation of the will of God, both preceptive and providential, so far as is necessary for them to know, in order to their direction and comfort. For the gospel includes a discovery of the great events that shall befall the church of God to the end of the world.

2. It is a revelation which God has made by his Son, the most excellent Messenger that was ever sent into the world, far superior to all the ancient patriarchs and prophets, by whom God communed with his people in former times. And here we have an excellent account of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

1. The glory of his office, and that in three respects:

[1.] God hath appointed him to be Heir of all things. As God, he was equal to the Father; but as God-man and Mediator, he was appointed by the Father to be the Heir of all things; that is, the Head of the foreign kingdom, the absolute Dispenser, Director, and Governor of all persons and of all things, Ps. 2, 6, 7. All power in heaven and earth is given to him; all judgment is committed to him, Matt. 28. 18. John 5. 22.

[2.] By him God made the worlds, both visible and invisible, the heavens and the earth; not as an instrumental Cause, but as his essential Word and Wisdom. By him he made the old creation, by him he makes the new creature, and by him he rules and governs both.

[3.] He upholds all things by the word of his power; he keeps the world from dissolving, by him all things consist; the weight of the whole creation is laid upon Christ, he supports the whole and all the parts. When, upon the apostacy, the world was breaking to pieces under the wrath and curse of God, the Son of God, undertaking the work of redemption, bound it up again, and established it by his almighty power and goodness. None of the ancient prophets sustained such an office as this, none was sufficient for it.

(2.) From hence the apostle passes to the glory of the person of Christ, who was able to execute such an office; he was the Brightness of his Father's glory, and the express Image of his person, v. 2. This is a high and lofty description of the glorious Redeemer, this is an account of his personal excellency.

[1.] He is, in person, the Son of God, the only-begotten Son of God, and as such he must have the same nature. This personal distinction always supposes one and the same nature. Every son of man, is man; were not the nature the same, the generation would be monstrous.

[2.] The person of the Son is the glory of the Father. Receiving forth with a truly divine splendour. As the beams are effulgent emanations of the sun, the father and fountain of light, Jesus Christ in his person is God manifest in the flesh, he is Light of light, the true Shechinah.

[3.] The person of the Son is the true image and character of the person of the Father; being of the same nature, he must bear the same image and likeness. In beholding the power, wisdom, and goodness of the Father, we behold the power, wisdom, and goodness, of the Father; for he hath the nature and perfections of God in him. He that hath seen the Son, hath seen the Father; that is, he hath seen the same Being. He that hath known the Son, hath known the Father, John 14. 7—9. For the Son is in the Father, and the Father is in the Son; the personal distinction is no other than will consist with essential union. This is the glory of the person of Christ; the fulness of the Godhead dwells, not typically, but really, in him.

(3.) From the glory of the person of Christ he proceeds to mention the glory of his grace; his condescension itself was truly glorious. The sufferings of Christ had this great honour in them, to be a full satisfaction for the sins of his people; by himself he purged away our sins, that is, by the proper innate merit of his death and bloodshed, by their infinite intrinsic value; as they were the sufferings of himself, he has made the most great God. Of his glory of his person and nature, gave to his sufferings such merit as was a sufficient reparation of honour to God, who had suffered an infinite injury and affront by the sins of men.

(4.) From the glory of his sufferings we are at length led to consider the glory of his exaltation; when by himself he had purged away our sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, at his Father's right hand. As Mediator and Redeemer, he is invested with the highest honour, authority, and activity, for the good of his people; the Father now does all things by him, and receives all the services of his people from him. Having assumed our nature, and suffered in it on earth, he has taken it up with him to heaven, and there it has the high honour to be next to God, and this was the reward of his humiliation.

Now it was by nothing a Person than this, that God has in these last days spoken to men; the dignity of the Messenger gives authority and excellency to the message, and therefore the dispensations of the gospel must needs exceed, very far exceed, the dispensation of the law.

4. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

5. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?

6. And again, when he bringeth in the Firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.

7. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire.

8. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.

9. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

The apostle, having proved the pre-eminenence of the gospel above the law, from the pre-eminence of the Lord Jesus Christ above the prophets, now proceeds to shew that he is not only much superior to the prophets, but to the angels themselves. In this he obviates an objection that the Jewish zealots would be ready to make, that the law was not only delivered by angels, but written by angels. (Gal. 3. 19.) But they attended at the giving forth of the law, the hosts of heaven were drawn forth to attend the Lord Jehovah on that awful occasion. Now the angels are very glorious beings, far more glorious and excellent than men; the scripture always represents them as the most excellent of all creatures, and we know of no being but God himself that is higher than the angels; and therefore that law that was ordained by angels, ought to be held in great esteem.

To take off the force of this argument, the penman of this epistle proceeds to state the comparison between angels and Christ, and the angels, both in nature and office, and to prove that Christ was vastly superior to the angels themselves. Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. Here observe,

I. The superior nature of Christ is proved from his superior name. The scripture does not give high and glorious titles without a real foundation and reason. And therefore in such great things have been said of our Lord Jesus Christ, if he had not been as great and excellent as those words import. When it is said, that Christ was made so much better than the angels, we are not to imagine that he was a mere creature, as the angels are; the word ἐξ ὑποστάσεως, when joined with an adjective, is no where to be rendered created, and here may very well be read, being more excellent, as the Syrian version hath it. We read ἐξ ὑποστάσεως—let God be true, not made so, but acknowledged to be so.

II. The superiority of the name and nature of Christ above the angels is declared in the holy scriptures, and to be deduced from thence. We should have known little or nothing either of Christ or of the angels, without the scriptures; and we must therefore be determined by them in our conceptions of the one and the other.

Now here are several passages of scripture cited, in which those things are said of Christ that were never said of the angels.

1. It was said of Christ, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; (Ps. 2. 7.) which refers either to his eternal generation, or to his resurrection, or to his solemn inauguration into his glorious kingdom at his ascension and session at the right hand of the Father. Now this was never said concerning the angels, and therefore by inheritance he has a more excellent nature than they. It was concerning Christ, but never concerning the angels, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son: (Ps. 2. 7.) not only, "I am his Father, and he is my Son, by nature and eternal promunation;" but, "I will be his Father, and he shall be my Son, by wonderful conception, and this his sonship shall be the fountain and foundation of every gracious relation between me and fallen man."

3. It is said of Christ, When God bringeth his Firstbegotten into the world, let all the angels of God worship him: that is, either when he is brought into this lower world, at his nativity, let the angels attend and honour him; or when he is brought into the world above, at his ascension, to enter upon his mediatorial kingdom, or when he shall bring him again into the world, to judge the world, then let the highest creatures worship him. God will not suffer his triumphs in heaven who will not be in subjectition to Christ, and pay adoration to him; and he will at last make the fallen angels and wicked men to confess his divine power and authority, and to fall before him; they who would not have him to reign, must then be brought forth and slain before him. The proof of this is taken out of Ps. 57. 7. Worship him, all ye gods, that is, "All ye that are superior to me, own yourselves to be inferior to Christ in nature and power."

4. God has said concerning Christ, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c. v. 8—12. But of the angels he has only said, that he hath made them spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire, v. 7. Now, upon comparing what he here says of the angels with what he says to Christ, the vast inferiority of the angels to Christ will plainly appear.

of fire. This we have in Ps. 104. 4, where it seems to be more immediately spoken of the winds and lightning, but is here applied to the angels, whose agency the Divine providence makes use of in the winds, and in thunder and lightning. Here, [1.] The office of the angels; they are God's ministers, or servants, to do his pleasure; it is the glory of God that he has such servants; it is yet more so that he does not need them. [2.] How the angels are qualified for this service; he makes them spirits and a flame of fire, he endows them with light and zeal, with activity and ability, readiness and resolution to do his pleasure: they are no more than what God has made them to be, and they are servants to the Son of God, Messiah, not to be slighted.

(2.) Observe, How much greater things are said of Christ by the Father. Here two passages of scripture are quoted, one out of Ps. 45. 6, 7. where God declares of Christ, [1.] His true and real divinity, and that with much pleasure and affection, not grudging him that glory; Thy throne, O God. Here one Person calls another Person God, O God. And if God the Father declares him to be so, he must be much greater than ordinary men, not to speak of his employments and things as they are. And now let who will deny him to be essentially God at their peril, but let us own and honour him as God; for if he had not been God, he had never been fit to have done the Mediator's work, or to have worn the Mediator's crown.

[2.] God declares his dignity and dominion, as having a throne, a kingdom, and a sceptre of that kingdom. He has all right, rule, authority, and power, both as a Mediator and a servant of God; and as Mediator; and so he is adequate and sufficient to all the intents and purposes of his mediatorial kingdom. [3.] God declares the eternal duration of the dominion and dignity of Christ, founded upon the divinity of his person; Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, from everlasting to everlasting, through all the ages of time, measure all the attempts of earth and hell to undermine and overturn him, and through all the endless ages of eternity, when time shall be no more. This distinguishes Christ's throne from all earthly thrones, which are tottering, and will at length tumble down; but the throne of Christ shall be as the days of heaven. [4.] God declares of Christ the perfect equity of his administration, and of the execution of his power, through all the parts of his government; A sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. He is a righteous Judge to the sceptre, and he uses it in perfect righteousness; the righteousness of his government proceeds from the righteousness of his person, from an essential eternal love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity, not merely from considerations of prudence or interest, but from an inward and immovable principle; Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest iniquity, Ps. 119. 138. Christ came to fulfill all righteousness, to bring in an everlasting righteousness; and God calls persons in all his ways, and holy in all his works. He has recommended righteousness to men, and restored it among them, as a most excellent and amiable thing. He came to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin as a hateful as well as hurtful thing. [5.] God declares of Christ how he was qualified for the office of Mediator, and how he was installed and confirmed therein. He was given to the Son, the Right hand of the Majesty on high; he was anointing him with the oil of gladness above all others. First, Christ has the name Messiah from his being anointed. God's anointing of Christ signifies both his qualifying of him for the office of the Mediator with the Holy Spirit and all his graces, and likewise his inauguration of him into the office, as prophets, priests, and kings, were by anointing. God, even thy God, imports the confirmation of Christ in the office of Mediator by the covenant of redemption and peace, that was between the Father and the Son. God is the God of Christ, as Christ is Man and Mediator.

Secondly, This anointing of Christ was with the oil of gladness, which signifies both the gladness and cheerfulness with which Christ undertook and went through the office of Mediator, (finding himself so absolutely sufficient for it,) and also that joy which was set before him as the reward of his service and sufferings, that crown of glory and gladness which he should wear for ever after the suffering of death. Thirdly, This anointing of Christ was above the anointing of his fellows; God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. Who are Christ's fellows? Has he any equals? Not as God, except the Father and Spirit, but these are not here meant. As Man, he has his fellows, and as an anointed Person; but his union is beyond all their's. 1. Above the angels, who may be said to be his fellows, as they are the sons of God by creation, and God's messengers, whom he employs in his service. 2. Above all prophets, priests, and kings, that ever were anointed with oil, as employed in the service of God on earth. 3. Above all the saints, who are his brethren, children of the same father, as he was a Partaker with them of flesh and blood. 4. Above all those who were related to him as Man, above all the house of David, all the tribe of Judah, all his brethren and kinsmen in the flesh. All God's other anointed ones had only the Spirit in a certain measure; Christ had the Spirit above measure, who was not only anointed with oil, but therefore goes through his work as Christ did, none takes so much pleasure in it as Christ does; for he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows.

The other passage of scripture in which is the superior excellence of Christ to the angels, is taken out of Ps. 102. 25—27. and is thus recited here.

10. And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: 11. They shall perish; but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; 12. And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same; and thy years shall not fail.

In these verses the omnipotence of the Lord Jesus Christ is declared, as it appears both in creating the world, and in changing it.

1. In creating the world; (v. 10.) And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thy hands. The Lord Christ has the original right to own and govern the world, because he made the world in the beginning; his right, as Mediator, was by commission from the Father; his right, as God with the Father, was absolute, resulting from his creating power. This power he had before the beginning of the world, and he exerted it in giving a beginning and being to the world. He must therefore be no part of the world himself, for then he must be his own creator, to be the author of all things, and by him all things consist, Col. 1. 17. He was not only above all things in condition, but before all things in existence; and therefore must be God, and self-existent. He laid the foundations of the earth, did not only introduce new forms into pre-existent matter, but made out of nothing the foundations of the earth, the firmament and the earth, the first fruits of things; he not only founded the earth, but the heavens too are the work of his hands, both the inhabitants and the hosts of heaven, the an ngels themselves; and therefore he must needs be infinitely superior to them.

2. It argues the world that he has made; and here the mutability of this world is brought in to illustrate the immutability of Christ.

(1.) This world is mutable, all created nature is so; this world has passed through many changes, and shall pass through more; all these changes are by the permission and under the direction of Christ, who made the world; (v. 11, 12.) They shall perish, they shall all wax old as doth a garment; as a vestment, thou shalt fold them up, and they shall be changed. This our visible world (both the earth and visible heavens) is growing old. Not only men and beasts and trees grow old, but this world itself grows old, and is hastening to its dissolution; it changes like a garment, has lost much of its beauty and strength; it grew old betimes on the first apostasy, and it has been waxing older and growing weaker ever since; it bears the symptoms of a dying world. But then its dissolution shall not be its utter destruction, but its change. Christ will fold up this world as a garment not to be abused any longer, not to be any longer used so as it has been. Let us not then set our hearts upon that which is not what we take it to be, and will not be what it now is. Sin has made a great change in the world for the worse, and Christ will make a great change in it for the better.

We read of new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Let the consideration of this wean us from the present world, and make us watchful, diligent, and desirous of that better world, and let us wait on Christ to change us into a meetness for that new world that is approaching; we cannot enter into it till we be new creatures.

(2.) Christ is immutable. Thus the Father testifies of him, Thou remainest, thy years shall not fail. Christ is the same in himself, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever, and the same to his people in all the changes of time. This may well support all who have an interest in Christ under all the changes they meet with in the world, and under all they feel in themselves. Christ is immutable and immortal, his years shall not fail. This may comfort us under all decays of nature that we may observe in ourselves or in our friends, though our flesh and heart fail, and our days are hastening to an end. Christ lives to take care of us while we live, and of our's when we are gone, and this should quicken us all to make our interest in him clear and sure, that our spiritual and eternal life may be hid with Christ in God.

13. But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? 14. Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

This concludes the comparison between Christ and the angels, and the preference of Christ to them God never said to the angels what he has said to Christ.

1. What has God said to Christ? He has said, "Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool; (Ps. 110. 1.) Receive thou glory, dominion, and rest; and remain in the administration of thy mediatorial kingdom until all thine enemies shall be bound, and all they that bear hate against thee; or thy footstool." Note, (1.) Christ Jesus has his enemies, (Would one think it?) enemies even among men; enemies to his sovereignty, to his cause, to his people; such as will not have him to reign over them. Let us not think it strange then if we have our enemies. Christ never did any thing to make his enemies; he has done a great deal to make all his friends and his Father's friends, and yet he has his enemies. (2.) All the enemies of Christ shall be made his footstool, either by humble submission and entire subjection to his will, casting themselves down at his feet, or by utter destruction; he shall trample upon those who continue obstinate, and shall triumph over them. (3.) God the Father has undertaken for this, and he will see it done, yea will himself do it; and though it be not present, it shall certainly be done, and Christ waits for it; and so must Christians wait till God has wrought all their works in them, for them, and by them. (4.) Christ shall go on to rule and reign till this is done; he shall not leave any of his great designs unfinished, he shall go on conquering and to conquer. And it becomes his people to go on in their duty, being what he would have them to be, doing what he would have them to do, and growing in his strength and grace, so that God would have them to avoid, bearing what he would have them to bear, till he makes them conquerors and more than conquerors over all their spiritual enemies.

2. What has God said of the angels? He never said to them as he said to Christ, Sit ye at my right hand; but he has said of them here, that they are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them. This shews that there is a difference between the angels and the angels. What the angels are as to their nature; they are spirits, without bodies or inclination to bodies, and yet they can assume bodies, and appear in them, when God pleases. They are spirits incorporeal, intelligent, active, substances; they excel in wisdom and strength. (2.) What the angels are as to their office; they are ministering spirits. Christ, as Mediator, is the great Minister of God in the great work of redemption. He is the Holy Spirit is the great Minister of God and Christ in the application of this redemption. Angels are ministering spirits under the blessed Trinity, to execute the divine will and pleasure, they are the ministers of Divine Providence. (3.) The angels are sent forth for this end—to minister to them who shall be the heirs of salvation. Here observe, [1.] The description given of the saints— they are heirs of salvation; at present they are under the heel of their enemies. They are heirs because they are children of God; if children, then heirs. Let us make sure that we are children by adoption and regeneration, having made a covenant-resignation of ourselves to God, and walking before him in a gospel-conversation, and then are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. [2.] The dignity and privilege of the saints—the angels are sent forth to minister to them. Thus they have done in attending and acting in the giving forth of the law, in fighting the battles of the saints, in destroying their enemies. They still minister for them in opposing the malice and power of evil spirits, in protecting and keeping their bodies, pitching their tents about their's, instructing, quickening, and comforting their souls under Christ and the Holy Ghost; and thus they shall do in gathering all the saints together at the last day. This God for the manifestation of. Note, (1.) What God's way, and take the comfort of this promise, that he will give his angels charge over you, to keep you in all your ways. They shall bear you up in their hands, lest you dash your feet against a stone, Ps. 91. 11, 12.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, the apostle, I. Makes some application of the doctrine laid down in the chapter foregoing, concerning the excellency of the person of Christ, both by way of exhortation and argument, v. 1. 4. II. Enlarges further upon the pre-eminence of Christ above the angels, v. 5. 7. III. Proceeds to remove the scandal of the cross, v. 10. 16. IV. Asserts the incarnation of Christ, taking upon him not
1. Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. 2. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward; 3. How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; 4. God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will.

The apostle proceeds in the plain profitable method of doctrine, reason, and use, through this epistle. Here we have the application of the truths before asserted and proved; this is brought in by the illusive particle therefore, with which this chapter begins, and which shews its connexion with the former; wherefrom it is clear proving Christ to be superior to the angels by whose ministry the law was given, and therefore that the gospel-dispensation must be more excellent than the legal, he now comes to apply this doctrine both by way of exhortation and argument.

I. By way of exhortation; (v. 1.) Therefore we ought to give the more diligent heed to the things which we have heard. This is the first way by which we are to shew our esteem of Christ and of the gospel. It is the great concern of every one under the gospel, to give the most earnest heed to all gospel-discoveries and directions; to prize them highly in his judgments as matters of the greatest importance, to hearken to them diligently in all the opportunities he has for that purpose; to read them frequently, to meditate on them closely, and to mix faith with them; to embrace them in our hearts and affections, to retain them in our memories, and firmly to regulate our words and actions according to them.

II. By way of argument, he adds strong motives to enforce the exhortation:

1. From the great loss we shall sustain, if we do not take this earnest heed to the things we have heard—we shall let them slip. They will leak, and run out of our heads, lips, and lives, and we shall be great losers by our neglect. Learn, (1.) When we have received gospel-truths into our minds, we are in danger of letting them slip. Our minds and memories are like a leaky vessel, they do not without much care retain what is poured into them; this proceeds from the corruption of our natures, the enmity and subtlety of Satan, he steals away the word; from the entanglements and snares of the world, the thorns that choke the good seed. (2.) Those meet with an inconceivable loss, postle having gospel-truths, which they had received, slip out of their minds; they have lost a treasure far better than thousands of gold and silver; the seed is lost, their time and pains in hearing lost, and their hopes of a good harvest lost; all is lost, if the gospel be lost. (3.) This consideration should be a strong motive both to our attention to the gospel, and our retention of it; and indeed if we do not well attend, we shall not long retain, the word of God; slightly hearers will soon be forgetful hearers.

2. Another argument is taken from the dreadful punishment we shall incur, if we do not do this duty: a more dreadful punishment than those fell under, who neglected and disobeyed the law, v. 2, 3. Here observe,

(1.) How the law is described: it was the word spoken by angels, and declared to be steadfast; it was the word spoken by angels, because given by the ministration of angels, they sounding the trumpet, and perhaps forming the words according to God’s direction; and God, as Judge, will make use of the angels to sound the trumpet a second time, and gather all to his tribunal, to receive their sentence, as they have conformed or not conformed to this law. And this law is declared to be steadfast; it is like the promise, yea and amen; it is true and faithful, and it will abide and have its force whether men obey it or no; for every transgression and disobedience will receive a just recompense of reward. If men trifle with the law of God, the law will not trifle with them; it has taken hold of the sinners of former ages, and will take hold of them in all ages. God, as a righteous Governor and Judge, when he had given forth the law, would not let the contempt and breach of it go unpunished; but he has from time to time reckoned with the transgressors of it, and recompensed them according to the nature and aggravation of their disobedience. Observe, The severest punishment God ever inflicted upon sinners, is no more than what sin deserves; it is a just recompense of reward; punishments are as just, and as much due to sin, as rewards are to obedience, yea more due, because it is consistent with the righteousness of God (Rom. 3. 6),

(2.) How the gospel is described: it is salvation, a great salvation; so great salvation, that no other salvation can compare with it; so great, that none can fully express, no, nor yet conceive, how great it is. It is a great salvation that the gospel discovers, for it discovers a great Saviour, one who has manifested God to be reconciled to our nature, and reconcilable to our persons: it shews how we may be saved from so great sin, and so great misery, and restored to so great holiness and so great happiness. The gospel discovers to us a great Saviour, to qualify us for salvation, and to bring us to the Saviour: the gospel unfolds a great and excellent dispensation of grace, a new covenant; the great charter-deed and instrument is settled and secured to all those who come into the bond of the covenant.

(3.) How sinning against the gospel is described: it is declared that sinning against the gospel is condemnation, and it is a contempt put upon the saving grace of God in Christ, making light of it, not caring for it, not thinking it worth their while to acquaint themselves with it, not regarding either the worth of gospel-grace, or their own want of it, and undone state without it; not using their endeavours to discern the truth of it, and assent to it, nor to discern the goodness of it, so as to approve of it, or apply it to themselves. In these things they discover a perfect defect of this great salvation. Let us all take heed that we be not found among those wicked wretched sinners who neglect the grace of the gospel.

(4.) How the misery of such sinners is described; it is declared to be unavoidable; (v. 3.) How shall we escape? This intimates, (1.) That the despisers of this salvation are condemned already, under arrest and in the hands of sin, and are the subjects of punishment by the sin of Adam; and they have strengthened their bonds by their personal transgression; (John 3. 18.) He that believeth not, is condemned already.

(2.) There is no escaping out of this condemned state, but by accepting the great salvation discovered in the gospel; as for those who neglect it, the wrath of God is upon them, and it abides upon them; they cannot disengage themselves, they are not to be distinguished from others, (2.) That there is a yet more aggravated curse and condemnation waiting for all those who despise the grace of God in Christ, and that most heavy curse-they cannot escape; they can neither conceal their persons, at the great day, nor deny the fact, nor bribe the judge, nor break the prison. There is no door of mercy left open for them, there shall be no more sacrifice for sin, they are irrecoverably lost. The unavoidableness of the misery of such is here expressed by the question, Shall we escape? It is an appeal to universal reason, to the consciences of sinners themselves; it is a challenge to all their power and policy, to all their interest and alliances, whether they, or any for them, can find out, or can force out, a way of escape from the vindictive justice and wrath of God. It intimates, that the neglecters of this great salvation will be left not only without friends, but without plea and excuse, at the judgment-day; if they are asked why they have to suffer, that the sentence should not be executed upon them, they will be speechless, and self-condemned by their own consciences, even to a greater degree of misery than those fell under, who neglected the authority of the law, or sinned without the law.

3. Another argument to enforce the exhortation is taken from the dignity and excellency of the Person by whom the gospel began to be spoken; (v. 3.) It began at first to be spoken by the Lord, that is, by the Lord Jesus Christ, who is Jehovah, the Lord of life and glory, Lord of all, and as such possessed of unerring wisdom, infinite and inexhaustible goodness, unquestionable and unchangeable veracity and faithfulness, absolute sovereignty and authority, and irresistible power. This great Lord of all was the first who began to speak it plainly and fully, in types and shadows, as it was before he came. Now surely it may be expected that all will reverence this Lord, and take heed to a gospel that began to be spoken by one who spake so as never man spake.

4. Another argument is taken from the character of those who were witnesses to Christ and the gospel; (v. 3, 4.) It was confirmed to us by them that heard him, God also bearing them witness. Observe, (1.) The promulgation of the gospel was continued and confirmed by those who heard Christ, by the evangelists and apostles, who were eye and ear witnesses of what Jesus Christ began both to do and to teach, Acts 1. 1. These witnesses could have no worldly end or interest of their own to serve hereby. Nothing could induce them to give in their evidence but the Redeemer's glory, and their own and others' salvation; they exposed themselves by their testimony to the loss of all that was dear to them in life, and many of them sealed it with their blood. (2.) God himself bore witness to those who were witnesses for Christ; he testified that they were authorized and sent by him to preach Christ and salvation by him to the world. And how did he bear them witness? Not only by giving them great peace in their own minds, great patience under all their sufferings, and unshakeable courage and joy; (though these were of some) but he bore them witness by signs and wonders, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his will. [1.] With signs: signs of his gracious presence with them, and of his power working by them. [2.] Wonders: works quite beyond the power of nature, and out of the course of nature, filling the spectators with wonder and admiration, stirring their thoughts and hearts to inquire into it. [3.] Deeds of power and mighty works, in which an almighty agency appeareth; and to inquirers of all reasonable controversy. [4.] Gifts of the Holy Ghost, qualifying, enabling, and exciting them to do the work to which they were called; divisions or distributions of the Holy Ghost, diversities of gifts, 1 Cor. 12. 4, 8c. And all this according to God's own will. It was the will of God that we should have sure footing for our faith, and a strong foundation for our hope in receiving the gospel. As at the giving forth of the law there were signs and wonders, by which God testified the authority and excellency of it; so he witnessed to the gospel by more and greater miracles, as to a more excellent and abiding dispensation.

5. For unto the angels hath he not put in subjectition the world to come, whereof we speak. 6. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him; or the Son of man, that thou visitest him? 7. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: 8. Thou hast put all things in subjectition under his feet. For in that he put all in subjectition under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. 9. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

The apostle having made this serious application of the doctrine of the personal excellency of Christ above the angels, he now returns to that pleasant subject again, and pursues it further; (v. 5.) For unto the angels hath he not put in subjectition the world to come, wherefore we speak.

I. Here the apostle lays down a negative proposition, including a positive one—that the state of the gospel-church, which is here called the world to come, is not subjected to the angels, but under the special care and direction of the Redeemer himself. Neither the state in which the church is at present, nor that more completely restored state at which it shall arrive when the prince of this world is cast out and the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdom of Christ, is left to the government of the angels; but Jesus Christ will take to him his great power, and will reign. He does not make that use of the ministration of angels, to give the gospel as he did the law, which was the state of the old or antiquated world. This new world is committed to Christ, and only put in absolute subjectition to him in all spiritual and eternal concerns. Christ has the administration of the gospel-church, which at once speaks Christ's honour, and the church's happiness and safety. It is certain that neither the first creation of the church, nor its after-edification or administration, nor its final judgment and perfection, is committed to the angels, but to Christ. God would not put so great a trust in his holy ones; his angels were too few for the purpose.

II. We have a scripture-account of that blessed Jesus to whom the gospel-world is put into subjectition. It is taken from Ps. 8. 4—6. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him; or the Son of man, that thou visitest him? &c. These words are to be considered both as applicable to mankind in general, and as applied here to the Lord Jesus Christ. As applicable to mankind in general; where we have an affectionate, thankful expostulation with the great God concerning his wonderful condescension and kindness to the sons of men. (1.) In remembering them, or being mindful of them, when yet they had no being but in the counsels of divine love. The favours of God to men all spring up out of his eternal thoughts and purposes of mercy for them; as all our duty is to God spring forth from our remembrance of him. God is always mindful of us, let us never be forgetful of him. (2.) In visiting him. God's purpose of favours for man is productive of gracious visits to them; he comes to see us, how it is with us, what we all, what we want, what dangers we are exposed to, what difficulties we have to encounter; and by his visitation our spirit is preserved. Let us use daily thanksgiving to him in a way of duty. (3.) In making him the head of all the creatures in this lower world, the top-stone of his building, the chief of the ways of God on earth, and only a little lower than the angels in place, and respect to the body, while here, and to be made like the angels, and equal to the angels, at the resurrection of the just, Luke 20. 36. (4.) In crowning him with glory and honour, the honour of having noble powers and faculties of soul, excellent organs and parts of body; whereby he is allied to both worlds, capable of serving the interests of both worlds, and of enjoying the happiness of both. (5.) In giving him right to and dominion over the inferior creatures, which did continue so long as he continued in his allegiance and duty to God. 3. This is here plainly applied to the Lord Jesus Christ, and the whole that is here said, can only be applied to him, v. 8, 9. And here you may observe, (1.) What is the moving cause of all the kindness God shews to men in giving Christ for them and to them; and that is, the grace of God. For what is man? (2.) What are the fruits of this free grace of God with respect to the gift of Christ for us and to us, as related in this scripture-testimony. [1.] That God was mindful of Christ for us in the covenant of redemption. [2.] That God visited Christ on our account; and it was concluded between them, that in the fulness of time Christ should come into the world, as the great atonement Sacrifice. [3.] That God had made him a little lower than the angels, in his being made man, that he might suffer and humble himself to death. [4.] That God crowned the human nature of Christ with glory and honour, in his being perfectly holy, and having the Spirit without measure, and by an ineffable union with the divine nature in the second Person of the Trinity, the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him bodily; that by his sufferings he might make satisfaction, tasting death for every man, sensibly feeling and undergoing the bitter agonies of that shameful, painful, and cursed death of the cross; hereby putting all mankind into a state of trial. [5.] That, as an atonement of his humiliation in suffering death, he was crowned with glory and honour, advanced to the highest dignity in heaven, and having absolute dominion over all things; thus accomplishing that ancient scripture in Christ, which never was so accomplished or fulfilled in any mere man that ever was upon earth. And now, having mentioned the death of Christ, the apostle proceeds.

10. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. 11. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; 12. Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee. 13. And again, I will put my trust in him. And again, Behold, I and the children which God hath given me.

The apostle here prevents and removes the scandal of the cross; this he does by shewing both how it became God, that Christ should suffer, and how much man should be benefited by those sufferings.

1. How it became God, that Christ should suffer; (v. 10.) For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons to glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. Where, 1. God is described as the God of glory, and first cause of all sufferings, and as such it became him to secure his own glory in all that he did, not only to act so that he might in nothing dishonour himself, but that he might from every thing have a revenue of glory. 2. He is declared to have acted up to this glorious character in the work of redemption, as to the choice both of the end and of the means.

(1.) In the choice of the end; and that was, to bring many sons to glory, to present glory in enjoying the glorious privileges of the gospel, and to future glory in heaven, which will be glory indeed, an exceeding eternal weight of glory.

Here observe, [1.] We must be the sons of God both by adoption and regeneration, before we can be brought to the glory of heaven. Heaven is the inheritance; and only those that are the children, are heirs of that glory. [2.] These children of God are the children of God; to them that receive Christ, he has granted the power and privilege of being the children of God, even to as many as believe on his name, John 1. 12. [3.] Though the sons of God are but a few in one place, and at one time; yet, when they shall be all brought together, it will appear that they are many. Christ is the First-born among many brethren. [4.] All the sons of God, how many soever they are, or however dispersed and divided, shall at length be brought together to glory.

(2.) In the choice of the means. [1.] In finding out such a Person as should be the captain of our salvation; those that are saved must come to that salvation under the guidance of a Captain and Leader sufficient for that purpose; and they must be all enlisted under the banner of this Captain; they must endure hardship as good soldiers of Christ; they must follow their Captain, and they that do so shall be brought safely off, and shall inherit great glory and honour. [2.] In making this Captain of our salvation perfect through sufferings. God the Father made the Lord Jesus Christ the Captain of our salvation; that is, he consecrated, he appointed him to that office, he gave him a commission for it, and he made him a perfect Captain. He had perfection of wisdom, and courage, and strength, by the Spirit of the Lord, which he had without measure; he was made perfect through sufferings; that is, he perfected the work of our redemption by shedding his blood, and was thereby perfectly qualified to be a Mediator between God and man. He found his way to the crown by the cross, and so must his people too. The excellent Dr. Owen observes, that the Lord Christ, being consecrated and appointed, through suffering, has consecrated the way of suffering for all his followers to pass through unto glory, and hereby their sufferings are made necessary and unavoidable, they are hereby made honourable, useful, and profitable.

II. He shews how much they would be benefited by the cross and sufferings of Christ; as there was nothing unbecoming so much as God and Christ, so there was that which would be very beneficial to men, in these sufferings. Hereby they are brought into a near union with Christ, and into a very endearing relation.

1. Into a near union; (v. 11.) Both he that sanctifieth and they that are sanctified are all of one. Observe, Christ is he that sanctifieth; he has purchased and sent the sanctifying Spirit; he is the Head of all sanctifying influences. The Spirit sanctified as the Spirit of Christ. True believers are they who are sanctified, endowed with holy principles and powers, separated and set apart from mean and vile uses and purposes, for so they must be before they can be brought to glory. Now Christ, who is the Agent in this work of sanctification, and Christians, who are the recipient subjects, are all of one. How? Why, (1.) They are all of one heavenly Father, and that is, God. God is the Father of Christ by eternal generation, and by miraculous conception; of Christians by adoption and regeneration. (2.) They are of one earthly father and believing, and both of the same human nature. (3.) Of one Spirit, holy and heavenly disposition; the same mind is in them that was in Christ, though not in the same measure; the same Spirit informs and actuates the Head and all the members.

2. Into an endearing relation. This results from the union. And here first he declares what this relation is, and then he quotes three texts out of the Old Testament to illustrate and prove it.

(1.) He declares what this relation is; he and believers being all of one, he therefore is not ashamed to call them brethren. Observe, [1.] Christ and believers are brethren; not only bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, but spirit of his Spirit; brethren by the whole blood, in what is heavenly as well as in what is earthly. [2.] Christ is not ashamed to own this relation, and he is not ashamed to call them brethren which is wonderful goodness and condescension in him, considering their meanness by nature, and wileness by sin; but he will never be ashamed of any that are not ashamed of him, and who take care not to be a shame and reproach to him and to themselves. [2.] He illustrates this from three texts of scripture. The first is out of Ps. 22. 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praises unto thee. This was an eminent prophecy of Christ; it begins with his words on the cross, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me? Now here it is foretold, [1.] That Christ should have a church or congregation, in the world, a company of volunteers, freely willing to follow him. [2.] That these should not only be brethren to one another, but to Christ himself. [3.] That he would declare his Father's name to them. Here he introduces, his mind and will: this he did in his own person, while he dwelt among us, and by his Spirit poured out upon his disciples, enabling them to spread the knowledge of God in the world from one generation to another, to the end of the world. [4.] That Christ would sing praise to his Father in the church. The glory of the Father was what Christ had in his eye; his heart was set upon it, he laid out himself for it, and he would have his people to join with him in it.

The second scripture is quoted from Ps. 18. 2. And again, I will put my trust in him. That psalm sets forth the troubles that David, as a type of Christ, met with, and how he in all his troubles put his trust in God. Now this shews, that beside his divine nature, which needed no supports, he was to take another, and upon him, which would be that support which none but God could give. He suffered and trusted as our Head and President. Even in locum. His brethren must suffer and trust too.

The third scripture is taken from Isa. 8. 18. Behold, I and the children which God hath given me. This proves Christ really and truly Man, for parents and children are of the same nature; children were given him in like manner, in that he was his external love, and that covenant of peace that was between them. And they are given to Christ at their conversion. When they take hold of his covenant, then Christ receives them, rules over them, rejoices in them, perfects all their affairs, takes them up to heaven, and there presents them to his Father, Behold, I and the children which thou hast given me.

14. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage. 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. 17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people: 18. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Here the apostle proceeds to assert the incarnation of Christ, as taking upon him not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham; and he shews the reason and design of his so doing.

This is the more prominent point that is asserted; (v. 16.) Verily he took upon him not the nature of angels, but he took upon him the seed of Abraham. He took part of flesh and blood; though as God he pre-existed from all eternity, yet in the fulness of time he took our nature into union with his divine nature, and became really and truly Man. He did not lay hold of angels, but he laid hold of the seed of Abraham. The angels fell, and he let them go, and lie under the desert, defilement, and dominion of their sin, without hope or help. Christ never designed to be the Saviour of the fallen angels; as their tree fell, so it lies, and must lie to eternity, and therefore he did not assume their nature: the nature of angels could not be an atoning sacrifice for the sin of man. Now Christ resolving to recover the seed of Abraham, and raise them up from their fallen state, he took upon him the human nature from one descended from the line of Abraham, that the same that had sinned, might suffer, to restore human nature to a state of hope and trial; and all that accepted of mercy, to a state of special favour and salvation. Now there is hope and help for the chief of sinners in and through Christ. Here is a price paid sufficient for all, and suitable to all, for it was in our nature. Let us all then know the day of our gracious visitation, and improve that distinguishing mercy which has been shown to fallen men, not to the fallen angels.

II. The reasons and designs of the incarnation of Christ are declared, 1. Because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he must take part of the same, and be made like his brethren, v. 14, 15. For no higher nor lower nature than man's that had sinned, could so suffer for the sin of man as to satisfy the just retribution of God, and to a state of hope, and make believers the children of God, and so brethren to Christ. 2. He became Man, that he might die; as God, he could not die, and therefore he assumes another nature and state. Here the wonderful love of God appeared, that, when Christ knew what he must suffer in our nature, and how he must die in it, yet he so readily took it upon him. The legal sacrifices and offerings God could not accept as a propitiation; a body was prepared for Christ, and he said, Lo! I come, I delight to do thy will. 3. That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil, v. 14.

The Devil was the first sinner, and the first tempter to sin, and sin was the procuring cause of death; and he may be said to have the power of death, as he draws men into sin, the ways whereby are death, and as he is often permitted to terrify the consciences of men with the fear of death, and as he is the executor of many a breach of divine justice, hailing men from their bodies to the tribunal of God, there to receive their doom; and then being their tormentor, as he was before their tempter; in these respects he may be said to have had the power of death. But now Christ has so far destroyed him who had the power of death, that he can keep none under the power of spiritual death; nor can he draw any into sin, (the procuring cause of death,) nor make an end of the soul any more than a body, nor execute the sentence upon any but those who choose and continue to be his willing slaves, and persist in their enmity to God. 4. That he might deliver his own people from the slavish fear of death that they are often subject to. This may refer to the Old Testament saints, who were more under a spirit of bondage, because life and immortality were not so fully brought to light as they are of late; and this is referred to all the people of God, whether under the Old Testament or the New, whose minds are often in perplexing fears about death and eternity. Christ became Man, and died, to deliver them from those perplexities of soul, by letting them know that death is not only a conquered enemy, but a reconciled friend, not sent to hurt the soul, or separate it from the love of God, but to put an end to all their grievances and complaints, and to give them a pass- sion to eternal life and blessedness; that death now to them is not in the hand of Satan, but in the hand of Christ; not Satan's servant, but Christ's servant, has not hell following it, but heaven to all who are in Christ. 5. Christ must be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to the justice and honour of God, and to the support and comfort of his people. He must be faithful to God, and mer- ciful to men. (1.) In things pertaining to God, to his justice, and to his honour; to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, to make all the attributes of the divine nature, and all the persons subsisting therein, harmonize in man's recovery, and fully to reconcile God and man. Observe, [1.] There was a great breach, and quenching of divine justice, haling their souls into hell; by reason of sin. [2.] Christ, by becoming Man and dying, has taken up the quarrel, and made reconciliation so far, that God is ready to receive all into favour and friendship, who come to him through Christ. (2.) In things pertaining to his people, to their support and comfort; (v. 18.) In that he suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. [1.] Christ's compassion—he is able to succour them that are tempted. He is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, a sympathizing Physician, tender and skilful; he knows how to deal with tempted, sorrowing souls; he has himself been a partaker of the same disease, not of sin, but of temptation and trouble of soul. The remembrance of his own sorrows and temptations makes him mindful of the trials of his people, and ready to help them. Here observe, First, The best of Christians are subject to temptations, to many temptations, while in this world; let us never count upon an absolute freedom from temptations in this world. Secondly, Temptations bring our souls into such distress and danger, that they need support and succour. Thirdly, Christ is ready and willing to succour those who under their temptations apply themselves to him; and he became Man, and was tempted, that he might be every way qualified to succour his people.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter, the apostle applies what he had said, in the chapter foregoing, concerning the priesthood of Christ. 1. In a serious pathetic exhortation, that this great High Priest, who was discovered to them, might be seriously considered by the grace of God and not be despised. He then adds many weighty counsels and cautions, from v. 7, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; 2. Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. 3. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, in as much as he who hath builded the house, hath more honour than the house. 4. For every house is builded by some man, but he that buildeth all things, is God. 5. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; 6. But Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

In these verses we have the application of that doctrine laid down in the close of the last chapter, concerning the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ. And observe, 1. In how fervent and affectionate a manner the apostle exhorts Christians to have this High Priest much in their thoughts, and to make him the Ob- ject of their close and serious consideration; and surely no one in earth or heaven deserves our con- sideration more than he. That this exhortation might be made the more effectual, observe, 1. The honourable compellation used toward those to whom he wrote; Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling. (1.) Brethren, not only in name, but in profession and in Christ; and in him that are this divine and sacred office of God; brethren, and should love and live like brethren. (2.) Holy brethren; not only in profession and title, but in principle and practice, in heart and life. This has been turned by some into scorn; "These," say they, "are the holy brethren;" but it is dangerous jesting with such edge-tools; be not mockers, lest your bands be made strong. Let those who are thus despised and scorned, labour to be holy brethren indeed, and approve themselves so to God; and they need not to be ashamed of the title, nor dread the scoffs of the profane. The day is coming, when those that make this a term of repro- ach, would count it their greatest honour and happiness to be taken into this sacred brotherhood. (5.) Partakers of the heavenly calling; partakers of the name of grace, and of the Spirit of grace, that came from heaven, and by whom Christians are effectually called out of darkness into marvellous light; that calling which brings down heaven into the souls of men, raises them up to a heavenly tem- per and conversation, and prepares them to live for ever with God in heaven.

2. The titles he gives to Christ, whom he would have them consider, (1.) As the Apostle of our profession, the prime Minister, of the gospel-church, a Messenger, and a Principal Messenger, sent of God to men, upon the most important errand, the great Revealer of that faith which we profess to hold, and of that hope which we profess to have. (2.) Not only the Apostle, but the High Priest too, of our profession, the Chief Officer of the Old Testament as well as the Chief Officer of this New Testament, had, in time, delivered under each dispensation, upon whose satisfaction and intercession we profess to depend for pardon of sin, and acceptance with God. (3.) As Christ, the Messiah anointed and every way qualified for the office both of Apostle and High Priest. (4.) As Jesus, our Saviour, our Healer, the Great Physician of souls, typified by the brazen serpent that Moses lifted up in the wilderness, that those who were all the while the fiery serpents, might look to him, and be saved.

II. We have the duty we owe to him who bears all these high and honourable titles, and that is, to consider him as thus characterized. Consider what he is in himself, what he is to us, and what he will be to us hereafter and for ever; consider him, fix your thoughts upon him with the greatest attention, and act toward him as the Maker and Finisher of your faith. Here observe, 1. Many that profess faith in Christ, have not a due consideration for him; he is not so much thought of as he deserves to be, and desires to be, by those that expect salvation from him. 2. Close and serious consideration of Christ would be of great advantage to us, to increase our acquaintance with him, and to engage our love and our obedience to him, and reliance on him. 3. Even those that are holy brethren, and partakers of the heavenly calling, have need to stir up one another to think more of Christ than they do, to have him more in their minds; the best of his people think too seldom and too slightly of him. 4. We must consider Christ as he is described to us in the scriptures, and form our apprehensions of him from thence, not from any vain conceptions and fancies of our own.

III. We have several arguments drawn up to enforce this duty of considering Christ the Apostle and High Priest of our profession. The first is taken from his fidelity, v. 2. He was faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was in all his house. 1. Christ is an appointed Mediator; God the Father has sent and sealed him to that office, and therefore his mediation is acceptable to the Father. 2. He is faithful to that appointment, and cannot be gainsaid, or daunted, or overthwarted, or bribed, nor can our faith or love to him. 3. That he is as faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was in all his house. Moses was faithful in the discharge of his office to the Jewish church in the Old Testament, and so is Christ under the New; this was a proper argument to urge upon the Jews, who had so high an opinion of the Jews, and so much fondness and partiality for Moses, but was typical of Christ's. Another argument is taken from the superior glory and excellence of Christ above Moses; (v. 3—6) therefore they were more obliged to consider Christ. (1.) Christ was a Maker of the house, Moses but a member in it. By the house we are to understand the church of God, the people of God incorporated together under Christ and God, that is, under spiritual officers, according to his law, observing his institutions. Christ is the Maker of this house of the church in all ages: Moses was a minister in the house, he was instrumental under Christ, in governing and edifying the house, but Christ is the Maker of all things; for he is God, and no one less than God could build the church, either lay the foundation, or carry on the superstructure. No less power was requisite to make the church than to make the world; the world was made out of nothing, the church made out of materials altogether unfit for such a building. Christ, who is God, drew the platform of the church, provided the materials, and by almighty power disposed them to receive the form; he has compacted and united this his house, has settled the orders of it, and crowned all with his presence; and this is the true glory of this house of God. (2.) Christ was the Master of this house, as well as the Maker, v. 5. 6. This house is styled his house, as the Son of God. Moses was only a faithful servant, for a testimony of those things that were to be spoken after; Christ, as the eternal Son of God, is the rightful Owner and Sovereign Ruler of the church. Moses was only a typical governor, in the name of all those things relating to the church, which would be more clearly, completely, and comfortably revealed in the gospel by the Spirit of Christ; and therefore Christ is worthy of more glory than Moses, and of greater regard and consideration. This argument the apostle concludes, [1.] With a comfortable accommodation of it to himself and all true believers; (v. 6) whose house we are: each of us personally, as we are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and Christ dwells in us by faith; all of us jointly, as we are united by the bonds of graces, truths, ordinances, gospel-discipline, and devotions. [2.] With a characteristic description of those persons who constitute this house; "if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm to the end; if we maintain a bold and open profession of the truths of the gospel, upon which our hopes of grace and glory are built, and live upon and to these hopes, so as to have a holy rejoicing in them, which shall abide firm to the end, notwithstanding all that we may meet with in so doing." So that you see there must not only be a setting out well in the ways of Christ, but a steady fastness and perseverance therein unto the end. We have here a direction what those must do, who would partake of the dignity and privileges of the household of Christ. First, They must take the truths of the gospel into their heads and hearts. Secondly, They must build their hopes of happiness upon those truths. Thirdly, They must make an open profession of those truths. Fourthly, They must live so up to them as to keep their evidences clear, and may rejoice in hope, and then they must in all perseverance to the end. In a word, they must walk closely, comportly, courageously, and constant, in the face faith and practice of the gospel, that their Master, when he comes, may own and approve them.

7. Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day if ye will hear his voice, 8. Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness: 9. When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works, forty years. 10. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. 11. So I sware in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest.) 12. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. 13. But exhort one another daily while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. 14. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the begin-thing of our confidence steadfast unto the end; 15. While it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. 16. For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses. 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years? Was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcases fell in the wilderness? 18. And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? 19. So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Here the apostle proceeds, pressing upon them serious counsels and cautions, to the close of the chapter; and he recites a passage out of Ps. 95. 7, &c. where observe,

1. What he counsels them to do—to give a speedy and present attention to the call of Christ. "Hear his voice, assent to, approve of, and consider, what God in Christ speaks unto you; apply it to yourselves with suitable affections and endeavours, and set about it this very day, for to-morrow it may be too late."

II. What he cautions them against—hardening their hearts, turning the deaf ear to the calls and counsels of God. With the voice of sin, the excellency of holiness, the necessity of receiving him by faith as your Saviour, do not shut your ear and heart against such a voice as this."

III. Whose example he warns them by—that of the Israelites their fathers in the wilderness, as in the provocation and day of temptation; this refers to that remarkable passage of Massah Meribah, Exod. 17. 2. Observe,

1. Days of temptation are often days of provocation. 2. To provoke God, when he is trying us, and letting us see that we entirely depend and immediately live upon him, is a provocation with a witness. 3. The hardening of our hearts is the spring of all our other sins. 4. The sins of others, especially our relations, should be a warning to us. Our fathers' sins and punishments should be remembered by us, to deter us from following their evil examples. Now as to the sin of the fathers of the Jews, here reflected upon, observe, (1.) The state in which these fathers were, when they thus sinned; they were in the wilderness, brought out of Egypt, but not got into Canaan, the thoughts whereof should have restrained them from sin. (2.) The sin they were guilty of; they tempted and provoked God; they distrusted God, murmured against Moses, and would not attend to the voice of God. (3.) The aggravations of their sin; they sinned in the wilderness, where they had a more immediate dependence upon God; they sinned when God was trying them; they sinned when they saw his works—works of wonder wrought for their deliverance out of Egypt, and their support and supply in the wilderness from day to day. They continued thus to sin against God forty years. (4.) These were their heart-errors. (5.) The source and spring of such aggravations, which were, [1.] They erred in their hearts; and these heart-errors produced many other errors in their lips and lives. [2.] They did not know God's ways, though he had walked before them; they did not know his ways; neither those ways of his providence, in which he had walked toward them, nor those ways of his precepts, in which they ought to have walked toward God; they did not observe either his providences or his ordinances in a right manner. (5.) The just and great resentment God had at their sins, and yet the great patience he exercised toward them; [v. 10.] Wherefore I am grieved with that generation. Note, [1.] All sin, especially sin committed by God's professing privileged people, does not only anger and afflict God, but it grieves him. (2.) God is loth to destroy his people in or for their sins, he waits long to be gracious to them. [3.] God keeps an exact account of the time that people go on sinning against him, and in grieving him by their sins; but at length, if they by their sins continue to grieve the Spirit of God, their sins shall be made grievous to their own spirits, either in a way of judgment or mercy. (6.) The irreversible doom passed upon them at last for their sins of long duration, and in his wrath, that they should not enter into his rest; the rest the either of an earthly Canaan, or of a heavenly Canaan. Observe, [1.] Sin, long continued in, will kindle the divine wrath, and make it flame out against sinners. [2.] God's wrath will discover itself in its righteous resolution to destroy the impenitent; he will swear in his wrath, not rashly, but righteously, and his wrath will make their condition a restless condition; there is no resting under the wrath of God.

IV. What use the apostle makes of their awful example, v. 12, 13, &c. He gives the Hebrews a proper caution, and enforces it with an affectionate compulsion.

1. He gives the Hebrews a proper caution; the word is, Take heed, psiri—look to it; "Look about you; be upon your guard against enemies both within and without, in this circuit you see what kept many of your forefathers out of Canaan, and made their carcases fall in the wilderness; take heed lest you fall into the same sin and snare and dreadful sentence. For you see Christ is head of the church, a much greater person than Moses, and your contempt of him must be a greater sin than their contempt of Moses; and so you are in danger of falling under a severer sentence than they." Observe, The ruin of others should be warnings to us to take heed of the rock they split upon; Israel's fall should for ever be a warning to all who come after them; for all these things happened to them for ensamples, (1 Cor. 10. 11.) and should be remembered by us. Take heed; all who would get safe to heaven must look about them.

2. He enforces the admonition with an affectionate compulsion; "Brethren, not only in the flesh, but to the conscience of him I love, and for whose welfare I labour and long." And here he enlarges upon the matter of the admonition; "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. Where observe, (1.) A heart of unbelief is an evil heart. Unbelief is a great sin, it vitiates the heart of man. (2.) An evil heart of unbelief is at the bottom of all our falsh departures from God; it is a leading step to apostasy; if we once alienate ourselves to distrust God, we may soon desert him. (3.) Christian brethren have need to be cautioned against apostasy. Let them that think they stand, take heed lest they fall.

3. He subjoins good counsel to the caution, and advises them to that which would be a remedy against this evil heart of unbelief—that they should处处 observe the word of God and meditate upon it daily. Observe, v. 13. Observe, (1.) We should be doing all the good we can to one another while we are together, which will be but a short and uncertain time. (2.) Since to-morrow is none of our's, we must make the best improvement of this day. (3.) If Christians do not exhort one another daily, they will be in danger of being hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Note, [1.] There is a great deal of deceitfulness in sin; it appears fair, but it is filthy; it appears pleasant, but it is pernicious; it promises much, but performs nothing. [2.] The deceitfulness of sin is of a hardening nature to the soul; one sin allowed prepares for another; every act of sin confirms the habit; sinning against conscience is the way to scare the conscience; and therefore it should be the great concern of every one to exhort himself and others to beware of sin.

4. It befauls those who not only set out well, but hold on well, and hold out to the end; (v. 14.)

We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end. Here observe, (1.) The saints’ privilege; they are made partakers of Christ, that is, of the spirit, nature, graces, righteousness, and life of Christ; they are interested in all that is Christ’s, in all that he is, in all that he has done, or is to do. The condition of those who enjoy that privilege, and that is, their perseverance in the bold and open profession and practice of Christ and Christianity unto the end. Not but they shall persevere, being kept by the mighty power of God through faith to salvation, but to be pressed thus to it, is one means by which Christ helps his people to persevere. This tends to make them watchful and diligent, and so keeps them from apostasy. (2.) They have this same spirit with us; such Christians set out in the ways of God, they should maintain and evidence to the end. They who begin seriously and with lively affections and holy resolutions and humble reliance, should go on in the same spirit. But, [2.] There are a great many who in the beginning of their profession shew a great deal of courage and confidence, but do not hold it fast to the end. (3.) Perseverance in faith is the best evidence of the sincerity of our faith.

3. The apostle resumes what he had quoted before from Ps. 95. 7, &c. and he applies it close to those of that generation, v. 15, 16, &c. While it is said, To-day if ye will hear, &c. as if he should say, “What was recited before from that scripture, belonged not only to former ages, but to you now, and to all who shall come after you; that you to-morrow may hear you fall not into the same sins, lest you fall under the same condemnation.” The apostle tells them, that though some who had heard the voice of God, did provoke him, yet all did not so. Observe, (1.) Though the majority of hearers provoked God by unbelief, yet some there were who believed the report. (2.) Though the hearing of the word be the ordinary means of salvation, yet, if it be not hearkened to, it will expose men more to the anger of God. (3.) God has a remnant that shall be obedient to his voice, and he will take care of such, and make mention of them with honour. (4.) If these should fall in a common calamity, yet they shall partake of eternal salvation, while disobedient hearers perish for ever.

6. And Lastly, The apostle puts some queries upon what had been before mentioned, and gives proper answers to them; (v. 17—22.)

--The two great events of \textcopyright\, With them that sinned. (2.) God is grieved and provoked most by sins publicly committed by the generality of a nation; when sin becomes epidemic, it is most provoking. (3.) God grieves to hear of sin, when it is practised with the wickedness of general and prevailing wickedness; yet he will at length ease himself of public offenders by public judgments. (4.) Unbelief (and rebellion which is the consequent of it) is the great damning sin of the world, especially of those who have a revelation of the mind and will of God. This sin shuts up the heart of God, and shuts up the gate of heaven against them; it lays them under the wrath and curse of God, and leaves them there; so that in truth and justice to himself he is obliged to cast them off for ever.

CHAP. IV.

The apostle, having in the chapter foregoing set forth the sin and punishment of the ancient Jews, proceeds in this, 1. To declare that our privileges by Christ under the gospel exceed the privileges of the Jewish church under Moses as a reason why we should make a right improvement of them, v. 1, &c. 2. He assigns the cause why the ancient Hebrews did not profit by their religious privileges, v. 2. Then, III. Confirms the privileges of those who believe, and they who continue in unbelief, v. 3, &c. 4. Concludes with proper and powerful arguments and motives to faith and obedience.

1. LET us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. 2. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. 3. For we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, If they shall enter into my rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world. 4. For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, And God did rest the seventh day from all his works. 5. And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest. 6. Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief: 7. (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To-day, after so long a time; as it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. 8. For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. 9. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. 10. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.

Here, 1. The apostle declares that our privileges by Christ under the gospel are not only as great, but greater than those enjoyed under the Mosaical law. He specifies this, that we have a promise left us of entering into his rest; that is, of entering into a covenant relation to Christ, and a state of communion with God through Christ, and of growing up therein till we are made perfect in glory. We have discoveries of this rest, and proposals, and the best directions how we may attain unto it. This promise of spiritual rest is a promise left us by the Lord Jesus Christ in his last will and testament, as a precious legacy. Our business is to see to it, that we be the legates; that we lay our claim to that rest and freedom from the dominion of sin, Satan, and the flesh, by all the means at hand; to that elevation and sanctity, and deprived of the true rest of the soul, and may be also set free from the yoke of the law and all the toilsome ceremonies and services of it, and may enjoy peace with God in his ordinances and providences, and in our own consciences, and so have the prospect and earnest of perfect and ever lasting rest in heaven. 2. He demonstrates the truth of his assertion, that we have as great advantages as they. For, says he, (v. 2.) To us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; the same gospel for substance was preached under both Testaments, though not so clearly; not in so comfortable a manner under the Old as under the New. The best privileges the ancient Jews had, were, their gospel-privileges; the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Old Testament were the gospel of that dispensation; and whatever was excellent in it, was, the respect it had to Christ. Now if this was their highest privilege, we are not inferior to them; for we have the gospel as well as they, and in greater purity and perspicuity than they had.

3. He assigns the reason why so few of the ancient Jews profited by that dispensation of the gospel; they had not heard, and that was, their want of faith; the word preached did not profit them because it was not mixed with faith in them that heard him, v. 2. Observe, (1.) That the word is preached to us, that we may profit by it, that we may gain spiritual riches by it; it is a price put into our hands to get wisdom, the rich endowment of the soul. (2.) There have been in all ages a great many unprofitable hearers; many who seem to deal much in serious things, hearing the word of God, but gain nothing to their souls thereby; and they who are not gainers by hearing, are great losers. (3.) That which is at the bottom of all our unprofitableness under the word, is, our unbelief; we do not mix faith with what we hear; it is faith in the hearer that is the life of the word. Though the preacher believes the gospel, and endeavours to mix faith with his preaching, yet if it be not in the hearer, it is not so effective, and so spent; yet if the hearers have not faith in their souls to mix with the word, they will be never the better for it. This faith must mingle with every word, and be in act and exercise while we are hearing; and when we have heard the word, assenting to the truth of it, approving of it, accepting the mercy offered, applying the word to ourselves with suitable affections, then we shall find great profit and gain by the word preached.

4. On these considerations the apostle grounds his repeated and earnest caution and counsel, that who enjoy the gospel should maintain a holy fear and jealousy over themselves, lest latent unbelief should rob them of the benefit of the word, and of that spiritual rest that is discovered and tendered in the gospel; v. 1.) Let us fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Observe, (1.) Of grace and glory are attainable by all under the gospel: there is an offer, and a promise to those who shall accept the offer. (2.) Those who may attain them, may also fall short. They who might have attained salvation by faith, may fall short by unbelief. (3.) It is a dreadful thing so much as to seem to fall short of the gospel-salvation, to seem so to themselves, to lose their comfortable hope; and to seem so to others, so losing the honour of the only profession. But if it be so dreadful to seem to fall short of this rest, it is much more dreadful to fall short. Such a disappointment must be fatal. (4.) One good mean to prevent either our real falling short, or seeming to fall short, is, to maintain a holy and a religious fear lest we should fall short. This will make us vigilant and diligent, sincere and serious; this will put us upon examining our faith, and exercising it; whereas presumption is the high road to ruin.

6. The apostle confirms the misery of those who do not believe; they shall never enter into this spiritual rest, either of grace here or glory hereafter. This is as certain as the word and oath of God can make it; as sure as God is entered into his rest, so sure it is that obstinate unbelievers shall be excluded; as sure as the unbelieving Jews fell in the wilderness, and none reached the Promised Land, so sure unbelievers shall fall into destruction, and never reach heaven; as sure as Joshua, the great captain of the Jews, could not give them possession of Canaan because of their unbelief, notwithstanding his eminent valour and conduct, so sure it is that even Jesus himself, the Captain of our salvation, notwithstanding all that fulness of grace and strength that dwelleth in him, will not give to final unbelievers either spiritual or eternal rest; it remains only for the people of God; others by their sin abandon themselves to eternal restlessness.
11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. 12. For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. 13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. 14. Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

15. For we have not a high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. 16. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

In this latter part of the chapter the apostle concludes, first with a serious repeated exhortation, and then with proper and powerful motives; it is hircine.

1. Here we have a serious exhortation; (v. 11.) Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest. Observe, 1. The end proposed—rest spiritual and eternal; the rest of grace here, and glory hereafter; in Christ on earth, with Christ in heaven. 2. The way to this end prescribed—labour, diligent labour; this is the only way to rest; they who will not work now, shall not rest hereafter. After due and diligent labour, sweet and satisfying rest shall follow; and labour now will make that rest more pleasant when it comes; the sleep of the labouring man is sweet. Eccl. 5. 12. Let us therefore labour, let us all agree, and be unanimous in this, and let us quicken one another, and call upon one another, to this diligence. It is the truest act of friendship, when we see our fellow-Christians loiter, to call upon them to mind their business, and labour, and labour in earnest. "Come, Sirs, let us all go to work; why do we sit still? Why do we loiter? Come, let us labour, now is our working time, our rest remains." Thus should Christians call upon themselves, and one another, to be diligent in duty; and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

11. Here we have proper and powerful motives to make the advice effectual, which are drawn:

From the dreadful example of those who have already perished by unbelief—lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. To have seen so many fall before us, will be a great aggravation of our sin, if we will not take warning by them; their ruin calls loudly upon us; their lost and restless souls cry to us from their tombs, that we do not, by sinning as they did, make ourselves miserable as they are.

2. From the great help and advantage we may have from the word of God to strengthen our faith, and excite our diligence, that we may obtain this rest; (v. 12.) The word of God is quick and powerful. By the word of God we may understand either the essential or the written word; the essential Word, that in the beginning was with God, and was God. (John 1. 1.) the Lord Jesus Christ, and indeed what is said in this verse is true concerning him; but most understand it of the written word, the holy scriptures, which are the word of God. Now of this word it is said, (1.) That it is quick; it is very lively and active, in all its efforts, in seizing the conscience of the sinner, in cutting him to the heart, and in comforting him, and binding up the wounds of the soul. They know not the word of God, who call it a dead letter, as the Papists and the Quakers do. (2.) It is compared to the light, and nothing quicker than the light; it is not only quick, but quickening; it is a vital light; it is a living word, &c. Saints die, and sinners die; but the word of God lives. All flesh is grass, and all the glory thereof as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth for ever, 1 Pet. 1. 24, 25. Ye, therefore, where two or three are gathered together in his name, &c. do they live ever? But my words, which I commanded the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers? Zech. 1. 5, 6. (2.) It is powerful. When God sets it home by his Spirit, it convinces powerfully, converts powerfully, and comforts powerfully. It is so powerful as to pull down strong holds, (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) to raise the dead, to make the dead alive, to restore the blind, the lame and the lame to walk. It is powerful to batter down Satan's kingdom, and to set up the kingdom of Christ upon the ruins thereof. (3.) It is sharper than any two-edged sword; it cuts both ways; it is the sword of the Spirit, Eph. 6. 17. It is the two-edged sword that cometh out of the mouth of Christ, Rev. 1. 16. It is sharper than any two-edged sword, for it will enter where no other sword can, and make a more complete division. (4.) It is quick, compared to the dividing asunder of the soul and the spirit, the soul and its habitual prevailing temper; it makes a soul that has been a long time of a proud spirit, to be humble; of a perverse spirit, to be meek and obedient. Those sinful habits that are become as it were natural to the soul, and radicated deeply in it, and become in a manner one with it, are separated and cut off by this sword. It cuts off ignorance from the understanding, rebellion from the will, enmity from the mind, which, when carnal, is enmity itself against God. This sword divides between the joints and the marrow, the most secret, close and intimate parts of the body; this sword can cut off the lusts of the flesh as well as the lusts of the mind, and make men willing to undergo the sharpest operation for the mortifying of sin. (5.) It is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart; it is quick, compared to the division of the soul and the spirit, and is made to cut to the heart of the hearer, to discover the thoughts of the heart. It discovers to men the variety of their thoughts and purposes, the vileness of them, the bad principles they are actuated by, the sinister and sinful ends they act to. The word will turn the inside of a sinner out, and let him see all that is in his heart. Now such a word as this must needs be a great help to our faith and obedience.

3. From the perfections of the Lord Jesus Christ, both of his person and office. (1.) His Person, particularly his omniscience; (v. 13.) Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight. This is agreeable to what Christ speaks of himself, (Rev. 2. 23.) All the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and hearts. None of the creatures of God are concealed from Christ: none of the creatures of God, for Christ is the Creator of them all; there are none of the motions and workings of our heads and hearts, (which may be called creatures of our own,) but what are open and manifest to him with whom we have to do as the Object of our worship, and the High Priest of our profession. He, by his omniscience, cuts up the sacrifice we bring to him, that it may be presented to his Father. Now as the high-priest inspected the sacrificed beasts, cut them up to the back-bone, to see whether they were sound at heart; so all things are thus dissected, and lie open to the piercing eye of our great High Priest. And he who now tries our sacrifices, will at length be judge, try our state. We shall have done with him as one who will determine our everlasting state. Some read the words, to whom with us there is an account or reckoning. Christ has an exact account of us all; he has accounted for all who believe on him; and he will account with all; our accounts are before him. This omniscience of Christ, and the account we owe of ourselves to him, should engage us to seek to be in faith with him; for he has accounted all our affairs. (2.) We have an account of the excellency and perfection of Christ, as to his office, and this particular office of our High Priest. The apostle first instructs Christians in the knowledge of their High Priest, what kind of Priest he is, and then puts them in mind of the duty they owe on this account.

1. What a kind of High Priest Christ is; (v. 14.) Seeing we have such a High Priest: that is, First, A great High Priest, much greater than Aaron, or any of the priests of his order. The high-priests under the law were accounted great and venerable persons; but they were but faint types and shadows of Christ. The greatness of our High Priest is set forth, 1. By his being passed into the heavens. The high-priest under the law, once in a year, went into the most holy place, under the veil into the holiest of all, where were the sacred signals of the presence of God; but Christ once for all is passed into the heavens, to take the government of all upon him, to send the Spirit to prepare a place for his people, and to make intercession for them. Christ executed one part of his priesthood on earth, in dying for us; the other he executes in heaven, by pleading the cause, and presenting our persons, to the Father. 2. The greatness of Christ is set forth by his name, Jesus; a Physician and a Saviour, and one of a divine nature, the Son of God by eternal generation; and therefore, having divine perfection, able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by him. Secondly, He is not only a great, but a gracious High Priest, merciful, compassionate, and sympathizing with his people, v. 15. We have not a deaf, unfeeling, inhuman heart, but an understanding heart, a feeling of our infirmities. Though he is so great, and so far above us, yet he is very kind, and tenderly concerned for us; he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities in such a manner as none else can be; for he was himself tried with all the affliction and trouble that are incident to our nature in its fallen state; and this not only that he might be able to satisfy for us, but to sympathize with us. But then, Thirdly, He is a sinless High Priest. He was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin. He was tempted by Satan, but he came off without sin. We seldom meet with temptations but they give us some shock. We are apt to give back, though we do not yield; but our great High Priest came off clear in his encounter with the Devil, who could neither find any sin in him, nor fix any stain upon him. He was tried severely by the people's sight within the veil; and yet he sinned not, either in thought, word, or deed. He had done no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth. He was holy, harmless, and undefiled; and such a High Priest became us. Having thus told us what a one our High Priest is, the apostle proceeds to shew us, [2.] How we should demean ourselves toward him.

First, Let us hold fast our profession of faith in him, v. 14. Let us never deny him, never be ashamed of him before men. Let us hold fast the enlightening doctrines of Christianity in our heads, the enlivening principles of it in our hearts, the open profession of it in our lips, and our practical and universal subscription to it in our lives. Observe here, 1. We ought to be possessed of the doctrines, principles, and practices of the Christian life. 2. We are so far from the corruption of our hearts, the temptations of Satan, and the allurements of this evil world. 3. The excellency of the High Priest of our profession would make our apostasy from him most heinous and inexusable, it would be the greatest folly and the basest ingratitude. 4. Christians must not only set out well, but they must hold out; they who endure to the end, shall be saved, and none but they.

Secondly, We should encourage ourselves by the excellency of our High Priest, to come boldly to the throne of grace, v. 16. Where observe, 1. There is a throne of grace set up; a way of worship instituted, in which God may with honour meet poor sinners, and treat with them, and they may with hope draw nigh to him, repenting and believing. God might have set up a tribunal of strict and inexorable justice, dispensing death, the wages of sin, to all who are convened before it; but he has chosen to set up a throne of grace. A throne speaks authority, and bespeaks awe and reverence. A throne of grace speaks great encouragement even to the chief of sinners. There grace reigns, and acts with sovereign freedom, power and bounty. 2. It is our duty and interest to be often found before this throne. God's grace teaches us to bless and thank him, and to use his grace, for it is our duty and interest to live in the exercises of prayer to our God. And 3. We must persevere in the habit of thus approaching his throne, we must have the spirit of prayer in our hearts, and a practice of it in our lives, in this we must persevere. It is good for us to be there. 3. Our business and errand at the throne of grace should be, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Mercy and grace are the things we want; mercy to pardon all our sins, and grace to purify our souls. 4. That beside the daily dependence we have upon God for present supplies, there are always before us, as children to a reconciled God and Father. We are indeed to come with reverence and godly fear, but not with terror and amazement; not as if we were dragged before the tribunal of justice, but kindly invited to the mercy-seat, where grace reigns, and loves to exert and exalt itself towards us. 5. That the office of Christ, as being our High Priest, and such a High Priest, should be the ground of our confidence in all our approaches to the throne of grace. Had we not a Mediator, we could have no boldness in coming to God; for we are guilty and polluted creatures; all we do is polluted; we cannot go into the presence of God alone; we are destitute of a Mediator, in the hand of which Mediator, either our hearts and our hopes will fail us. We have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; he is our Advocate, and while he pleads for his people, he pleads with his price in his hand, by which he purchased all that our souls want or can desire.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle continues his discourse upon the priesthood of Christ, a sweet subject, which he would not too soon dismiss. And here, 1. He explains the nature of the priestly office in general, v. 1. 3. The proper and regular call there must be to this office, v. 4. 6. III. The requisite qualifications for the work, v. 7. 9. IV. The peculiar order of the priesthood of Christ; it was not after the vol. vi. 4 X order of Aaron, but of Melchisedec, v. 6, 7, 10. V. He reproves the Hebrews, that they had not made those improvements in knowledge, which might have made them capable of looking into the more abstruse and mysterious parts of scripture. 11, 14.

I. For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: 2. Who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity: 3. And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins. 4. And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: 5. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. 6. As he spake also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 7. Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared; 8. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; 9. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

I. We have here an account of the nature of the priestly office in general, though with an accommodation to the Lord Jesus Christ; where we are told what kind of being the High Priest must be. He must be taken from among men; he must be a man, one of ourselves, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, and spirit of our spirits, a partner of our nature, and a standard-bearer among ten thousand. This implies, 1. That man had sinned. 2. That God would not admit sinful man to come to him immediately and alone, without a High Priest, who must be taken from among men. 3. That God was pleased to take one from among men, by whom they might approach God in hope, and he might receive them with honour. 4. That every one shall now be welcome to God, that comes to him by this High Priest.

II. For whom every High Priest is ordained—for men in things pertaining to God, for the glory of God and the good of men, that he might come between God and man. So Christ did; and therefore let us never attempt to go to God but through Christ; nor expect any favour from God but through Christ.

III. For what purpose was every High Priest ordained—that he might offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin. 1. That he might offer gifts, or free-will offerings, brought to the High Priest, so offered for the glory of God, and as an acknowledgment that our all is of him and from him; we have nothing but what he is pleased to give us, and of his own we offer to him an oblation of acknowledgment. This intimates, 1. That all we bring to God must be free and not forced; it must be a gift, it must be given and not taken away again. 2. That all we bring to God must go through the High Priest’s hands, as the great Agent between God and man. 2. That he might offer sacrifices for sin; that is, the offerings that were appointed to make atonement, that sin might be pardoned, and sinners accepted. Thus Christ is constituted a High Priest for both these ends. Our good deeds must be presented by Christ, to render ourselves and them acceptable; and our ill deeds must be expiated by the sacrifice of himself, that they may not condemn and destroy us. And now as we value acceptance with God and pardon, we must apply ourselves by faith to this our great High Priest.

IV. How this High Priest must be qualified, v. 2. 1. He must be one that can have compassion on two sorts of persons. (1) On the ignorant, or those that are guilty of sins of ignorance; he must be one who can find in his heart to pity them, and intercede with God for them; one that is willing to instruct them that are dull of understanding. (2) On those that are out of the way, out of the way of truth, duty, and happiness; and he must be one who has tenderness enough to lend them back from the by-paths of life. This will require great patience and compassion, even the compassion of a God. 2. He must also be compassed with infirmity; and so be able from himself feelingly to consider our frame, and to sympathize with us. Thus Christ was qualified; he took upon him our sinless infirmities; and this gives us great encouragement to apply ourselves to him under every affliction; for as for his own infirmities, he takes them upon himself.

V. How the High Priest should be called of God; he must have both an internal and an external call to his office; for no man taketh this honour to himself; (v. 4.) that is, no man ought to do it, no man can do it legally; if any does it, he must be reckoned an usurper, and treated accordingly. Here observe, 1. The office of the priesthood was a very great honour; to be employed to stand between God and man, one while representing God and his will to men, and another representing men and his will to God; and dealing between them about matters of the highest importance, intrusted on both sides with the honour of God, and the happiness of man, must render the office very honourable. 2. The priesthood is an office and honour that no man ought to take to himself; if he does, he can expect no success in it, nor any reward for it, only from himself. He is an intruder, who is not called of God, as was Aaron. Observe, (1) God is the Fountain of all honour, especially true spiritual honour. He is the Fountain of true authority, whether he calls any to the priesthood in an extraordinary way, as he did Aaron, or in an ordinary way, as he called his successors. (2) Those only can expect assistance from God, and acceptance with him, and his presence and blessing on them and their administrations, that are called, set, and misused, in the office of a Mediator and a Representative of a Church.

VI. How this is brought home and applied to Christ; (v. 5.) So Christ glorified not himself. Observe here, Though Christ reckoned it his glory to be made a High Priest, yet he would not assume that glory to himself. He could truly say, I seek not mine own glory, John 8. 50. Consider him as God; he was not capable of any additional glory, but as Man he might be perfect, for in him he did not run without being sent; and yet, if he did not, surely others should be afraid to do it.

VII. The apostle prefers Christ before Aaron, both in the manner of his call, and in the holiness of his person. 1. In the manner of his call, in which God said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, (quoted from Ps. 2. 7.) referring both to his eternal generation as God, his wonderful conception as Man, and his perfect and holy order. Thus God solemnly declares his dear affection to Christ, his authoritative appointment of him to the office of a Mediator, his instalment and approbation of him in that office, his acceptance of him, and of all he had done or should do in the discharge of it. Now God never said thus to Aaron. Another expression that God used in the call of Christ, we have in Ps. 110, 4. Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec, v. 6. God the Father appointed him a Priest of a higher order than that of Aaron; the priesthood of Aaron was to be but temporary, the priesthood of Christ was to be perpetual; the priesthood of Aaron was to be successive, descending from the fathers to the children, the priesthood of Christ, after the order of Melchisedec, was to be personal, and the High Priest immortal as to his office, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, as it is more largely described in the seventh chapter, and will be opened there. 2. Christ is here preferred to Aaron in the holiness of his person. Other priests were to offer up sacrifices, as for the sins of others, so for themselves, v. 3. But Christ needed not to offer for sins for himself, for he had done no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth, Isa. 53. 9. And such a High Priest that Christ offered up, were joined with strong cries and tears; herein setting us an example how we should reckon our's. Were we to reckon our lives by days, it would be a means to quicken us to do the work of every day in its day. (2.) Christ, in the days of his flesh, subjected himself to death; he hungered, he was a tempted, bleeding Jesus! His body is now in heaven, but it is a spiritual glorious body. (3.) Oft he Felt the agony of soul and body, and reckoned his life in days; herein setting us an example how we should reckon our's. What would have become of us, if God had saved Christ from dying? The Jews reproachfully said, Let him deliver him now, if he will have him, Matt. 27. 43. But it was in kindness to us, that the Father would not suffer that bitter cup to pass away from him; for then we must have had an awful sense of the wrath of God, of the weight of sin. His human nature was ready to sink under the heavy load, and would have sunk, had he been quite forsaken in point of help and comfort from God; but he was heard in this, he was supported under the agones of death. He was carried through death; and there is no real deliverance from death but to be carried well through it. We may have many recoveries from sickness, we may be restored from death till we are carried well through it. And they that are thus saved from death shall be fully delivered at last by a glorious resurrection, of which the resurrection of Christ was the earnest and first-fruits.

2. The consequences of this discharge of his office, v. 8, 9, &c. (1.) By these his sufferings he learned obedience, though he was a Son, v. 8. Here observe, [1.] The privilege of Christ; he was a Son; the more begotten of the Father. One would have thought this might have exempted him from suffering, but it did not. Let none then, who are the children of God by adoption, expect an absolute freedom from suffering. What son is he whom the Father chasteneth, not? [2.] Christ made improvement by his sufferings; he learned obedience by his passive obedience; he learned active obedience; that is, he practised that great lesson, and made it appear that he was well and perfectly learned in it; though he never was disobedient, yet he never performed such an act of obedience as when he became obedient to death, even to the death of the cross. Here he has left us an example, that we should learn by all our afflictions, a humble obedience to the will of God. We need affliction, to teach us submission. (2.) By these his sufferings he was made perfect, and became the Author of eternal salvation to all who obey him, v. 9. [1.] Christ by his sufferings was consecrated to his office, consecrated by his own blood. [2.] By his suffering he consummated that part of his office which was to be performed on earth, making reconciliation for iniquity; and in this sense he is said to be made perfect, a perfect Propitiation. [3.] Hereby he became the Author of eternal salvation to men; he has by his sufferings purchased a full deliverance from sin and misery, and a full fruition of holiness and happiness for his people. Of this salvation he has given notice in the gospel; he has made a tender of it in the new covenant, and has sent the Spirit to enable men to accept this salvation. [4.] This salvation is actually bestowed on none but those who obey Christ. It is not sufficient that we have some doctrinal knowledge of Christ, or that we make a profession of love and obedience to him, but we must hearken to his word, and obey him. He is rated to be a Prince to rule us, as well as a Saviour to deliver us; and he will be a Saviour to none but to those to whom he is a Prince, and who are willing that he should reign over them; the rest he will account his enemies, and treat them accordingly. But to those who obey him, devoting themselves to him, despising all others, and taking up their cross, and following him, he will be the Author, savior,—the grand Cause of their salvation, and they shall own him as such for ever.

10. Called of God, a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec. 11. Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which are the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

Here the apostle returns to what he had in v. 6. cited out of Ps. 110, concerning the peculiar order of the priesthood of Christ, that is, the order of Melchisedec. And here, 1. He declares he had many things, which he could not say to them concerning this mysterious person called Melchisedec, whose priesthood was eternal; and therefore the salvation procured thereby should be eternal also. We have more particular account of this Melchisedec in ch. 7. Some think the things which the apostle means, that were hard to be uttered, were not so much concerning Melchisedec himself, as concerning Christ, of whom Melchisedec was the type. And doubtless this apostle had many things to say concerning Christ, that were very mysterious, hard to be uttered; there are great mysteries in the person and offices of the Redeemer, Christ is great in godliness.

2. He assigns the reason why he did not say all those things concerning Christ, our Melchisedec, that he had to say, and what it was that made it so difficult for him to utter them, and that was, the dulness of the Hebrews to whom he wrote; Ye are dull of hearing. There is a difficulty in the things themselves, and there may be a weakness in the ministers of the gospel to speak clearly about these things, but generally the fault is in the hearers; dull hearers make the preaching of the gospel a difficult thing, and even those who have some faith, may be dull hearers; dull of understanding, and slow to believe; the understanding is weak, and does not apprehend these spiritual things; the memory is weak, and does not retain them.

3. He insists upon the faintness of this infirmity of the people, it was not mere natural infirmity, but it was a sinful infirmity, and more in them than others, by reason of the singular advantages they had enjoyed for improving in the knowledge of Christ; (v. 12.) For when, for the time, ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again, which are the first principles of the oracles of God. Where observe, (1.) What proficiency might have been reasonably expected from these Hebrews—that they might have been well instructed in the doctrine of the gospel, as to have been teachers of others. Hence learn, [1.] God takes notice of the time and helps us for gaining scripture-knowledge. [2.] From those to whom much is given, much is expected. [3.] Those who have a good understanding in the gospel, should be teachers of others, if not in a public, yet in a private station. [4.] None should take upon them to be teachers of others, but those who have been well instructed in spiritual knowledge themselves. (2.) Observe the sad disappointment of those just expectations; Ye have need that one should teach you again, &c. Here note, [1.] In the oracles of God there are some first principles, plain to be understood, and necessary to be learned. [2.] There are also deep and sublime mysteries, which those should search into, who have learned the first principles, that so they may stand completely in the whole will of God. Every one should be deep in the mysteries of the gospel; see (v. 12.) Some persons, instead of going forward in Christian knowledge, forget the very first principles that they had learned long ago; and indeed they that are not improving under the means of grace, will be losing. [4.] It is a sin and shame for persons that are men for their age and standing in the church, to be children and babes in understanding.

The apostle shows how the various doctrines of the gospel must be dispensed to different persons. There are in the church babes, and persons of full age; (v. 12–14.) and there are in the gospel milk and strong meat. Observe, (1.) Those that are babes, unskilful in the word of righteousness, must be fed with milk; they must be entertained with the plainest truths, and these delivered in the plainest manner; there must be line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little, ISA. 28. 10. Christ despises not his babes; he has provided suitable food for them. It is good to be babes in Christ, but not always to continue in that childish state; we should endeavour to pass the infant state; we should always remain in malicious children, but in understanding we should grow up to a manly maturity. (2.)

There is strong meat for those that are of full age, v. 14. The deeper mysteries of religion belong to those that are of a higher class in the school of Christ, who have learned the first principles, and well improved them; so that by reason of use they have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil, duty and sin, truth and error. Observe, [1.] There have been always in the Christian state children, young men, and elders. [2.] Every true Christian, having received a principle of spiritual life from God, stands in need of nourishment to preserve that life. [3.] The word of God is food and nourishment to the life of grace; as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby. [4.] It is the wisdom of ministers rightly to divide the word of truth, and to give to every one his portion; milk to babes, and strong meat to those of full age. [5.] There are spiritual senses, as well as those that are natural. There is a spiritual eye, a spiritual appetite, a spiritual taste; the soul has its sensations as well as the body; these are much depraved and lost by sin, but they are recovered by grace. [6.] It is by use and exercise that these senses are improved, made more quick and strong to taste the sweetness of what is good and true, and the bitterness of what is false and evil. Not only reason and faith, but the spiritual sense, will teach men to distinguish between what is pleasing and what is provoking to God, between what is helpful and what is hurtful to our own souls.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, the apostle proceeds to persuade the Hebrews to make a better proficiency in religion than they had done, as the best way to prevent apostasy, the dreadful nature and consequences of which sin he sets forth in a serious manner; (v. 1–8.) and then expresses his good hopes concerning them, that they would persevere in faith and holiness, to which he exhorts them, and sets before them the great encouragement they have from God, both with respect to their duty and happiness, from v. 9, to the end.

1. THEREFORE leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God. 2. Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. 3. And this will we do, if God permit. 4. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, 5. And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, 6. If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. 7. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: 8. But that which beareth thorns and briers, is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned. 1. We have here the apostle's advice to the Hebrews—that they would grow up from a state of childhood to the fulness of the stature of the new man in Christ; and he declares his readiness to assist them all he could in their spiritual progress; for This ordinance of baptism is a foundation to be rightly laid, and daily remembered, but not repeated.

[4.] Laying on of hands; either on persons passing solemnly from their initiated state by baptism to the confirmed state, by returning the answer of a good conscience toward God, and sitting down at the Lord's table. This passing from incomplete to complete church-membership, was performed by laying on of hands, at the presence of the Gift of the Holy Ghost continued. This has not been done, all are obliged to abide by, and not to need any other solemn admission, as at first, but to go on, and grow up, in Christ. Or by this may be meant, ordination of persons to the ministerial office, who are duly qualified for it, and inclined to it; and this by fasting and prayer, with laying on of the hands of the presbytery: and this is to be done but once.

[5.] The Triune God, three persons, that is, of dead bodies; and their reunion with their souls, to be eternal companions together in weal or woe, according as their state was toward God when they died, and the course of life they led in this world.

[6.] Eternal judgment, determining the soul of every one, when it leaves the body at death, and both soul and body at the last day, to their eternal state; every one to his proper society and employment to which they were entitled and fitted here on earth; the wicked to everlasting punishment, the righteous to life eternal.

These are the great foundation-principles which ministers should clearly and convincingly unfold, and closely apply. In these the people should be well instructed and established, and from these they must never depart; without these, the other parts of religion have no foundation to support them.

II. The apostle declares his readiness and resolution to assist the Hebrews in building themselves up on these foundations till they arrive at perfection; (v. 3.) And this we will do, if God permit. And hereby he teaches them, 1. That right resolution is very necessary in order to progress and proficiency in religion. 2. That that resolution is right, which is not only made in the sincerity of our hearts, but in a humble dependence upon God, both for strength, and assistance and righteousness, for acceptance, and for time and opportunity. 3. That ministers should not only teach people what to do, but go before them, and along with them, in the way of duty.

III. He shows that this spiritual growth is the surest way to prevent that dreadful sin of apostasy here from the faith. And here,

1. He shows how far persons may go in religion, and after all, fall away, and perish for ever, v. 4, 5. (1.) They may be enlightened. Some of the ancients understand this of their being baptized; but it is rather to be understood of notional knowledge and common illumination, of which persons may have a great deal, and yet come short of heaven. Belaam was the man whose eyes were opened, (Numb. 24. 3.) and yet with his eyes opened he went down into dark destruction. (2.) They may be made wise, and by gifts, feel something of the efficacy of the Holy Spirit in his operations upon their souls, causing them to taste something of religion, and yet be like persons in the market, who taste of what they will not come up to the price of, and so but take a taste, and leave it. Persons may taste religion, and seem to like it, if they could have it upon easier terms than denying themselves, and taking up their cross, and following Christ. Some think here the special gifts of the Holy Ghost, that is, of his extraordinary and miraculous gifts; they may have cast out devils in the name of Christ, and done many other mighty works. Such gifts in the apostolical age were sometimes bestowed upon those who had no true saving grace. (4.) They may taste of the good word of God; they may have some relish of gospel-

the greater encouragement, he puts himself with them, Let us go on. Here observe, 1. In order to their growth, Christians must leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ. How must they leave them? They must not lose them, they must not despise them, they must not forget them; they must lay them up in their hearts, and lay them as the foundation of all their profession and expectation; but they must not rest and stay in them, they must not be always kept at the foundations and laid on, and build upon it; there must be a superstructure; for the foundation is laid on purpose to support the building. Here it may be inquired, Why did the apostle resolve to set strong meat before the Hebrews, when he knew they were but babes? Answer. (1.) Though some of them were but weak, yet others of them had gained more strength; and they must be provided for suitably. As from what the good Christian is willing to be willing to hear the plainest truths preached for the sake of the weak, so the weak must be willing to hear the more difficult and mysterious truths preached for the sake of those who are strong. (2.) He hoped they would be growing in their spiritual strength and stature, and so be able to digest stronger meat. 2. The apostle mentions several foundation-principles, which must be well laid at first, and then built upon; neither his time nor their's must be spent in laying these foundations over and over again. These foundations are six.

[1.] Repentance from dead works, that is, conversion and regeneration, repentance from a spiritually dead state and course; as if he had said, "Beware of destroying the life of grace in your souls; your minds were changed by conversion, and so were you. Take care that you return not to sin again, for then you must have the foundation to lay again; there must be a second conversion; a repenting not only of, but from, dead works." Observe here, First, The sins of persons unconverted are dead works; they proceed from persons spiritually dead, and they tend to death eternal. Secondly, Repentance for dead works, if it be right, is repentance from dead works; a universal change of heart and life. Trembling in the presence of our unconverted state, of dead works is a foundation-principle, which must not be laid again, though we must renew our repentance daily.

[2.] Faith toward God; a firm belief of the existence of God, of his nature, attributes, and perfections, the trinity of persons in the unity of essence, the whole mind and will of God as revealed in his word, particularly what relates to the Lord Jesus Christ. We must by faith acquaint ourselves with these things, we must assent to them, we must approve of them, and apply all to ourselves with suitable affections and actions. Observe, First, Repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, e connected, and always go together; they are inseparable twins; the one cannot live without the other. Secondly, Both of these are foundation-principles, and as such are laid, but never pulled up, so as to need to be laid on other again; we must not relapse into infidelity.

[3.] The doctrine of baptisms, that is, of being baptized by a minister of Christ with water, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, as the initiating sign or seal of the covenant of grace; strongly engaging the person so baptized to get acquainted with the Lord Jesus Christ, to prefer to it, I purpose to renew it at the table of the Lord, and sincerely to regulate himself according to it; and relying upon the truth and faithfulness of God for the blessings contained in it. And the doctrine of an inward baptism, that of the Spirit sprinkling the blood of Christ upon the soul, for justification, and the graces of the Spirit for sanctification.

doctrines, may bear the word with pleasure; they may remember much of it, and talk well of it, and yet never be cast into the form and mould of it, nor has it dwelt richly in them. (5.) They may have tasted of the flowers of the world to come; they may have been under strong impressions concerning heaven and hell; have felt some desires of heaven, and dread of going to hell. These lengths of their imagination may go to apostasy. Now hence observe, [1.] Those great things are spoken here of those who may fall away; yet it is not here said of them, that they were truly converted, or that they were justified; there is more in true saving grace than in all that is here said of apostates. [2.] This therefore is no proof of the final apostasy of true saints. These indeed may fall frequently and foily, but yet they shall not totally nor finally fall. From God; from the force and the power of God, the purchase and the prayer of Christ, the promise of the gospel, the everlasting covenant that God has made with them, ordered in all things and sure, the indwelling of the Spirit, and the immortal seed of the word, these are their security. But the tree that has not these roots, will not stand.

2. The apostle describes the dreadful case of such as fall away. They had gone so far in the progress of religion. (1.) The greatness of the sin of apostasy. It is crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to open shame. They declare that they approve of what the Jews did in crucifying Christ, and that they would be glad to do the same thing again, if it were in their power. They pour the greatest contempt upon the Son of God, and therefore upon God himself, who expects all should reverence his Son, and honour him as they honour the Father. They do what in them lies to represent Christ and Christianity as a shameful thing, and would have him to be a public Shame and reproach. This is the nature of apostasy. (2.) The great misery of apostates. [1.] It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; it is extremely hazardous; very few instances can be given of those who have gone so far and fallen away, and yet ever have been brought to true repentance, such a repentance as is indeed a renovation of the soul. Some have thought this is the sin against the Holy Ghost, but without ground. The sin here mentioned, is plainly apostasy both from the truth and the ways of Christ. God can renew them to repentance, but he seldom does it; and with men themselves it is impossible. [2.] Their misery is exemplified by a proper similitude, taken from the ground that after much cultivation brings forth nothing but briers and thorns; and therefore is nigh unto cursing, and its end is to be buried, v. 8. To give this the greater force, here is observed the difference that there is between the good ground and the bad, that these contraries, being set one over against the other, may illustrate each other.

First, Here is a description of the good ground; it drinketh in the rain that cometh often upon it. Believers do not only taste of the word of God, but they drink it in; and this good ground bringeth forth fruit answerable to the cost laid out, for the honour of Christ, and the comfort of his faithful ministers, who are, under Christ, dressers of the ground. And this fruit-field or garden receives the blessing. God declares fruitful Christians blessed, and all wise good men account them blessed; they are blessed with inward real happiness and with further establishment and glory at last.

Secondly, Here is the different case of the bad ground: it bears briers and thorns; it is not only barren of good fruit, but fruitful in that which is bad, briers and thorns, fruitful in sin and wickedness, which are troublesome and hurtful to all about them, and will be most so to sinners themselves at last; and then such ground is rejected. God will concern himself no more about such wicked apostates; he will let them alone, and cast them out of his care; he will command the clouds that they rain no more upon them. Divine influences shall be restrained; and that is not all, but such ground is nigh unto cursing; so far is it from receiving the blessing, that dreadful cursing and anger, that would endure to the patience of God, the curse is not fully executed. Lastly, Its end is to be burned. Apostasy will be punished with everlasting burnings, the fire that shall never be quenched. This is the sad end to which apostasy leads, and therefore Christians should go on and grow in grace, lest, if they do not go forward, they should go backward, till they bring matters to this woeful extremity of sin and misery.

9. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak. 10. For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister. 11. And we desire, that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: 12. That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. 13. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, 14. Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. 15. And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. 16. For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. 17. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: 18. That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: 19. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail; 20. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

The apostle, having applied himself to the fears of the Hebrews, for the exciting of their diligence, and preventing of their apostasy, now proceeds to apply himself to their hopes, and candidly declares the good hope he had concerning them, that they would persevere; and proposes to them the great encouragements they had in the way of their duty.

1. He freely and openly declares the good hope he had concerning them, that they would endure to the end; (v. 9.) But beloved, we are persuaded better things of you. Observe, 1. There are things that accompany salvation; things that are never separated from salvation; things that shew the person to be in a state of salvation, and will issue in eternal salvation. 2. The things that accompany salvation, are better things than ever any hypocrite or apostate enjoyed. They are better in their nature and in their issue. 3. It is our duty to hope well of those in whom nothing appears to the con-ntrary. 4. Ministers must sometimes speak by way of caution to those of whose salvation they have no hopes, but that it is all well with them in heaven as unto all things good hopes, as to their eternal salvation, should yet conider seriously how fatal a disappointment it would be if they should fail short. Thus they are to work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

II. He proposes arguments and encouragements to tem them to go on in the way of their duty. 1. That God had wrought a principle of holy love and charity in them, which he would not forget, and which would not be forgotten of God; (v. 10.) God is not unrighteous to for got your labour of love. Good works and labour, proceeding from love to God, are commendable; and what is done to any in the name of God, shall not go unrewarded.

What is done to the saints as such, God takes as done to himself. 2. Those who expect a gracious reward for their labour of love, must continue in it as long as they have ability and opportunity; Ye have ministered to the saints; and ye ought to have done even so; and we desire that every one of you do shew the same di-gine. 3. Those who persevere in a diligent discharge of their duty, shall attain to the full assurance of hope in the end. Observe, (1.) Full assurance is a higher degree of hope; is full assurance of hope;

differ not in nature, but only in degree. (2.)

Full assurance is attainable by great diligence and perseverance to the end.

III. He proceeds as before to set them caution and counsel how to attain this full assurance of hope to the end. 1. That they should not be slothful; that will clothe a man with rags: they must not love eas, nor lose their opportunities. 2. That they would follow the good examples of those who had gone before, v. 12. Where learn, (1.) There are some who from assurance are gone to inherit the promises. They believed them before, now they inherit them; they are got safe to heaven. (2.)

The way by which they came to the inheritance, was that of faith and patience. Those graces were implanted in their souls, and drawn forth into act and exercise in their lives. If we ever expect to inherit as they do, we must follow them in the way of faith and patience. And those who do thus follow them in the way, shall overtake them at the end, and be partakers of the same blessedness.

[1.] He speaks of the promises of God as giving them with a clear and full account of the assured truth of the promises of God, v. 13, to the end. They are all confirmed by the oath of God, and they are all founded in the eternal counsel of God, and therefore may be depended on.

1. They are all confirmed by the oath of God. He has not only given his people his word, and his hand and seal, but his oath. And here you will observe, he specifies the oath of God. Abraham which being sworn to him, the father of faithful, does remain in full force and virtue to all true believers; When God made a promise unto Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself. Observe, (1.) What was the promise—Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. The blessing of God is the blessedness of his people; and those whom he has blessed indeed, he will go on to bless, and will multiply blessings, till they have been blessed.

(2.) What was the oath by which this promise was ratified—He swore by himself. He staked down his own being and his own blessedness upon it; no greater security can be given or desired.

(3.) How was that oath accomplished—Abraham, in due time, obtained the promise. It was made good to him after he had patiently endured. [1.]

There is always an interval, and sometimes a long one, between the promise and the performance.

[2.] That interval is a trying time to believers, whether they have patience to endure to the end.

[3.] Those who are the children of the promise, shall obtain the blessings promised, as sure as Abraham did. [4.] The end and design of an oath is to make the promise sure, and to encourage those to whom it is made, to wait with patience till the time for performance comes, v. 16. An oath with men is for confirmation, and is an end of all strife. This is the nature and design of an oath, in which men swear by the greater, not by creatures, but by the greater; an oath to God, bound to all things about the matter, either to disputes within our own breasts, doubts and distrusts, or disputes with others, especially with the Promiser. Now if God would condescend to take an oath to his people, he will surely remember the nature and design of it.

2. The promises of God are all founded in his eternal counsel; and this counsel of his is an immutable counsel. (1.) The promise of blessedness which God has made to believers, is not a rash and hasty thing, but the result of God's eternal purpose.

(2.) This purpose of God was agreed upon in council, and settled there between the eternal Father, Son, and Spirit. (3.) These counsels of God can never be altered; they are immutable; God never needs to change his counsels; for nothing new can arise to him who sees the end from the beginning.

3. The promises of God, which are founded upon his immutable counsels of God, and confirmed by the oath of God, may safely be depended upon; for here we have two immutable things, the counsel and the oath of God, in which it is impossible for God to lie, contrary to his nature, as well as to his will. Here observe,

(1.) Who they are, to whom God has given such full security of happiness. [1.] They are the heirs of the promise: such as have a title to the promises by inheritance, by virtue of their new birth, and union with Christ. We are all by nature children of wrath. The curse is the inheritance we are born to: it is by a new and heavenly birth that any are born heirs to the promise. [2.] They are such as have fled for refuge to the hope set before them.

Under the law there were cities of refuge provided for those who were pursued by the avenger of blood.

Here is a much better refuge prepared by the gospel; a refuge for all sinners who shall have the humbly to flee to it; yea, though they have been the chief of sinners. [2.] What God's design toward them is, in giving them such securities—that they might have strong consolation. Observe, [1.] God is concerned for the consolation of believers, as well as for their sanctification; he would have his children walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost. [2.] The consolations of God are strong eough to support his people under their strongest trials. The poor and afflicted, the weak and sick, the last and the least, must be clothed to bear up the soul under temptation, persecution, and death;

but the consolations of the Lord are neither few nor small. [3.] What use the people of God should make of their hope and comfort, that most refreshing and comfortable hope of eternal blessedness that God has given them. This, and must be, unto them, for an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, &c. v. 19. Here observe, (1.) We must put this hope to our souls as unsea, liable to be tossed up and down, and in danger of being cast away. Our souls are the vessels; the comforts, expectation, graces, and happiness of our souls are the precious cargo with which these vessels are loaded; heaven is the harbour to which we sail; the temptations, persecutions, and afflictions that we encounter, are the winds and waves that thwart our shipwreck. [2.] We have need of an anchor to keep us sure and steady, or we are in continual danger. [3.] Gospel-hope is our anchor; as in our day of battle it is our helmet, so in our stormy passage through this world it is our anchor. [4.] It is sure and steadfast, or else it could not keep us so. First, it is sure in its own nature; for it is the special work of God in the soul, it is good hope through grace; it is not a flattering hope made out of the spider’s web, but it is a true work of God, it is a strong and substantial thing. Secondly, It is steadfast as to its object; it is an anchor that has taken good hold, it enters into that which is within the vail, it is an anchor that is cast upon the rock, the Rock of ages; it does not fasten in the sands, but enters within the vail, and fixes there upon Christ; he is the Object, he is the Anchor-hold of the believing hope. As an unseen glory within the vail, is what the believer is hoping for; so an unseen Jesus within the vail, is the great foundation of his hope; the free grace of God, the merits and mediation of Christ, and the powerful influences of his Spirit, are the grounds of his hope, and so it is a steadfast hope. Jesus Christ is the Object and Ground of the believer’s hope in several respects. 1. As he is entered within the vail, and has been accredited with God, in virtue of that sacrifice which he offered up without the vail, hope fastens upon his sacrifice and intercession. 2. As he is the Forerunner of his people, gone within the vail, to prepare a place for them, and to assure them that they shall follow him, he is the Earnest and First-fruits of believers, both in his resurrection and in his ascension. 3. And he abides there, a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec, a Priest for ever, whose priesthood shall never cease, never fail, till it has accomplished its whole work and design, which is the full and final happiness of all who have believed on Christ. Now this should engage us all to clear up our interest in Christ, that we may fix our hopes in him as our Forerunner, that is entered thither for us, for our sakes, for our safety, to watch over our highest interest and concerns. Let us then love heaven the more on his account, and long to be there with him, where we shall be ever safe, and be ever satisfied.

CHAP. VII.

The doctrine of the priestly office of Christ is so excellent in itself, and so essential a part of the Christian faith, that the apostle loves to dwell upon it. Nothing made the Jewish dispensation so different from the Gospel dispensation as the high esteem they had of their priesthood, and it was doubtless a sacred and most excellent institution; it was a very severe threatening denounced against the Jews, (Hos. 3. 4.) That the children of Israel should abide many days without a prince or a priest, and without a sacrifice, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Now the apostle assures them that by receiving the Lord Jesus they would have a much better order; a priest, a priesthood of a higher order, and consequently a better dispensation or covenant, a better law and testament; this he shews in this chapter, where, 1. We have a more particular account of Melchisedec, the Priest, and the superiority of his priesthood both above Aaron, v. 4, 10. 2. An accommodation of all to Christ, to shew the superior excellency of his person, office, and covenant, from v. 11, to the end.

For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; 2. To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of peace; 3. Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

The chapter foregoing ended with a repetition of what had been cited once and again before out of Ps. 110. 4. Jesus, a High Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. Now this chapter is as a sermon upon that text; here the apostle sets before them some of the strong meat he had spoken of before, hoping they would by greater diligence be better prepared to digest it.

The great question that first offers itself, is, Who was this Melchisedec? All the account we have of him in the Old Testament, is in Gen. 14. 18, 19, &c. and in Ps. 110. 4. Indeed we are much in the dark about him; God has thought fit to leave us so, that this Melchisedec might be a more lively type of him whose generation none can declare. If men will not be satisfied with what is revealed, they must rove about in the dark in endless conjectures, some fancying him to have been an angel, others the Holy Ghost; but the opinions concerning him, that are best worthy our consideration, are these three.

1. The rabbins, and most of the Jewish writers, think he was Shem the son of Noah, who was king and priest to those they descended from, after the manner of the other patriarchs; but it is not probable that he should thus change his name. Besides, we have no account of his settling in the land of Caanaan.

2. Many Christian writers have thought him to be Jesus Christ himself, appearing by a special dispensation and privilege to Abraham in the flesh, and who was known to Abraham by the name Melchisedec, which agrees very well to Christ, and to what is said, John 8. 56. Abraham saw his day and rejoiced. Much may be said for this opinion, and what is said in v. 3. does not seem to agree with any mere man; but then it seems strange to make Christ a type of himself.

3. The most received opinion is, that he was a Canaanite king, who reigned in Salem, and kept up religion and the worship of the true God; that he was raised to be a type of Christ, and was honoured by Abraham as such.

But we shall leave these conjectures, and labour to understand, as far as we can, what is here said of him by the apostle, and how Christ is represented thereby, v. 1—3.

(1.) Melchisedec was a king, and so is the Lord Jesus; a King of God’s anointing; the government is laid upon his shoulders, and he rules over all for the good of his people.

(2.) That he was king of righteousness: his name signifies the righteous king, Jesus Christ is a rightful and a righteous King; rightful in his title, righteous in his government. He is the Lord our Righteousness, he has fulfilled all righteousness, and brought in an everlasting righteousness, and he loves righteousness and righteous persons, and hates iniquity.

(3.) He was king of Salem, that is king of peace; first king of righteousness, and after that, king of peace. So is our Lord Jesus; he by his righteousness is peace. Christ speaks peace, creates peace, he is our Peace-Maker.

(4.) He was priest of the most high God, qualified and anointed in an extraordinary manner to be his priest among the Gentiles. So is the Lord Jesus; he is the Priest of the most high God, and the Gentiles must come to God by him; it is only through his priesthood that we can obtain reconciliation and remission of sin.

(5.) He was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, v. 3. This must not be understood according to the letter; but the scripture has chosen to set him forth as an extraordinary person, without giving us his genealogy, that he might be a better type of Christ, who as Man was without father, as God without mother; whose priesthood is without descent, did not descend to him from another, nor from him to another, but is personal and perpetual.

(6.) That he met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him. The incident is recorded Gen. 14. 18, &c. He brought forth bread and wine to refresh Abraham and his servants when they were weary; he gave as a king, and blessed as a priest. Thus our Lord Jesus meets his people in their spiritual conflicts, refreshes them, renews their strength, and blesses them.

(7. That) Abraham gave him a tenth part of all, (v. 2.) that is, as the apostle explains it, of all the spoils; and this Abraham did, either as an expression of his gratitude for what Melchisedec had done for him, or as a testimony of his homage and subjection to him as a king, or as an offering vowed and dedicated to God, to be presented by his priest. And thus are we obliged to make all possible returns of love and gratitude to the Lord Jesus for all the rich and royal favours we receive from him, to pay our homage and subjection to him as our King, and to put all our offerings into his hands, to be presented by him to the Father in the incense of his own sacrifice.

(8.) And lastly, That this Melchisedec was made like unto the Son of God, and abideth a priest continually. He bore the image of God in his piety and authority, and stands upon record as an immortal high-priest; the ancient type of him who is the eternal and only begotten of the Father, who abideth a Priest for ever.

4. Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils. 5. And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: 6. But he whose descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises. 7. And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better. 8. And here men that die, receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth. 9. And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham. 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchisedec met him.

Let us now consider (as the apostle advises) how great this Melchisedec was, and how far his priesthood was above that of the order of Aaron; (v. 4, 5, &c.) Now consider how great this man was, &c. The greatness of this man and his priesthood appear,

1. From Abraham's paying the tenth of the spoils unto him; and it is well observed, that Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec in Abraham, v. 10. Now Levi received the office of the priesthood from God, and was to take tithes of the people, yet even Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec, as to a greater and higher priest than himself; therefore that High Priest who should afterward appear, of whom Melchisedec was a type, must be much superior to any of the Levitical priests, who paid tithes, in Abraham, to Melchisedec. And now by this argument of persons doing things that are matters of right or injury in the loins of their predecessors, we have an illustration how we may be said to have sinned in Adam, and fallen with him in his first transgression. We were in Adam's loins when he sinned, and the guilt and depravity contracted by the human nature when it was in our first parents, are equitably imputed and derived to the same nature, as it is in all and other persons naturally descended from them. They justly adhere to the nature, and it must be by an act of grace if ever they be taken away.

2. From Melchisedec's blessing of Abraham, who had the promises; (v. 6, 7.) And without contradiction, the less is blessed of the greater. Where, (1.) Observe Abraham's great dignity and felicity—that he had the promises. He was one in covenant with God, to whom God had given exceeding great and precious promises. That man is rich and happy indeed, who has an estate in bills and bonds under God's own hand and seal. These promises are both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come; this honour have all those who receive the Lord Jesus, in whom all the promises are yea and amen. (2.) Melchisedec's greater honour—in that it was his place and privilege to bless Abraham; and it is an incontestable maxim, that the less is blessed of the greater, v. 7. He who gives the blessing, is greater than he who receives it; and therefore Christ, the Antitype of Melchisedec, the Meriter and Mediator of all blessings to the children of men, must be greater than all the priests of the order of Aaron.

11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12. For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. 13. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaining to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. 15. And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, 16. Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment but after the power of an endless life.

17. For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 18. For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. 19. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God. 20. And in as much as not without an oath he was made priest; 21. (For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.) 22. By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. 23. And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death: 24. But this man, because he continued ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. 25. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. 26. For such a high priest became we, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; 27. Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself. 28. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore.

Observe the necessity there was of raising up another priest, after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron, by whom that perfection should come, which could not come by the Levitical priesthood; which therefore must be changed, and the whole economy with it, v. 11, 12,

Here, 1. It is asserted, that perfection could not come by the Levitical priesthood and the law; they could not put those who came to them, into the perfect enjoyment of the good things they pointed out to them; they could only direct them to look further, they could only shew them the way. 2. That therefore another Priest must be raised up, after the order of Melchisedec, by whom, and his law of faith, perfection might come to all who obeyed it; and that he might have perfect holiness and perfect happiness by Christ in the covenant of grace, according to the gospel, for we are complete in him. 3. It is asserted, that the priesthood being changed, there must of necessity be a change of the law; there being so near a relation between the priesthood and the law, the dispensation could not be the same under another priesthood; a new priesthood must be under a new regulation, managed in another way, and by rules proper to its nature and order. 4. It is not only asserted, but proved, that the priesthood and law are changed, v. 13, 14. The priesthood and law by which perfection could not come, are abolished, and a Priest is risen, and a dispensation now set up, by which true believers may be made perfect. Now that there is such a change, is obvious.

There is a change in the order in which the priesthood comes: before, it was the tribe of Levi; but our great High Priest sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood, v. 14. This change of the family shews a real change of the law of priesthood. (2.) There is a change in the form and order of making the priests: before, in the Levitical priesthood, they were made after the law of a carnal commandment; but our present High Priest was made after the power of an endless life. The former law appointed that the office should descend, upon the death of the father, unto his eldest son, according to the order of carnal or natural generation; for none of the high priests under that law were without father or mother, or without descent, they had not life and immortality in themselves. They had both beginning of days and end of life; and so the apostles, by that same order of succession, directed their succession, as it did in matters of civil right and inheritance. But the law by which Christ was constituted a Priest after the order of Melchisedec, was the power of an endless life. The life and immortality which he had in himself, were right and title to the priesthood, not his descent from former priests. This makes a great difference in the priesthood, and in the economy too; and gives the preference infinitely to Christ and the gospel. The very law which constituted the Levitical priesthood, supposed the priests to be weak, frail, dying, creatures, not able to preserve their own natural lives, but who must be content and glad to survive in their posterity after the flesh; much less could they by any power or authority they had, convey spiritual life and blessedness to those who were not their descendants. But the law by which he holds his office by that innate power of endless life, which he has in himself, not only to preserve himself alive, but to communicate spiritual and eternal life to all those who duly rely upon his sacrifice and intercession. Some think the law of the carnal dispensation refers to the external rites of consecration, and the carnal offerings that were made; but the power of endless life, to the spiritual living sacrifice, consecrated unto the godhead, and the external privileges purchased by Christ, who was consecrated by the eternal Spirit of life that he received without measure. (3.) There is a change in the efficacy of the priesthood: the former was weak and unprofitable, made nothing perfect; the latter brought in a better hope, by which we draw near to God, v. 18, 19. The Levitical priesthood brought nothing to perfection; it could not justify men's consciences, it could not sanctify from inward pollution; it could not cleanse the consciences of the worshippers from dead works; all it could do, was, to lead them to the antitype. But the priesthood of Christ carries it in, and brings along with it, a better hope; it shews us the true foundation of all the hope we have toward God for pardon and salvation; it more clearly discovers the great objects of our hope; and so it shews us a more sure and living hope of acceptance with God. By this hope we are encouraged to draw nigh unto God; to enter into a covenant-union with him; to live a life of converse and communion with him. We may now draw near with a true heart, and with the full assurance of faith, having our minds sprinkled from an evil conscience. The former priesthood rather kept men at a distance, and under a high sense of our profession.
surety, has tied the divine and human nature together in his own person, and therein given assurance of recon-racion; and he has, as surety, tied God and man together in the bond of the everlasting convenient. He pleads with men to keep their covenant with God, and he pleads with God that he will fulfil his promises to men, which he is always ready to do in a way suitable to his majesty and glory, that is, through a Mediator.

(6.) There is a remarkable change in the number of the priests under these different orders. In that of Aaron there was a multitude of priests, of high-priests, not at once, but successively; but in this of Christ there is but one and the same. The reason is plain, The Levitical priests were many, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death. "Our sin is not our sin, our nature is not our nature, what we are, we are because we were chosen to negotiate their spiritual concerns in heaven; such a vacancy might be very dangerous and prejudicial to them; but this is their safety and happiness, that this everlasting High Priest is able to save to the utmost, in all times, in all cases, in every juncture, all who come to God by him, v. 25. So that there is a manifest alteration much for the better.

(7.) There is a remarkable difference in the moral qualifications of the priests; those who were of the order of Aaron, were not only mortal men, but sinful men, who had their sinful as well as natural infirmities; they needed to offer up sacrifices first for their own sins, and then for the people. But our High Priest, who was consecrated by the word of the oath, needed only to offer up once for the people, never at all for himself; for he has not only an immutable consecration to his office, but an immutable satisfaction in the person. He is a High Priest as became us, holy, harmless, and undefiled, &c. v. 26-28.

Here observe, [1.] Our case, as sinners, needed a high-priest to make satisfaction and intercession for us. [2.] No priest could be suitable or sufficient for our reconciliation to God, but one who was per-fecfly righteous in his own person; he must be righteous in himself, or he could not be a propitiation for our sin, or our own light with the Father. [5.] The Lord Jesus was exactly such a High Priest as we wanted, for he has a personal holiness, absolutely perfect. Observe the description we have of the personal holiness of Christ expressed in various terms; some learned divines think that they all of them relate to his perfect purity.

First, He is holy, perfectly free from all the habits or principles of sin, not having the least disposition to it in his nature; no sin dwells in him, though it does in the best of Christians, not the least sinful inclination.

Secondly, He is harmless, perfectly free from all actual transgression, has done no violence, nor is there any deceit in his mouth, never did the least wrong to God or man.

Thirdly, He is undefiled, he was never necessary to partake of the guilt of other men's sins, by contributing some way toward them, or not doing what we ought to prevent them. Christ was undefiled; though he took upon him the guilt of our sins, yet he never involved himself in the fact and fault of them.

Fourthly, He is separate from sinners, not only in his present state, having entered as our High Priest into the holiest of all, into which nothing defiled can enter; but in his personal purity he has no such union with sinners, either natural or federal, as can derive upon him original sin. This comes upon us by virtue of our natural and federal union with the flesh, depending from him in the ordinary way. But Christ was not joined with the deception in the virgin, separate from sinners; though he took a true human nature, yet the miraculous way in which it was conceived, set him upon a separate foot from all the rest of mankind.

Fifthly, He is made higher than the heavens. Most expositors understand this concerning his state of exaltation in heaven, at the right hand of God, to perfect the design of his priestly office, and not Dr. Goodwin thinks this may be very justly referred to the personal holiness of Christ, which is greater and more perfect than the holiness of the hosts of heaven, that is, the holy angels themselves, who, though they are free from sin, yet are not in themselves free from all possibility of sinning. And therefore we read, God justified his holy ones, and he charged his angels with folly, (Job 4. 18.) that he might make them, and they may be angels one hour, and devils another, as many of them were; and that the holy angels shall not now fall, does not proceed from an indestructibility of nature, but from the election of God; they are elect angels.

It is very probable that this explanation of the words, made higher than the heavens, may be thought too much strained, and that it ought to be understood of the dignity of Christ's state, and the perfect holiness of his person; and the rather because it is said, he was made higher, γενομαι.; but it is well known that word is used in a neutral sense, as where it is said, γενομαι δι' εικόνα αυτοῦ—
Let God be true.

The other characters in the verse plainly belong to the personal perfection of Christ in holiness, as opposed to the sinful infirmities of the Levitical priests; and the comparison is not so too, if it may be fairly taken in such a sense; and it appears yet more probable, since the validity and prevalency of Christ's priesthood in v. 27. are placed in the impartiality and disinterestedness of it. He needed not to offer up for himself, it was a disinterested mediation; he mediated for that mercy for others, which he did not need for himself; had he needed it himself, he had been a party; and could not have been a Mediator; a criminal, and could not have been an Advocate for sinners. Now to render his mediation the more impartial and disinterested, it seems requisite not only that he had no present need of that favour for himself, which he mediated for in behalf of others, but that he never could stand in need of it. Though he needed it not to-day, yet if he knew he might be in such circumstances as he needs it to-morrow, or in any future time, he must have been thought to have had some eye upon his own interest, and therefore could not act with impartial regard and pure zeal for the ho-our of God on one hand, and tender pure compassion for poor sinners on the other. I pretend not here to follow the notes of our late excellent expisitor, into his labours we have entered, but have taken the liberty to indicate the notion of the learned Dr. Goodwin from the exceptions that I know have been made to it; and I have the rather done it, because if it will hold good, it gives us further evidence how necessary it was that the Mediator should be God, since no mere creature is of himself possessed of that impeccability which will set him above all possible need of favour and mercy for himself.
CHAP. VIII.

In this chapter, the apostle pursues his former subject, the priesthood of Christ. And, I. He sums up what he had already said, v. 1, 2. II. He sets before them the necessary parts of the priestly office, v. 3...5. And, III. Large[ly] illustrates the excellency of the priesthood of Christ, by considering the excellency of that new dispensation of covenant for which Christ is the Mediator, v. 6, to the end.

1. Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; 2. A minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

Here is a summary recital of what had been said before concerning the excellency of Christ's priesthood, shewing both what we have in Christ, where he now resides, and what sanctuary he is the Minister of. 1. What we have in Christ; we have a High Priest, and such a High Priest as no other people ever enjoyed, either of the church, ever produced; all others were but types and shadows of this High Priest. He is adequately fitted and absolutely sufficient to all the intents and purposes of a High Priest, both with respect to the honour of God, and the happiness of men and himself; the great honour of all those who have an interest in him. 2. Where he now resides; he is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty on high, that is, of the glorious God of heaven. There the Mediator is placed, and he is possessed of all authority and power both in heaven and upon earth; this is the reward of his humiliation; this authority he exercises for the glory of his Father, for his own honour, and for the happiness of all who belong to him; and he will by his almighty power bring every one of them in their own order to the right hand of God in heaven, as members of his mystical body, that where he is they may be also. 3. What is that sanctuary of which he is a Minister; of the true tabernacle, which the Lord hath pitched, and not man, v. 2. The tabernacle which was pitched by man, according to the appointment of God. There was an outer part, in which was the altar where they were to offer their sacrifices; this typified Christ dying; and there was an interior part within the vail, which typified Christ interceding for the people in heaven. Now this tabernacle Christ never entered into; but having finished the work of satisfaction in the true tabernacle of his own body, he is now a Minister of the sanctuary, the holy of holies, the true tabernacle in heaven, there taking care of his people's affairs, interceding with God for them, that their sins may be pardoned, and their persons and services accepted, through the merit of his sacrifice. He is not only in heaven enjoying great dominion and dignity, but, as the High Priest of his church, executing this office for them all in general, and every member of the church in particular.

3. For every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. 4. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: 5. Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle. For see (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount.

Here the apostle sets before the Hebrews the necessary parts of Christ's priesthood, or what it was that belonged to that office, in conformity to what every high-priest is ordained to. 1. Every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices, whatever was brought by the people to be presented to God, whether expiatory sacrifices, or peace-offerings, or thank-offerings; these must be offered by the priest, who was to expiate their guilt by the blood of the sacrifice, and perfume their gifts and services by his holy incense, to render their persons and performances typically acceptable: so then it necessarily belongs to the priesthood of Christ, that he should have somewhat to offer; and he, as the Antitype, had himself to offer, his human nature upon the altar of his divine nature, as the great atoning Sacrifice that finished transgression, and made an end of sin once for all; and he has the incense of his own righteousness and merits too, to offer with all that his people offer up to God by him, to render them acceptable. We must not dare to approach to God, or to present any thing to him, but in and through Christ, depending upon his merits and mediation; for if we are accepted, it is in the Beloved. 2. Christ must now execute his priesthood in heaven, in the holy of holies, the true tabernacle which the Lord hath fixed. Thus the type must be fully answered; having finished the work of sacrificing here, he must go into heaven, to present his righteousness, and to make intercession there. For, (1.) If Christ were on earth, he should not be a Priest, (v. 4.) that is, not according to the Levitical law, as not being of the line of that priesthood; and so long as that priesthood continued, there must be a strict regard had to the divine institution in every thing. (2.) All the services of the priest, under the law, and every thing in that tabernacle which was framed according to the pattern in the mount, were only exemplars and shadows of heavenly things, v. 5. Christ is the Substance and End of the law of righteousness. Something therefore there must be in Christ's priesthood, that answers to the high-priest's entering within the vail to make intercession, without which he could not have been a perfect Priest; and what is that but the ascension of Christ into heaven, and his appearance there in the sight of God for his people, and not the priests, and plead their cause? So that if he had so continued on earth, he could not have been a perfect Priest; and an imperfect one he could not be.

6. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. 7. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. 8. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: 9. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. 10. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days.
sai the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: 11. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me from the least to the greatest. 12. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. 13. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

In this part of the chapter, the apostle illustrates and confirms the superior excellency of the priesthood of Christ above that of Aaron, from the excellency of that covenant, or that dispensation of the covenant of grace, of which Christ was the Mediator; (v. 6.) his ministry is more excellent, by how much he is the Mediator of a better covenant. The body and soul too of all divinity (as some observe) consist very much in rightly distinguishing between the two covenants. The covenant made with the land of Egypt, which speaks the great affection, condescension, and tender care of God toward them. 2. That this covenant was not found faultless; (v. 7, 8.) it was a dispensation of darkness and dread, tending to bondage, and only a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; it was perfect in its kind, and fitted to answer its end, but very imperfect in comparison of the gospel. 3. That it was not sure or steadfast; for the Jews continued not in that covenant; it was God's covenant, and the Lord regarded them not, v. 9. They dealt ungratefully with their God, and cruelly with themselves, and fell under God's displeasure. God will regard those who remain in his covenant, but will reject those who cast away his yoke from them. 4. That it is decayed, grown old, and vanished away; (v. 13.) it is antiquated, canceled, out of date, of no more use in gospel-times than candles are when the sun is risen. Some think the covenant of peculiarity did not quite decay till the destruction of Jerusalem, though it was forfeited at the death of Christ, and was made old, and was now to vanish and perish, and the Levitical priesthood vanished with it.

II. What is here said of the New Testament dispensation, to prove the superior excellency of Christ's ministry. It is said, 1. That it is a better covenant, (v. 6.) the covenant of new and everlasting grace. 2. That it is a perfect covenant and discovery of the grace of God to sinners, bringing in holy light and liberty to the soul; it is without fault, well ordered in all things; it requires nothing but what it promises grace to perform; it accepts of godly sincerity, accounting it gospel perfection; every transgression does not turn us out of covenant, all is put into a good and safe hand. 2. That it is established upon better promises, more clear and express, more spiritual, more absolute; the promises of spiritual and eternal blessings are in this covenant positive and absolute, the promises of temporal blessings with a wise and kind proviso, as far as shall be for God's glory and his people's good.

This covenant contains in it promises of assistance and acceptance in duty, promises of progress and perseverance in grace and holiness, of bliss and glory in heaven; which were more obscurely shadowed forth by the promises of the land of Canaan, a type of heaven. 3. It is a new covenant, even that new covenant that God long ago declared he would make with the house of Israel, that is, all the Israel of God; this was promised in Jer. 31. 31, 32, and accomplished in Christ. This will always be a new covenant with all who sincerely believe in it; shall be always found preserved by the power of God; it is God's covenant; his mercy, love, and grace moved for it; his wisdom devised it; his Son purchased it; his Spirit brings souls into it, and builds them up in it. 4. The articles of this covenant are very extraordinary, which are scaled between God and his people by baptism and the Lord's supper, whereby they bind themselves to their part; and God assures them all will do his part, and he is the main and principal part, on which your people depend for grace and strength to do their's. Here.

1. God articles with his people, that he will put his laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts, v. 10. He once wrote his laws to them, now he will write his laws in them; that is, he will give them understanding to know and to believe his name. He will give them hearts to retain them: he will give them hearts to love them, and consciences to recognise them; he will give them courage to profess them, and power to put them in practice; the whole habit and frame of their souls shall be a table and transcript of the law of God. This is the foundation of the covenant; and when this is laid, duty will be done wisely, sincerely, readily, easily, resolutely, constantly, and comfortably.

2. He articles with them to take them into a near and very honourable relation to himself. [1.] He will be to them a God; he will be all that to them, and do all to them, that God can be and do. Nothing more can be said in a thousand volumes than is comprehended in these few words, I will be a God to them. [2.] They shall be to him a people, to love, honour, serve, and obey him. God, as his own, is his command, conforming to his commands, complying with his providences, copying out his example, taking complacency in his favour. This those must do and will do, who have God for their God; this they are bound to do as their part of the contract; this they shall do, for God will enable them to do it, as an evidence that he is their God and that they are his people; for it is God himself who first found them in relation, and who purchased and set them apart to himself. [3.] God dispenses to them a grace which is suitable and sufficient, and helps them in their measure to fill it up with love and duty; so that God engages both for himself and themselves.

3. He articles with them, that they shall grow more and more acquainted with their God; (v. 11.) They shall know me from the least to the greatest, insomuch that there shall not be so much the least of them found in worship, in use of the written knowledge of God. Here observe, [1.] In the want of better instruction, one neighbour should be teaching another to know the Lord, as they have ability and opportunity for it. [2.] This private instruction shall not be so necessary under the New Testament as under the Old. The old dispensation was shadowy, dark, ritual, and less understood; their priests preached but seldom, and but a few at a time, and the Spirit of God was more sparingly given to the people. But under the new dispensation there shall be such plenty of public qualified preachers of the gospel, and dispensers of ordinances statelyly in the solemn assemblies, and so great a flocking to them, as doves to their windows, and such a plentiful effusion of the Spirit of God, to make the ministration of the gospel effectual, that there shall be a mighty increase and spreading of Christian knowledge in persons of all sorts, of each sex, and of all ages. O that this promise might be fulfilled in our days, that the hand of God may be with his ministers, that a great number may believe, and be turned to the Lord!

(4.) God articles with them about the pardon of the sins of the children of Israel, which accompanies the true knowledge of God; (v. 12.) For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, &c. Observe, [1.] The freeness of this pardon; it does not result from merit in man, but from mercy in God; he pardons for his own name-sake. [2.] The fulness of this pardon; it extends to their unrighteousness, sins, and iniquities; to all kinds of sin, to sins highly aggravated. [3.] The fixedness of this pardon; it is so final and so fixed, that God will remember their sins no more; he will not recall his pardon; he will not only forgive their sins, but forget them, treat them as if he had forgotten them. This pardoning mercy is connected with all other spiritual mercies; unpardoned sin prevents mercy, and pulls down judgments, but the pardon of sin prevents judgment, and opens a wide door to all spiritual blessing; it is the effect of that mercy which is from eternity; and the very condition of that mercy that shall be to everlasting. This is the excellency of the new dispensation, and these the articles of it; and therefore we have no reason to repent, but great reason to rejoice, that that former dispensation is antiquated and vanished away.

CHAP. IX.

The apostle, having declared the Old Testament dispensation antiquated and vanished away, proceeds to set the Hebrews in the presence of the difference between the Old Testament and the New; and that whatever was excellent in the Old, was typical and representative of the New; which therefore must as far excel the Old as the substance does the shadow. The Old Testament was never intended to be rested in, but to prepare for, the institutions of the gospel. And here he treats, I. Of the tabernacle, the place of worship, from v. 1. to 5. II. Of the worship and services performed in the tabernacle, v. 6. to 7. III. He delivers the spiritual sense and the main design of all, v. 8. to the end.

1. THEN verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. 2. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. 3. And after the second vail, the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all; 4. Which had the golden censer; and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; 5. And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

The apostle gives an account here of the tabernacle, that place of worship which God appointed to be pitched on earth. It is called a worldly sanctuary, wholly of this world, as to the materials of which it was built, and a building that must be taken down; it is called a worldly sanctuary, because it was the court and palace of the King of Israel. God was their King, and, as other kings, had his court or palace of residence, and attendants, furniture, and provision, suitable thereto. This tabernacle (of which we have the model, Exod. 25—27.) was a moving temple, shadowing forth the unsettled state of the church militant, and the human nature of the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily. Now of this tabernacle it is said, 1. That it was divided into two parts, called a first and a second tabernacle, an inner and an outer part; representing the two states of the church militant and triumphant, and the two natures of Christ, human and divine. 2. We are told what was placed in each part in tabernacle.

(1.) In the outer part: and there were several things, of which you have here a sort of schedule.

[1.] The candlestick; doubtless not an empty and unlighted one, but where the lamps were always burning. And there was need of it, for there were no windows in the sanctuary; and this was to convince the Jews of the darkness and mysterious was of this dispensation. Their light was only candle-light, in comparison of the fulness of light which Christ, the Sun of righteousness, would bring along with him, and communicate to his people; for all our light is derived from him, the Fountain of light.

[2.] The table and the shew-bread set upon it. This table was set directly opposite to the candlestick, which shows that by light from Christ we must receive the ordinances and offerings of the church; and by light from Christ that we must discard the darkness of Old Testament religion. We must not come in the dark to his table, but by light from Christ must discern the Lord's body. On this table were placed twelve loaves for the twelve tribes of Israel; a loaf for a tribe, which stood from sabbath to sabbath, and on that day were renewed. This shew-bread may be considered either as the provision of the palace, (though the King of Israel needed it not, yet, in resemblance of the palaces of earthly kings, there must be this provision laid in weekily,) or the provision made in Christ for the souls of his people, suitable to the wants and to the relief of their souls. He is the Bread of life; in our Father's house there is bread enough and to spare; we may have fresh supplies from Christ, especially every Lord's day. This outer part is called the sanctuary or holy, because erected to the worship of a holy God, to represent all that was fit to enter into the holiest of all, the type of heaven itself. Now in this part we have

[1.] The golden censer, which was to hold the incense, or the golden altar set up to burn the incense upon; both the one and the other were typical of Christ, of his pleasing and prevailing intercession which he makes in heaven, grounded upon the merits and satisfaction of his sacrifice, upon which we are to depend for acceptance and the blessing from God.

[2.] The ark of the covenant overlaid round about with pure gold, v. 4. This typified Christ, his perfect obedience to the law, and his fulfilling of all righteousness for us. Now here we are told both what was in this ark, and what was over it.

First, What was in it. 1. The golden pot that had manna, which, when preserved by the Israelites in the tabernacle or holy, contrary to the command of God, presently putrified; but now, being by God's appointment deposited here in his house, was kept from putrefaction, always pure and sweet; and this to teach us, that it is only in Christ that our persons, our graces, our performances, are kept pure; it was also a type of the breed of life we have in Christ, the true ambrosia that gives immortality.
This was also a memorial of God’s miraculously feeding his people in the wilderness, that they might never forget such signal favour, nor distrust God for the time to come. 2. Aaron’s rod that budded; and thereby shewed that God had chosen him of the tribe of Levi, to minister before him of all the tribes of Israel, and so an end was put to the murmuring of the people, and the things attempted by the priests to corrupt the worship of God. 17. This was the rod of God with which Moses and Aaron wrought such wonders; and this was a type of Christ, who is styled the Man, the Branch, (Isa. 11. 1.) by whom God has wrought wonders for the spiritual deliverance, defence, and supply of his people, and for the destruction of their enemies. It was a type of divine justice, by whom Christ the Rock was smitten, and from whom the cold refreshing waters of life flowed into our souls. 3. The tables of the covenant, in which the moral law was written, signifying the regard God has to the preservation of his holy law, and the care we all ought to have, that we keep the law of God; that this we can only do in and through Christ, by strength from him, nor can our obedience be accepted but through him.

Secondly. What was over the ark, v. 5. Over it the cherubim overshadowed the mercy-seat.

1. The mercy-seat, which was the covering of the ark; it was called the propitiatory, and it was of pure gold, as long and as broad as the ark in which the tables of the law were laid; it was an eminent type of Christ, and of his perfect righteousness, ever adequate to the dimensions of the law of God, and covering all our transgressions, interposing between the Shechinah, or symbol of God’s presence, and our sinful failures, and covering them.

2. The cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat, representing the holy angels of God, who take pleasure in looking into the great work of our redemption by Christ, and are ready to perform every good office, under the Redeemer, for those who are the heirs of salvation. The angels attended Christ at his birth, in his temptation, under his agonies, at his resurrection, and in his ascension, and will attend his second coming. God manifest in the flesh, was seen, observed, visited, by the angels.

6. Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. 7. But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people.

From the description of the place of worship in the Old Testament dispensation, the apostle proceeds to speak of the duties and services performed in the present: when the several parts and furniture of the tabernacle were thus settled, then what was to be done there?

1. The ordinary priests went always into the first tabernacle, to accomplish the service of God. Observe, (1.) None but priests were to enter into the first part of the tabernacle, and this to teach us all, that persons not qualified, not called of God, must not intrude into the office and work of the ministry. (2.) None but ordinary priests were only to enter into the first part of the tabernacle, it would have been fatal presumption in them to have gone into the holiest of all; and this teaches us that even ministers themselves must know and keep in their proper stations, and not presume to usurp the prerogative of Christ, by offering up incense of their own, or adding their own inventions to the ordinances of Christ, or lording it over men’s consciences. (3.) These ordinary priests were to enter into the first tabernacle always; that is, they were to devote themselves and all their time to the work of their office, and not alienate themselves at any time from it; they were to be in an habitual readiness for the discharge of their office; and at all stated appointed times were actually to attend to their work. (4.) The ordinary priests must enter into the first tabernacle, that they might there be reminded of the work of God; they must not do the work of God partially or by halves, but stand complete in the whole of his will and counsel: not only beginning well, but proceeding well, and persevering to the end, they fulfil the ministry they have received.

2. Into the second, the interior part, went the high priest alone, v. 7. This part was an emblem of heaven, and Christ’s ascension thither. Here observe, (1.) None but the high priest must go into the holiest; so none but Christ could enter into heaven in his own name, by his own right, and by his own merits. (2.) In entering into the holiest, the high priest must first go through the outer sanctuary, and through the vail; signifying that Christ went to heaven through a holy life and a violent death; the vail of his flesh was rent asunder. (3.) The high priest entered but once a year into the holiest, and in this the Antitype excels the type, (for there is no other thing else,) for he is entered once for all, during the whole dispensation of the gospel. (4.) The high priest must not enter without blood; signifying that Christ, having undertaken to be our High Priest, could not have been admitted into heaven without shedding his blood for us; and that none of us can enter either into God’s gracious presence here, or his glorious presence hereafter, but by the blood of Jesus. (5.) The high priest, under the law, entering into the holiest, offered up that blood for himself and his own errors first, and then for the errors of the people, v. 7. This teaches us that Christ is a more excellent Person and High Priest than any under the law, for he has no errors of his own to offer for. And it teaches us that ministers, when in the name of Christ they intercede for others, must first apply the blood of Christ to themselves for their pardon. (6.) When the legal high priest had offered for himself, he must not stop there, but must also offer for the errors of the people. Our High Priest, though he needs not to offer for himself, yet he forgets not to offer for his people; he pleads the merit of his sufferings for the benefit of his people on earth. Observe, (1.) Sins are errors, and great errors, both in judgment and practice. We greatly err when we do it again. And worse still, when we do it in all our errors? (2.) They are such errors as leave a guilt upon the conscience, not to be washed away but by the blood of Christ; and the sinful errors of priests and people must be all done away by the same means, the application of the blood of Christ; we must plead this blood on earth, while he is pleading it in heaven for us.

8. The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: 9. Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; 10. Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. 11. But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; 12. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood; he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. 13. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?

In these verses the apostle undertakes to deliver to us the mind and meaning of the Holy Ghost in all the ordinances of the tabernacle and legal economy, comprehending both place and worship. The scriptures of the Old Testament were given by inspiration of God; holy men of old spake and wrote as the Holy Ghost taught them. And these Old Testament records are of great use and significance, not only to those who first received them, but even to Christians, who ought not to satisfy themselves with reading the institutes of the Levitical law, but should learn what the Holy Ghost signifies and suggests to them thereby. Now here are several things mentioned, as the things that the Holy Ghost signified and certified to his people hereby.

II. That the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while the first tabernacle was standing, v. 8. This was one lesson the Holy Ghost would teach us by these types; the way to heaven was not so clear and plain, nor so much frequented, under the Old Testament as under the New. It is the honour of Christ and the gospel, and the happiness of those who live under it, that now life and immortality are brought to light. There was not that free access to God then that there is now; God has now opened a wider door, and there is room for more, yea even for as many as are truly willing to return unto him by Christ.

III. That none of the gifts and sacrifices there offered could make the offerers perfect as pertaining to conscience; (v. 9.) that is, they could not take away either the desert, or defilement, or dominion, of sin; they could not deliver conscience from a dread of the wrath of God; they could neither discharge the debts, nor resolve the doubts, of him who did the service. A man might run through them all in their several orders and frequent returns, and continue to do so all his days, and yet not find his conscience either pacified or purified by them; he might thereby be saved from corporal and temporal punishments that were threatened against the transgressors, but he could not be saved by them from sin or hell, as a those are, who believe in Christ.

IV. The Holy Ghost hereby signifies that the Old Testament institutions were but external carnal ordinances imposed upon them until the time of reformation, v. 10. Their imperfection lay in three things. 1. Their nature; they were but external and carnal meats and drinks, and divers washings. All these were bodily exercises, which profit little; they could only satisfy the flesh, or at best sancify to the purifying of the flesh. 2. They were not such as were left indifferent to them to use or disuse, but they were imposed upon them by grievous corporal punishments, and this was ordered on purpose to make them look more to the promised Seed, and every morning, v. 11. These we never designed for a perpetuity, but only to continue till the time of reformation, till the better things provided for them were actually bestowed upon them. Gospel-times are and should be times of reformation, of clearer light as to all things necessary to be known, of greater love, inducing us to bear ill-will to none, but good-will to all, and to have complacency in all that are like God; of greater liberty and freedom both of conscience and worship, and consequently the removal of the fear of the law, and of the old sanctioning to the rule of the gospel. We have far greater advantages under the gospel than they had under the law; and we must either be better, or we shall be worse than they; a conversation becoming the gospel, is an excellent way of living; nothing mean, or foolish, or vain, or servile becomes the gospel.

V. The Holy Ghost signifies to us hereby, that we never make the right use of types but when we apply them to Christ the Antitype; and so, it will be very evident that the Antitype (as in reason it should) greatly excels the type, which is the main drift and design of all that is said. And as he writes to those who believed that Christ was come, and that Jesus was the Christ; so he very justly infers, that he is infinitely above all the legal high priests, (v. 11, 12.) and he illustrates it very fully.

1. Christ is the High Priest of good things to come, by which may be understood, (1.) All the good things that were to come during the Old Testament, and now are come under the New. All the spiritual and eternal blessings the Old Testament saints had in their day and under their dispensation, were owing to the Messiah to come, on whom they believed. The Old Testament set forth in shadows what was to come in the New Testament is the accomplishment of the Old. (2.) All the good things yet to come and to be enjoyed in a gospel-state, when the promises and prophecies made to the gospel-church in the latter days shall be accomplished; all these depend upon Christ and his priesthood, and shall be fulfilled. (3.) Of all the good things to come in the heavenly state, which will perfect both the Testaments; as the state of glory will perfect the state of grace, this patch, and it is a matter of living between the perfection of the New Testament, than the New Testament was the perfection of the Old. Observe, All good things past, present, and to come, were, and are, founded upon, and flowing from, the priestly office of Christ.

2. Christ is a High Priest by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, (v. 11.) a tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building, but by his own hand. This building was the Holy Ghost overshadowing the blessed virgin. This was a new fabric, a new order of building, infinitely superior to all earthly structures, not excepting the tabernacle or the temple itself.

3. Christ, our High Priest, is entered into heaven, not as his high priest entered into the holiest, with the blood of bulls and of goats, but by his own blood typified by their, and infinitely more precious. And this was.

4. Not for one year only, which shewed the imperfect of that priesthood, that it did but typically obtain a year's reprieve or pardon. But our High Priest entered into heaven once for all, and has obtained not a yearly respite, but eternal redemption, and so needs not to make an annual entrance. In each of the types there was something that shewed it was a type, and resembled the antitype, and something that shewed it was hut a type, and fell short the Antitype, and therefore ought by no means to be set up in competition with the Antitype.

5. The Holy Ghost further signified and showed what was the efficacy of the blood of the Old-Testament sacrifices, and from thence infers the much greater efficacy of the blood of Christ. (1.) The efficacy of the blood of the legal sacrifices extended to the purifying of the flesh; (v. 13.) it freed the outward man from ceremonial uncleanness, and from temporal punishment, and entitled him to, and fitted him for, some external privileges. (2.) He infers very justly from hence the far greater efficacy of the blood of Christ; (v. 14.) How much more shall the blood of Christ, &c. Here observe,

[1.] What it was, that gave such efficacy to the blood of Christ. First, It was his offering himself to God, the human nature upon the altar of his divine nature, he being both Priest, Altar, and Sacrifice, his divine nature serving for the two first, and his human nature for the last; now such a Priest, Altar, and Sacrifice, could not but be propitiatory. Secondly, It was Christ's offering up himself to God through the eternal Spirit, not only as the divine nature supported the human, but the Holy Ghost, which he had without measure, helping him in all, and in this great act of obedience offering himself. Thirdly, It was Christ's offering himself to God without spot, without any sinful stain either in his nature or life; this was conformable to the law of sacrifices, which were to be without blemish. Now further observe,

[2.] What the efficacy of Christ's blood is; it is very great. For, First, It is sufficient to purge the conscience from dead works, it reaches to the very soul and conscience; the defiled soul, defiled with sin, which is a dead work, proceeds from spiritual death, and tends to death eternal. As the touching of a dead body gave a legal uncleanness, so meddlin with sin gives a moral and real defilement, fixes it in the very soul; but the blood of grace has efficacy to purge it out. Secondly, It is sufficient to enable us to serve the living God, not only by purging away that guilt that separates between God and sinners, but by sanctifying and renewing the soul through Christ; (v. 10.) the law was not for the intent of purging, it is said, but for the intent of purifying; (v. 11.) Christ purchased by Christ for this purpose, that we might be enabled to serve the living God in a lively manner.

15. And for this cause he is the Mediatory of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. 16. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. 17. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the testator liveth. 18. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. 19. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people. 20. Saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you. 21. Moreover he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. 22. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

In these verses the apostle considers the gospel under the notion of a will or testament, the new or last will and testament of Christ, and shews the necessity and efficacy of the blood of Christ to make this testament valid and effectual.

The first testament is here considered as a testament, the new and last will and testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is observable, that the solemn transactions that pass between God and man are sometimes called a covenant, here a testament. A covenant is an agreement between two or more parties about things that are in their own power, or may be so; and this either with or without a mediator; this agreement takes effect at such time and in such manner as is therein declared. A testament is a voluntary act and deed of a single person, duly executed and witnessed, bestowing legacies on such legateses as are described and characterized by the testator, and which can only take effect upon his death. Now observe,

Christ is the Mediator of a New Testament; (v. 15.) and he is so for several ends and purposes here mentioned. 1. To redeem persons from their transgressions condemned under the old testament, which makes every transgression a forfeiture of liberty, and makes men debtors, and slaves or prisoners, who need to be redeemed. 2. To qualify all those that are effectually called, to receive the promise of an eternal inheritance. These are the great legacies that Christ by his last will and testament has bequeathed to the truly characterized legateses.

II. To make this new testament effectual, it was necessary that Christ should die; the legacies secured by means of death. This is proved by two arguments.

1. From the general nature of every will or testamentary disposition, v. 16. Where a testament is, where it acts and operates, there must of necessity be the death of the testator; till then the property is still in the testator's hand, and he has power to revoke, cancel, or alter, his will as he pleases; but when the testator is dead, though no estate, no right, is conveyed by will, till the testator's death has made it unalterable and effectual.

2. From the particular method that was taken by Moses in the ratification of the first testament, which was not done without blood, v. 18, 19, &c. All men by sin were become guilty before God, had forfeited their inheritance, their liberties, and their very lives, into the hands of divine justice; but God, being willing to shew the greatness of his mercy, proclaimed a covenant of grace, and ordered it to be typically administered under the Old Testament, but not without the blood and life of the creature: and God accepted the blood of bulls and goats, as typifying the blood of Christ; and by these means the covenant of grace was ratified under the former dispensation. The method taken by Moses according to the precept he had received from God, is here particularly related.

(1.) Moses spake every precept to all the people, according to the law, v. 19. He published to them the tenour of the covenant; both the duties required, the rewards promised to those who did their duty, and the punishment threatened against the transgressors, and he called for their consent to the terms of the covenant, and this in an express manner.

(2.) Then he took the blood of calves, and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and applied this blood by sprinkling it. This blood and water signified the blood and water that came out of our Saviour's pierced side, for justification and sanctification; and also shadowed forth the two sacraments of the New Testament, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, with scarlet wool, signifying the righteousness of Christ with which we must be clothed; the hyssop signifying that faith by which we must apply all. Now with these Moses sprinkled, [1.] The book of the law and covenant; to shew that the covenant of grace is confirmed by the blood of Christ, and made effectual to our good. [2.] The people intimating that the shedding of the blood of Christ will be no advantage to us, if it be not applied to us. And the sprinkling of both the book and the people, signified the mutual consent of both parties, God and man, and their mutual engagements to each other in this covenant through Christ; Moses at the same time using these words, This is the blood of the Testament which God hath commanded me to put upon the posts of the gates of this house. [3.] He sprinkled the tabernacle and all the utensils of it, intimating that all the sacrifices offered up, and services performed there, were accepted only through the blood of Christ, which procures the remission of that iniquity that cleaves to our holy things, which could not have been remitted but by that atoning blood.

23. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. 24. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: 25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; 26. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. 27. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:

28. So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

In this last part of the chapter, the apostle goes on to tell us what the Holy Ghost has signified to us by the legal purifications of the patterns of the things in heaven; inferring from thence the necessity of better sacrifices to consecrate the heavenly things themselves.

I. The necessity of purifying the patterns of the things in heaven, v. 25. This necessity arises both from the divine appointment, which must always be obeyed, and from the reason of that appointment, which was to preserve a proper resemblance between the things typifying and the things typified. It is observable here, that the sanctuary of God on earth is a pattern of heaven, and communion with God in his sanctuary is to his people a heaven upon earth.

II. The necessity that the heavenly things themselves should be purified with better sacrifices than of bulls and goats; the things themselves are better than the patterns, and must therefore be consecrated with better sacrifices. These heavenly things are the privileges of the gospel-state, begun in grace, perfected in glory; these must be ratified by a suitable sanction or consecration; and that was the blood of Christ. Now it is very evident that the sacrifices of Christ are infinitely better than those of the law. 1. From the places in which the sacrifices under the law, and those under the gospel, were offered. Those under the law were the holy places made with hands, which are but figures of the true sanctuary, v. 24. Christ's sacrifice, though offered upon earth, was by himself carried up into heaven, and is there presented in the presence of God for him, and for he appears in the presence of God for us. He is gone to heaven, not only to enjoy the rest, and receive the honour, due to him, but to appear in the presence of God for us, to present our persons and our performances, to answer and rebuke our adversary and accuser, to secure our interest, to perfect all our affairs, and to prepare a place for us. 2. From the sacrifices themselves, v. 26. Those under the law were the lives and blood of other creatures of a different nature from the offerers—the blood of beasts, a thing of small value, and would have been none of all in this matter, had it not had a typical respect to the blood of Christ; but the sacrifice of Christ was the oblation of himself; he offered his own blood, truly called, by virtue of the hypostatical union, the blood of God; and therefore of infinite value. 3. From the frequent repetition of the legal sacrifices. This typified the perpetuation of that law; but it is the honour and perfection of Christ's sacrifice, that, being once offered, it was sufficient to all the ends of it; and indeed the contrary would have been absurd; for, then he must have been still dying and rising again, and ascending and then again descending and dying; and the great work had been always in fieri—a-doing, and always going on, but never finished; which would be as contrary to reason as it is to revelation, and to the dignity of his person; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. The gospel is the last dispensation of the grace of God to men. 4. From the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and the efficacy of Christ's sacrifice, the legal sacrifices could not of themselves put away sin; neither procure pardon for it, nor power against it. Sin would still have lain upon us, and had dominion over us; but Jesus Christ by one sacrifice has made an end of sin, he has destroyed the works of the Devil.

III. The apostle illustrates the argument from the appointment of God concerning men, (v. 27, 28.) and observes something like it in the appointment of God concerning Christ.

1. The appointment of God concerning men, containing in it many things. (1.) That they must once die, or, however, undergo a change equivalent to death. It is an awful thing to die, to have the vital knot loosened or cut asunder, all relations here dropped at once, an end put to our probation and preparatory state, and to enter into another world. It is a great work, and it is a work that can be but once done, and therefore had need to be well done. This necessity of death is of force to all, none can escape it but he who is saved; and therefore it is said, some must rise from death, some must rise from the grave, some will rise, and some will not. This is of the general use; it is the same for the whole of the world; it is the decree of God, concerning men—they must die, and they must be judged. It is appointed for them, and it is to be believed and seriously considered by them.

2. The appointment of God concerning Christ, bearing some resemblance to the other. (1.) He must be once offered, to bear the sins of many, of all the Father had given to him, of all who should believe in his name. He was not offered for any sin of his own, he was wounded for our transgressions. God laid on him the iniquity of all his people; and these are many, though not so many as the rest of mankind; yet, when they are all gathered to him, he will be the First-born among many brethren. (2.) It is appointed that Christ shall appear the second time without sin, to the salvation of those who look for him. [1.] He will then appear without sin: at his first appearance, though he had no sin of his own, yet he stood charged with the sins of many; he was the Lamb of God that bore upon him the sins of the world; and then he appeared in the form of sinful flesh; but his second appearance will be without any such charge upon him, he having fully discharged it before, and then his visage shall not be marred, but shall be exceedingly glorious. [2.] This will be to the salvation of all who look for him, he will then perfect their holiness, their happiness; their number shall then be accomplished, and their salvation completed. Observe, It is the distinguishing character of true believers, that they are looking for Christ; they look to him by faith; they look for him by hope and holy desires. They look for him in every duty, in every ordinance, in every providence now; and they expect his second coming, and are preparing for it; and though it will be sudden destruction to the rest of the world, who scoff at the report of it, it will be eternal salvation to those who look for it.

CHAPTER X.
The apostle knew very well that the Hebrews, to whom he wrote, were strangely fond of the Levitical dispensation, and therefore he fills his mouth with arguments to weaken them from it; and in order thereto proceeds in this chapter, I. To lay low the whole of that priesthood and sacrifice, v. 1-6. II. He raises and exalts the priesthood of Christ very high, that he might effectually recommend him to his gospel to them, v. 7. 18. III. He shews to believers the honours and dignities of their state, and calls them to suitable duties, v. 19, to the end.

1. FOR the law, having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. 2. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? Because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. 3. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. 4. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. 5. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: 6. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure.

Here the apostle, by the direction of the Spirit of God, sets himself to lay low the Levitical dispensation; for though it was of divine appointment, and very excellent and useful in its time and place, yet, when it was set up in competition with Christ, to whom it was only designed to lead the people, it was very proper and necessary to shew the weakness and impropriety of which the apostle does effectually, from several arguments. As, 1. That the law had a shadow, and but a shadow, of good things to come; and who would dote upon a shadow, though of good things, especially when the substance is come? Observe, (1.) The things of Christ and the gospel are good things; they are the best things; they are best in themselves, and the best for us: they are realities of an excellent nature. (2.) These good things were, under the Old Testament, for a long time, not clearly discovered, nor fully enjoyed. (5.) That the Jews then had but the shadow of the good things of Christ, some adumbrations of them; we under the gospel have the substance.

2. That the law was not the very image of the good things to come. An image is an exact draught of the thing represented thereby. The law did not go so far, but was only a shadow, as the image of a person in a looking-glass, much less than the perfect representation than his shadow upon the wall. The law was a very rough draught of the great design of divine grace, and therefore not to be so much dotted on.

3. The legal sacrifices, being offered year by year, could never make the comers thereunto perfect; for then there would have been an end of offering them, v. 12. Could they have satisfied the demands of justice, and made reconciliation for iniquity; could they have purified and pacified conscience; then they had ceased, as being no farther necessary; since the offerers would have had no more sin lying upon their consciences. But this was not the case; after one day of atonement was over, the sinner would fall again into one fault or other, and so there would be need of another day of atonement, and of one every year, besides the daily ministrations. Whereas now under the gospel, the atonement is perfect, and not to be repeated; and the sinner, once pardoned, is ever pardoned as to his state, and only needs to renew his repentance and faith, that he may have a comfortable sense of a continued pardon.

4. As the legal sacrifices did not of themselves take away sin, so it was impossible they should, v. 12. There was an essential defect in them. (1.) They were not of the same nature with us who sinned. (2.) They were not of sufficient value to make satisfaction for the affrights done to the justice and government of God, as they were not of the same nature that offended, and so could not be suitable. They were much less of the same nature that was offended: and nothing less than the nature that was offended could take the sacrifice a full satisfaction for the offence. (3.) The sacrifices offered up under the law could not consent to put themselves into the sinner's room and place. The atoning sacrifice must be one capable of consenting, and must voluntarily substitute himself in the sinner's stead: Christ did so.

5. There was a time fixed and foretold by the great God, and that time was now come, when these legal sacrifices would be no longer accepted by him, or useful to men. God never did desire them for themselves, and now he abrogated them: and therefore to adhere to them now, would be resisting God and rejecting him. This time of the repeal of the Levitical laws was foretold by David, (Ps. 40. 7.) and is recited here as now come. Thus industriously does the apostle lay low the Mosaic dispensation.

7. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. 8. Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt-offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hast pleasure therein; (which are offered by the law;) 9. Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. 10. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. 11. And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: 12. But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God; 13. From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. 14. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. 15. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he hath said before, 16. This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; 17. And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. 18. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

Here the apostle raises up and exalts the Lord Jesus Christ, as high as he had laid the Levitical priesthood low. He recommends Christ to them as the true High Priest, the true atoning Sacrifice, the Antitype of all the rest: and this he illustrates,

1. From the purpose and promise of God concerning Christ, which are frequently recorded in the volume of the books of God; he had not only desired, but declared by Moses and the prophets, that Christ should come and be the great High Priest of the church, and should offer up a perfect and a perfecting sacrifice. It was written of Christ in the beginning of the book of God, that the Seed of the woman should break the serpent's head; and the Old Testament abounds with prophecies concerning Christ. Now since he is the Person so often promised, so much spoken of, so long expected by the people of God, he ought to be received with great honour and gratitude.

2. From what God had done in preparing a body for Christ, that is a human nature, that he might be qualified to be our Redeemer and Advocate; uniting the two natures in his own person, he was a fit Mediator to go between God and man; a Day's-Man to lay his hand upon both, a Peace-Maker, to reconcile them, and an everlasting Band of union between God and the creature—"Mine ears hast thou opened; thou hast fully instructed me, furnished and fitted me for the work, and engaged me in it," Ps. 89.

6. Now a Saviour, thus provided and prepared by God himself in so extraordinary a manner, ought to be received with great affection and gladness.

3. From the readiness and willingness that Christ discovered to engage in this work, when no other sacrifice would be accepted, v. 7—9. When no lesser sacrifice would be a proper satisfaction to the justice of God than that of Christ himself, then Christ voluntarily came into it; "Lo, I come! I delight to do thy will, O God!" Let thy curse fall upon me, but let these gether way. Father, I delight to fulfil thy counsels, and my covenant with thee for them; I delight to perform all thy promises, to full all the precepts. This should engage Christ and our Bibles to us, that in Christ we have the fulfiling of the scriptures.

4. From the errand and design upon which Christ came; and that was, to do the will of God, not only as a Prophet to reveal the will of God, not only as a King to give forth divine laws, but as a Priest to satisfy the demands of justice, and to fulfil all righteousness. Christ came to do the will of God in two instances. (1.) In taking away the first priesthood, which God had no pleasure in; not only taking away the curse of the covenant of works, and cancelling the sentence denounced against us as sinners, but taking away the curse of the covenant of works, and blotting out the hand-writing of ceremonial ordinances, and nailing it to his cross. (2.) In establishing the second, that is, his own priesthood and the everlasting gospel, the most pure and perfect dispensation of the covenant of grace; this is the great design upon which the heart of God was set from all eternity. The will of God centres and terminates in it; and it is not more agreeable to the will of God than it is advantageous to the souls of men; for it is by this will that we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all, v. 10. Observe, [1.] What is the fountain of all that Christ has done for his people—the sovereign will and grace of God. [2.] How we come to partake of what Christ has done for us—by being sanctified, converted, effectually called, wherein we are united to Christ, and of partake of the benefits of his redemption; and this sanctification is owing to the obligation he made of himself to God.

5. From the perfect efficacy of the priesthood of Christ; (v. 14.) By one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified; he has and will perfectly deliver those that are brought over to him, from all the guilt, power, and punishment of sin, and will put them into the sure possession of perfect holiness and felicity. This is what the Levitical priesthood could never do; and if we indeed are aiming at a perfect state, we must receive the Lord Jesus Christ as the only High Priest that can bring us to that state.

6. From the place to which our Lord Jesus is now exalted, the honour he has there, and the further honour he shall have; (v. 12, 13.) This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down at the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. Here observe, (1.) To what honour Christ, as Man and Mediator, is exalted. He is set upon the highest seat of power, interest, and activity: the giving hand; all the favours that God bestows on his people, are handed to them by Christ: the receiving hand; all the duties that God accepts from men, are presented by Christ: the working hand; all in the kingdoms of providence and grace, is administered by Christ; and therefore this is the highest post of honour. (2.) How Christ came to this honour; not merely by the purpose or donation of the Father, but by his own merit and purchase, as a reward due to his sufferings; and as he can never be deprived of an honour so much his due, so he will never quit it, nor cease to employ it for his people's good. (3.) How he enjoys this honour—with the greatest satisfaction and rest; he is for ever sat down there. The Father acquiesces and is satisfied in him; he is satisfied in his Father's will and presence; this is his rest for ever; here he will dwell: for he hath both desired and deserved it. (4.) He has further expectations, which shall not be disappointed; for they are grounded upon the promise of the Father, who hath said unto him, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool, Ps. 110. 1. One would think such a Person as Christ could have no enemies, except in hell; but it is certain that he has enemies on earth, very many, and very invertebrate ones. Let not Christians then wonder that they have enemies, though they desire to live peaceably with all men. But Christ's enemies shall be made his footstool; some by conversion, others by confusion; and which way soever it be, Christ will be honoured; of this Christ is assured, this he is expecting; and his people should rejoice in the expectation of it; for when his enemies are subdued, their enemies, that are so for his sake, shall be subdued also.

7. And lastly, The apostle recommends Christ from the witness the Holy Ghost has given in the scriptures concerning him; this relates chiefly to what should be the happy fruit and consequence of his humiliation and sufferings, which in general is that new and gracious covenant that is founded upon his satisfaction, and sealed by his blood. 15.) whereof the Holy Ghost is a Witness. The passage is cited from Jer. 31. 31. in which covenant God promises, (1.) That God would pour out his Spirit upon his people, so as to give them wisdom, will, and power, to obey his word; he will put his laws in their hearts, and write them in their minds, v. 16. This will make their duty plain, easy, and pleasant. (2.) Their sins and iniquities he will remember no more, (v. 17.) which will alone shew the riches of divine grace, and the sufficiency of Christ's satisfaction, that it needs not be repeated, v. 18. For there shall be no more remembrance of sin against true believers, either to shame them now, or to condemn them hereafter. This was much more than the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices could effect.

And now we have gone through the doctrinal part of the epistle, in which we have met with many things dark and difficult to be understood, which we must impute to the weakness and dullness of our own minds. The apostle now proceeds to apply this great doctrine, so as to influence their affections, and direct their practice, setting before them the dignities and duties of the gospel-state.

19. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, 20. By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; 21. And having a high priest over the house of God; 22. Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. 23. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised: 24. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: 25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching. 26. For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. 27. But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. 28. He that despised Moses' law, died without mercy, under two or three witnesses: 29. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? 30. For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. 32. But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were enlightened, ye endured a great fight of affictions; 33. Partly, while ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, while ye became companions of them that were so used. 34. For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance. 35. Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. 36. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. 37. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. 38. Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. 39. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

I. The dignities of the gospel-state. It is fit that believers should know the honours and privileges that Christ has procured them, that, while they take the comfort, they may give him the glory of all. The privileges are, 1. Boldness to enter into the holiest. They have access to God, light to direct them, liberty of spirit and of speech to conform to the direction; they have a right to the privilege, and a readiness for it; assistance to use and improve it, and assurance of acceptance and advantage. They may enter into the gracious presence of God in his holy oracles, ordinances, providences, and covenant, and so into communion with God, where they receive communications from him, till they are prepared to enter into his glorious presence in heaven. 2. A High Priest over the house of God, even this blessed Jesus, who presides over the church militant, and every member thereof on earth, and over the church triumphant in heaven. God is willing to dwell with men on earth, and to have them dwell with him in heaven; but fallen man cannot dwell with God, without a High Priest, who is the Mediator of reconciliation here, and of fruition hereafter.
II. The apostle tells us the way and means by which Christians enjoy such privileges, and, in general, declares it to be by the blood of Jesus, by the merit of that blood which he offered up to God as atoning sacrifice: he has prevailed for all who believe in him, free access to God in the ordinances of his grace here, and in the kingdom of his glory. This blood, being sprinkled on the conscience, chases away slavish fear, and gives the believer assurance both of his safety, and his welcome into the divine presence. Now the apostle having given this general account of the way by which we have access to God, he enters further into the particulars of it, v. 20. As, 1. It is the only way; there is no other left but this; the first way to the tree of life is, and has been, long shut up. 2. It is a new way, both in opposition to the covenant of works, and to the antiquated dispensation of the Old Testament; it is via novissima— the last way that will ever be opened to men; they who will not enter in this way, exclude themselves for ever; it is a way that will always be effectual. 3. It is a living way. It would be death to attempt to come to God in the way of the covenant of works; but it is a way that may conduct to God, and live. It is by a living Saviour, who, though he was dead, is alive; and it is a way that gives life and lively hope to those who enter into it. 4. It is a way that Christ has consecrated for us through the vail, that is, his flesh. The vail in the tabernacle and temple signified the body of Christ; when he died, the vail of the temple was rent in sunder, and this was at the time when he consecrated his own body and the vail of his blood; a surprising view into the holy of holies, which they never had before. Our way to heaven is by a crucified Saviour; his death is to us the way of life; to those who believe this, he will be precious.

III. The apostle proceeds to shew the Hebrews the duties which they were obliged to upon the account of these privileges conferred upon them in such an extent, with their graces, and concern for one another; they should affectionately consider what their several wants, weaknesses, and temptations are; and they should do this, not to reproach one another, not provoke another to anger, but to promote love and good works, calling upon themselves and one another to love God and Christ more, to love duty and holiness more, to love their brethren in Christ more, and to do all the good offices of Christ. He who is affectionate both to the bodies and the souls of each other. A good example given to others is the best and most effectual provocation to love and good works.

2. Not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, v. 25. It is the will of Christ, that his disciples should assemble themselves together, some times more privately for conference and prayer, and in public for hearing and joining in all the ordinances of gospel-worship. There were in the apostles' times, and should be in every age, Christian assemblies for the worship of God, and for mutual edification. And it seems even in those times there were some who forsook these assemblies, and so began to apostatize from religion itself. The communion of saints is a great help and privilege, and a good means of steadiness and perseverance; hereby the hearts of the lazies; and the stronger our faith, the more glory we give to God.

And, (3.) Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience by a believing application of the blood of Christ to our souls. They may be cleansed from guilt, from filth, and from sinful fear and torment, from all aversion to God and duty, from ignorance, and error, and superstition, and whatever evils the conscience of men are subject to by reason of sin. (4.) Washed by the word of God, with the water of baptism, by which we are recorded among the disciples of Christ, members of his mystical body, or with the sanctifying virtue of the Holy Spirit reforming and regulating our outward conversation as well as our inward frame; cleansing from the filthiness of the flesh as well as of the Spirit. The priests under the law were to wash, before they went into the holy of the holies, the face of the Lord to offer before him. There must be a due preparation for making our approaches to God.

2. The apostle exhorts believers to hold fast the profession of their faith, v. 23. Here observe, (1.) The duty itself—to hold fast the profession of our faith, to embrace all the truths and ways of the gospel; to get fast hold of them, and to keep that hold against all temptation and opposition. Our spiritual enemies will do what they can to wrest our faith, and hope, and holiness, and comfort, out of our hands, but we must hold fast our religion as our best treasure. (2.) The manner how we must do this—without wavering, without doubting, without disputing, without sullying with temptation to apostasy. Having once settled these great things between God and our souls, we must be steadfast and immovable. They, who begin to waver in matters of Christian faith and practice, are in danger of falling away. (3.) The motive or reason enforcing this duty—he is faithful, that hath promised. God has made great and precious promises to believers, and he is a faithful God, true to his word; there is no falseness of weakness with him, and there should be none with us; his faithfulness should excite and encourage us to be faithful, and we must depend more upon his promises to us than upon our promises to make him, and we must plead with him the promise of grace sufficient.

IV. We have the means prescribed for preventing our apostasy, and promoting our fidelity and perseverance, v. 24, 25, &c. He mentions several; as, 1. That we should consider one another, to provoke to love and to good works. Christians ought to have a kindness, care, and concern for one another; they should affectionately consider what their several wants, weaknesses, and temptations are; and they should do this, not to reproach one another, not provoke another to anger, but to promote love and good works, calling upon themselves and one another to love God and Christ more, to love duty and holiness more, to love their brethren in Christ more, and to do all the good offices of Christ. He who is affectionate both to the bodies and the souls of each other. A good example given to others is the best and most effectual provocation to love and good works.

2. To exhort one another, to exhort ourselves and each other; to warn ourselves and one another of the sin and danger of backsliding, to put ourselves and our fellow-Christians in mind of our duty, of our failures and corruptions, to watch over one another, and be jealous of ourselves and one another with a godly jealousy. This, managed with a true gospel-spirit, would be the best and most cordial finisher of our way.
observe all the signs of its approaching, and improve them to greater watchfulness and diligence in duty.

V. After having mentioned these means of establishment, the apostle proceeds, in the close of the chapter, to enforce his exhortations to perseverance, and against apostasy, by many very weighty considerations, v. 26, 27, &c.

1. From the description he gives of the sin of apostasy. It is sinning wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth; sinning wilfully against that truth which we have had confirmed to us; and next he has been the occasion of great distress to some gracious souls; they have been ready to conclude that every wilful sin, after conviction and against knowledge, is the unpardonable sin: but this has been their infirmity and error. The sin here mentioned is a total and final apostasy, when men with a full and fixed will and resolution despise and reject Christ the only Saviour; despise and resist the Spirit, that is, the Sanctifier; and despise and renounce the gospel, the only way of salvation, and the words of eternal life; and all this, after they have known, owned, and professed, the Christian religion, and continue to do so obstinately and maliciously. This is the great transgression: the apostle seems to refer to the law concerning presumptuous sinners, Num. 15. 30, 31. They were to be cut off from among the people. It is the dreadful doom of such apostates.

1. There remains no more sacrifice for such sins; no other Christ to come to save such; they sin against the last resort and remedy. There were some sins under the law, for which no sacrifices were provided; but yet if they who committed them did truly repent, though they might not escape temporal death, they might escape eternal destruction; for Christ would come, and make atonement. But now those under the gospel, who will not accept of Christ, that they may be saved by him, have no other refuge left them.

2. There remains only for them a certain fearful looking for of judgment, v. 27. Some think this refers to the dreadful destruction of the Jewish church and state; but certainly it refers also to the utter destruction that waits for all obstinate apostates at death and judgment. They are bid conscience and indignation against them, that will devour the adversaries; they will be consigned over to the devouring fire, and to everlasting burnings. Of this destruction God gives some notorious sinners, while on earth, a fearful foreboding in their own consciences, a dreadful looking for it, with a despair of ever being able either to endure or escape it.

3. From the methods of divine justice with those who despised Moses. God is, sinned presumptuously, despising his authority, his threatenings, and his power. These, when convicted by two or three witnesses, were put to death; they died without mercy, a temporal death. Observe, Wise governors should be careful to keep up the credit of their government and the authority of the laws, by punishing presumptuous offenders; but then in such cases by that which was in the face of evidence and evident of the fact. Thus God ordained in Moses's law; and hence the apostle infers the heavy doom that will fall upon those that apostatize from Christ. Here he refers himself to their own consciences, to judge how much sorrier punishment the despisers of Christ (after they have professed to know him) are likely to undergo; and they may judge of the greatness of the punishment by the greatness of the crime.

1. They have trodden under foot the Son of God. To trample upon an ordinary person, shews intolerable insolence; to treat a person of honour in that vile manner, is insufferable; but to deal thus with the Son of God, who himself is God, must be the highest provocation; to trample upon his person, denying him to be the Messiah; to trample upon his authority, and undermine his kingdom; to trample upon his members as the off-scruting of all things, and not fit to live in the world, what punishment can be too great for such men?

2. They have counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing. The blood of Christ, with which the covenant was purchased and sealed, and wherewith Christ himself was consecrated, or wherewith the apostles were consecrated, that is, baptized, visibly initiated into the new covenant by baptism, and admitted to the Lord's supper. Observe, There is a kind of sanctification which persons may partake of, and yet fall away: they may be distinguished by common gifts and graces; by an outward profession; by a form of godliness; a course of duties, and a set of privileges, and yet fall away finally. Men who have seemed before to have the full assurance of grace may come to account it an unholy thing, no better than the blood of a malefactor, though it was the world's ransom, and every drop of it of infinite value.

3. They have done despite unto the Spirit of grace; the Spirit that is graciously given to men, and that does work grace wherever it is; the Spirit of grace, that should be regarded and attended to with the greatest care; this Spirit they have grieved, offended, resisted, quenched, or destroyed. Apostasy is the highest act of wickedness, and makes the case of the sinner desperate; refusing to have the gospel-salvation applied to him. Now he leaves it to the consciences of all, appeals to universal reason and equity, whether such aggravated crimes ought not to receive a suitable punishment, a sorer punishment than they had, who did without mercy? But what punishment can be sorer than to die without mercy? I answer, To have the Lord's grace, by both means, his nature and grace which they have despised. How dreadful is the case, when not only the justice of God, but his abused grace and mercy, call for vengeance!

4. From the description we have in the scripture of the nature of God's vindictive justice, v. 30. We know that he has said, Vengeance is mine. This is taken out of Ps. 94. 1. Vengeance belongs unto me; the terrors of the Lord are known by revenge. Vindictive justice is a glorious, though terrible attribute of God; it belongs to him, and he will use and execute it upon the heads of such sinners as despise his grace; he will avenge himself, and his Son, and Spirit, and covenant, upon apostates. And how dreadful then will their case be! The other quotation is from Dent. 32. 56. The Lord will judge his people; he will search and try his work in his church, and will discover and detect those who say they are Jews, but are of the synagogue of Satan; and he will separate the precious from the vile, and will punish the sinners in Zion with the greatest severity. Now those who know him who hath said, Vengeance belongeth to me, I will recompense, must needs conclude, as the apostle does, (v. 31.) It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; they who know the joy that results from the fear and dread of God, can thereby judge of the power and dread of his vindictive wrath.

Observe here, what will be the eternal misery of impenitent sinners and apostates; they shall fall into the hands of the living God; their punishment shall come from God's own hand; he takes them into the hand of his justice; he will deal with them himself; their greatest misery will be the immediate impressions of divine wrath on the soul. When he punishes them by creatures, the instrument abates something of the force of the blow; but when he does it by his own hand, it is infinite misery. This they shall have at God's hand; they shall lie down in sorrow; their destruction shall come from his glorious powerful presence; when they make their woeful bed in hell, they will find that God is there, and his presence will be their greatest terror and torment. And he is a living God; he lives for ever, and will punish for ever.

5. He presses them to perseverance, by putting them in mind of their former sufferings for Christ; (v. 32.) But call to mind the former days, in which, after you had suffered in divers afflictions. In the early days of the gospel, there was a very hot persecution raised up against the professors of the Christian religion, and the believing Hebrews had their share of it: he would have them to remember,

(1.) When they had suffered; in former days, after they were illuminated; that is, as soon as God breathed life into their souls, and caused divine lights to spring up in their minds, and taken them into his favour and covenant; then earth and hell combined all their force against them. Here observe, a natural state is a dark state, and those who continue in that state meet with no disturbance from Satan and the world; but a state of grace is a state of light, and therefore the powers of darkness will violently oppose it. They who will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution.

(2.) But they suffered; enduring a great deal of affliction, many and various afflictions united together against them, and they had a great conflict with them. Many are the troubles of the righteous. (1.) They were afflicted in themselves. In their own persons they were made gazing-stocks, spectacles to the world, angels, and men, 1 Cor. 4. 9. In their names and reputation, (v. 33.) by many reproaches. Christians ought to value their reputation; and they do so especially because the reputation of religion is concerned. This makes reproach a great affliction; they were afflicted in their estates, by the spoiling of their goods, by fines and forfeitures. (2.) They were afflicted in the afflictions of their brethren; partly, while ye became companions of those that were so used. The Christian spirit is a sympathizing spirit, not a selfish spirit, but a compassionate spirit; it makes every Christian's suffering our own, puts us upon pitying others, visiting them, and pleading for them. Christians are one body, animated by one spirit, embarked in one common cause and interest, and are the children of that God who is afflicted in all the afflictions of his people. If one member of the body suffers, all the rest suffer with it. And the apostle takes particular notice how they had sympathized with him; (v. 34.) Ye had compassion on me in my bonds. We must thankfully acknowledge the compassions of our Christian friends have shewed for us under our afflictions.

(3.) How they had suffered. They had been mightily supported under their former sufferings; they took their sufferings patiently, and not only so, but joyfully received it from God as a favour and honour conferred upon them, that they should be thought worthy to suffer reproach for the name of Christ. God can strengthen his suffering people with all might in the inner man, to all patience and long-suffering, and that with joyfulness, Col. 1. 11.

(4.) What it was, that enabled them thus to bear up under their sufferings. They knew in themselves that they had in heaven a better and a more enduring substance. Observe, (1.) The happiness of the saints in heaven is substance, something of real weight and worth. All things here are but shadows. (2.) It is everlasting substance; they have or lose it. (3.) It is an enduring substance, it will out-live time, and run parallel with eternity; they can never spend it; their enemies can never take it from them, as they did their earthly goods.

(4.) This will make a rich amends for all they can lose and suffer here. In heaven they shall have a better life, a better estate, better liberty, better society, better hearts, better work, everything better.

5. Christians should know this in themselves, they should get the assurance of it in themselves, (the Spirit of God witnessing with their spirits;) for the assured knowledge of this will help them to endure any degree of sufferings they may be encountered with.

6. He presses them to persevere, from that recompense of reward that waited for all faithful Christians; (v. 35.) Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. Where, (1.) He exhorts them not to cast away their confidence, that is their holy courage and boldness, but to hold fast that profession for which they had suffered, and to wait long, and to persevere in their sufferings so well. (2.) He encourages them to this, by assuring them that the reward of their holy confidence would be very great; it carries a present reward in it, in holy peace and joy, and much of God's presence and his power visiting upon them; and it shall have a great recompense of reward hereafter. (3.) He shews how necessary a grace the grace of patience is in our present state; (v. 36.) Ye have need of patience, for as ye have received a of God, ye might as well receive the promise; that is, this present and future reward. Observe, The greatest part of the saints' happiness is in promise; it must first do the will of God before they receive the promise; and after they have done the will of God, they have need of patience to wait for the time when the promise shall be fulfilled; they have need of patience to live till God calls them away. It is a trial of the patience of Christians, to be content to live after their work is done, and to stay for the reward till God's time to give it them is come. We must be God's waiting servants, when we can no longer his working servants; they who have had and exercised much patience already, must have and exercise more till they die. (4.) To help their patience, he assures them of the near approach of Christ's coming to deliver and to reward them; (v. 37.) For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. He will soon come to them at death, and put an end to all their sufferings, and give them a crown of life. He will soon come to judgment, and put an end to the sufferings of the whole church, (all his mystical body,) and give them an ample and glorious reward in the most public manner. There is an appointed time for both, and beyond that time he will not tarry. Hab. 2. 3. The Christian's present conflict may be sharp, but it will be seen over.

7. And lastly, He presses them to perseverance, by telling them that this is their distinguishing character, and will be their happiness; whereas apostasy is the reproach, and will be the ruin, of all who are guilty of it; (v. 38, 39.) Now the just shall live by faith, &c. (1.) It is the honourable character of just men, that in times of the greatest afflictions, they can live by faith; they can live upon the assured persuasion they have of the truth of God's promises. (2.) They can suffer the most oppressive trials; they can trust God, and live upon him, and wait his time; and as their faith maintains their spiritual life now, it shall be crowned with eternal life hereafter. (2.) Apostasy is the mark and the brand of those in whom God takes no pleasure; and it is a cause of God's severe displeasure and anger. God never was pleased with the formal profession and external duties and services of such men, who, with life and vigour into them, they can trust God, and live upon him, and wait his time; and as their faith maintains their spiritual life now, it shall be crowned with eternal life hereafter. (3.) The apostle concludes with declaring his good hope concerning himself and these Hebrews, that they should not forfeit the character and happiness of the just, and fall under the brand and misery of the wicked; (v. 39.) But we are not, &c, as if he had said, “I hope we are not of them who draw back. I hope that you and I, who have met with great trials already, and have been supported under them by the grace of God strengthening our faith, shall not be at any time left to ourselves, to draw back to perdition; but that God will help us for our days and accept this mighty power through faith unto salvation.” Observe, [1.] Professors may go a great way, and after all draw back; and that drawing back from God is drawing on to perdition: the further we depart from God, the nearer we approach to ruin. [2.] Those who have been kept faithful in great trials for the time past, have reason to hope that the same grace shall be sufficient to help them still to live by faith, till they receive the called inheritance and patience, even the salvation of their souls. If we live by faith, and die in faith, our souls are safe for ever.

CHAP. XI. The apostle having, in the close of the foregoing chapter, recommended the grace of faith and a life of faith as the best preservative against apostasy; he here proceeds upon the nature and fruits of this excellent grace. I. The nature of it, and the honour it reflects upon all who live in the exercise of it, v. 1. 3. II. The great examples we have in the Old Testament of those who lived by faith, and did suffer extraordinary things by the strength of this grace, v. 4. 38. And, III. The advantages that we have in the gospel for the exercise of this grace above what they had who lived in the times of the Old Testament, v. 39. 48.

1. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. 2. For by it the elders obtained a good report. 3. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

Here we have, 1. A definition or description of the grace of faith in two parts. (1.) It is the substance of things hoped for, faith and hope go together; and the same things that are the object of our hope, are the object of our faith. It is a firm persuasion and expectation, that God will perform all that he has promised to us in Christ; and this persuasion is so strong, that it gives the soul a kind of possession and present fruition of those things; gives them a subsistence in the soul, by the first-fruits and foretastes of them: so that believers in the exercise of faith are filled with it, live by it, and turn all their affections to it. Christ dwells in the soul by faith, and the soul is filled with the fulness of God, as far as his present measure will admit; he experiences a substantial reality in the objects of faith. (2.) It is the evidence of things not seen. Faith demonstrates to the eye of the mind the reality of those things that cannot be discerned by the eye of the body. Faith is the firm assurance of those things which are not seen, and every part of it, and sets to its seal that God is true. It is a full approbation of all that God has revealed, as holy, just, and good; it helps the soul to make application of all to itself with suitable affections and employments; and so it is designed to serve the believer instead of sight, and to be to the soul all that the senses are to the body. That faith is but opinion or fancy, which does not realize invisible things to the soul, and cause the soul to act agreeably to the nature and importance of them.

2. An account of the honour it reflects upon all those who have lived in the exercise of it; (v. 2.) By it the elders obtained a good report; the ancient believers, who lived in the first ages of the world. Observe, (1.) True faith is an old grace, and has the best plea to antiquity; it is not a new invention, a modern fancy; it is a grace that has been planted in the soul of man ever since the covenant of grace was published in the world; and it has been practised from the beginning of the revelation; the eldest and best men that ever were in the world, were believers. (2.) Their faith was their honour; it reflected honour upon them; they were an honour to their faith, and their faith was an honour to them; it put them upon exhibiting the things that were of good report, and God has taken care that the world should get a proper view of the excellent things they did in the strength of this grace. The genuine actings of faith will bear to be reported, deserve to be reported, and will, when reported, redound to the honour of true believers.

3. We have here one of the first acts and articles of faith, which has a great influence on all the rest, and which is essential to all belief in every age and part of the world, and that is, the creation of the worlds by the word of God, not out of pre-existent matter, but out of nothing, v. 3. The grace of faith has a retrospect as well as prospect; it looks not only forward to the end of the world, but back to the beginning of the world. By faith we understand much more of the formation of the world than ever could be understood by the naked eye of natural reason. Faith is a new force upon the understanding, but a friend and a help to it. Now what does faith give us to understand concerning the worlds, that is, the upper, middle, and lower regions of the universe? (1.) That these worlds were not eternal, nor did they produce themselves, but they were made by another. (2.) That the Maker of the worlds is God; he is the maker of all things; and whoever is so, must be God. (3.) That he made the world with great exactness; it was a framed work, in every thing duly adapted and disposed to answer its end, and to express the perfections of the Creator. (4.) That God made the world by his word, that is, by his essential wisdom and eternal Son, and by his active will, saying, Let it be done, and it was done, Ps. 33. 9. (5.) That the word was thus framed out of nothing, out of no pre-existent matter, contrary to the received maxim, that “out of nothing nothing can be made,” which, though true of created power, can have no place with God, who can call things that are not, as if they were, and command them into being. These things we understand by faith. The Bible gives us the truest and most exact account of the origin of all things, and we are to believe it, and not to wrest or run down the scripture-account of the creation, because it does not suit with some fantastic hypothesis: and men who have been learned but conceited men the first remarkable step towards infidelity, and has led them into many more.

4. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh. 5. By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. 6. But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. 7. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became and making them the best. Secondly, God must come to us before we come to him. Thirdly, In calling and converting sinners, God appears as a God of glory, and works a glorious work in the soul. Fourthly, This calls us not only to leave sin, but sinful company, and whatever is inconsistent with our devotedness to him. Fifthly, He does not only set out well, but to go on well. Sixthly, He will not have his people take up that rest anywhere short of the heavenly Canaan.

[2.] The promise of God; God promised Abraham that the place he was called to he should after-wards receive for an inheritance; after a while he should have the heavenly Canaan for his inheritance, and in process of time his posterity should inherit the earthly Canaan. Here observe, 1. God's promise is, his will; 2. His inheritance: by his effective call he makes them children, and so heirs. Secondly, This inheritance is not immediately possessed by them, they must wait some time for it; but the promise is sure, and shall have its reasonable accomplishment.

[3.] To observe the exercise of faith. First, How Canaan is called the land of promise, because yet only promised, not possessed. Secondly, How Abraham lived in Canaan, not as an heir and proprietor, but as a sojourner only; he did not serve an ejection, or raise a war against the old inhabitants, to dispossess them, but contented himself to live as a stranger: to bear their unkindnesses patiently, to receive any favours from them thankfully, and to keep his heart fixed upon his home, the heavenly Canaan. Thirdly, He dwelt in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise. He lived there in an ambulatory moving condition, living in a daily readiness for his removal; and thus should we all live in this world. He had good company with him, and they were a great comfort to him, in his sojourning state. Abraham lived till Isaac was seventy-five years old, and Jacob fifteen. Isaac and Jacob were heirs of the same promise; for the promise was renewed to Isaac, (Gen. 26. 3.) and to Jacob, Gen. 28. 13. All the saints are heirs of the same promise. The promise is made to believers and their children, and to as many as the Lord our God shall call, it is pleasant to see parents and children sojourning together in this world, as heirs of the heavenly inheritance.

[4.] The supports of Abraham's faith; (v. 10.) He looked for a city that hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. Observe here, 1. The description given of heaven: it is a city, a regular society, well established, well defended, and well supplied: it is a city that hath foundations, even the most solid, sure and immoveable. God is the chief corner-stone. 2. The infinite merits and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ; the promises of an everlasting covenant; its own purity, and the perfection of its inhabitants: and it is a city, whose Builder and Maker is God. He contrived the model; he accordingly made it, and he has laid open a new and living way into it, and prepared it for his people; he puts them into possession of it, prefers them in it, and is himself the Substance and Fidelity of it. 2. Observe the due regard that Abraham had to this heavenly city: he looked for it; he believed there was such a state; he waited for it, and in the mean time he conversed in it by faith; he had raised and rejoicing, hopes, that in God's good pleasure he should be brought safely to it. 3. The influence this had upon his present conversation; it was a support to him under all the trials of his sojourning state; helped him patiently to bear all the inconveniences of it, and actively to discharge all the duties of it, persevering therein unto the end.

5. In the midst of the story of Abraham, we have inserted an account of the faith of Sarah. Here observe, (1.) The difficulties of Sarah's faith, which were very great. As, [1.] The prevalence of unbelief for a time; she languished at the promise, as improbable to be made good. [2.] She had gone out of the way of her duty through unbelief, in putting Abraham upon taking Hagar to his bed, that he might have a posterity. Now this sin of her's would make it more difficult for her to act by faith afterward. [3.] The Scripture observes, she was constrained, that she should be the mother of a child, when she was of sterile constitution naturally, and now past the prolific age. (2.) The actions of her faith. Her unbelief is pardoned and forgotten, but her faith prevailed and is recorded. She judged him faithful, who had promised, v. 11. She received the promise as the promise of God; and being convinced of that, she truly judged he both could and would perform it, how impossible soever it might seem to reason; for the faithfulness of God will not suffer him to deceive his people. (3.) The fruits and rewards of her faith. [1.] She received strength to conceive seed. The strength of nature, as well as grace, is from God; he can make the barren soul fruitful, as well as the barren womb. [2.] She was delivered of a child, a man-child, a child of the promise, the comfort of her parents' advanced years, and the hope of future ages. [3.] From them, by this son, sprang a numerous progeny of illustrious persons, as the stars of the sky; (v. 12.) a great, powerful, and renowned nation, above all the rest in the world; and a nation of saints, the peculiar church and people of God; and, which was the highest honour and reward of all, of these, according to the flesh, the Messiah came, who is over all God blessed forevermore. 6. The apostle proceeds to make mention of the faith of the other patriarchs, Isaac and Jacob, and the rest of this happy family, v. 13. Where observe, (1.) The trial of their faith in the imperfection of their present state. They had not received the promises, that is, they had not received the things promised; they had not yet been put into possession of them. Abraham and Isaac and Jacob were not yet seen them, they had not seen Christ in the flesh. Observe, [1.] Many that are interested in the promises, do not presently receive the things promised. [2.] That one imperfection of the present state of the saints on earth, is, that their happiness lies more in promise and reversion than in actual enjoyment and possession. The gospel-state is much nearer to perfection than the patriarchal, because more of the promises are more fulfilled. The heavenly state will be most perfect of all; for there all the promises will have their full accomplishment. (2.) The actions of their faith during this imperfect state of things; though they had not received the promises, yet, [1.] They saw them afar off. Faith has a clear and a strong eye, and can see promised mercies at a great distance. Abraham saw Christ's day, when it was afar off, and rejoiced, John 8. 56. [2.] They were persuaded of them, that they were true and should be fulfilled: Faith sets it in a present and living beauty; it satisfies the soul. [3.] They embraced them. Their faith was a faith of consent. Faith has a long arm, and can lay hold of blessings at a great distance; can make them present; can love them, and rejoice in them; and thus anticipate the enjoyment of them. [4.] They confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on earth. Observe, First, Their condition, strangers and pilgrims. They are strangers as saints, whose home is heaven; they are pilgrims as they are travelling toward their home, though often meanly and slowly. Secondly, Their acknowledgment of this their condition; they were not ashamed to own it; both their lips and their lives confessed their present condition; they expected little from the world; they cared not to engage much in it; they endeavoured to lay aside every weight; to gird up the loins of their minds; to mind their way, to keep company and pace with their fellow-travellers, looking for difficulties, and bearing them, and longing to get home. [5.] Hereby they declared plainly that they sought another country, (v. 14.) heaven, their own country. For their spiritual birth is from thence, there are their best relations, and there is their inheritance. This country they seek; their designs are for it; their desires are after it; their discourse is about it; they diligently endeavour to clear up their doors to love it, and be a lamp to it; to have their conversation in it, and to come to the enjoyment of it. [6.] They gave full proof of their sincerity in making such a confession. For, First, They were not mindful of that country from whence they came, v. 15. They did not hanker after the plenty and pleasures of it, nor regret and repent that they had left it; they had no desire to return to it. Note, Those that are once effectually and uninterruptedly set out upon a spiritual state, have no mind to return into it again; they now know better things. Secondly, They did not take the opportunity that offered itself for their return; they might have had such an opportunity; they had time enough to return; they had natural strength to return; they knew the way; those with whom they sojournd would have been willing enough to have parted with them; their old friends would have been glad to receive them; they could have been distinguished for the fainting of their journey; and flesh and blood, a corrupt counsellor, would be sometimes suggesting to them a return, but they steadfastly adhered to God and duty under all discouragements, and against all temptations to revolt from him. So should we all do. We shall not want opportunities to revolt from God; but we must show the truth of our faith and profession by a steady adherence to him to the end of our days. Thirdly, Their sincerity appeared in not returning to their former country, but in desiring a better country, that is, a heavenly. Observe, 1. The heavenly country is better than any upon earth; it is better situated, better stored with every thing that is good, better secured from every thing that is evil; the employments, the enjoyments, the society, and every thing in it, are better than their place of sojourn. Secondly, It was this better country. True faith draws forth sincere and fervent desires; and the stronger faith is, the more fervent those desires will be. [7.] They died in the faith of those promises; not only lived by the faith of them, but died in the full persuasion that all the promises should be fulfilled to them and their's, v. 13. That faith held out to the last. By faith, when they were dying, they received the assurance; they acquiesced in the will of God; they quenched all the fiery darts of the devil; they overcame the terrors of death, disarmed it of its sting, and bade a cheerful farewell to this world, and to all the comforts and crosses of it. These were the actions of their faith. Now observe, (2.) The gracious and great reward of this faith; (16.) God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city. Note, [1.] God is the God of all true believers; faith gives them an interest in God, and in all his fulness. [2.] He is called their God: he calls himself so; I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; he gives them leave to call him so; and he gives them the spirit of adoption, to enable them to cry Abba, Father. [3.] Their designation the nature, vivacity by sin, and the poverty of their outward condition, God is not ashamed to be called their God; such is his condescension, such is his love to them; therefore let them never be ashamed of being called his people, nor of any of those that are truly so, how much soever despised in the world. Above all, let them take care that they be not a shame and reproach to their God, and so provoke him to be ashamed of them; but let them act so as to be to him for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory. [4.] As the proof of this, God has prepared for them a city, a happiness suitable to the relation into which he has taken them. For there is nothing in this world commensurate to the love of God in being the God of his people; and if God neither could nor would give his people something better than this world affords, he could not be supposed to have set his heart upon this; but he takes them into such a relation to himself, he will provide for them accordingly. If he takes to himself the title of their God, he will fully answer it, and act up to it, and he has prepared that for them in heaven, that will fully answer this character and relation, so that it shall never be said, to the reproach and dishonour of God, that he has adopted a people to be his own children, and then take no care to provide for them. The consideration of this should inflame the affections, enlarge the desires, and excite the diligent endeavours, of the people of God after this city that he has prepared for them. 7. Now after the apostle has given this account of the faith of others, with Abraham, he returns to him again, and gives us an instance of the greatest trial and act of faith that stands upon record, either in the story of the father of the faith, or of his spiritual seed; and that was, his offering up of Isaac; (v. 17.) By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up his Isaac; and that he had received the promises, offered up his only begotten son. In this great example observe, (1.) The trial and exercise of Abraham's faith; he was tried indeed. It is said, (Gen. 22. 1.) God in this tempted Abraham; not to sin, but so God completely tried his faith and obedience to purpose. God had before this tempted or tried the faith of Abraham, when he called him away from his country and father's house; when by a famine he was forced out of Canaan into Egypt; when he was obliged to fight with five kings to rescue Lot; when Sarah was taken from him by Abimelech, and in many other instances. But this trial was greater than all; he was commanded to offer up his own son Isaac. Read the account of it, Gen. 22. 2. There you will find every word was a trial; "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. Take thy son, not one of thy beasts or slaves, thine only son by Sarah, Isaac thy laughter, the child of thy joy and hope; and make thee no burnt-offering;" and he told him away to a distant place, three days' journey, the land of Moriah; do not only leave him there, but offer him for a burnt-offering." A greater trial was never put upon any creature. The apostle here mentions some things that very much added to the greatness of this trial.

[1.] He was put upon it after he had received the promises, that this Isaac should build up his family, that in him his seed should be called, (v. 18.) and that he should be one of the progenitors of the Messiah, and all nations blessed in him; so that in being called to offer up his Isaac, he seemed to be called to destroy and cut off his own family, to cancel the promises of God, to prevent the coming of Christ, to destroy the whole world, to sacrifice his own soul and his hopes of salvation, and to cut off the church of God at one blow; a most terrible trial!

[2.] That this Isaac was his only begotten son by his wife Sarah, the only one he was to have by her, and the only one that was to be the child of hope of the promise. Ishmael was to be put off with earthly greatness. Either the promises of a posterity, and of the Messiah, must be fulfilled by means of this son, or not at all; so that beside his most tender affection to this his son, all his expectations were bound up in him, and if he perished, must perish with him. If Abraham had ever so many sons, this was the only son who could convey to all nations the promised blessing; a son for whom he was willing to lay even his own life down; a son, in a manner, upon whom his heart was set, to have this son offered up as a sacrifice, and that by his own hand; it was a trial that would have overset the freest and the strongest mind that ever animated a human body.

(2.) The actions of Abraham's faith in so great a trial; he obeyed; he offered up Isaac; he intentionally gave him up by his submissive soul to God, and was willing to lay even his own life down; willing to resign absolutely, according to the command of God; he went as far in it as to the very critical moment, and would have gone through with it if God had not prevented him. Nothing could be more tender and moving than those words of Isaac, My father, here is the wood, here is the fire; but where is the lamb for the burnt-offering? little thinking that he was to be the lamb; but Abraham knew it, and yet he went on with the great design.

(3.) The supports of his faith; they must be very great, suitable to the greatness of the trial; He accounted that God was able to raise him from the dead, v. 19. His faith was supported by the sense he had of the mighty power of God, who was able to raise the dead; he reasoned thus with himself, and so he resolved all his doubts. It does not appear that he had any expectation of being countermanded, and prevented from offering up his son; the expectation of that would have spoiled the trial, and consequently the triumph of his faith; but he knew that God was able to raise him from the dead; and he believed that God would do so, since such great things depended upon his son, which must have failed if Isaac had not a further life. Observe, [1.] God is able to raise the dead, to raise dead bodies, and to raise dead souls. [2.] The belief of this will carry us through the greatest difficulties and trials that we can meet with. [3.] It is our duty to be reasoning down our doubts and fears, by the consideration of the almighty power of God.

(4.) The reward of his faith in this great trial; (v. 19.) he received his son from the dead in a figure, in a parable. [1.] He received his son. He had parted with him to God, and God gave him back to him. The best way, according to the text, to resign them up to God, is to resign them to his care, and he will then return them, if not in kind yet in kind- ness. [2.] He received him from the dead, for he gave him up for dead; he was as a dead child to him, and the return was to him no less than a re-principal blessing, which shews that it is grace and the new birth that excat persons above their fellows, and qualify them for the best blessings; and that it is the faith of the family in God, that the same family one is taken and another left, one loved and the other hated, since all the race of Adam are by nature hateful to God; that if one has his portion in this world, and the other in the better world, it is God who makes the difference; for even the comforts of this life are more and better than any of the children of men deserve.

2. The difficulties Isaac's faith struggled with. (1.) He seemed to have forgotten how God had determined the matter at the birth of these his sons, Gen. 25. 23. This should have been a rule to him all along, but he was rather swayed by natural affection and general custom, which give the double portion of honour, affection, and advantage, to the first-born. (2.) He acted in this matter with some reluctance, when he came to pronounce the blessings; (Gen. 27. 33.) He trembled very exceedingly, and charged Jacob that he had subtly taken away Esau's blessing, v. 33, 55. But for all this, Isaac's faith recovered itself, and he ratified the blessing; I have blessed him, yea, and he shall be blessed. Rebecca and Jacob are not to be justified in the indirect means they used to obtain this blessing, but God will be justified in overruling even the sins of men to serve the purposes of his glory. Now the faith of Isaac thus prevailing over his unbelief, it has pleased the God of Isaac to pass by the weakness of his faith, to commend the sincerity of it, and record him among the elders, who through faith have obtained a good report. We now go on to,

II. The faith of Jacob, (v. 21.) who, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph, and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. There were a great many instances of the faith of Jacob; his life was a life of faith, and his faith met with great temptation; many of these instances are preserved to us out of many of the faith of this patriarch, beside what has been already mentioned in the account of Abraham. Where observe,

1. The actings of his faith here mentioned, and they are two. (1.) He blessed both the sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh; he adopted them into the number of his own sons, and so into the congregation of Israel, though they were born in Egypt. It was a matter of great delicacy to be joined to the visible church of God in profession and privilege, but more to be so in spirit and truth. [1.] He made them both heads of different tribes, as if they had been his own immediate sons. [2.] He prayed for them, that they might both be blessed of God. [3.] He prophesied that they should be blessed; but as Isaac did before, so now Jacob prefers the younger, Ephraim; and though Joseph had provided against both his sons, yet the right should be laid on Manasseh, the elder, Jacob willingly laid it on Ephraim, and this by divine direction, for he could not see; to shew that the Gentile church, the younger, should have a more abundant blessing than the Jewish church, the elder. (2.) He worshipped, leaning upon his staff; that is, he raised God for what he had done for him, and for the promise he had made. He did this against the objections of his brethren, and he prayed for those who cast stones behind him, that religion might live in his family when he was gone. He did this, leaning upon the top of his staff; not as the papists dream, that he worshipped some image of God engraven on the head of his staff; but intimating to us his great natural weakness, that he was not able to support himself so far as to sit up in his bed without a staff; and yet that he would not make this an excuse for neglecting the worshipping of God; he would do it as well as he could with his body, as well as with his spirit, though he could not do it as well as he would. He shewed thereby his dependence upon God, and testified his condition here as a pilgrim with his staff, and in his journeyings round the earth, and willingness to be at rest.

2. The time and season when Jacob thus acted his faith: when he was dying, he lived by faith, and he died by faith and in faith. Observe, Though the grace of faith is of universal use throughout our whole lives, yet it is especially so when we come to die. Faith has its greatest work to do at last, to help the believer to finish well, to die to the Lord, so to honour him, by patience, hope and joy, so as to leave a witness behind of the truth of God's word, and the excellency of his ways, for the conviction and establishment of all who attend them in their dying moments. The best way in which parents can finish their course, is, blessing their families and worshipping their God. We are now come to,

III. The faith of Joseph, v. 22. And here also we consider, 1. What he did by his faith; he made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones. The passage is out of Gen. 50. 24, 25. Joseph was eminent for his faith, though he had not enjoyed the helps for it, that the rest of his brethren had; he was sold into Egypt, he was tried by temptations, by sin, by persecution, for retaining his integrity; he was tried by preferment and power in the court of Pharaoh, and yet his faith held out and guided him through to the last. (1.) He made mention by faith of the departing of the children of Israel; the time should come when they should be delivered out of Egypt; and he did this, both that he might caution them against the thoughts of settling in Egypt, which was now a place of plenty and ease to them; and also that he might keep them from sinking under the calamities and distresses which they there were threatened with; it was not enough for him to do this, he desired to comfort himself, that though he should not live to see their deliverance, yet he could die in the faith of it. (2.) He gave commandment concerning his bones, that they should preserve them unburied in Egypt, till God should deliver them out of that house of bondage, and that then they should carry his bones along with them into Canaan, and deposit them there. Though believers are chiefly concerned in the matter of this world, and not so much about their own bodies, yet Joseph does it to comfort himself, that though he should not live to see their deliverance, yet he could die in the faith of it. Now Joseph gave this order, not that he thought his being buried in Egypt would either prejudice his soul, or prevent the resurrection of his body. Some of the Rabbies fancied that all the Jews who were buried out of Canaan, must be conveyed under ground to Canaan before they could rise again. But he gave this order, to testify, 1. That though he had lived and died in Egypt, yet he did not live and die an Egyptian, but an Israelit.e. 2. That he preferred a significant burial in Canaan before a magnificent one in Egypt. (3.) That he would go as far with his people as he could, though he could not go as far as he would. (4.) That he believed his blessed rejected body, the body that historian that his soul should preserve, should have with departed saints, as his body had with their dead bodies. (5.) To assure them that God would be with them in Egypt, and deliver them out of it in his own time and way. Observe here when it was that the faith of Joseph acted after this manner; that was, as in the case of Jacob, when dying. God often gives his people living comforts in dying moments; and when he does, it is their duty, as they can, to communicate them to those about them, for the glory of God, for the honour of religion, and for
IV. The faith of the parents of Moses, which is cited from Exod. 2. 3, &c. Where observe,
1. The acting of their faith; they hid this their son three months. Though the mother of Moses is only mentioned in the history, yet by what is here said, it seems his father not only consented to it, but consulted about it. It is a happy thing where yoke-fellows, and so he stood in the yoke of faith, as heirs of the grace of God, to do all religious concern for the good of their children, to preserve them not only from those who would destroy their lives, but corrupt their minds. Observe, Moses was persecuted betimes, and forced to be concealed; in this he was a type of Christ, who was persecuted almost as soon as he was born, and his parents forced to flee with him into Egypt for his preservation. It is a great mercy to be deprived from wicked laws and edicts; but when we are near we must use all lawful means for our security. In this faith of Moses’s parents there was a mixture of unbelief, but God was pleased to overlook it.

2. The reasons of their thus acting. No doubt, natural affection could not but move them; but there was something further. They saw he was a proper child, a goodly child, (Exod. 2. 2.) exceeding fair. Acts 7. 20.

3. The prevalence of their faith over their fear. They were not afraid of the king’s commandment, Exod. 1. 22. That was a wicked and a cruel edict, that all the males of the Israelites should be destroyed in their infancy, and so the name of Israel must be destroyed out of the earth. But they did not so fear as presently to give up their child; they considered, if none of the males were preserved, there would be an end and utter ruin of the church of God, the true religion, and that though in their present state of servitude and oppression, one would praise the dead rather than the living, yet they believed God would preserve his people, and the time was coming when it would be worth while for an Israelite to live. Some must hazard their own lives to preserve their children, and they were resolved to do it; they knew the king’s commandment was evil in itself, contrary to the laws of God and nature, and therefore of no authority or obligation. Faith is a great preservative against the sinful slavish fear of men, as it sets God before the soul, and shews the vanity of the creature, and its subordination to the will and power of God. The apostle next proceeds to,

V. The faith of Moses himself, v. 24, 25, &c. Where observe,
1. An instance of his faith in conquering the world.

(1.) He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, whose foundling he was, and her foundling too; she had adopted him for her son, and he refused it. Observe, [1.] How great a temptation Moses was under; Pharaoh’s daughter is said to have been his only child, and was herself childless; and having found Moses, and saved him as she did, they resolved to take him and bring him up as her son, and so he stood fair to be in time a king of Egypt, and he might thereby have been serviceable to Israel. He owed his life to this prince; and to refuse such kindness from her, would look not only like ingratitude to her, but a neglect of Providence, that seemed to intend his advancement and his brethren’s advantage. [2.] How glorious was the triumph of his faith in so great a trial! He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, lest he should undervalue the truer honour of being a son of Abraham, the father of the faithful; he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, lest it should look like renouncing his religion as well as his relation to Israel; and no doubt both these he must have done if he had accepted this honour; he therefore publicly refuses it.

(2.) He chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. v. 25. He was willing to take his lot with the people of God here, though it was a suffering lot, that he might have his portion with them hereafter, rather than to enjoy all the sensual sinful pleasures of Pharaoh’s court, which would be but for a season, and then punished with everlasting misery. Herein he acted rationally as well as religiously, and conquered the temptation to worldly pleasure, as he had done before to worldly preferment. Here observe, (1.) The pleasures of sin are, and will be, but short; they must end in speedy repentance or in speedy ruin. (2.) The pleasures of this world, and especially those of a court, are too often the pleasures of sin; and they are always such as when we cannot enjoy them without deserting God and our true believer will despise them when they are offered upon such terms. (3.) Suffering is to be chosen rather than sin; there being more evil in the least sin than there can be in the greatest suffering. (4.) It greatly alleviates the evil of suffering, when we suffer with the people of God, embarking in the same interest, and animated by the same Spirit.

(3.) He accounts the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, v. 26. See how Moses weighed matters; in one scale he put the worst of religion—the reproaches of Christ; in the other scale the best of the world—the treasures of Egypt; and in his judgment directed by faith, the worst of religion weighed down the best of the world: the reproaches of the church of God are the reproaches of Christ, who is; and has ever been, the Head of the church. Now here Moses conquered his heart, as he had conquered his hands, in his conversion; as he conquered his will before he had conquered his hands. Christ accounts himself reproached in their reproaches, and while he thus interests himself in their reproaches, they become riches, and greater riches, than the treasures of the richest empire in the world: for Christ will reward them with a crown of glory that fades not away. Faith discerns this, and determines acts and acts accordingly.

2. The circumstance of time is taken notice of, when Moses by his faith gained this victory over the world, in all its honours, pleasures and treasures, when he was come to years, v. 24. not only to years of discretion, but of experience, to the age of forty years; when he was great, or come to maturity. Some would take this as an extenuation of his victory, that he gained it so late, that he did not make this choice sooner; but it is rather an enhancement of the honour of the self-denial and victory over the world, that he made this choice when he was grown ripe for judgment and enjoyment, able to know what he did, and why he did it. It was not the act of a child, that prefers counters to gold, but it proceeded from mature deliberation. It is an excellent thing for persons to be seriously religious, when in the midst of worldly business and enjoyments; to despise the world, when they are most capable of relishing and enjoying it.

3. What it was, that supported and strengthened the faith of Moses to that degree, as to enable him to gain such a victory of the world; he had respect to the recompense of reward; that is, say some, the Old Testament, and not the New; but doubtless it means much more—the glorious reward of faith and fidelity in the other world. Observe here, (1.) Heaven is a great reward, surpassing not only all our deservings, but all our conceptions. It is a reward suitable to the price paid for it—the blood of Christ; suitable to the perfections of God, and fully answering to all his promises. It is a recompense of reward, because given by a righteous Judge for the righteousness of Christ to righteous persons, according to the righteous rule of the covenant of grace. (2.) Believers may and ought to have respect to this recompense of reward; they should acquaint themselves with it, approve of it, and live in the daily and delightful expectation of it. Thus it will prove a land-mark to direct their course; a lead-stone to draw their hearts; a sword to conquer their enemies; a spur to quicken them to duty; and a cordial to refresh them under all the difficulties of doing and suffering work.

4. We have another instance of the faith of Moses, and that in forsaking Egypt; v. 27. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king. Twice Moses forsook Egypt; (1.) As a supposed criminal, when the king's wrath was incensed against him for killing the Egyptian; where it is not said he was afraid of death, but of being a public object; because he had a fear of despondency, but of discretion to save his life. (2.) As a commander and ruler in Jeshurun, after God had employed him to humble Pharaoh, and make him willing to let Israel go. Observe here,

[1.] The product of his faith; he forsook Egypt, and all its power and pleasures, and undertook the conduct of Israel out of it. The Scripture speaks of his faith, as his first-born in Egypt. He raised him above the fear of the king's wrath, though he knew that it was great, and levelled at him in particular; that it marched at the head of a numerous host to pursue him; he was not dismayed, and he said to Israel, Fear not; Exod. 14. 13. Those who forsake Egypt, must expect the wrath of men; but they need not fear it, for they are under the conduct of that God who is able to make the wrath of man to praise him; and he has taken upon him our part, and our sin, and our iniquities; Isa. 53. 5. Wherever this blood is applied, the soul receives a whole Christ by faith, and lives upon him. (6.) This true faith makes sin bitter to the soul, even while it receives the pardon and atonement. (7.) All our spiritual privileges on earth should quicken us to set out early, and get forward, in our way to heaven. (8.) Those who have been marked out, must ever remember and acknowledge free and distinguishing grace.

V. The next instance of faith is that of the Israelites passing through the Red Sea under the conduct of Moses their leader, v. 29. The story we have in Exodus, ch. 14. Where observe,

1. The preservation and safe passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, when there was no other way to escape from Pharaoh and his host, who were closely pursuing them. Here we may observe, (1.) Israel's danger was great; they were encumbered with chariots and horsemen behind them, deep rocks and mountains on each hand, and the Red Sea before them. (2.) Their deliverance was very glorious. By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; the grace of faith will help us through all the dangers we meet with in our way to heaven.

2. The destruction of the Egyptians. They, presumptuously attempting to follow Israel through the Red Sea, being thus blinded and hardened to their ruin, were all drowned. Their rashness was great, and their ruin was grievous. When God judges, he will overcome; and it is plain that the destruction of sinners is of themselves.

VI. The next instance of faith is that of the Israelites, under Joshua their leader, before the walls of Jericho. The story we have in Josh. 6. 5. where observe, 1. The means prescribed of God to bring down the walls of Jericho, and that was, that they should compass the walls about once a day for seven days together, and seven times the last day, and that the priests should carry the ark when they compassed the walls about, and should blow with trumpets made of rams' horns, and sound a longer blast than before, and then all the people should shout, and the walls of Jericho should fall before them. Here was a great trial of their faith, the prescription seems very improbable to answer such an end, and would doubtless expose them to the daily contempt of their enemies; the ark of God would seem to be in danger. But this was the way God commanded them to take, and he loves to do great things by small and contemptible means, that his own arm may be made bare. 2. The powerful success of the prescribed means; the walls of Jericho fell before them. This was a frontier-town in the land of Canaan, the first that stood out against the Israelites. God was pleased in this extraordinary manner to slight and dismantle it, in order to magnify himself, to terrify the Canaanites, to strengthen the faith of the Israelites, and to exclude all boasting. God can, and will, in his own time and way, cause all the powerful opposition that is made to his interest and glory, to fall down, and the grace of faith is mighty through God for the pulling down of strong-holds; he will make Babylon fall before the faith of his people, and when he has some great thing to do for them, he raises up great and strong faith in them.

VIII. The next instance is the faith of Rahab, v. 31. Among the noble army of believing worthies, bravely marshalled by the apostle, Rahab comes in the rear, to shew that God is no respecter of persons. Here consider, 1. Who this Rahab was: (1.) She was a Canaanite, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and had but little help for faith, and yet she was a believer: the power of divine grace greatly appears, when it works without the usual means of grace. (2.) She was a harlot, and lived in a way of sin; she was not only a keeper of a public house, but a common woman of the town, and yet she believed that the greatness of sin, if truly repented of, shall be no bar to the pardoning mercy of God. Christ has saved the chief of sinners; where sin has abounded, grace has superabounded. 2. What she did by her faith; she received the spies in peace, the men that Joshua had sent to spy out Jericho. Jos. 2. 7. She not only bade them welcome, but she concealed them from their enemies who sought to cut them off, and she made a noble confession of her faith, v. 9—11. She engaged them to covenant with her to shew favour to her and her's, when God should shew kindness to them, and that they would give her a sign, which they did, a line of scarlet, which she was to hang forth out of the window; she sent them away with prudent and friendly advice; (2.) The faith of Rahab was good works, especially toward the people of God. (2.) Faith will venture all hazards in the cause of God and his people; a true believer will sooner expose his own person than God's interest and people. (3.) A true believer is desirous, not only to be in covenant with God, but in communion with the people of God, and is willing to cast in his lot with them, and to fare as they fare. 3. Observe what Rahab gained by her faith; she escaped perishing with those that believed not. Observe, (1.) The generosity of her neighbours, friends, and fellow-citizens, perished; it was an utter destruction that befell that city; man and beast were cut off. (2.) The cause of the people of Jericho's destruction—unbelief; they believed not that Israel's God was the true God, and that Israel was the peculiar people of God, though they had evidence sufficient of it. (3.) The signal preservation of Rahab, Joshua gave a strict charge that she should be spared, and none but she and her's; and she taking care that the sign, the scarlet-thread, should be hang but, her family were marked out for mercy, and perished not. Singular faith, when the generality are not only unbelievers, but against believers, will be rewarded with singular favours in times of common calamity.

32. And what shall I more say? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: 33. Who through faith sub-dued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, 34. Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. 35. Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tor-tured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. 36. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. 37. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; 38. (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. 39. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: 40. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. 1. The apostle having given us a class of many eminent believers, whose names are mentioned, and the particular trials and actions of their faith recorded; he now concludes his narrative with a more summary account of another set of believers, where the particular acts are not ascribed to particular persons by name, but large classes of them are well acquainted with the sacred story; and, like a divine orator, he prefices this part of the narrative with an elegant exposition; What shall I say more? Time would fail me; as if he had said, "It is in vain to attempt to exhaust this subject; should I not restrain my pen, it would soon run beyond the bounds of an epistle; and therefore I shall but just mention a few more, and leave you to enlarge upon them." Observe, 1. After all our researches into the scriptures, there is still more to be learned from them. 2. We must well consider in divine matters what we should say, and suit it as well as we can to the time. 3. We should be pleased to think how great the number of believers was under the Old Testament, and how strong their faith, though the objects thereof were not then so fully revealed. And, 4. We should lament it, that now, in gospel-times, when the rule of faith is more clear and perfect, the number of believers should be so small, and their faith so weak.

In this summary account the apostle, 1. Mentions Gideon, whose story we have in Judges 6. 11, &c. He was an eminent instrument raised up of God to deliver his people from the oppression of the Midianites; he was a person of mean tribe and family, called from a mean employment, (the skinning of hides,) and saluted by an angel of God in this surprising manner, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of war. Gideon could not at first receive such honours, but humbly expostulates with the angel about their low and disdained state: the angel of the Lord delivered him his commission, and assured him of success, confirming it by fire out of the rock. Gideon is directed to offer sacrifice, and, instructed in his offer, went forth, and met the angel! 2. Against the Midianites, with his army was reduced from thirty-two thousand to three hundred; yet by these, with their lamps and pitchers, God put the whole army of the Midianites to confusion and ruin: and the same faith that gave Gideon so much courage and honour, enabled him to act with great meekness and modesty toward his brethren afterward. It is the excellency of the grace of faith, that, while it helps men to do great things, it keeps them from having high and great thoughts of themselves.

2. Barak, another instrument raised up to deliver Israel out of the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, (Judges 4.) where we read, (1.) Though he was a soldier, yet he received his commission and instructions from Deborah, a prophetess of the Lord; and he insisted upon having this divine oracle with him in his expedition. (2.) He obtained a great victory by his faith, over all the host of Sisera. (3.) His faith taught him to return all the praise and glory to God: this is the nature of faith; it has recourse unto God in all dangers and difficulties, and then makes grateful returns to God for all mercies and deliverances.

3. Samson, another instrument that God raised up to deliver Israel from the Philistines: his story we have in Judges, ch. 13, 14, 15, and 16. and from it we learn, that the grace of faith is the sure foundation for the soul great for service. If Samson had not had a strong faith as well as a strong arm, he never performed such exploits. (1.) By faith the servants of God shall overcome even the roaring lion. (2.) True faith is acknowledged and accepted, even when mingled with many failings. (3.) The believer's faith endures to the end, and, in dying, gives him victory over all his earthly enemies; his greatest conquest he gains by dying.

4. Jephthah, whose story we have, Judges 11. before Samson; he was raised up to deliver Israel from the Ammonites. As various and new enemies rise up against the people of God, various and new deliverers are raised up for them. In the story of Jephthah, observe, (1.) The grace of God often finds out, and fastens upon, the most undeserving and ill-deserving persons, to do great things for them and by them. Jephthah was the son of a harlot. (2.) The grace of faith, wherever it is, will put men upon acknowledging God in all their ways; (ch. 11. 11.) Jephthah rehearsed all his words before the Lord in Mizpeh. (3.) The grace of faith will make men bold and venturous in a good cause. (4.) Faith will not only put men upon making their vows to God, but paying their vows after the mercy received; yea, though they have, in their own great grief, hurt, and loss, as in the case of Jephthah and his daughter.

5. David, that great man after God's own heart. Few ever met with greater trials, and few ever discovered a more lively faith; his first appearance on the stage of the world was a great evidence of his faith; having, when young, slain the lion and the bear; his faith in God encouraged him to encounter the giant, and the grace of God enabled him to overcome him. The same faith enabled him to bear patiently the ungrateful maltreatment of Saul and his favourites, and to wait till God should put him into possession of the promised power and dignity. The same faith made him a very successful and victorious prince, and, after a long life of virtue and honour, (though not without some foul stains of sin,) he died in faith, relying on the grace of God, and confiding in the promised land. And much he had with him, and his, ordered in all things, assured; and he has left behind him such excellent memoirs of the trials and acts of faith in the book of Psalms, as will ever be of great esteem and use, among the people of God.

6. Samuel, raised up to be a most eminent prophet of the Lord to Israel, as well as a ruler over them. God revealed himself to Samuel, when he was but a child, and continued to do so till his death. In his story observe, (1.) Those are likely to grow up to some eminency in faith, who begin betimes in the exercise of it. (2.) They, whose business it is to reveal the mind and will of God to others, had need to be well established in the belief of it themselves. To Samuel he adds, and of the prophets, who were extraordinary ministers of the Old-Testament church, employed of God sometimes to denounced judgment, sometimes to promise mercy, always to reproduce sin; sometimes to foretell remarkable events, known only to God; and chiefly to give notice of the Messiah, his coming, person, and offices; for in him the prophets as well as the law centre. Now a true and strong faith was very requisite for the right discharge of such an office as this.

11. And now, having denounced particular persons, he proceeds to tell us, what things were done by their faith; he mentions some things that easily apply themselves to one or other of the persons named; but he mentions other things that are not so easy to be accommodated to any here named, but must be left to general conjecture or accommodation.

1. By faith they subdued kingdoms, vs. 33. Thus did David, Joshua, and many of the judges. Learn hence, (1.) The interjett of righteousness; the kings and kingdoms are often set up in opposition to God and his people. (2.) God can easily subdue all those kings and kingdoms that set themselves to oppose him. (3.) Faith is a suitable and excellent qualification of those who fight in the wars of the Lord; it makes them just, bold, and wise.

2. They wrought righteousnesses, both in their public and personal capacities; they turned many from idolatry to the faith of righteousness; they believed God, and it was imputed to them for righteousness; they walked and acted righteously toward God and man. It is a greater honour and happiness to work righteousness than to work miracles; faith is an active principle of universal righteousness.

3. They obtained promises both general and special. It is faith that gives us an interest in the promises; it is by faith that we have the comfort of the promises, and it is by faith that we are prepared to wait for the promises, and in due time to receive them.

4. They stopped the mouth of lions; so did Samuel, Judg. 14. 5, 6. and David, 1 Sam. 17. 34, 35, and Daniel 6. 22. Here learn, (1.) The power of God is above the power of the creature. And, (2.) Faith engages the power of God for his people, whenever it shall be for his glory to overcome brute beasts and bruish men.

5. They quenched the violence of the fire, vs. 34. So Moses, by the prayer of faith, quenched the fire of God's wrath that was kindled against the people of Israel, Numb. 11. 1, 2. So did the three children, or rather mighty champions, Dan. 3. 17, 27. Their faith in God, refusing to worship the golden image, exposed them to the fiery furnace which Nebuchadnezzar had set up; the sight of their faith engaged for them that power and presence of God in the furnace, which quenched the violence of the fire, so that not so much as the smell thereof passed on them. Never was the grace of faith more severely tried, never more nobly exerted, nor ever more gloriously rewarded, than their's was.

6. They escaped the edge of the sword. Thus David escaped the sword of Goliath and of Saul, 1 Chron. 10. 8. and 2 Sam. 23. 3. And God saved him from the sword of Haman. The swords of men are held in the hand of God, and he can blunt the edge of the sword, and turn it away from his people against their enemies when he pleases. Faith takes hold of that hand of God, which has hold of the swords of men; and God has often suffered himself to be prevailed upon by the faith of his people.

7. Out of weakness they were made strong; from national weakness, into which the Jews often fell by their unbelief; upon the reviv-\(^{1}\)al of faith, all their commanded them to take, and he loves to do great things by small and contemptible means, that his own arm may be made bare. 2. The powerful success of the prescribed means; the walls of Jericho fell before them. This was a frontier-town in the land of Canaan, the first that stood out against the Israelites. God was pleased in this extraordinary manner to slight and cast down man his pride, and to magnify the Canaanites, to strengthen the faith of the Israelites, and to exclude all boasting. God can, and will, in his own time and way, cause all the powerful opposition that is made to his interest and glory, to fall down, and the grace of faith is mighty through God for the pulling down of strong-holds; he will make Babylon fall before the faith of his people, and when he has some great thing to do for them, he raises up great and strong faith in them.

VIII. The next instance is the faith of Rahab, v. 31. Among the noble army of believing worthies, bravely marshalled by the apostle, Rahab comes in the rear, to shew that God is no respecter of persons. Here consider, 1. Who this Rahab was: (1.) She was a Canaanite, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and had but little help for faith, and yet she was not ashamed of the grace received by faith, which appears, when it works without the usual means of grace. (2.) She was a harlot, and lived in a way of sin; she was not only a keeper of a public house, but a common woman of the town, and yet she believed that the greatness of sin, if truly repented of, shall be no bar to the pardoning mercy of God. Christ has saved the chief of sinners; where sin has abounded, grace has superabounded. 2. What did she by her faith? she received the spies in peace, the men of Joshua had sent to spy out Jericho, Josh. 2. 6, 7. She not only bade them welcome, but she concealed them from their enemies who sought to cut them off, and she made a noble confession of her faith, v. 9—11. She engaged them to covenant with her to shew favour to her and her's, when God should shew kindness to them, and that they would give her a sign, which they did, a line of scarlet, which she was to hang forth out of the window; she sent them away with prudent and friendly advice. Learn here, (1.) True faith will shew itself in good works, especially toward the people of God. (2.) Faith will venture all hazards in the cause of God and his people; a true believer will sooner expose his own person than God's interest and people. (3.) A true believer is desirous, not only to be in covenant with God, but in communion with the people of God, and is willing to cast in his lot with them, and to fare as they fare. 3. Observe what Rahab gained by her faith; she escaped perishing with those that believed not. Observe, (1.) The generality of her neighbours, friends, and fellow-citizens, perished; it was an utter destruction that befell that city; man and beast were cut off. (2.) The cause of the people of Jericho's destruction—unbelief; they believed not that Israel's God was the true God, and that Israel was the peculiar people of God, though they had some omen and sign. (3.) The signal preservation of Rahab. Joshua gave a strict charge that she should be spared, and none but she and her's; and she taking care that the sign, the scarlet-thread, should be hung out, her family were marked out for mercy, and perished not. Singular faith, when the generality are not only unbelievers, but against believers, will be rewarded with singular favours in times of common calamity.

32. And what shall I more say? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: 33. Who through faith sub-dued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, 34. Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. 35. Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. 36. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. 37. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; 38. (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. 39. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise. 40. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

I. The apostle having given us a classic of many eminent believers, whose names are mentioned, and the particular trials and actions of their faith recorded; he now concludes his narrative with a more summary account of another set of believers, where the particular acts are not ascribed to particular persons by name, but left to be applied by those who are well acquainted with the sacred story; and, like a divine orator, he prefaces this part of the narrative with an elegant expostulation: What shall I say more? Time would fail me; as if he had said, "It is in vain to attempt to exhaust this subject; should I not restrain my pen, it would soon run beyond the bounds of an epistle, and the more I shall but just mention a few more, and leave you to enlarge upon them." Observe, 1. After all our researches into the scriptures, there is still more to be learned from them. 2. We must well consider in divine matters what we should say, and suit it as well as we can to the time. 3. We should be pleased to think how great the number of believers was under the Old Testament, and how strong their faith, though the objects thereof were not then so fully revealed. And, 4. We should lament it, that now, in gospel-times, when the rule of faith is more clear and perfect, the number of believers should be so small, and their faith so weak.

In this summary account the apostle, 1. Mentions Gideon, whose story we have in Judges 6. 11, &c. He was an eminent instrument raised up of God to deliver his people from the oppression of the Midianites; he was a person of mean quality and family, called from a mean employment, (threshing wheat,) and saluted by an angel of God in this surprising manner, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of war. Gideon could not at first receive such honours, but humbly expostulates with the angel about their low and distressed state: the angel of the Lord delivered him his commission, and assured him of success, confirming it by a sign out of the rock. Gideon is represented as offering sacrifice, and, instructed in his duty, goes forth against the Midianites, when his army was reduced from thirty-two thousand to three hundred; yet by these, with their lamps and flitchers, God put the whole army of the Midianites to confusion and ruin: and the same faith that gave Gideon so much courage and honour, enabled him to act with great meekness and modesty toward his brethren afterward. It is the excellency of the grace of faith, that, while it helps men to do great things, it keeps them from having high and great thoughts of themselves.

2. Barak, another instrument raised up to deliver Israel out of the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, (Judges 4.) where we read, (1.) Though he was a soldier, yet he received his commission and instructions from Deborah, a prophetess of the Lord; and he insisted upon having this divine oracle with him in his expedition. (2.) He obtained a great victory by his faith over all the host of Sisera. (3.) His faith taught him to return all the praise and glory to God: this is the nature of faith; it has recourse unto God in all dangers and difficulties, and then makes grateful returns to God for all mercies and deliverances.

3. Samson, another instrument that God raised up to deliver Israel from the Philistines: his story we have in Judges, ch. 13, 14, 15, and 16. and from it we learn, that the grace of faith is the strength of the soul for great service. If Samson had not had a strong faith as well as a strong arm, he had never performed such exploits. (1.) By faith the servants of God shall overcome even the roaring lion. (2.) True faith is acknowledged and accepted, even when mingled with many failings. (3.) The believer's faith endures to the end, and, in dying, gives him victory over death and over all his earthly enemies; his greatest conquest he gains by dying.

4. Jephthah, whose story we have, Judg. 11. before Samson; he was raised up to deliver Israel from the Ammonites. As various and new enemies rise up against the people of God, various and new deliverers are raised up for them. In the story of Jephthah, observe, (1.) The grace of God often finds out, and fastens upon, the most undertaking and ill-deserving persons, to do great things for them and by them. Jephthah was the son of a harlot. (2.) The grace of faith, wherever it is, will put men upon acknowledging God in all their ways; (ch. 11.11.) Jephthah rehearsed all his words before the Lord in Mizpah. (3.) The grace of faith will make men bold and venturous in a good cause. (4.) Faith will not only put men upon making their vows to God, but it can sustain them to the performance of them; yea though they have vowed to their own great grief, hurt, and loss, as in the case of Jephthah and his daughter.

5. David, that great man after God's own heart. Few ever met with greater trials, and few ever discovered a more lively faith; his first appearance on the stage of the world was a great evidence of his faith; having, when young, slain the lion and the bear, his faith in God encouraged him to encounter the great Goliath, and helped him to triumph over him. The same faith enabled him to bear patiently the ungrateful malice of Saul and his favourites, and to wait till God should put him into possession of the promised power and dignity. The same faith made him a very successful and victorious prince, and, after a long life of virtue and honour, (though not without some severe trials,) he died a ruler over them. God revealed himself to Samuel, when he was but a child, and continued to do so till his death. In his story observe, (1.) Those are likely to grow up to some eminency in faith, who begin betimes in the exercise of it. (2.) They, whose business it is to reveal the mind and will of God to others, had need to be well established in the belief of it themselves. To Samuel he adds, and of the prophets, who are the extraordinary ministers of the Old-Testament church, employed of God sometimes to denounced judgment, sometimes to promise mercy, always to reprove sin; sometimes to foretell remarkable events, known only to God; and chiefly to give notice of the Messiah, his coming, person, and offices; for in him the prophets as well as the law centre. Now a true and strong faith was very requisite for the right discharge of such an office. And now, having done naming particular persons, he proceeds to tell us, what things were done by their faith; he mentions some things that easily apply themselves to one or other of the persons named; but he mentions other things that are not so easy to be accommodated to any here named, but must be left to general conjecture or accommodation.

1. By faith they subdued kingdoms, v. 33. Thus did David, Joshua, and many of the judges. Learn hence, (1.) The interests and powers of kings and kingdoms are often set up in opposition to God and his people. (2.) God can easily subdue all those kings and kingdoms that set themselves to oppose him. (3.) Faith is a suitable and excellent qualification of those who fight in the wars of the Lord; it makes them just, bold, and wise.

2. They wrought righteousness, both in their public and private lives. If they were sometimes called upon to turn away many from idolatry to the ways of righteousness; they believed God, and it was imputed to them for righteousness; they walked and acted commercially toward God and man. It is a greater honour and happiness to work righteousness than to work miracles; faith is an active principle of universal righteousness.

3. They obtained promises both general and special. It is faith that gives us an interest in the promises; it is by faith that we have the comfort of the promises; and it is by faith that we are prepared to wait for the promises, and in due time to receive them.

4. They stopped the mouths of lions; so did Samson, Judg. 14. 5. 6. and David, 1 Sam. 17. 34. 35. and Daniel 6. 22. Here learn, (1.) The power of God is above the power of the creature. And, (2.) Faith engages the power of God for his people, whenever it shall be for his glory to overcome brute beasts and brutish men.

5. They quenched the violence of the fire, v. 34. So Moses, by the prayer of faith, quenched the fire of God's wrath that was kindled against the people of Israel, Numb. 11. 1. 2. So did the three children, or rather mighty champions, Dan. 3. 17. 27. Their faith in God, refusing to worship the golden image, exposed them to the fiery furnace subjected by Nehuchadnezzar had prepared for them, and their faith engaged for that power and presence of God in the furnace, which quenched the violence of the fire, so that not so much as the smell thereof passed on them. Never was the grace of faith more severely tried, never more nobly exerted, nor ever more gloriously rewarded, than their's was.

They crossed the edge of the sword. Thus David escaped the slaughter of Goliath and of Saul, and Mordecai and the Jews escaped the sword of Haman. The swords of men are held in the hand of God, and he can blunt the edge of the sword, and turn it away from his people against their enemies when he pleases. Faith takes hold of that hand of God, which has hold of the swords of men; and God has often suffered himself to be prevailed upon by the faith of his people.

7. Out of weakness they were made strong; from national weakness, into which the Jews often fell by their unbelief; upon the reviv'i of faith, all their interest and affairs revived and flourished: from bodily weakness; thus Hezekiah, believing the word of God, recovered out of a mortal distemper; and he ascribed his recovery to the promise and power of God; (Isa. 38. 15.) What shall I say? He hath spoken it, and he hath also done it. — Lord, by these things men live, and in these is the life of my spirit. And it is the same grace of faith that from spiritual weakness helps men to recover and renew their strength.

They grew valiant in fight; so did Joshua, the judges, and David. True faith gives truest courage and patience, as it discourses the strength of God, and thereby the weakness of all his enemies; and they were not only valiant, but successful. God, as a reward and encouragement of their faith, put to flight the armies of the alien, of those who were aliens to their commonwealth, and enemies to their religion; God made them flee and fall before his faithful servants. Believing and praying command- ers, at the head of believing and praying armies, have been so owned and honoured of God, that nothing could stand before them.

9. Women received their dead raised to life again, v. 33. So did the widow of Zarephath, (1 Kings 17. 23.) and the Shunammite, 2 Kings 4. 36. (1.) In Christ there is neither male nor female; many of the weaker sex have been strong in faith. (2.) The reverence preserved to the care of the children of believers, yet it leaves them subject to natural death. (3.) Poor mothers are loath to resign up their interest in their children; though death has taken them away from them. (4.) God has sometimes yielded so far to the tender affections of sor- rowful women, as to restore their dead children to life again. Thus Christ had compassion on the widow of Nain, Luke 7. 12, &c. (5.) This should confirm our faith in the general resurrection.

III. The apostle tells us what these believers endured by faith:

1. They were tortured, not accepting deliverance, v. 35. They were put upon the rack, to make them renounce their God, their Saviour, and their religion; they bore the torture, and would not accept of deliverance upon such vile terms; that which animated them thus to suffer, was, the hope they had of obtaining a better resurrection, and deliverance through their faith. Thus it was, as God was pleased to refer to that memorable story, 2 Macc. ch. 7, &c.

2. They endured trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, and bonds and imprisonments, v. 36. They were persecuted in their reputation by mockings, which are cruel to an ingenuous mind; in their persons by scourging; the punishment of slaves; in their liberty by bonds and imprisonment. Observe how inveterate is the malice that wicked men have toward the righteous; how faith will go, and what a variety of cruelties it will invent and exercise upon those against whom they have no cause of quarrel, except in the matters of their God.

3. They were put to death in the most cruel manner; some were stoned, as Zechariah, (2 Chron. 24. 21.) sawn asunder, as Isaiah by Manasseh. They were tempted; some read it, burnt, 2 Macc. 7. They were clothed in the sword. All sorts of death were prepared for them. Some were enemies' slaughter, some the sword, and some the fire. Yet they boldly met it, and endured it.

4. Those who escaped death, were used so ill, that death might seem more eligible than such a life. Their enemies spared them, only to prolong their misery, and wear out all their patience; for they were forced to wander about sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, and tor- mented; they wandered about in deserts, and on mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, v. 37, 38. They were stripped of the conveniences of life, turned out of house and harbour; they had not room to put on, but were forced to cover themselves with the skins of slain beasts; they were driven out of all human society, and forced to converse with the beasts of the field, to hide themselves in dens and caves, and make their complaint to rocks and rivers, not more obdurate than their enemies. Such sufferings as these they endured then for their faith; and such they endured through the power of the grace of faith: and which shall we most admire, the wickedness of human nature, that is capable of such cruelties, or the excellency of divine grace, that is able to bear up the faithful under such cruelties, and to carry them safely through all!

IV. What they obtained by their faith.

1. A most honourable character and commendation from God, the true Judge and Fountain of honour—that the world was not worthy of such men; the world did not deserve such blessings; they did not know how to value them, nor how to use them. Wicked men! The righteous are not worthy to live in the world, and God declares, the world is not worthy of them; and though they widely differ in their judgment, they agree in this, that it is not fit good men should have their rest in this world; and therefore God receives them out of it, to that world that is suitable to them, and yet far beyond the merit of all their services and sufferings.

2. They obtained a good report, (v. 39.) of all good men, and of the truth itself; and have the honour to be enrolled in this sacred calendar of the Old Testament worthies, God's witnesses; yea, they had a witness for them in the consciences of their enemies, who, while they thus abused them, were condemned by their own consciences, as persecuting those who were more righteous than themselves.

3. They obtained an interest in the promises, though not the full possession of them. They had a title to the promises, though they received not the great things promised. This is not meant of the felicity of the heavenly state, for that they did receive, when they died, in the measure of a part, in one constituent part of their persons, and the much better part; but it is meant of the felicity of the gospel state; they had typical and in some respects, antitype; they had obtained and possessed it, but did not see the substance; and yet, under this imperfect dispensation, they discovered this precious faith: this the apostle insists upon, to render their faith more illustrious, and to provoke Christians to a holy jealousy and emulation; that they should not suffer themselves to be outdone in the exercise of faith by those who came so short of them in all the helps and advantages for believing. He tells the Hebrews, God had provided some better things for them, (v. 40.) and therefore they might be assured that he expected at least as good things from them; and that, since the gospel is the end and perfection of the Old Testament, which had no excellency but in its reference to Christ and the gospel, it was expected that their faith should be as much more perfect than the faith of the Old Testament saints; for their faith and disposition to suffer much persecuted, and were indeed the perfection and completion of the former; for without the gospel-church the Jewish nation must have remained in an incomplete and imperfect state. This reasoning is strong, and should be effectually prevalent with us all.

CHAP. XII.

The apostle, in this chapter, applies what he has collected in the chapter foregoing, and makes use of it as a great motivative to patience and perseverance in the Christian faith and state, pressing home the argument. I. From a greater example than he had yet mentioned, and that is Christ himself, v. 1. 3. II. From the gentle and gracious nature of the afflictions they endured in their Christian course, v.

4. 17. III. From the communion and conformity between the state of the gospel church on earth, and the triumphant church in heaven, from v. 18, to the end of the chapter.

1. WHEREFORE, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside ever weight, and the sin which doth so easily betray us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, 2. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith;
who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. 3. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

Here observe what is the great duty which the apostle urges upon the Hebrews, and which he so much desires they would comply with, and that is, to lay aside every weight, and the sin that did so easily beset them, and run with patience the race set before them. The duty consists of two parts, the one preparatory, the other perfective.

1. Preparatory; Lay aside every weight, and the sin, &c. 1. Every weight, that is, all inordinate affection and concern for the body, and the present life and world; inordinate care for the present life, and fondness for it, is a dead weight upon the soul,
that pulls it down when it would ascend upward, and pulls it back when it should proceed upward;
what makes duty and difficulties harder and heavier than they would be. 2. The sin that doth so easily beset us; the sin that has the greatest advantage against us, by the circumstances we are in, our constitution, our company. This may mean either the damning sin of unbelief, or rather the darling sin of the Jews, an over-fondness for their own dispensation. Let us lay aside all external and internal hindrances.

2. Perfective; Run with patience the race that was set before them. The apostle speaks in the gymnastic style, taken from the Olympic and other exercises. 1. Christians have a race to run; a race of service and a race of sufferings; a course of active and passive obedience. 2. This race is set before them; it is marked out unto them, both by the word of God and the examples of the faithful servants of God, that cloud of witnesses with which they are comprised about. It is set out by proper limits and direction; the mark they run to, and the prize they run for, are set before them. 3. This race must be run with patience and perseverance. There will be need of patience to encounter the difficulties that lie in our way, of perseverance to resist all temptations to desist, or turn aside. Faith and patience are the conquering graces; and therefore must be always cultivated, and kept in lively exercise. 4.
Christians have a greater Example to animate and encourage them in their Christian course than any or all who have been mentioned before, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ; (v. 2.) Looking unto Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith; here observe,

(1.) What our Lord Jesus is to his people; he is the Author and Finisher of their faith; the Beginning, Perfecter, and Rewarder of it. [1.] He is the Author of their faith; not only the Object, but the Author. He is the great Leader and Precedent of our faith, he trusted in God; he is the Purchaser of the Spirit of faith; the Publisher of the rule of faith; the efficient cause of the grace of faith; and, in all respects, the Author of our faith. [2.] He is the Finisher of our faith; he is the Fullfiller, and the Fulfilling of all scripture promises and prophecies; he is the Perfecter of the canon of scripture;
he is the Finisher of grace, and of the work of faith with power in the souls of his people; and he is the Judge and the Rewarder of their faith; he determines who they are, that reach the mark, and from him, and not from them, they have the prize.

(2.) What trials Christ met with in his race and course; [1.] He endured the contradiction of sin-ers against himself; (v. 3.) he bore the opposition that they made to him, both in their words and behaviour; they were continually contradicting him, and crossing in upon his great designs; and though he could easily have both confuted and confounded them, and sometimes gave them a specimen of his power, yet he endured their evil manners with great patience; their contradictions were levelled against Christ himself, against his person as God-man; against his authority; against his preaching; and yet he endured all. [2.] He endured the cross—all those sufferings that he met with in the world; for he took up his cross betimes, and was at length nailed to it, and endured a painful, ignominious, and accursed death; in which he was numbered with the transgressors, the vilest malefactors; yet all this he endured with invincible patience and resolution.
[3.] He despised the shame, all the reproaches that were cast upon him, both in his life, and at his death, he despised them all, was infinitely above them; he knew his innocence, and his own excelleney, and despised the ignorance and malice of his dispersers.

(3.) What it was that supported the human soul of Christ, when he was unparalleled sufferings; and that was the joy that was set before him. He saw something in view under all his sufferings, which was pleasant to him; he rejoiced to see, that by his sufferings he should make satisfaction to the injured justice of God, and give security to his honour and government; that he should make peace between God and man; that he should seal the covenant of grace, and be the Mediator of it; that he should open a way of salvation to the chief of sinners, and that his Father had given him, and himself be the First-born among many brethren. This was the joy that was set before him.

(4.) The reward of his suffering; he is sat down at the right hand of the throne of God. Christ, as Mediator, is exalted to a station of the highest honour, of the greatest power and influence; he is at the right hand of the Father; nothing passes between heaven and earth but by him; he does all that is done; he ever lives to make intercession for his people.

(5.) What is our duty with respect to this Jesus;
we must, [1.] Look unto him; that is, we must set him continually before us as our Example, and our great Encouragement; we must look to him for direction, for assistance, and for acceptance, in all our sufferings. [2.] We must consider him, meditate much upon him, and let his sufferings become ours; and we must also have an eye to his case to our own. We must analogize, as the word is; compare Christ's sufferings and our's; and we shall find, that as his sufferings far exceeded ours, in the nature and measure of them, so his patience far excels our's, and is a perfect pattern for us to imitate.

(6.) The advantage we shall reap by thus doing; it will be a means to prevent our weariness and fainting. [3.] Let ye be weary and faint in your minds. Observe, [1.] There is a proneness in the best to grow weary, and to faint under their trials and afflictions, especially when they prove heavy and of long continuance; this proceeds from the imperfection of grace and the remains of corruption.

[2.] The best way to prevent this, is, to look unto Jesus, and to consider him. Faith and meditation will fetch in fresh supplies of strength, comfort, and courage; for he has assured them, if they suffer with him, they shall also reign with him: and this hope will be their helmet.

4. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin. 5. And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: 6. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. 7. If ye endure chastening, God dealth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? 8. But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. 9. Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? 10. For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. 11. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. 12. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; 13. And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. 14. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord: 15. Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; 16. Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birth-right.

17. For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

Here the apostle presses the exhortation to patience and perseverance by an argument taken from the gentle measure and gracious nature of those sufferings which the believing Hebrews endured in their Christian course. 1. From the gentle and moderate degree and measure of their sufferings; Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin, v. 4. Observe, 1. He owns that they had suffered much, they had been striving to an agony against sin. Here, (1.) The cause of the conflict was sin, and to be engaged against sin is to fight in a good cause; for sin is the worst enemy both to God and man. Our spiritual warfare is both honourable and necessary; for we are only defending ourselves against that which would destroy us, if it should get the victory over us; we fight for ourselves, for our lives, and therefore ought to be patient and resolute. (2.) Every Christian is enlisted under Christ's banner, to strive against sin, against sinful doctrines, sinful practices, and sinful habits, and customs, both in himself and in others. Observe, 2. He puts them in mind, that they might have suffered more; others have suffered more; for they had not yet resisted unto blood; they had not been called to martyrdom as yet, though they knew not how soon they might be. Learn here, (1.) Our Lord Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, does not call his people out to the hardest trials at first, but wisely trains them up by lesser sufferings to be prepared for greater. He will not put new wine into weak vessels; he is the Good Shepherd, who will not over-drive the young ones of the flock. (2.) It becomes Christians to take notice of the gentleness of Christ in accommodating their trial to their strength; they should not magnify their afflictions, but should take notice of the mercy that is mixed with them, and should pity those who are called to the fiery trial to resist to blood; not to shed the blood of their enemies, but to seal their testimony with their blood. They that are called to be ashamed to faint under lesser trials, when they see others bear up under greater, and do not know how soon they may meet with greater themselves. If we run with the footmen, and they have wearied us, how shall we contend with horses? If we be wareied in a land of peace, what shall we do in the swellings of Jordan? Jer. 12. 5.

11. He argues from the peculiar and gracious nature of God's sufferings, those of his people, as befall the people of God; though their enemies and persecutors may be the instruments of inflicting such sufferings on them, yet they are divine chastisements; their heavenly Father has his hand in all, and his wise end to serve by all; of this he has given them due notice, and they should not forget it, v. 5. Observe, 1. Those afflictions which may be truly persecutio as far as men are concerned in them, are fatherly chastisements as far as God is concerned in them. Persecution for religion, is sometimes a correction and rebuke for the sins of professors of religion. Men persecute them because they are religious; God chastises them because they are not more so: men persecute them because they will not give up their profession; God chastises them because they have not lived up to their profession. 2. God has directed his people how they ought to behave themselves under all their afflictions; they must avoid the extremes that many run into. (1.) They must not despise the chastening of the Lord; they must not make light of afflictions, and be stupid and insensible under them; for they are the hand and rod of God, and his rebukes for sin. They who make light of affliction, make light of God, and make light of sin. (2.) They must not faint when they are re- buked; they must not sink under the weight of a trial, nor give up the struggle, but bear up with faith and patience. (3.) If they run into either of these extremes, it is a sign they have forgotten their heavenly Father's advice and exhortation, which he has given them in true and tender affection.

3. Afflictions, rightly endured, though they may be the fruits of God's displeasure, are yet proofs of his paternal love to his people, and care for them. (v. 6, 7.) Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son he receiveth. Observe, (1.) The best of God's children need chastisement; they have their faults and follies, which need to be corrected. (2.) Though God may let others alone in their sins, he will correct sin in his own children; they are of his family, and shall not escape his re bukes when they want them. (3.) In this he acts as he is God's father, and treats them like children; no wise and good father will wink at faults in his own children, as he would in others; his relation and his affections oblige him to take more notice of the faults of his own children, than of others. (4.) To be suffered to go on in sin without a rebuke, is a sad sign of alienation from God; such are bastards, not sons. They may call him Father, because born in the pale of the church; but they are the spurious offspring of another father, not God, v. 7.}

4. Those that are impatient under the discipline of their heavenly Father, behave worse toward him, than they would do toward earthly parents, v. 9, 10. Here, (1.) The apostle commends a dutiful and submissive behaviour in children toward their earthly parents; we gave them reverence even when they corrected us. It is the duty of children to give the reverence of obedience to the just commands of their parents, but the reverence of correction when they have been disobedient. Parents have not only authority, but a charge, from God, to give their children correction when it is due, and he has commanded children to take such correction well: to be stubborn and discontent under due correction is a double fault; for the correction supposes there has been a fault already committed against the parent's commanding power, and implies a future fault against the same power. (2.) From hence he recommends a humble and submissive behaviour towards our heavenly Father, when under his correction; and this he does by an argument from the less to the greater. [1.] Our earthly fathers are but the fathers of our flesh, but God is the Father of our spirits. Our fathers on earth were instrumental in the production of the bodies of the beasts; they brought forth, and brought forth from the earth, vile thing, formed out of the dust of the earth, the bodies of the beasts are; and yet as they are curiously wrought, and made parts of our persons, a proper tabernacle for the soul to dwell in, and an organ for it to act by, we owe reverence and affection to those who were instrumental in their production; but then we must owe much more to him who is the Father of our spirits. Our souls are not made of flesh and blood; they have a spiritual sort; they are not ex traducto—by tradition; to affirm it is bad philosophy, and worse divinity: they are the immediate offspring of God, who, after he had formed the body of man out of the earth, breathed into him a vital spirit, and so he became a living soul. [2.] Our earthly parents chastened us for our own pleasure. Sometimes they did it to gratify their passion rather than to reform our manners. This is, we observe, the fault of God's fathers in judgment; they correct us, and correct for our own pleasure; subject to, and this they should carefully watch against; for hereby they dishonour that parental authority which God has put upon them, and very much hinder the efficacy of their chastisements. But the Father of our spirits never grieves willingly, nor afflicts the children of men, much less his own children. It is always for our profit; and the advantage he intends thereby, is no less than our being partakers of his holiness; it is to correct and cure those sinful disorders which make us unlike to God, and to improve and increase those graces which are the image of God in us, that we may be and act more like our heavenly Father. God loves his children so, that he would have them to be as like himself as can be, and for this end he chastises them when they need it. [3.] The fathers of our flesh rich are as a femaleness, in our state of childhood, when minors; and though we were in that weak and peevish state, we owed them reverence; and when we came to maturity, we loved and honoured them the more for it. Our whole life here is a state of childhood, minority, and imperfection, and therefore we must submit to the discipline of such a state; when we come to a state of perfection, we shall be fully reconciled to all the measures of God's discipline over us now. (4.) God's correction is no condensation; his children may at first fear lest affliction should come upon that dreadful errand, and we cry, Do not condemn me, but shew me wherefore thou contendest with me, Job 10. 2. But that is so far from being the design of God to his own people, that he therefore chastens them now, that they may not be conceived like the world, 1 Cor. 11. 32. He does it to prevent the death and destruction of their souls, that they may live to God, and be like God, and for ever with him. 5. The children of God, under their afflictions, ought not to judge of their dealings with them by present sense, but by reason, and faith, and experience; (v. 11.) No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Where observe, (1.) The judgment of sense in this case—Afflictions are not grateful to the sense, but grievous; the flesh will feel them, and be grieved by them, and groan under them. (2.) The judgment of faith, which corrects that of sense, and declares that a sanctified affliction, produces the fruits of righteousness; these fruits are peaceable, and tend to peace. The quieting of the soul by the Spirit of God produces peace, by producing more righteousness; for the fruit of righteousness is peace. And if the pain of the body contribute thus to the peace of the mind, and short present affliction produces blessed fruits of a long continuance, they have no reason to fret or faint under it; but their great concern is, that the chastening they are under may be endured by them with patience, and improved to a greater degree of holiness. [4.] That their affliction may be endured with patience, which is the main drift of the apostle's discourse on this subject; and he again returns to exhort them, that for the reason before mentioned, they should lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees, v. 12. A burthen of affliction is apt to make the Christian's hands hang down, and his knees grow feeble, to dispirit him and discourage him in present duties; but the spirit gives a cure of two reasons. First, That he may the better run his spiritual race and course. Faith, and patience, and holy courage and resolution, will make him walk more steadily, keep a straiter path, prevent wavering and wandering. Secondly, That he may encourage and not dispirit others that are in the same way with him. There are many that are in the way to heaven, who yet walk but weakly and feebly in it. Such are apt to discourage one another, and hinder one another; but it is their duty to take courage, and act by faith, and so help one another forward in the way to heaven. [2.] That their affliction may be improved to a greater degree of holiness. Since this is God's design, it ought to be the design and concern of his children, that with renewed strength and patience they may follow peace with all men, and holiness, v. 14. If the children of God grow impatient under affliction, they will neither walk so quietly and peaceably toward men, nor so piously toward God, as they should do; but faith and patience will enable them to follow peace and holiness too, as a man follows his calling, constantly, diligently, and with pleasure. Observe, First, It is the duty of Christians, even when in a suffering state, to follow peace with all men, and even with those who may be instrumental in their sufferings. That is a hard lesson, and a high attainment, but it is what Christ has called his people to. Sufferings are apt to sour the spirit, and sharpen the passions; but the children of God must follow peace with all men. Secondly,
Peace and holiness are connected together; there can be no right peace without holiness. There may be prudence and discreet forbearance, and a shew of friendship and good-will to all; but this true Christian peaceableness is never found separate from holiness. We must not, under pretence of living peaceably with all men, leave the ways of holiness, lest we fall under the law of life, and the law of holiness.

Thirdly, Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. The vision of God our Saviour in heaven is reserved as the reward of holiness, and the stress of our salvation is laid upon our holiness; though a placid peaceable disposition contributes much to our meetness for heaven.

6. Where afflictions and sufferings for the sake of Christ are not endured by men as the chastisement of their heavenly Father, and improved as such, they will be a dangerous snare and temptation to apostasy, which every Christian should most carefully watch against; (v. 15, 16.) Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God. Here the apostle enters a serious caveat against apostasy, and backs it with an awful example.

1.) He enters a serious caveat against apostasy, v. 15. — [Any departure from Christianity, the nature of apostasy; it is falling of the grace of God; it is to become bankrupts in religion, for want of a good foundation, and suitable care and diligence; it is falling of the grace of God; coming short of a principle of true grace in the soul, notwithstanding the means of grace and a profession of religion; and so coming short of the love and favour of God here and hereafter. [2.] The consequences of apostasy, where persons fall of having the true grace of God, a root of bitterness will spring up; corruption will prevail and break forth; a root of bitterness, a bitter root producing bitter fruits to themselves and others; to themselves corrupt principles, which lead to apostasy; and are greatly strengthened and radicalized by apostasy; damnable errors, (to the corrupting of the doctrine and worship of the Christian church, and corrupt practices. Apostates generally grow worse and worse, and fall into the grossest wickedness, which usually ends either in downright atheism or in despair. This produces bitter fruits to others, to the churches to which these men belonged; by their corrupt principles and practices many are troubled, the peace of the churches broken, the peace of men’s minds disturbed, and many defiled, tainted with those bad principles, and drawn into defiling practices; so that the churches both in the world and church of Christ, in two respects, are at a disadvantage.

But the apostates themselves will be the greatest sufferers at last. (2.) The apostate backs the caution with an awful example, and that is, that of Esau; who, though born within the pale of the church, and having the birthright as the eldest son, so entituled to the privilege of being prophet, priest, and king, in his family, was so profane as to despise these sacred privileges, and to sell his birthright for a mess of pottage. When he repented, 1.] Esau’s sin; he profanely despised and sold the birthright, and all the advantages attending it; so do apostates, who, to avoid persecution, and enjoy sensual ease and pleasure, though they bore the character of the children of God, and had a visible right to the blessing and inheritance, give up all the pretensions thereto.

2.] Esau’s punishment suitable to his sin. apostate was convinced of his sin, and folly, when it was too late; he would afterwards have inherited the blessing, but he was rejected. &c. His punishment lay in two things. First, He was condemned by his own conscience; he now saw that the blessing he had made so light of, was worth the having, worth the seeking, though with much carefulness and many tears. Secondly, He was rejected of God; he found no place of repentance in God, in his father, or of true repentance in his own soul; the blessing was given to another, even to him to whom he sold it for a mess of pottage. Esau, in his great wickedness, had made the bargain, and God, in his righteous judgment, ratified and confirms it, and would not suffer Isaac to reverse it. Learn, 1. Apostasy from Christ is the fruit of preferring the gratification of the flesh to the blessing of God and the heavenly inheritance. 2. Sinners will not always have such mean thoughts of the divine blessing and inheritance as now they have. The time is coming when they will think no pains too great, no cares, no tears too much to obtain the lost blessing. 3. When the day of grace is over, (as sometimes it may be in this life,) they will find no place for repentance; they cannot repent aright of the things; and God will not forbear the sentence he has passed upon them for their sin. And therefore, as the design of all, Christians should never give up their title, and hope of their Father’s blessing and inheritance, and expose themselves to his irreconcilable wrath and curse, by deserting their holy religion, to avoid suffering; which, though this may be persecution as far as wicked men are concerned in it, is only a rod of correction and chastisement in the hand of their heavenly Father, to bring them near to himself in conformity and communion. This is the force of the apostle’s arguing from the nature of the sufferings of the people of God, even when they suffer for righteousness’ sake; and the reasoning is very strong.

18. For ye are come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness and tempest, 19. And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard, entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; 20. (For they could not endure that which was commanded, And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart: 21. And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:) But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an immovable company of angels. 25. To the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, 24. And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. 25. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we not escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. 27. And this word, Yet once more, signifies the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. 28. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. 29. For our God is a consuming fire.

Here the apostle goes on to engage the professing Hebrews to persevere in their Christian course and conflict, and not to relapse again into Judaism. This he does by shewing them how much the state of the gospel-church differed from that of the Jewish church, and how much it resembles the state of the church in heaven, and on both accounts demands and deserves our diligence, patience, and perseverance in Christianity.

I. How much the gospel-church differs from the Jewish church, and how much it excels. And here we have a very particular description of the state of the church under the Mosaic dispensation, v. 18—21. 1. It was a gross sensible state. Mount Sinai, on which that church state was constituted, was a mount that might be touched, (v. 18.) a gross palpable place; so was the dispensation. It was very much external and earthly, and so more heavy. The state of the gospel-church on mount Zion is more spiritual, rational, and easy. 2. It was a dark dispensation. Upon that mount there were blackness and darkness, and that church state was covered with dark shadows and types: the gospel-state is full and open; it is clear, and terrible dispensation; the Jews could not bear the terror of it. The thunder and the lightning, the trumpet sounding, the voice of God himself speaking to them, struck them with such dread, that they entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more, v. 19. Yea, Moses himself said, I exceedingly fear and quake. The best of men on earth are not able to converse immediately with God and his holy angels. The gospel-state is mild, and kind, and consoling, suited to our weak frame. 4. It was a limited dispensation; all might not approach to that mount, but only Moses and Aaron. Under the gospel we have all access with boldness to God. 5. It was a very dangerous dispensation. The mount burned with fire, and whatever man or beast touched the mount, they must be stoned, or thrust through with a dart, v. 20. It is sure, it will be always dangerous for presumptuous and brutish sinners to draw nigh to God; but it is not immediate and certain death, as here it was. This was the state of the Jewish church, fitted to awe a stubborn and hard-hearted people, to set forth the strict and tremendous justice of God, to weaken the people of God from that dispensation, and to make them more readily to embrace the sweet and gentle economy of the gospel-church, and adhere to it.

II. He shews that the gospel-state represents the church triumphant in heaven; what communication there is between the one and the other. The gospel-church is called mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, which is free; in opposition to mount Sinai, which tendeth to bondage, Gal. 4. 24. This was the hill on which God set his King the Messiah. Now in coming to mount Zion, believers come into heavenly places, and into a heavenly society.

1. Into heavenly places: the city of the living God. God has taken up his gracious residence in the gospel-church, which on that account is an emblem of heaven. There his people may find him ruling, guiding, sanctifying, and comforting them; there he speaks to them by the gospel-ministry; there they speak to him by prayer, and he hears them; there he trains them up for heaven, and gives them the earnest of their inheritance. To the heavenly Jerusalem as born and bred there; as free denizens there. Here believers have clearer views of heaven, plainer evidences for heaven, and a greater meekness and more heavenly temper of soul.

2. To a heavenly society. (1.) To an innumerable company of angels, who are of the same family with the saints in heaven. (2.) To the general assembly and church of the first-born who are written in heaven, that is, to the universal church, however dispersed. By faith we come to them; have communion with them in the same Head, by the same Spirit, and in the same blessed hope; and walk in the same way of holiness; grappling with the same spiritual enemies, and hastings to the same rest, victory, and glorious triumph; where will be the general assembly of the first-born, the faithful of all the earlier times, who saw the promises of the gospel-state, but were not as of that dispensation, nor as those who first received them under the gospel, and were regenerated thereby, and so were the first-born, and the first-fruits of the gospel-church; and thereby, as the first-born, advanced to greater honours and privileges than the rest of the world. Indeed all the children of God are heirs, and every one has the privileges of the first-born. The names of these are written in heaven, in the records of the church there, written among the living in Jerusalem; they have a good repute for their faith and fidelity, and are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, as citizens are enrolled in the livy-books. (3.) To God the Judge of all; that great God who will judge both Jew and Gentile according to the law they are under: believers come to him now by faith, and supplication to his judgment, and receive a sentence of abasement in the gospel, and in the court of their consciences now, by which they know they shall be justified hereafter. (4.) To the spirits of just men made perfect; to the best sort of men, the righteous, who are more excellent than their neighbours; to the best part of just men, their spirits, and to these in their best state made perfect. Believers have union with departed saints in one and the same body, the body of Christ, and a title to the same inheritance, of which these are the fore-runners, those in heaven possessors. (5.) To Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel. This is none of the least of the many encouragements there are to perseverance in the gospel-state, since it is a state of communion with Christ the Mediator of the new covenant, and of communication of his blood; things that are better than things of Abel. [1.] The gospel-covenant is a new covenant distinct from the covenant of works, and it is now under a new dispensation distinct from that of the old testament. [2.] Christ is the Mediator of this new covenant; he is the middle Person that goes between both parties, God and man; to bring them together in this covenant; to keep them together; and now both have in particular respect to the people, and God's displeasure against them for their sins, to offer our prayers to God, and to bring down the favours of God to us; to plead with God for us, and to plead with us for God; and to length to bring God and his people together in heaven, and to be a Mediator of fruition between them for ever; they beholding, and enjoying God in Christ, and God beholding and blessing them in Christ. [5.] This covenant is ratified by the blood of Christ sprinkled upon our consciences, as the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled upon the altar and the sacrifice. This blood of Christ pacifies God, and purifies the consciences of men. [4.] This is speaking blood, and it speaks better things than that of Abel. First, It speaks to God in behalf of sinners; it pleads not for vengeance, as the blood of Abel did on him who shed it, but for mercy. Secondly, To sinners, in the name of God, it speaks pardon to their sins, peace to their souls; and bespeaks their strictest obedience, and highest love and thankfully to God.

Now the apostle having thus enlarged upon the argument to perseverance taken from the heavenly nature of the gospel-church-state, he closes the chapter by improving the argument in a manner suitable to the weight of it; (v. 25. &c.) See then that ye refuse not him that speaketh; that speaketh by his blood; and not only speaketh after another manner than the blood of Abel spake from the ground, but than God spake by the angels, and than Moses spake on mount Sinai; then he spake on earth, now he spake from heaven. Here observe,

1. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner, he justly expects from them the most strict attention and regard. Now it is in the gospel that God speaks to men in the most excellent manner. For, (1.) He now speaks from a higher and more glorious seat and throne, not from mount Sinai, which was on this earth, but from the civil state of the head of Canaan, to make room for his people: he hath not only shaken the world, as he then did, but he hath shaken the church, that is, the Jewish nation, and shaken them in their church-state, which was in Old-Testament times a heaven upon earth; this their heavenly spiritual state he hath now shaken. It is by the gospel from heaven that God shook to pieces the civil and ecclesiastical state of the nation and introduced a new state of the church, that cannot be removed, shall never be changed for any other on earth, but shall remain till it be made perfect in heaven.

2. When God speaks to men in the most excellent manner, the guilt of those who refuse him is the greater, and their punishment will be more unavoidable and intolerable; there is no escaping, no bearing it, v. 25. The different manner of God's dealing with men under the gospel, in a way of grace, ascribes to us, that he will deal with the despisers of the gospel, after a different manner than he does with other men, in a way of judgment. The glory of the gospel, which should greatly recommend it to our regard, appears in these three things: (1.) It was by sound of the gospel-trumpet, that the former dispensation and state of the church of God were shaken and removed; and shall we despise that voice of God, that pulled down a church, and do but allow, after our long standing, and of God's own building? (2.) It was by the sound of the gospel-trumpet that a new kingdom is erected for God in the world, which can never be so shaken as to be removed. This was a change made once for all; no other change shall take place, till time shall be no more. We have now received a kingdom that cannot be moved, shall never be removed; we have given away any dispensation. The canon of scripture is now perfected, the Spirit of prophecy is ceased, the mystery of God finished, he has put his last hand to it. The gospel-church may be made more large, more prosperous, more purified from contracted pollution, but it shall never be altered for another dispensation: they who perish under the gospel, perish without remedy. And from hence the apostle justly concludes, [1.] How necessary it is for us to obtain grace from God, to serve him acceptably; if we be not accepted of God under this dispensation, we shall never be accepted at all; and we lose all our labour in religion, if we be not accepted of God. [2.] We cannot worship God acceptably, unless we worship him with godly reverence and fear. As faith, so holy fear, is necessary to acceptable worship. [3.] It is only the grace of God that enables us to worship God in a right manner: nature cannot come up to it; it can produce neither that precious faith nor that holy fear, that are necessary to acceptable worship. (3.) God is the same just and righteous God under the gospel, that he appeared to be under the law; though he be our God in Christ, and now deals with us in a more kind and gracious way, yet he is in himself a consuming Fire; that is, a God of strict justice, who will avenge himself on all the despisers of his grace, and upon all apostates; and, under the gospel, the justice of God is displayed in a more awful manner, though not in so sensible a manner as under the law; for here we behold divine justice seizing upon the Lord Jesus Christ, and making him a propitiatory Sacrifice, his soul and body an offering for sin, which is a display of justice far beyond what was seen and heard on mount Sinai when the law was given.

CHAP. XIII.

The apostle, having treated largely of Christ, and faith, and free grace, and gospel-privileges, and warned the Hebrews against apostasy, now, in the close of all, recommends several excellent duties to them, as the proper fruits of faith; (v. 1. 17.) then bespeaks their prayers for him, and offers up his prayers to God for them, gives them some hope of seeing himself and Timothy, and ends with the general salutation and benediction, v. 18, to the end.

1. Let brotherly love continue. 2. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. 3. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body. 4. Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. 5. Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. 6. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me. 7. Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation: 8. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. 9. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein. 10. We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle. 11. For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the high-priest for sin, are burnt without the camp. 12. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. 13. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. 14. For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come. 15. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. 16. But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you.

The design of Christ in giving himself for us, is that he may purchase to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Now the apostle calls the believing Hebrews to the performance of many excellent duties, in which it becomes Christians to excel.

I. To brotherly love; (v. 1.) by which he does not only mean a general affection to all men, as our brethren by nature, all made of the same blood, nor that more limited affection which is due to those who are of the same immediate parents, but that special and spiritual affection which ought to be among the children of God. 1. It is here supposed that the Hebrews had this love one for another; though, at this time, that nation was miserably divided and distracted among themselves, both about matters of religion and the civil state, yet there was true brotherly love left among those of them who believed on Christ; and this appeared in a very eminent manner, especially after the shedding forth of the Holy Ghost, when they had all things common, and sold their possessions to make a general fund of subsistence to their brethren. The spirit of Christianity is a spirit of love; faith works by love; the true religion is the strongest bond of friendship; if it be not so, it has its name for nothing. 2. This brotherly love was in danger of being lost, and that in a time of persecution, when it would be most necessary; it was in danger of being lost by those disputes that were among them concerning the respect they ought still to have to the ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Disputes about religion too often produce a decay of Christian affection; but this must be guarded against, and all proper means used to preserve brotherly love: Christians should always love and live as brethren, and the more they grow in devout affection to God their heavenly Father, the more they will grow in love to one another for his sake.

II. To hospitality; (v. 2.) Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. We must add to brotherly kindness, charity. Where observe, 1. The duty required—to entertain strangers, both those that are strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to our persons; especially those who know themselves to be strangers here, and are seeking another country; which is the case of the people of God in all parts of the world. The believing Jews were in a desperate and distressed condition; but he seems to speak of strangers as such, though we know not who they are, nor whence they come; yet, seeing they are without any certain dwelling place, we should allow them room in our hearts and in our houses, as we have opportunity and ability. 2. The motive—thereby some have entertained angels unawares; so Abraham did, (Gen. 18.) and Lot; (Gen. 19.) and one of those that Abraham entertained, was, the Son of God; and though we cannot suppose this will ever be our case, yet what we do to strangers, in obedience to him, he will reckon and reward as done to himself; (Matt. 25. 35.) I was a stranger, and ye took me in. God has often bestowed honours and favours upon his hospitable servants, beyond all their thoughts, unawares.

III. To Christian sympathy; (v. 3.) Remember those that are in bonds. Where observe, 1. The duty—to remember those that are in bonds and in adversity. 1. God often orders it so, that while some Christians and churches are in adversity, others enjoy peace and liberty. All are not called at the same time to resist unto blood. (2.) Those that are themselves at liberty, must sympathize with those that are in bonds and adversity, as if they were bound with them in the same chain: they must feel the sufferings of their brethren. 2. The reason of the duty—as being yourselves in the body; not only in the body natural, and so liable to the like sufferings; and you should sympathize with them now, that others may sympathize with you when your turn shall come. 3. The same distress under the same Head; and if one member suffer, all the rest suffer with it, 1 Cor. 12. 26. It would be unmartial in Christians not to bear each other's burdens.

IV. To purity and chastity, v. 4. Here you have, 1. A recommendation of God's ordinance of marriage, that it is honourable in all, and ought to be so esteemed by all, and not denied to those to whom it has not been denied; it is honourable, for God instituted it for man in paradise, knowing it was not good for him to be alone; he married and blessed the first couple, the first parents of mankind, to direct all to look unto God in that great concern, and to marry in the Lord. Christ honoured marriage with his presence and first miracle; it is honourable, as a means to prevent impurity and a defiled bed; it is honourable and happy, when persons come to God in a pure state and a undefiled bed, not only from unlawful, but inordinate affections. 2. A dreadful, but just censure of impurity and lewdness; whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. (1.) God knows who are guilty of such sins, no darkness can hide them from him. (2.) He will call such sins by their proper names, not by the names of love and gallantry, but of whoredom and adultery; whoredom in the single state, and adultery in the married state. (3.) He will bring them into judgment, he will judge them, either by their own consciences here, and set their sins in order before them for their deep humiliation; and conscience, when awakened, will be very severe upon such sinners; or he will set them at his tribunal at death, and in the last day; he will convict them, condemn them, and cast them out for ever, if they die under the guilt of this sin.

V. To Christian contentment, v. 5, 6. Here observe, 1. The sin that is contrary to this grace and duty—covetousness, an over eager desire of the wealth of this world, envying those who have more than we; this sin we must allow no place in our conversation; for though it be a secret lust lurking in the heart, it be not subdued, it will enter into our conversation, and discover itself in our manner of speaking and acting; we must take care not only to delight in this sin, but to be without this sin, and openly to disown and reject it. 2. The duty and grace is contrary to covetousness—being satisfied and pleased with such things as we have; present things, for past things cannot be recalled, and future things are only in the hand of God; what God gives us from day to day, we must be content with it, though it fall short of what we bours, support them under all their labours, and strength them under all their temptations. 2. There are good reasons why people should pray for their ministers; he mentions two: (1.) That we have a good conscience, &c. v. 18. 3. The Hebrew of the Hebrews, had cast off the Levitical law, and preached up Christ: now he her modestly asserts his own integrity; We trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. We trust, he might have said, We know; he chose to speak in a humble style, to teach us not to be too confident of ourselves, but to maintain a godly jealousy over our own hearts. We trust have a good conscience, an enlightened and well-informed conscience, a clean and pure conscience, a tender and faithful conscience, a conscience testifying for us, not against us: a good conscience in althings, in the duties both of the first and second taste, toward God, and toward men; and especially all things pertaining to our ministry, we would have honestly and sincerely in all things. Observe, [1] A good conscience has a respect to all God's commands, and all our duty. [2.] That these who havish good conscience, yet need the prayers of others. [3.] Conscientious ministers are public blessings, and deserve the prayers of the people. (2.) Another reason why he desires their prayers, that he hoped thereby to be the sooner restore to them,
(v. 19.) intimating that he had been formerly among them; and that, now he was absent from them, he had a great desire and real intention to come again to them; and that the best way to facilitate his return to them, and to make a mercy to him and them, was, to make it a matter of their prayer. When ministers come to a people as a return of prayer, they come with greater disfation to themselves, and success to the people. We should fetch in all our mercies by prayer.
II. He offers up his prayers to God for them, being willing to do for them as he desired they should do for him; (v. 20.) Now the God of peace, &c.
In this excellent prayer, observe, 1. That given to God, the God of peace, who hath found out a way for peace and reconciliation between himself and sinners, and who loves peace on earth, and especially in his churches. 2. The great works ascribed to him: he hath brought again from death our Lord Jesus, &c. Jesus raised himself by his own power; and yet the Father was concerned in it, attestting thereby that justice was satisfied and the law fulfilled. He rose again for our justification; and that divine power by which he was raised, is able to do every thing for us, that we stand in need of. 3. The titles given to Christ—our Lord Jesus, our Sovereign, our Saviour, and the great shepherd of the sheep, promised in Isa. 40. 11. shewed by himself to be so, John 10. 14, 15. Misters are under-shepherds, Christ is the great shepherd.
This denotes his interest in his people; thy are the flock of his pasture, and his care and care are for them; he feeds them, and leads them, and watches over them. 4. The way and method in which God is reconciled, and Christ raed from the dead—through the blood of the everlasting con-veniant. The blood of Christ satisfied divine justice, and so procured Christ's release from the prison of the grave, and his power and deity, according to an eternal covenant or agreement between the Father and the Son; and this blood is the sanction and seal of an everlasting covenant between God and his people. 5. The mercy prayed for; (v. 21.)
Make you perfect in every good work, &c. Observe, (1.) The perfection of the saints in every good work, is the great thing desired by them and for them, that they may here have a perfection of integrity, a clear mind, a clean heart, lively affections, regular and resolved wills, and suitable strength for every good work to which they are called now; and at length a perfection of degree to fit them for the employment and felicity of heaven. (2.) The way in which God makes his peoples perfect; it is by working in them always what is pleasing in his sight, and that through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever. Observe, [1]
There is no good thing wrought in us, but it is the work of God; he works in us, before we are fit for any good work. [2.] No good thing is wrought in us by God, but through Jesus Christ, for his sake and by his Spirit. And therefore, [3.] Eternal glory is due to him, who is the Cause of all the good principles wrought in us, and all the good works done by us. To this every one should say, Amen.
III. He gives the Hebrews an account of Timothy's liberty, and his hopes of seeing them with him in a little time, (v. 23.) It seems, Timothy had been a prisoner, doubtless for the gospel, but now he was set at liberty. The imprisonment of faithful ministers is an honour to them, and their enlargement matter of joy to the people; he was pleased with the hopes of not only seeing Timothy; but seeing the Hebrews with him. Opportunities of writing to the churches of Christ, are desired by the faithful ministers of Christ, and pleasant to them.
IV. Having given a brief account of this his letter, and begged their attention to it, (v. 22.) he concludes with salutations, and a solemn, though short benediction.
1. The salutation. (1.) From himself to them, directed to all their ministers who had rule over them, and to all the saints; to them all, ministers and people. (2.) From the Christians in Italy to them. It is a good thing to have the law of holy love and kindness written in the hearts of Christians one towards another. Religion teaches men the truest civility and good-breeding. It is not a sord or morose thing.
2. The solemn, though short benediction; (v. 25.)
Grace be with you all. Amen. Let the favour of God be toward you, and his grace continually working in you, and with you, bringing forth the fruits of holiness, as the first-fruits of glory. When the people of God have been conversing together by word or writing, it is good to part with prayer, desiring for each other the continuance of the gracious presence of God, that they may meet together again in the world of praise.
AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

GENERAL EPISTLE OF JAMES.

Completed by Dr. S. Wright.

THE writer of this epistle was not James the son of Zedee: for he was put to death by Herod, (Acts 12.) before Christianity had gained so much ground among the Jews of the dispersion, as is here implied. It was the other James, the son of Alpheus; we was cousin-german to Christ, and one of the twelve apostles, Matt. 10. 3. He is called a pillar; (v. 2. 9.) and this epistle of his cannot be disputed, without loosening a foundation-stone. It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) no directed to any particular person or church, but such a one as we call a circular letter. Others think it is called general or catholic, to distinguish it from the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, Polycarp, all others who were noted in the primitive times, but not generally received in the church, and on that account not canonical, as this is. Eusebius tells us, that this epistle was generally read in the church with the other catholic epistles. Hist. Eccl. page 53. Ed. Val. Anno 1678. St. James, our author was called the just, for his great piety. He was an eminent example of those graces which he prescribes to others. He was so exceedingly revered for his justice, temperance, and devotion, that Josephus the Jewish historian records it as one of the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem, "That St. James was martyred in it." This is mentioned in hopes of procuring the greater regard to what is penned by so holy and excellent a man. The time when this epistle was written is uncertain. The design of it is, to reprove Christians for the great degeneracy both in faith and manners; and to prevent the spreading of those libertine doctrines which threatened the destruction of all practical godliness. (Particulars shall be laid down in the contents at the beginning of each chapter.) It was also special intention of the author of this epistle, to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the joy of their duty, under the calamities and persecutions they might meet with. The truths laid down are very momentous, and necessary to be maintained; and the rules for practice, as here stated, are such as ought to be observed in our times as well as in preceding ages.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription and salutation, (v. 1.) Christians are taught how to conduct themselves when under the cross. Several graces and duties are recommended; and those who endure their trials and afflictions as the apostle here directs, are pronounced blessed, and are assured of a glorious reward, v. 2. 12. But those sins which bring sufferings, or the weakesses and faults men are chargeable with under them, are by no means to be imputed to God; who cannot be the author of sin, but is the Author of all good, v. 13. 18. All passion and rash anger, and vile affections, ought to be suppressed. The word of God should be made our chief study: and what we hear and know of it, we must take care to practise; otherwise our religion will prove but a vain thing. To this is added an account wherein pure religion consists, v. 19. 27.

1. James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. 2. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; 3. Knowing tht the trying of your faith worketh patience. 4. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. 5. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth almen liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 6. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wexereth is like a wave of the sea, driven and tossed. 7. For let not that man think that shall receive anything of the Lord. 8. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. 9. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: 10. But the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the field he shall pass away. 11. For the sun... have enjoyed heretofore, and though it do not come up to our expectations for the future; we must be content with our present lot, we must bring our minds to our present condition, and this is the sure way to contentment; and they who cannot do it, would never be contented though God should raise their condition to their minds, for the mind would rise with the condition.

Haman was the great court-favourite, and yet not contented; Ahab, on the throne, and yet not contented; Adam, in paradise, and yet not contented; yea, the angels, in heaven, and yet not contented; but Paul, though abused and empty, had learned in every state, in any state, therewith to be contented. This reason, then, mean Christians have to be contented with their present lot: 1. God hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, v. 5. 6. This was said to Joshua, (ch. 1. 5.) but belongs to all the faithful servants of God. Old-Testament promises may be applied to New-Testament saints; this promise contains the sum and substance of all the promises; I will never, no, never leave thee, nor ever forsake thee. Here are no less than five negatives he believed together, to confirm this promise; the true believer shall have the gracious presence of God with him in life, at death, and for ever. (2.) From this comprehensive promise they may assure themselves of help from God; v. 6. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my Helper; I will not fear what man shall do unto me. Men can do nothing against God, and God can make all that men do, good to the people, to turn to their good.

VI. To the duty Christians owe to their ministers, and that both to those that are dead, and to those that are yet alive.

1. To those that are dead; (v. 7.) Remember them that have had the rule over you. Here observe, (1.) The description given of them; they were such as had the rule over them, and had spoken to them the word of God; their guides and governors, who had spoken to them the word of God. Here is the dignity to which they were advanced— to rulers and leaders of the people, not according to their own will, but the will and word of God; and this character they filled up with suitable duty: they did not rule at a distance, and rule by others, but they ruled by personal presence and instruction, according to the word of God. (2.) The duty owing to them, even when they were dead; [1.] Remember them. We may have spoken to them the word of God; and they, speaking the word of God, are to be remembered. [2.] Follow their faith; be steadfast in the profession of the faith they preached to you, and labour after the grace of faith by which they lived and died so well. Consider the end of their conversation, how quickly, how comfortably, how joyfully, they finished their course! 11 Now this duty of following the same true faith in which they had been instructed, the apostle enlarges more upon presently: this is not only to it, not only from the remembrance of their faithful deceased guides, but from several other motives:

First, From the immutability and eternity of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though their ministers were some dead, others dying, yet the great Head and High Priest of the church, the Bishop of their souls, ever lives, and is ever the same; and they should be steadfast in the profession of the pure faith of Christ, and should remember that Christ ever lives to give us that grace, and serve and reward their faithful adherence to his truths, and to observe and punish their sinful departure from him. Christ is the same in the Old-Testament day, in the gospel day, and will be so to his people for ever.

Secondly, From the nature and tendency of those erroneous doctrines that they were in danger of falling into with. 1. They were divers and various, (v. 9.) different from what they had received from their former faithful teachers, and inconsistent with themselves. 2. They were strange doctrines, such as the gospel-church was unacquainted with, foreign to the gospel. 3. They were of an unsettling, distracting nature, like the wind by which the ship is tossed, and in danger of being driven from its anchor, carried away, and split upon the rocks. They were quite contrary to that grace of God, that fixes and establishes the heart, which is an excellent thing. These strange doctrines keep the heart always fluctuating and unsettled. 4. They are mean and low as to their subject; they are about external, little, perishing things, such as meats and drinks, &c. 5. They were unprofitable; those who were most taken with them, and employed about them, got no real good by them to their own souls; they were not made them more holy, nor more humble, nor more thankful, nor more heavenly. 6. They would exclude those who embraced them, from the privileges of the Christian altar; (v. 10.) We have an altar. This is an argument of great weight, and therefore the apostle insists the longer upon it. Observe, (1.) The Christian church has its altar. It was objected against the primitive Christians, that their assemblies were destitute of an altar; but that was not true. We have an altar, not a material altar, but a personal one, and that is Christ; he is both our Altar, and our Sacrifice; he sanctifies the gift. The altars under the law were types of Christ; the brazen altar of the sacrifice, the golden altar of his incarnation. (2.) This altar furnishes out a feast for true believers, a feast upon the sacrifice, a feast of fat things; spiritual strength, and growth, and holy delight, and pleasure. The Lord's table is not our altar, but it is furnished with provision from the altar. Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us, (1 Cor. 5. 7.) and it follows, therefore let us keep the feast. The Lord's supper is the feast of the gospel-promise.

(3.) Those who adhere to the tabernacle, or the Levitical dispensation, or return to it again, exclude themselves from the privileges of this altar, from the benefits purchased by Christ. If they serve the tabernacle, they are resolved to subject themselves to antiquated rites and ceremonies, to renounce their right to the Christian altar; and this part of the argument he first proves, and then improves. [1.] He proves, that this servile adherence to the Jewish state is a bar to the possession of this; and he argues thus under the Jewish law: No part of the sin-offering was to be eaten, but all must be burnt without the camp; while they dwell in tabernacles, and without the gates when they dwell in cities: now if they will still be subject to that law, they cannot eat at the gospel-altar; for that which is eaten there, is furnished from Christ, who is the great Sin-offering: Not that it is the very sin-offering itself, as the papists affirm; for then it was not to be eaten, but burnt; but the gospel-feast is the fruit and procurement of the sacrifice, which they have no right to, who do not acknowledge the sacrifice itself. And that it might appear that Christ was really the Antitype of the sin-offering, and, as such, might sanctify or cleanse his people with his own blood, he confirmed himself to that type, in conveying to the gospel-church the great assurance of his humiliation, as if he had not been fit either for sacred or civil society! And this shews, how sin, which was the meritorious cause of the sufferings of Christ, is a forfeiture of all sacred and civil rights, and the sinner a common plague and nuisance to all society, if God should be strict to mark iniquity. Having thus showed that adherence to the Levitical law would, even according to its own rules, debar men from the Christian altar; he proceeds, (v...
13—15.) in suitable advices. First, Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp; go forth from the ceremonial law, from sin, from the world, from our own lusts, when he calls us. Secondly, Let us be willing to bear his reproach, be willing to be accounted the scouring of all things, not worthy to live, not worthy to die a common death. This was his reproach, and we must submit to it; and we have the more reason, because, whether we go forth from this world to Christ or no, we must necessarily go forth in a little time by death; for here we have no continuing city; sin, sinners, death, will not suffer us to continue long here; and the State, therefore we should go forth now by faith, and seek in Christ the rest and settlement which this world cannot afford us, v. 14. Thirdly, Let us make a right use of this altar; not only partake of the privileges of it, but discharge the duties of the altar, as those whom Christ has made priests to attend on this altar. Let us bring our sacrifices to this altar, and to this our High Priest, and offer them up by him, v. 15, 16. Now what are the sacrifices which we must bring and offer on this altar, even Christ? Not any expiatory sacrifices, there is no need of them, Christ has offered the great Sacrifice of atonement, our’s are only the sacrifices of acknowledgment; and they are, 1. The sacrifice of praise to God, which we should offer up to God continually. In this are included all adoration and prayer, as well as Thanksgiving; this is the first thing; we must at all times offer sacrifices of praise to God from unsignified lives; and this must be only offered to God, not to angels, or saints, or any creature, but to the name of God alone; and it must be by Christ, in a dependence upon his meritorious satisfaction and intercession. 2. The sacrifice of alms-deeds, and Christian charity; (v. 16.) To do good, and to communicate, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. We must, according to our power, communicate to the necessity of souls and bodies of men; not contenting ourselves to offer the sacrifice of our lives, mere words, but the sacrifice of good deeds: and these we must lay down upon this altar, not depending upon the merit of our good deeds, but of our great High Priest; and with such sacrifices as these, adoration and alms thus offered up, God is well pleased; he will accept the offering with pleasure, and will accept and bless the offering through Christ. 3. Having thus told us the duty Christians owe to their deceased ministers, which principally consists in following their faith, and not departing from it; the apostle tells us what is the duty that people owe to their living ministers, (v. 17.) and the reasons of that duty: (1.) The duty—to obey them, and submit themselves to them. It is not an implicit obedience, or absolute submission, that is here required, it is surely as far as is agreeable to the more God revealed in his word; and yet it is truly obedience and submission, and that not only to God, but to the authority of the ministerial office, which is of God; as certainly in all things belonging to that office, as the authority of parents or the civil magistrates in the things within their sphere. Christians must submit to be instructed by their ministers, and not think themselves free from the orders of God; and when they find that ministerial instructions are agreeable to the written word, they must obey them. (2.) The motives to this duty: [1.] They have the rule over the people; their office, though not magisterial, yet is truly authoritative; they have no authority to lord it over the people, but to lead them in the ways of God, by inferring and instructing them, and explaining the word of God to them, and applying it to their several cases; they are not to make laws of their own, but to interpret the laws of God; nor is their interpretation to be immediately received without examination, but the people must search the scriptures, and so far as the instructions of their ministers are according to that rule, they ought to receive them, not as the word of men, but, as they are indeed, the word of God, that works effectually in those that believe. [2.] They watch for the souls of the people, not to insnare them, but to save them; to gain them, not to themselves, but to Christ; to build them up in knowledge, faith, and holiness: they are to watch against every thing that may be hurtful to the souls of men, and to give them warning of danger of errors, of the devices of Satan, of approaching judgments; they are to watch for all opportunities of helping the souls of men forward in the way to heaven. [3.] They must give an account how they have discharged their duty, and what is become of the souls committed to their trust, whether any have been lost through their neglect, and whether any of them have been brought in and built up under their ministry. [4.] They would be glad to give a good account of themselves and their hearers. If they can then give in an account of their own fidelity and success, it will be a joyful day to them; those souls that have been converted and confirmed under their ministry, will be their joy, and their crown, in the day of the Lord Jesus. [5.] If they give up their account with grief, it will be the people’s less as well as their’s. It is the interest of hearers, that the account the ministers give of them may be with joy, and not with grief. If faithful ministers be not successful, the grief will be their’s, but the loss will be the people’s. Faithful ministers have delivered their own souls, but a fruitless and faithless people’s blood and ruin will be upon their own heads.

18. Pray for us: for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. 19. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. 20. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, 21. Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you which that is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. 22. And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation; for I have written a letter unto you in few words. 23. Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you. 24. Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you. 25. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Here, I. The apostle recommends himself, and his fellow-sufferers, to the prayers of the Hebrew believers; (v. 18.) "Pray for us; for me, and Timothy," (mentioned v. 23.) "and for all those of us who labour in the ministry of the gospel." 1. This is one part of the duty which people owe to their ministers; they need the prayers of the people; and the more earnestly the people pray for their ministers, the more benefit they may expect to reap from their ministry; they should pray that God would teach those who are to teach them, that he would make them vigilant, and wise, and zealous, and successful; that he would assist them in all their bours, support them under all their burthens, and strengthen them under all their temptations. 2. There are good reasons why people should pray for their ministers; he mentions two: (1.) We trust we have a good conscience, &c. v. 18. Many of the Jews had an ill opinion of Paul, because he, being a Hebrew of the Hebrews, had cast off the Levitical law, and preached up Christ: now he here modestly asserts his own integrity; We trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. We trust, he might have said, We know; but he chose to speak in a humble style, to teach us all not to be too confident of ourselves, but to maintain a godly jealousy over our own hearts. We trust we have a good conscience, an enlightened and well-informed conscience, a clean and pure conscience, a tender and faithful conscience, a conscience testifying for us, not against us: a good conscience in all things, in the duties both of the first and second table, toward God, and toward men; and especially in all things pertaining to our ministry, we would act honestly and sincerely in all things." Observe, [1.] A good conscience has a respect to all God's commands, and all our duty. [2.] That those who have this good conscience, yet need the prayers of others. [3.] Conscientious ministers are public blessings, and deserve the prayers of the people. (2.) Another reason why he desires their prayers, is, that he hoped thereby to be the sooner restored to them, (v. 19.) intimating that he had been formerly among them; and that, now he was absent from them, he had a great desire and real intention to come again to them; and that the best way to facilitate his return to them, and to make it a mercy to him and them, was, to make it a matter of their prayer. When ministers come to a people as a return of prayer, they come with greater satisfaction to themselves, and success to the people. We should fetch in all our mercies by prayer.

II. He offers up his prayers to God for them, being willing to do for them as he desired they should do for him; (v. 20.) Now the God of peace, &c. In this excellent prayer, observe, 1. The title given to God—the God of peace, who has found out a way for peace and reconciliation between himself and sinners, and who loves peace on earth, and especially in his churches. 2. The great work ascribed to him; he hath brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, &c. Jesus raised himself by his own power; and yet the Father was concerned in it, attesting thereby that justice was satisfied, and the law fulfilled. He rose again for our justification, and that divine power by which he was raised, is able to do every thing for us, that we stand in need of. 3. The titles given to Christ—our Lord Jesus, our Sovereign, our Saviour, and the great Shepherd of the sheep, promised in Isa. 40. 11. declared by himself to be so, John 10. 14, 15. Ministers are under-shepherds, Christ is the great Shepherd. This denotes his interest in his people; they are the flock of his pasture, and his care and concerns are for them; he feeds them, and leads them, and watches over them. 4. The way and method in which God is reconciled, and Christ raised from the dead—through the blood of the everlasting covenant. The blood of Christ satisfied divine justice, and so procured Christ's release from the prison of the grave, as having paid our debt, according to an eternal covenant or agreement between the Father and the Son; and this blood is the sanction and seal of an everlasting covenant between God and his people. 5. The mercy prayed for; (v. 21.) Make you perfect in every good work, &c. Observe, (1.) The perfection of the saints in every good work, is the great thing desired by them and for them, that they may here have a perfection of integrity, a clear mind, a clean heart, lively affections, regular and resolved wills, and suitable strength for every good work to which they are called now; and at length a perfection of degrees to fit them for the employment and felicity of heaven. (2.) The way in which God makes his people perfect; it is by working in them always what is pleasing in his sight, and that through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever. Observe, [1.] There is no good thing wrought in us, but it is the work of God; he works in us, before we are fit for any good work. [2.] No good thing is wrought in us by God, but through Jesus Christ, for his sake and by his Spirit. And therefore, [3.] Eternal glory is due to him, who is the Cause of all the good principles wrought in us, and all the good works done by us. To this every one should say, Amen. III. He gives the Hebrews an account of Timothy's liberty, and his hopes of seeing them with him in a little time, v. 23. It seems, Timothy had been a prisoner, doubtless for the gospel, but now he was set at liberty. The imprisonment of faithful ministers is an honour to them, and their enlargement matter of joy to the people; he was pleased with the hopes of not only seeing Timothy, but seeing the Hebrews with him. Opportunities of writing to the churches of Christ, are desired by the faithful ministers of Christ, and pleasant to them. IV. Having given a brief account of this his letter, and begged their attention to it, (v. 22.) he closes with salutations, and a solemn, though short benediction. 1. The salutation. (1.) From himself to them, directed to all their ministers who had rule over them, and to all the saints; to them all, ministers and people. (2.) From the Christians in Italy to them. It is a good thing to have the law of holy love and kindness written in the hearts of Christians one towards another. Religion teaches men the truest civility and good-breeding. It is not a scar or morose thing. 2. The solemn, though short benediction; (v. 25.) Grace be with you all. Amen. Let the favour of God be toward you, and his grace continually working in you, and with you, bringing forth the fruits of holiness, as the first-fruits of glory. When the people of God have been conversing together by word or writing, it is good to part with prayer, desiring for each other the continuance of the gracious presence of God, that they may meet together again in the world of praise.

But it was the other James, the son of Alpheus; who was cousin-german to Christ, and one of the twelve apostles, Matt. 10. 3. He is called a pillar; (Gal. 2. 9.) and this epistle of his cannot be disputed, without loosening a foundation-stone.

It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) not directed to any particular person or church; but such a one as we call a circular letter. Others think it is called general or catholic, to distinguish it from the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, Polycarp, and others who were noted in the primitive times, but not generally received in the church, and on that account not canonical, as this is. Eusebius tells us, that this epistle was generally read in the churches with the other catholic epistles. Hist. Eccles. page 53. Ed. Val. Anno 1678. St. James, our author, was called the just, for his great piety. He was an eminent example of those graces which he presses upon others. He was so exceedingly revered for his justice, temperance, and devotion, that Josephus the Jewish historian records it as one of the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem, "That St. James was martyred in it." This is mentioned in hopes of procuring the greater regard to what is penned by so holy and excellent a man.

The time when this epistle was written is uncertain. The design of it is, to reprove Christians for their great degeneracy both in faith and manners; and to prevent the spreading of those libertine doctrines which threatened the destruction of all practical godliness. (Particulars shall be laid down in the contents at the beginning of each chapter.) It was also a special intention of the author of this epistle, to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the way of their duty, under the calamities and persecutions they might meet with. The truths laid down are very momentous, and necessary to be maintained; and the rules for practice, as here stated, are such as ought to be observed in our times as well as in preceding ages.

JAMES, I.

CHAP. I.

After the inscription and salutation, (v. 1.) Christians are taught how to conduct themselves when under the cross. Several graces and duties are recommended; and those who endure their trials and afflictions as the apostle here directs, are pronounced blessed, and are assured of a glorious reward, v. 3. 12. But those sins which bring sufferings, or the weaknesses and faults men are chargeable with under them, are by no means to be imputed to God; who cannot be the author of sin, but is the Author of all good, v. 13. 18. All passion and rash anger, and vile affections, ought to be suppressed. The word of God should be made our chief study: and what we hear and know of it, we must take care to practise; otherwise our religion will prove but a vain thing. To this is added an account wherein pure religion consists, v. 19. 27.

1. James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. 2. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; 3. Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. 4. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. 5. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 6. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. 7. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. 8. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. 9. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: 10. But the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. 11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. 12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

We are here to consider, first, the inscription of this epistle, and then the matter of it.

The inscription has three principal parts.

1. The character by which our Author desires to be known—James, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though he was a prime minister in Christ's kingdom, yet he styles himself only a servant. Note hence, Those who are highest in office or attainments in the church of Christ, are but servants. They should not therefore act as masters, but as ministers. Further, though St. James is called by the evangelist the brother of our Lord, yet it was his glory to serve Christ in the spirit, rather than to boast of his being akin according to the flesh. From hence let us learn to prize this title above all others in the world—the servants of God and of Christ. Again, is to be observed that St. James professes himself a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to teach us that in all services we should have an eye to the Son as well as the Father. We cannot acceptably serve the Father, unless we are also servants of the Son. God will have all men to honour the Son as they honour the Father, (John 5. 23.) looking for acceptance in Christ, and assistance from him, and yielding all obedience to him; the confidence, as Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

2. The apostle here mentions the conditions of those to whom he writes—the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad. Some understand this of the dispersion upon the persecution of Stephen, Acts 8. But that only reached to Judea and Samaria. Others by the Jews of the dispersion understand those who were in Assyria, Babylon, Egypt, and other kingdoms into which their ancestors had driven all sorts and nations. The greatest part of ten of the twelve tribes were lost in captivity; but yet some of every tribe were preserved, and are still honoured with the ancient style of twelve tribes. These however were scattered and dispersed. (1.) They were dispersed in mercy. Having the scriptures of the Old Testament, the providence of God so ordered it, that they were scattered in several countries for the diffusing of the light of divine revelation. (2.) They began now to be scattered in wrath. The Jewish nation was crumbling into parties and factions, and many were forced to leave their own country. Even good people among them shared in the common calamity. (3.) These Jews of the dispersion were those who had embraced the Christian faith. They were persecuted, and forced to seek for shelter in other countries; the Gentiles being kinder to Christians than the Jews were. Note here, It is often the lot even of God's own tribes to be scattered abroad. The gathering day is reserved for the end of time; when all the dispersed children of God shall be gathered together to Christ their Head. In the mean time, while God's tribes are scattered abroad, he will send to look after them. Here is an apostle writing to the scattered; an epistle from God to those who are without all their comfort from his temple, and seemingly neglected by him. Apply here that of the prophet Ezekiel, (ch. 11. 16.) Thus saith the Lord God, Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come. God has a particular care of his outcasts. Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab, Isa. 16. 3, 4.

God's tribes may be scattered; therefore we should not value ourselves too much on outward privileges. And, on the other hand, we should not despise, and think ourselves rejected, under outward calamities; because God remembers, and sends comfort to, his scattered people.

3. St. James here shows the respect he had even for the dispersed; greetings, saluting them, wishing peace and salvation to them. True Christians should not be the less valued for their hardships. It was the desire of this apostle's heart, that those who were scattered, might be comforted—that they might do well and fare well, and be enabled to rejoice even in their distresses. God's people have reason to rejoice in all places, and at all times; as will abundantly appear from what follows.

We next come to consider the matter of this epistle. In the verses now before us we have these following things to be observed.

1. The suffering state of Christians in this world is represented, and that in a very instructive manner; if we attend to what is plainly and necessarily implied, together with what is fully expressed.

1. It is implied, that troubles and afflictions may befall us in this world. So the Lord, or rather, to have the most reason to think and hope well of themselves. Such as have a title to the greatest joy, may yet endure very grievous afflictions. As good people are liable to be scattered, they must not think it strange if they meet with troubles.

2. These outward afflictions and troubles are temptations to them. The Devil endeavours by sufferings and crosses to draw men to sin, and to destroy them, when proved and unfit them for it. Our afflictions are in God's hand, they are intended for the trial and improvement of our graces. The gold is put into the furnace, that it may be purified.

3. These temptations may be numerous and various; divers temptations, as the apostle speaks. Our trials may be of many and different kinds, and therefore we have need to put on the whole armour of God. We must be armed on every side, because temptations are in every place.

4. The trials of a good man are such as he does not create to himself, or voluntarily pull upon himself; but they are such as he is said to fall into. And for this reason they are the better borne by him.

5. The graces and duties of a state of trial and affliction are here pointed out to us. Could we attend to these things, and grow in them as we should do, how good would it be for us to be afflicted!

1. One Christian grace to be exercised, is joy; Count it all joy, v. 2. We must not sink into a sad and disconsolate frame of mind, that would make us faint under our trials; but must endeavour to keep our spirits dilated and enlarged, the better to take in a true sense of our case, and with greater advantage to set ourselves to make the best of it. Philosophy may instruct men to be calm under their troubles; but Christianity teaches even of those who have the most reason to think and hope well of themselves, that it is the duty of Christians to rejoice in external calamities.

2. The apostle here speaks of the trials of the saints, in a very uncommon sense. We are to understand a spiritual joy. When trials and difficulties become lot in the way of our duty. And this is not purely a New Testament paradox, but even in Job's time it was said, Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth. There is the more reason for joy in a
2. Faith is a grace that one expression supposes, and another expressly requires; Knowing this, that the trial of your faith, v. 3. And then in v. 6, let him ask in faith. There must be a sound believing of the great truths of Christianity, and a resolute clinging to them, in times of trial and conflict, and as often as we meet with anything disagreeable, or being put to shame for your folly; it is added, he upbraided not. Ask when you will, and as often as you will, you will meet with no upbraiding. And if, after all, any should say, “This may be the case with some, but I fear I shall not succeed so well in my seeking for wisdom as some others may;” let such consider how particular and express the promise is, it shall be given him. Justly then must fools perish in their foolishness, if wisdom may be had for asking, and they will not pray to God for it. But,

(4.) There is one thing necessary to be observed in our asking, namely, that we do it with a believing, steady mind; (v. 6.) Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. The promise above is very sure, taking this proviso along with us; wisdom shall be given to those who ask it of God, provided they believe that God is able to make the simple wise, and is faithful to perform the promise, and apply it to him. This was the condition Christ insisted on, in treating with those who came to him for healing; Believest thou that I am able to do this? There must be no wavering, no staggering at the promise of God through unbelief, or through a sense of any disadvantages that lie on our own part. Here therefore we see,

5. That oneness, and sincerity of intention, and a seriousness of mind, constitute another duty required under affliction; He that wavereth, is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. To be sometimes lifted up by faith, and then thrown down again by distrust; to mount sometimes toward the heavens, with an intention to secure glory, and honour, and immortality; and then to sink again in seeking the ease of the body, or the enjoyments of this world; this is very fitly and elegantly compared to a wave of the sea, which, sometimes rises, sinks, swells and sinks, just as the wind tosses a high ship in any uncertain way or this. A mind that has but one single and prevailing regard to its spiritual and eternal interest, and that keeps steady in its purposes for God, will grow wise by afflictions, will continue fervent in its devotions, and will be superior to all trials and oppositions. Now for the cure of a wavering spirit in a weak faith, the apostle shews the ill effects of these; (1.) In that the success of prayer is spoiled hereby; (v. 7.) Let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. Such a distrustful, shifting, unsettled person is not likely to value a favour from God as he should do, and therefore cannot expect to receive it. In asking for divine and heavenly wisdom, we are never like to prevail, if we have not a heart to prize it above all others, and the greatest things in this world. (2.) A wavering faith and spirit has a bad influence upon our conversation; (v. 8.) A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. When our faith and spirits rise and fall with second causes, there will be great unsteadiness in all our conversation and actions. This may sometimes expose men to contempt in the world; but it is certain that such ways cannot base God, nor procure any good for us in the end. We should therefore trust one God to trust to, we have but one God to be governed by, and this should keep us even and steady. He that is unstable as water, shall not excel. Hereupon,

III. The holy, humble temper of a Christian, both in advancement and decrease, is described: and both poor and rich are directed on what grounds to build their joy and comfort, v. 9—11.

VOL. VI.—5 D
Here we may observe, 1. Those of low degree are to be looked upon as brethren; Let the brother of low degree &c. Poverty does not destroy the relation among Christians.

2. Observe also, Good Christians may be rich in the world, v. 10. Grace and wealth are not wholly inconsistent. Abraham, the father of the faithful, was rich in silver and gold.

3. Observe, Both these are allowed to rejoice, No condition of life puts us out of a capacity of rejoicing in God. If we do not rejoice in him always, it is of our own fault. Those of low degree may rejoice, if they are exalted to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom of God; (As Dr. Whitby explains this place;) and the rich may rejoice in humbling providences, as they produce a lovely and humble disposition of mind, which is highly valuable in the sight of God. Where any are made poor for righteousness' sake, their very poverty is their exaltation. It is an honour to be dishonoured for the sake of Christ. To you it is given to suffer, Phil. 1. 29. All who are brought low, and made lowly by grace, may rejoice in the prospect of their exaltation at last in heaven.

4. Observe what reason rich people have, notwithstanding their riches, to be humble and low in their own eyes; because both they and their riches are passing away; As the flower of the grass he shall pass away. Psa. 40. 6. and his wealth with him, v. 11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, than it withereth the grass. Note hence, Worldly wealth is a withering thing. Riches are too uncertain (says Mr. Baxter on this place,) too inconsiderable things to make any great or just alteration in our minds. As a flower fades before the heat of the scorching sun, so shall the rich man fade away in his ways. His projects, counsels, and management in this world, are called his ways in these he shall fade away. For this reason let him who is rich, rejoice, not so much in the providence of God, that makes him rich, as in the grace of God, that makes and keeps him humble; and in those trials and exercises that teach him to seek his felicity in and from God, and not from these perishable enjoyments.

IV. A blessing is pronounced on those who endure these trials and temptations, as here directed; (v. 12.) Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.

Observe, 1. It is not the man who suffers only, who is blessed, but he who endures; who with patience and constancy goes through all difficulties in the way of his duty.

Observe, 2. Afflictions cannot make us miserable, if it be not our own fault. A blessing may arise from them, and we may be blessed in them. They are so far from taking away a good man's felicity, that they really increase it. Observe.

3. Sufferings and temptations are the way to eternal blessedness; When he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, εἰκόνα ἐρυθρίας—when he is approved; when his graces are found to be true, and of the highest worth; (so metals are tried as to their excellency by the fire;) and when his integrity is manifest. He is approved, in this world, are called his ways in which he shall pass away. For this reason let him who is rich, rejoice, not so much in the providence of God, that makes him rich, as in the grace of God, that makes and keeps him humble; and in those trials and exercises that teach him to seek his felicity in and from God, and not from these perishable enjoyments.

Observe this blessedness, involved in a crown of life, is a promised thing to the righteous sufferer. It is therefore what we may most surely depend upon: for when heaven and earth shall pass away, this word of God shall not fail of being fulfilled.
it is much worse, when we have done amiss, to charge it upon God, and say it was owing to him. They who lay the blame of their sins either upon their constitution, or upon their condition in the world, or pretend they are under a fatal necessity of sinning wrong God, as if he were the author of sin. Afflictions, as sent by God, are designed to draw out our graces, but not our corruptions.

II. We are taught that the true cause of evil lies, and where the blame ought to be laid; (v. 14.) Every man is tempted, (in an ill sense,) when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. In other scriptures the Devil is called the tempter; and other things may sometimes concur to tempt us; but neither the Devil, nor evil will themselves, nor personal sin, is to be blamed so as to excuse ourselves for; for the true original of evil and temptation is in our own hearts. The combustible matter is in us, though the flame may be blown up by some outward causes. And therefore, if thou scornest thou alone shalt bear it, Prov. 9. 12.

Observe here, 1. The method of sin in its proceeding. First it draws away, then entices.

2. We may observe from hence the power and policy of sin. The word here rendered drawn away, signifies a being forcibly haled or compelled. The word translated enticed, signifies being wheedled and beguiled by allurements and deceitful representations of things, ιμιανα και ιπτασιν. There is a great deal of force done to conscience and to the mind by the power of corruption: and there is a great deal of cunning and deceit and flattery in sinning given to us by it. The force and power of sin could never prevail, were it not for its cunning and guile. Sinners who perish, are wheedled and flattered to their own destruction. And this will justify God for ever in their damnation, that they destroyed themselves. Their sin lies at their own door, and therefore their blood will lie upon their own heads.

3. Observe the success of corruption in their hearts. (v. 15.) Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; that is, Sin being allowed to excrete desires in us, it will soon ripen those desires into consent; and then it is said to have conceived. The sin truly exists, though it be but in embryo. And when it is grown to its full size in the mind, it is then brought forth in actual execution. Stop the beginnings of sin therefore, or else all the evils it produces must be wholly charged upon us.

4. Observe the final issue of being allowed to excrete desires in us, it will soon ripen those desires into consent; and then it is said to have conceived. The sin truly exists, though it be but in embryo. And when it is grown to its full size in the mind, it is then brought forth in actual execution. Stop the beginnings of sin therefore, or else all the evils it produces must be wholly charged upon us.

5. Observe, the issue of sin, and how it ends; Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. After sin is brought forth in actual commissions, the finishing of it (as Dr. Manton observes) is its being strengthened by frequent acts, and settled into a habit. And when the iniquities of men are thus filled up, death is brought forth. There is a death upon the soul, and death comes upon the body. And beside death spiritual and temporal, the wages of sin are death. (Rom. 6. 23.) Sin is the root of all that is corrupt and evil in you, and it is the root and foundation of all that will be evil in you, and it is the root and foundation of all.

III. We are taught yet further, that while we are the authors and procurers of all sin and misery to ourselves, God is the Father and Fountain of all good, v. 16, 17. We should take particular care no error, nor the conceit of God; "Do not err, my beloved brethren, με Πατris—do not wander, that is, from the word of God, and the accounts of him you have there. Do not stray into erroneous opinions, and go off from the standard of truth; the things which you have received from the Lord Jesus, and by the direction of his Spirit." The loose opinions of Simon, and the Nicolaitans, (from whom the Gnostics, a most sensual corrupt set of people, and the modern heretics,) may, perhaps, by the apostle here, be more especially cautioned against. Those who are disposed to look into these, may consult the first book of Irenæus against heresies. Let corrupt men run into what notions they will, the truth, as it is in Jesus, stands thus; that God is not, cannot be, the author and patronizer of any thing that is evil; but must be acknowledged as the Cause and Spring of every thing that is good; (v. 17.) Every good and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights.

Here observe, 1. God is the Father of lights. The visible light of the sun and the heavenly bodies is from him. He said, Let there be light, and there was light. Thus God is at once represented as the Creator of the sun, and in some respects compared to it. "As the sun is the same in its nature and influences, though the earth and clouds, often prevent its light from appearing, so that it seems to us as varying, by its rising and setting, and by its different appearances, or entire withdrawal; when the change is not in it: so God is unchangeable, and our changes and shadows are not from any mutability, or shadowy alterations in him, but from ourselves." Mr. Baxter. The Father of lights, whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. What the sun is in nature, God is in grace, providence, and glory; aye, and infinitely more. We must own God as the Author of all the powers and perfections that are in the creature, and the Giver of all the benefits which we have in and by those powers and perfections: but none of their darkesses, their imperfections, or their ill actions are to be charged on the Father of lights, 2 Cor. 6. 18. "For he which doeth good and perfect gift, both pertaining to this life and that which is to come."

3. Observe, As every good gift is from God, so particularly the renovation of our natures, our regeneration, and all the holy, happy consequences of it, must be ascribed to him; (v. 18.) Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth. Here let us take notice, (1.) A true Christian is a creature begotten anew, by the word of truth, and not by the corrupt impulses of the flesh, of which he was, before the renewing influences of divine grace, as if he were formed over again, and born afresh. (2.) The original of this good work is here declared: it is of God's own will; not by our skill or power; not from any good foresight in us, or done by us, but purely from the good-will and grace of God.

(3.) The means whereby this is effected, are pointed out; the word of truth, that is, the gospel; as St. Paul expresses it more plainly, 1 Cor. 4. 15. I have Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: 20. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. 21. Wherefore, lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. 22. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. 23. For if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: 24. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. 25. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. 26. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. 27. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

In this part of the chapter we are required, I. To restrain the workings of passion. This lesson we should learn under afflictions; and this we shall learn, if we are indeed begotten again by the word of truth. For thus the connexion stands—An angry and hasty spirit is soon provoked to ill things by affections; and errors and ill opinions become prevalent through the workings of our own vile and vain affections: but the renewing grace of God and the word of the gospel teach us to subdue these: Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath. This may refer to the word of truth spoken of in the verse foregoing. And so we may observe, It is our duty rather to hear God's word; and apply our minds to understand it, than to speak according to our own fancies or the opinions of men, and to run into heat and passion thereupon. Let not such errors as that of God's being the occasion of men's sin, ever be hastily, much less angrily, mentioned by you; (and so as to other errors;) but be ready to hear and consider what God's word teaches in all such cases. 2. This may be applied to the affections and temptations spoken of in the beginning of the chapter. And then we may observe, It is our duty rather to hear how God explains his providences, and what he designs by them; than to say as David did in his haste, I am cut off; or as Jonah did in his passion, I do well to be angry. Instead of censoring God under our trials, let us open our hearts and ears to hear what he will say to us. 3. This may be understood as referring to the disputes and differences that Christians, in those times of trial, were running into among themselves: and so this part of the chapter may be considered without any connexion with what goes before. Here we may observe that, whenever matters of difference arise among Christians, each side should be willing to hear the other. People are often stiff in their own opinions, because they are not willing to hear what others have to offer against them: whereas we should be swift to hear reason and truth on all sides, and be slow to speak anything that should prevent this: and when we do speak, there should be nothing of wrath; for a soft answer turneth away wrath. As this epistle is designed to correct a variety of disorders that were among Christians, these words, swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath, may be very well interpreted according to this last explanation. And we may further observe from them, that, if men would govern their tongues, they must govern their passions. When Moses's spirit was provoked, he spake unadvisedly with his lips. If we would be slow to speak, we must be slow to wrath.

II. A very good reason is given for suppressing of anger; (v. 20.) For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. The apostle states, in this verse, his own sentiments. Whereas men often pretend zeal for God and his glory, in their heat and passion, let them know that God needs not the passions of any man; his cause is better served by mildness and meekness than by wrath and fury. Solomon says, The words of the wise are heard in quiet, more than the cry of him that rueth among fools, Eccl. 9. 17. Dr. Manton here says of some assemblies, That if we were as swift to hear as we are ready to speak, we should be less of wrath, and more of profit, in our meetings. I remember when a Manichee contended with Augustine, and with importunate clamour cried, Hear me! hear me! the father modestly replied, Nce ego te, nec tu me, sed ambo audiamus apostolum—Neither let me hear thee, nor do thou hear me, but let us both hear the apostle. The worst thing we can bring to a religious controversy, is, anger: This, however it pretends to be raised by a concern for what is just and right, is not to be trusted. Wrath is a human thing, and the wrath of man stands opposed to the righteousness of God. Those who pretend to serve the cause of God hereby, shew that they are acquainted neither with God nor his cause. This passion must especially be watched against, when we are hearing the word of God. See 1 Pet. 2. 1. 2.

III. We are called upon to suppress other corrupt affections, as well as rash anger; (v. 21.) Lay aside all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness. The word here translated filthiness, signifies those lusts which have the greatest turpitude and sensuality in them; and the words rendered superfluity of naughtiness may be understood of the overflows of perversity, of the malice, or any other spiritual wickednesses. Hereby we are taught, as Christians, to watch against, and lay aside, not only those more gross and fleshly dispositions and affections which denominated a person filthy, but all the disorders of a corrupt heart, which would prejudice it against the word and ways of God.

Observe, 1. Sin is a defiling thing; it is called filthiness itself. 2. The abundance of that lust is to be looked upon to be watched against; there is superfluity of naughtiness. 3. It is not enough to restrain evil affections, but they must be cast from us, or laid apart, Isa. 50. 22. Thou shalt cast them away as a menestrous cloth; thou shalt say, Get ye IV. We are here fully, though briefly, instructed concerning hearing the word of God.

1. We are required to prepare ourselves for it; (v. 21.) to get rid of every corrupt affection, and of every desire to remit the penalties of those sins which pervert the judgment and blind the mind. All the filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, before explained, must, in an especial manner, be subdued and cast off, by all such as attend on the word of the gospel.

2. We are directed how to hear it; Receive with meekness the engraven word, which is able to save your souls. (1.) In hearing the word of God, we are to be ready to receive the word of God, and apply it to the laws of it; receive it as the stock does the graft; so that the fruit which is produced, may be, not according to the nature of the sour stock, but according to the nature of that word of the gospel, which is engraven into our souls. (2.) We must therefore yield ourselves to the word of God, with most submissive, humble, and tractable tempers; this is to receive it with meekness. Being willing to hear other people, and to hear them not only patiently, but thankfully; desiring also to be moulded and formed by the doctrines and precepts of the gospel. (3.) In all our hearing we should aim at the salvation of our souls. It is the design of the word of God to make us wise to salvation; and they who propose any manner or lower ends to themselves in attending upon it, dishonour the gospel, and disapprove of its effect. We should come to the word of God, (both to read it and hear it,) as those who know it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. 1. 16.

3. We are taught what is to be done after hearing; (v. 22.) But he ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. Observe here, (1.) Hearing is in order to doing; the most attentive and the most frequent hearing of the word of God, without referring it only to the law of it. If we were to hear sermon every day of the week, and an angel from heaven were the preacher, yet, if we rested in bare hearing, it would never bring us to heaven. Therefore the apostle insists much upon it, (and, without doubt, it is indispensably necessary,) that we practise what we hear.

"There must be inward practice by meditation, and outward practice in true obedience."—Mr. Baxter.

It is enough to remember how often the word is repeated, and to be able to repeat it, and to give testimony to it, and commend it, and write it, and preserve what we have written; that which all this is in order to, and which crowns the rest, is, that we be doers of the word. Observe, (2.) Bare hearers are self-deceivers; the original word παρεσκευάζομαι signifies men's arguing sophistically to themselves; their reasoning is manifestly deceitful and false, when they should make one part of their work discharge them from the obligation they lie under to another; or persuade themselves, that filling their heads with notions is sufficient, though their hearts be empty of good affections and resolutions, and their lives fruitless of good works. Self-deceit will be found the worst deceit at last.

4. The apostle shows what is the proper use of the word of God, who they are, that do not use it as they ought, and who they are, that do make a right use of it, t. 23—25. Let us consider each of these distinctly. (1.) The use we are to make of God's word may be learnt from its being compared to a glass, in which a man may behold his natural face. As a looking-glass shows us the spots and deformities upon our faces, that they may be remedied and washed away; so the word of God, in the light of the gospel, shows us our sins, that we may repent of them and get them pardoned; it shews us what is amiss, that it may be amended. There are glasses that will flatter people; but that which is truly the word of God, is no flattering glass. If you flatter yourselves, it is your own fault; the truth, as it is in Jesus, flatters no man. Let the word of truth be carefully attended to, and it will be a glass to you the corruption of your nature, the disorders of your hearts and lives, it will tell you plainly what you are. St. Paul describes himself as insensible of the corruption of his nature till he saw himself in the glass of the law; (Rom. 7. 9.) "I was alive without the law; I took all to be right with me, and thought myself not only clean, but, compared with the generality of the world, beautiful too; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died; then I saw my spots and deformities, and discovered that amiss in myself, which before I was not aware of; and such was the power of the law, and of sin, that I then perceived myself in a state of death and condemnation." Thus, when we attend to the word of God, so as to see ourselves, our true state and condition, to rectify what is amiss, and to form and dress ourselves anew in the glass of the word, we shall make a proper use of it. (2.) We have here an account of those who do not use this glass of the word as they ought; (v. 24.) He that beholds himself, and goes his way, and straightway forgets what manner of man he was. This is the true description of one who hears the word of God, and does it not. How many are there, who, when they sit under the word, are affected with their own sinfulness, misery, and danger, acknowledge the evil of sin, and their need of Christ; but, when their hearing is over, all is forgotten, convictions are lost, good affections are vanquished, and pass away like the waters of a land-flood; he straightway forgets. "The word of God (as Dr. Manton speaks) discovers how we may do away our sins, and deck and attire our souls with the righteousness of Jesus Christ. Macule sunt pecula, qua ostendit lex; aqua est sanguis Christi, quem ostendit evangeliolum." Thus, the spots which the law discovers; Christ's blood is in the laver which the gospel shows. But in vain do we hear God's word, and look into the gospel-glass, if we go away, and forget our spots, instead of washing them off, and forget our remedy, instead of applying to it. This is the case of these who do not hear the word as they ought. (3.) Those also who are preservers of those spots are scarcely of any light, and who use the glass of God's word as they should do; (v. 25.) Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, &c. Observe here, The gospel is a law of liberty, or, as Mr. Baxter expresses it, of liberation, giving us deliverance from the Jewish law, and from sin and guilt, and wrath and death. The ceremonial law was a yoke of bondage, the gospel of Christ is a law of liberty. Observe again, a law of liberty is a perfect law, without anything added to it. Observe further, In hearing the word, we look into this perfect law; we consult it for counsel and direction; we look into it, that from thence we may take our measures; but observe withal, then only do we look into the law of liberty as we should, when we continue therein; "when we dwell in the study of it, till it turn to a spiritual life, engraven and digested in us" (Mr. Baxter); when we are not forgetful of it, but practise as if we comprehended and understood it, and are desirous to possess it.
work and business; set it always before our eyes, and make it the constant rule of our conversation and behaviour. Thus, the words of St. James are truly prophetic of our minds by it. Observe once more from this place, They who thus do, and continue in the law and word of God, are, and shall be, blessed in their deed; blessed in all their ways, according to the first psalm, which, some think, St. James here alludes to. He that meditates in the law of God, and walks according to it, the psalmist says, shall prosper in whatsoever he does. And he that is not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work which God's word sets him about, St. James says, shall be blessed. The preachers pretend, that here we have a clear text to prove we are bles- s'd for our good deeds; but Dr. Manton, in answer .o that pretence, puts the reader upon marking the distinctness of scripture-phrase. The apostle does not say, for his deeds, that any man is blessed, but in his deed. This is a way in which we shall certainly find blessedness, but not the cause of it. This blessedness does not lie in knowing, but in doing the will of God; (John 13. 17.) If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. It is not talking, but walking, that will bring us to heaven.

V. The apostle next informs us how we may distinguish betwixt a vain religion, and that which is pure and approved of God. Great and hot disputes there are in the world about this matter: what religion is false and vain, and what is true and firm religion. Some have pronounced in a manner that should fix our thoughts on the word seemeth. When men are more concerned to seem religious than really to be so, it is a sign that their religion is but vain. Not that religion itself is a vain thing; (they do it a great deal of wrong, to say, It is in vain to serve the Lord;) but it is possible for people to make it a vain thing, if they have only a form of godliness, and not the power. (2.) In a vain religion there is much of inconstancy; the tongue is much vexed with wrangling. The not bridling the tongue here, is chiefly meant of not abstaining from these evils of the tongue. When we hear people ready to speak of the faults of others, or to censure them as holding scandalous errors, or to lessen the wisdom and piety of those about them, that themselves may seem the wiser and better, this is a sign that they have but a vain religion. The man who has a detracting tongue, cannot have a truly holy grace in his heart. He who delights to injure his neighbour, in vain pretends to love God; therefore a reviling tongue will prove a man a hypocrite. Censuring is a pleasing sin, extremely compliant with nature; and therefore evidences a man’s being in a natural state. These sins of the tongue were the great sins of that age in which St. James wrote; (as other parts of this epistle fully shew;) and truly a strength of an unclean spirit (says Dr. Manton,) to be carried away with the evil of the times. This has ever been a leading sin with hypocrites, that the more ambitious they have been to seem well themselves, the more free they are in cen- suring and running down others; and there is such quick interchange betwixt the tongue and the heart, that the one may be known by the other. On these accounts it is that the apostle mentions the unforseen tongue an undoubted certain proof of a vain religion. There is no strength nor power in that religion which will not enable a man to bridle his tongue. (3.) In a vain religion a man deceives his own heart; he goes on in such a course of detract- ing from others, and making himself seem some- body, that at last the vanity of his religion is con- summated by the deceiving of his own soul. When once religion comes to be a vain thing, how great is the vanity!

2. It is here plainly and peremptorily declared wherein true religion consists; (v. 27.) Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this. Observe, (1.) It is the glory of religion to be free and undesigned; not mixed with the inventions of men, nor the corruption of the world. False religions may be known by their impurity and un- charitableness; according to that of St. John, He that doeth not righteousness, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother, I John 3. 10. But on the other hand, a holy life and a charitable heart shew a true religion. Our religion is not (says Dr. Manton,) adorned with ceremonies, but purity and charity; for observe, (2.) That religion is pure and undefiled, which is so before God and the Father. That is right, which is so in God's eye, and which chiefly aims at his approbation. True religion teaches us to do every thing as in the presence of God; and to seek his favour, and study to please him in all our actions. Observe, (3.) Compassion and charity to the poor, is a sign that a religion is pure and true; and a variaty part of true religion; visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction. Visiting is here put for all manner of relief which we are capable of giving to others: and fatherless and widows are here particularly mentioned, because they are generally most apt to be neglected or oppressed: but by them we are to understand all others who are objects of charity; all who are in affliction. It is very remarkably observed, that at the root of religion both in these articles, this is one—to be charitable, and relieve the afflicted. Observe, (4.) An unspotted life must accompany an unfeigned love and charity; to keep himself unspotted from the world. The world is apt to spot and blemish the soul, and it is hard to live in it, and have to do with it, and not be defiled; but this must be our constant endeavour. Herein consists pure and undefiled religion. The very strong office of his tongue, if there be a true religion, is that his tongue is not a reproach to himself, or his hearers. There are many conversant with them: but the sins and lusts of the world depart from him, and relieve them very woe- fully indeed. St. John comprises all that is in the world, which we are not to love, under three heads; the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life; and to keep one’s self unspotted from all these, is to keep oneself unspotted from the world. And it by his grace keep both our hearts and lives clean from the love of the world, and from the temptations of wicked worldly men.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, the apostle condemns a sinful regarding the rich, and despising the poor; which he imputes to parti- ality and injustice, and shews it to be an acting contrary to God. He shews, that because he that has chosen the poor, and whose interest is often persecuted, and his name blasphemed, by the rich, v. 1. 7. He shews that the whole law is to be fulfilled, and that mercy should be followed, as well as justice, v. 8. 13. He exposes the error and folly of those who boast of faith without works, telling us that this is but a dead faith, and such a faith as devils have, not the faith of Abra- ham, or of Rahab, v. 14, to the end.

1. Mt brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. 2. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment.
3. And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place: and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: 4. Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? 5. Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen of the world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? 6. But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats! 7. Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called?

The apostle is here reproving a very corrupt practice; he shews how much mischief there is in the sin of παραβασία—respect of persons, which seemed to be a very growing evil in the churches of Christ, even in those early ages, and which, in these after-times, has sadly corrupted and divided Christian nations and societies. Here we have, 1. A caution against this sin laid down in general; (v. 1.) My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with you? This respect of persons. Observe here, 1. The character of Christians fully implied; they are such as have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; they embrace it, they receive it, they govern themselves by it; they entertain the doctrine, and submit to the law and government, of Christ; they have it as a trust, they have it as a treasure. Observe, 2. How honourably St. James speaks of Jesus Christ; he calls him the Lord of glory, for he is the Brightness of his Father’s glory, and the express Image of his person. Observe, 3. Christ’s being the Lord of glory should teach us not to respect Christians for any thing so much as their relation and conformity to Christ. You who profess to believe the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the poorest Christian shall partake of equally with the rich, and to which all worldly glory is but vanity, you should not make men’s outward and worldly circumstances the measure of your respect. In professing the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, we should not shew respect to men, so as to cloud or lessen the glory of our glorious Lord: however any may think of it, this is certainly a very heinous sin.

II. We have this sin described and cautioned against, by an instance or example of it; (v. 2, 3.) For if there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, &c. Assembly here is mention of those meetings which were appointed for deciding matters of difference among the members of the church; or, for determining when censures should be passed upon any, and what those censures should be; therefore the Greek word here used, συνεκκλησία, signifies such an assembly as that in the Jewish synagogues, when they met to do justice. Maimonides says, (as I find the passage quoted by Dr. Mantine, *) That it was expressly provided by the Jews’ constitutions, "that when a poor man and a rich plead together, the rich shall not be bidden to sit down, and the poor stand, or sit in a worse place, but both sit, or both stand alike." To this the phrases used by the apostle have a most plain reference, and therefore the assembly here spoken of, must be some such as those of the Jewish councils, in which they met to hear causes, and to execute justice: to these the arbitrations and censures of their Christian assemblies are compared. But we must be careful not to apply what is here said to the common assemblies for worship; for in these certainly there may be appointed different places for persons, according to their rank and circumstances, without sin. They do only tend to show the apostle, who fixes his severity here upon this practice; they do not consider the word judges (used in v. 4.) nor what is said of their being convicted as transgressors of the law, if they had such a respect of persons as is here spoken of, according to v. 9. Thus, now put the case; “There comes into your assembly (when of the same nature with some of those at the synagogue) a man that is distinguished by his dress, and he makes a speech, and there comes in also a poor man in vile raiment, and ye act partially, and determine wrong, merely because the one makes a better appearance, or is in better circumstances, than the other.” Observe from hence, 1. God has his remnant among all sorts of people; among those that wear soft and gay clothing, and among those that wear poor and vile raiment. But observe, 2. In matters of religion, rich and poor stand upon a level; no man’s riches set him in the least nearer to God, nor does any man’s poverty set him at a distance from God. With the Most High there is no respect of persons, and therefore in matters of conscience there should be none with us. Observe, 3. All undue honouring of worldly greatness and riches should especially be watched against in Christian societies. St. James does not here encourage rude contempt or disgusting; civil respect must be paid, and some difference shewn in the treatment towards persons of different ranks; but this respect must never be such as to influence the proceedings of Christian societies in disposing of the offices of the church, or in passing the censures of the church, or in any thing that is purely a matter of religion; here we are to know no man after the flesh. It is the character of a citizen of Zion, that in his eyes a vile person is contemned, but he hateth him that fear the Lord. If a poor man be a good man, we must not value him a whit the less for his poverty; and if a rich man be a bad man, (though he may have both gay clothing and a gay profession,) we must not value him the whit more for his riches. Observe, 4. Of what importance it is to take rule we go by in judging of men; if we allow ourselves commonly to judge by outward appearance, we shall too commonly judge by outward appearance and order of conduct in religious assemblies; there is many a man, whose wickedness renders him vile and despisable, who yet makes a figure in the world; and on the other hand there is many a humble, heavenly, good Christian, who is clothed meanly; but neither should he nor his Christianity be thought the worse of on this account.

III. We have the greatness of this sin set forth, v. 5, 6. It is great partiality, it is injustice, and it is to set ourselves against God, who has chosen the poor, and will honour and advance them, (if good) let who will despise them.

1. In this sin there is shameful partiality; Are ye not then partial in yourselves? The question is here put, as what could not fail of being answered by every man’s conscience, that would put it seriously to himself. As a fictitious rendering of the original, the question is, "Have ye not a difference? And, in that difference, do you not judge by a false rule, and go upon false measures? And does not the charge of a partiality, condemned by the law, lie fully against you? Does not your own conscience tell you that you are guilty?" Appeals to conscience are of great advantage, when we have to do with such as make a profession, even though they may be fallen into a very corrupt state.

2. This respect of persons is owing to the evil and injustice of the thoughts. As the temper, conduct, and proceedings, are partial, so the heart and thoughts, from whence all flows, are evil; "Ye are become judges of evil thoughts; ye are judges according to those unjust estimations and corrupt opinions which you have formed to yourselves. Trace your partiality, till you come to those hidden thoughts which are above your own society, and consider how many of those to be exceeding evil. You secretly prefer outward pomp before inward grace, and the things that are seen before those which are not seen." The deformity of sin is never truly and fully discerned, till the evil of our thoughts be disclosed; and it is this which highly aggravates the faults of our tempers and lives—that the imagination of the thoughts of the heart are evil, Gen. 6. 5.

The respect of persons is a heinous sin, because it is to shew ourselves most directly contrary to God; (v. 5) "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith? &c. But ye have despised them, v. 6. God has made those heirs of a kingdom, whom you make of no reutation; and has given very great and glorious promises to those to whom you can hardly give a good word or a respectful look. And is not this a monstrous iniquity in you who pretend to be the children of God, and conform to him? Hearken, my beloved brethren, by all the love I have for you, and all the regards you have to me, I beg you would consider these things: take notice of it, that many of the poor of this world are the chosen of God. Their being God's chosen does not prevent their being poor; their being poor does not at all prejudice the evidences of their being chosen, Matt. 11. 5. The poor are evangelized. God designed to recommend his holy religion to men's esteem and affection, not by the external advantages of gaiety and pomp, but by its intrinsic worth and excellency; and therefore chose the poor of this world. Again take notice, That many poor in the world, are rich in faith; thus the poorest may become rich; and this is what they ought to be especially ambitious of: it is expected from those who have wealth and estates, that they be rich in God's good works; because the more they have, the more they have to do good with: but it is expected from the poor in the world, that they be rich in faith; for the less they have here, the more they may, and should, live in the believing expectation of better things in a better world. Take notice further, Believing Christians are rich in title, and in being heirs of a kingdom, though they may be very poor as to present possessions; what is laid out upon their souls, but little, what is laid up for them is unspeakably rich and great. Note again, Where any are rich in faith, there will be also divine love; faith working by love, will be in all the heirs of glory. Note once more, under this head, Heaven is a kingdom, and a kingdom promised to them that love God. We read of the crown promised to them that love God, in the former chapter; (v. 12.) we here find there is a kingdom too. And as the crown is a crown of life, so the kingdom will be an everlasting kingdom.

All these things, laid together, shew how highly the poor in this world, if rich in faith, are now honoured, and shall hereafter be advanced by God; and consequently how very sinful a thing it was for them to despise the poor. After such considerations as these, the charge is cutting indeed; But ye have despised the poor in this respect.

4. Respecting persons, in the sense of this place, on account of their riches or outward figure, is shewn to be a very great sin, because of the mischiefs which are owing to worldly wealth and greatness, and the folly which there is in Christians' paying undue regards to those who had so little regard either to their God or them; "Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seat? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called? v. 7. Consider how commonly riches are the incentives of vice and mischief, of blasphemy and persecution: consider how many calamities you yourselves sustain, and how great reproaches are thrown upon your religion and your God by men of wealth, and power, and worldly greatness; and this will make your sin appear exceeding sinful and foolish, in setting up that which tends to pull you down, and to destroy all that you are building up, and to dishonour that worthy name by which you are called." The name of Christ is a worthy name; it reflects honour, and gives worth to them who wear it.

8. If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, thou shalt love they neighbour as thyself, ye do well. 9. But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors, 10. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. 11. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. 12. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. 13. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment.

The apostle, having condemned the sin of those who had an undue respect of persons, and having urged what was sufficient to convict them of the greatness of this evil, now proceeds to shew how the matter may be mended; it is the work of a gospel-ministry, not only to reprove and warn, but to teach and direct; (Col. 1. 28.) Warning every man, and teaching every man. And here,

1. We have the law that is to guide us in all our regards to men set down in general; (v. 8.) If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well. Lest any should think St. James had been pleading for the poor so as to show contempt on the rich, he now lets them know, that he did not design to encourage improper conduct towards any; they must not hate, or be rude to, the rich, any more than the poor; for he teaches us to love all our neighbours, be they rich or poor, as ourselves, so, in our having a steady regard to this rule, we shall do well. Observe from hence, (1.) The rule for Christians to walk by, is settled in the scriptures; if, according to the scriptures, &c. It is not great men, nor worldly wealth, nor corrupt practices among professors themselves, that must guide us, but the scriptures of truth. Observe, (2.) The scripture gives us this as a law, to love our neighbour as ourselves; it is what still remains in full force, and is rather carried higher and further by Christ, than made less important to us. Observe, (3.) This law is a royal law, it comes from the King of kings; its own worth and dignity deserve it should be thus honoured; and the state in which all Christians now are, as it is a state of liberty, and sort of bondage or oppression, makes this law, by which we are to regulate all their actions to one another, a royal law. Observe, (4.) A pretence of observing this royal law, when it is interpreted with partiality, will not excuse men in any unjust proceedings. It is implied here, that some were ready to flatter rich men, and he partial to them, because, if they were in the like circumstances, they should expect such regards to themselves; or, they might plead, that, to shew a distinguished respect to those whom God in his providence had distinguished by their rank and degree in the world, this was but doing right; therefore the apostle allows, that, so far as they were concerned to observe the duties of the second table, they did well in giving honour to whom honour was due; but this fair pretence would not cover their sin, in that undue respect to persons which they stood chargeable with; for,

2. This general law is to be considered together with a particular law; (v. 9.) "If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. Notwithstanding the law of laws, To love your neighbour as yourselves, and to shew that respect to them which you would be apt to do to your own circumstanced persons, yet this will not excuse your distributing either the favours or the censures of the church according to men's outward condition; but here you must look to a particular law, which God, who gave the other, has given you together with it, and by this you will stand fully convicted of the sin I have charged you with; this law is in Levit. 19. 15. Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of any man, in any matter, nor judge a man according to the person of him; righteousness shall thou judge thy neighbour." Yea, the very royal law itself, rightly explained, would serve to convict them, because it teaches them to put themselves as much in the places of the poor as in those of the rich, and so to act equitably towards one as well as the other. Hence he proceeds,

3. To shew the extent of the law, and how far obedience must be paid to it; they must fulfil the royal law, have a regard to one part as well as another, otherwise it would not stand them in stead, when they pretended to urge it as a reason for any particular actions; (v. 10.) For whatsoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all. This may be considered, (1.) With reference to the case St. James has been upon; Do ye plead for your respect to the rich, because you are to love your neighbour as yourselves? Why then shew also an equitable and due regard to the poor, because you are to love your neighbour as yourself: or else your offending in one point, will spoil your pretence of observing that law at all. Whosoever shall keep the whole law, if he offend in one point, wilfully, allowedly, and with continuance, and so as to think he shall be excused in some matters, for yourselves if in their due in other things, yet is it unrighteousness shall thou judge thy neighbour. (2.) This is further illustrated by putting a case different from that before mentioned; (v. 11.) For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now, if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. One, perhaps, is very severe in the case of adultery, because it is particular, and that part tends to ruin the health, break the hearts, and destroy the lives of others: another has a prodigious dread of murder, but has more easy thoughts of adultery; whereas one who looks at the authority of the Lawgiver, more than the matter of the command, will see the same reason for condemning the one as the other. Obedience is then acceptable, when all is done with an eye to the will of God; and disobedience is to be condemned, in whatever instance it be, as it is a contempt of the authority of God; and, for that reason, if we offend in one point, we condemn the authority of him who gave the whole law, and so far are guilty of all. Thus, if you look to the law of old, you stand condemned; for cursed is every one that curseth not in all things that are written in the book of law to do them; Gal. 3. 10.

4. St. James directs Christians to govern and conduct themselves more especially by the law of Christ; (v. 12.) So speak ye, and so do, as they shall be judged by the law of liberty. This will teach us, not only to be just and impartial, but very compassionate and merciful to the poor; and it will set us perfectly free from all sordid and undue regards to the external laws, (1.) The gospel is called a law; it has all the requisites of a law; precepts, with rewards and punishments annexed; it prescribes duty, as well as administers comfort; and Christ is a King to rule us, as well as a Prophet to teach us, and a Priest to sacrifice and intercede for us. We are under the law to Christ. (2.) It is a law of liberty; a law that we have no reason to be afraid of, as a yoke or burden; for the service of God, according to the gospel, is perfect freedom; it sets us at liberty from all slavery, in all its respects, either to the persons or the things of this world. (3.) We must all be judged by this law of liberty; men's eternal condition will be determined according to the gospel; this is the book that will be opened, when we shall stand before the judgment-seat: there will be no relief to those whom the gospel condemns, nor will any accusation lie against those whom the gospel justifies. (4.) It concerns us therefore so to speak and act now, as becomes those who must shortly be judged by this law of liberty; that is, that we come up to gospel-terms, that we make conscience of gospel-duities, that we be of a gospel-temper, and that our conversation be a gospel-conversation, because by this rule we must be judged. (5.) The consideration of our being judged by the gospel, should engage us more especially to be merciful in our regards to the poor; for he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment. Take notice here, The doom which will be passed upon impenitent sinners at last, will be judgment without mercy; there will be no mixtures or allays in the cup of wrath, and of trembling, the sense of which they must drink. Take notice again, Such a doom as this, if it come, shall find no mercy in the great day. But we must mind also in the other hand, that there will be such as shall become instances of the triumph of mercy, in whom mercy rejoices against judgment: all the children of men, in the last day, will be either vessels of wrath, or vessels of mercy. It concerns all to consider among which they shall be found; and let us remember, that blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.

14. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? 15. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, 16. And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? 17. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. 18. Yea, a man may say, Thou
James, II.

Hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. 19. Thou believest that there is one God; thou dost well: the devils also believe, and tremble. 20. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? 21. Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? 22. Seest thou faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? 23. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the friend of God. 24. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. 25. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? 26. For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

In this latter part of the chapter, the apostle shews the error of those who rested in a bare profession of the Christian faith, as if that would save them, while the temper of their minds and the tenor of their lives were altogether disagreeable to that holy religion which they professed. To let them see, therefore, what a wretched foundation they built their hopes upon, it is here proved at large, that a man is justified, not by faith only, but by works. Now upon this arises a very great question, namely, how to reconcile St. Paul and St. James? St. Paul, in his epistles to the Romans and Galatians, succeeds to assert the directly contrary thing to what St. James here lays down, saying it often, and with a great deal of emphasis, that we are justified by faith only, and not by the works of the law. Amicit scripturarum lites, utinam et nostre—There is a very happy agreement between one part of scripture and another; notwithstanding seeming differences: it was well if the differences among Christians were as easily reconciled. Nothing (says Mr. Baxter) but men's misunderstanding the plain drift and sense of Paul's epistles, could make so many take it for a matter of great difficulty to reconcile Paul and James. A general view of those things which are insisted on by the Antinomians, may be seen in Mr. Baxter's paraphrase: and many ways might be mentioned, which have been invented among learned men, to make the two apostles agree; but it may be sufficient only to observe the following:

When St. Paul says, that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law, (Rom. 3. 28.) he plainly speaks of another sort of works than St. James does, but not of another sort of faith. St. Paul speaks of works wrought in obedience to the law of Moses, and before men's embracing the faith of the gospel; and he had to deal with those who valued themselves so highly in doing good works, if they rejected the gospel; (as Rom. 10. at the beginning most expressly declares;) but St. James speaks of works done in obedience to the gospel, and as the proper and necessary effects and fruits of a sound believing in Christ Jesus. Both are concerned to magnify the faith of the gospel, as that which alone could save us, and justify us; but St. Paul magnifies it, by shewing the insufficiency of any works of the law before faith, or in opposition to the doctrine of justification by Jesus Christ; St. James magnifies the same faith, by shewing what are the genuine and necessary products and operations of it.

2. St. Paul not only speaks of different works from those insisted on by St. James; but he speaks of a quite different use that was made of good works, from what is here urged, and intended. St. Paul had to do with those who depended on the merit of their works in the sight of God, and thus he might well make them of no manner of account: St. James had to do with those who cried up faith, but would not allow works to be used even as evidences; they depended upon a bare profession, as sufficient to justify them; and with these he might well urge the point in which they had wandered, and thus of good works. As we must not break one table of the law against another, so neither must we break in pieces the law and the gospel, by making them clash with one another: those who cry up the gospel, so as to set aside the law, and those who cry up the law, so as to set aside the gospel, are both in the wrong; for we must take our work before us; there must be both faith in Jesus Christ, and good works in the sight of God. 4. The justification of which St. Paul speaks, is different from that spoken of by St. James; the one speaks of our persons being justified before God, the other speaks of our faith being justified before men; "Shew me thy faith by thy works," says St. James, "let thy faith be justified in the eyes of them that behold thee by thy works;" but St. Paul speaks of justification in the sight of God, who justifies them that believe in Jesus, and purely on account of the redemption that is in him. Thus we see that our persons are justified before God by faith, but our faith is justified before men by works. This is so plainly the scope and design of the apostle James, that he is but confirming what St. Paul, in other places, says of his faith; that it is a laborious faith, and a faith working by love, Gal. 5. 6. 1 Thess. 1. 3. Titus 3. 8. and many other places.

4. St. Paul may be understood as speaking of that justification which is incomplete, St. James of that which is complete; it is by faith only that we are put into a justified state, but then good works come in for the completing of our justification at the last great day; then, Come, ye children of my Father;—for I was hungry, and ye gave me meat, &c.

Thus having cleared this part of scripture from every thing of a contradiction to other parts of it, let us see what is more particularly to be learnt from this excellent passage of James; we are taught, I. That faith without works will not profit, and cannot save us; (v. 14.) What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? Observe here, 1. That faith which does not save, will not really profit us: a bare profession may sometimes seem to be profitable, to gain the good opinion of those who are to try us, it may procure, in some cases, worldly good things; but what profit will this be, for any to gain the world, and to lose their souls? What doth it profit?—Can faith save him? All things should be accounted profitable or unprofitable to us, as they tend to forward or hinder the salvation of our souls. And above all other things, we should take care thus to make an account of faith, that which if it do not save, will but aggravate our condemnation and destruction at last. Observe, 2. For a man to have faith, and to say he has faith, are two different things; the apostle does not say, If a man have faith without works, for that is not a supposable case; the drift of this place of scripture is plainly to shew, that an opinion, or speculation, or assent, without works, is not faith; but the case is put thus, If a man say he hath faith, &c.
Men may boast of that to others, and be conceited of that in themselves, which they are really destitute of.

II. We are taught, that, as love or charity is an operative principle, so is faith; or that neither of them is good for any thing; and, by trying how it looks for a person to pretend he is very charitable, while he does not work charity; or to pretend that he has faith, without the proper and necessary fruits of it; (v. 15—17.) "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food; and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed, and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? What will such a charity as this, that consists in bare words, avail either you or the poor? Will you come before God with such empty shews of charity as these? You might as well pretend that your love and charity will stand the test, without acts of mercy, as think that a profession of faith will bear you out before God, without works of piety and obedicence; (v. 17.) Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

We are too apt to rest in a bare profession of faith, and to think that this will save us; it is a cheap and easy religion to say, "We believe the articles of the Christian faith?" but it is a great delusion to imagine that this is equal to bring us to heaven; those who argue thus, wrong God, and put a cheat upon their own souls; a mock-faith is as hateful as mock-charity, and both shew a heart dead to all real godliness; you may as soon take pleasure in a dead body, void of soul, or sense, or action, as God take pleasure in a dead faith, where there are no works.

III. We are taught to compare a faith boasting of itself without works and a faith evidenced by works, by looking on both together, to try how that will work upon our minds; (v. 18.) Yea, a man may say, thou hast faith, and I have works. Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Suppose a true believer thus pleading with a boasting hypocrite, "Thou makest a profession, and sayest thou hast faith; I make no such boasts, but leave my works to speak for me. Now give any evidence of having the faith thou professest without works if thou canst, and I will soon let thee see how my works flow from faith, and are the undoubted evidences of its existence. This is the evidence by which the scripture testeth all men, and the apostle saith to himself and others. And this is the evidence according to which Christ will proceed at the day of judgment; (Rev. 20. 12.) The dead were judged generating to their works. How will they be exposed then, who boast of that which they cannot evidence, or who go about to evidence their faith by any thing but works of piety and mercy?

We are taught to look upon a faith of bare speculation and knowledge as the faith of devils;
(v. 19.) Thou believest that there is a God; thou dost well: the devils also believe, and tremble.

That instance of faith which the apostle here chooses to mention, is the first principle of all religion. "Thou believest that there is a God; thou dost well: the devils also believe, and tremble.

That instance of faith which the apostle here
chooses to mention, is the first principle of all religion. "Thou believest that there is a God, against theGnathists; and that there is but one God, against the idolaters; thou believest nothing new. But thou shouldest take up a good opinion of thyself, or of thy state toward God, merely on account of thy believing in him, this will render thee misrable; the devils also believe, and tremble. If thou testest thyself with a bare assent to articles of faith, and some speculations upon them, thus far the devils go. And as their faith and knowledge only serve to excite horror, so in a little time will thine. The word tremble is commonly looked upon as denoting a good effect of faith; but here it may rather be taken as a bad effect, when applied to the faith of devils. They tremble, not out of reverence, but hatred and opposition to that one God on whom they believe. To rehearse that article of our creed, therefore, I believe on God the Father Almighty, will not distinguish us from devils at last, unless we not give up ourselves to God as the gospel directs; and love him, and delights ourselves in him, and serve him, which the devils do not, cannot do.

V. We are taught that he who boasts of faith without works, is to be looked upon at present as a foolish condemned person; (v. 20.) But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?
The words translated vain man—νοησία πολιτική, are observed to have the same signification with the word silly (v. 15.) which must never be used to private persons, or as an effect of anger, (Matt. 5. 22.) but may be used as here, to denote a just detestation of such a sort of men as are empty of good works, and yet boasters of their faith. And it plainly declares them fools and abjects in the sight of God. Faith without works is said to be dead, not only as void of all those operations which are the proofs of spiritual life; but as unavailable to eternal life: such be-levers as work in a bare profession of faith, are dead while they live.

VI. We are taught that a justifying faith cannot be without works, from two examples, Abraham and Rahab.

The first instance is that of Abraham, the father of the faithful, and the prime example of justification; to whom the Jews had a special regard; (v. 22.)
Was not Abraham justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? St. Paul, on the other hand, says, (in ch. 4. of the epistle to the Romans,) that Abraham believed, and it was counted to him for righteousness.

These are well reconciled, by observing what is said in Heb. 11. which shews that the faith both of Abraham and Rahab was such as to produce those good works of which St. James speaks; and which are not to be separated from faith as justifying and saving. By what Abraham did, it appeared that he truly believed. Upon this foot the words of God himself plainly put this matter; (Gen. 22. 16.) Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; therefore in blessing I will bless thee. Thus the faith of Abraham was a working faith; (v. 22.) it wrought with his works, and by works was made perfect. And by this means you come to see the nature and structure which faith, (v. 23.) Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness. And thus he became the friend of God. Faith, producing such works, endeared him to the Divine Being, and advanced him to very peculiar favours and intimacies with God. It is a great honour done to Abraham, that he is called and counted the friend of God.

We see therein that faith is justified, (comes into such a state of favour and friendship, with God,) and not by faith only; not by a bare opinion or profession, or believing without obeying, but by having such a faith as is productive of good works.

Now besides the explicatio of this passage and example, as thus illustrating and supporting the argument St. James has, it may be learned by us from what is here said concerning Abraham. 1. Those who would have Abraham's blessings, must be careful to copy after his faith: to boast of being Abraham's seed will not avail any, if they do not believe as he did. 2. Those works which evidence true faith, must be works of self-denial, and such as God himself commands, (as Abraham's offering up his son, his only son, was,) and not such works as are pleasing to flesh and blood, and may serve our interest, or are the mere fruits of our own imagination and devising. 3. What we piously emulate and sincerely resolve to do for God, is accepted as if actually performed. Thus Abraham is regarded as offering up his son, though he did not actually proceed to make a sacrifice of him. It was a thing done in the mind, and spirit, and resolution of Abraham, and God accepts it as if fully performed and accomplished. 4. The acts of faith make it grow perfect, as the truth of faith makes it act. 5. Such an acting faith will make others as well as Abraham, friends of God. Thus Christ says to his disciples, (John 15. 15.) I have called you friends. All transactions between God and the truly believing soul are easy, pleasant, and delightful. There is one will and one heart, and there is a mutual complacency. God rejoiceth over them who truly believe, to do them good; and they delight themselves in him.

The sight of faith's justifying itself and us, with and by works, is Rahab; (v. 25.) Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? The former instance was one renowned for his faith all his life long. This is of one noted for sin, whose faith was meaner and of a much lower degree; so that the strongest faith will not do, nor the meanest be vain, to go through works. Some say, that the word here rendered harlot, was the proper name of Rahab. Others tell us, that it signifies no more than a hostess, or one who keeps a public-house, with whom therefore the spies lodged. But it is very probable that her character was infamous; and such an instance is mentioned, to shew that faith will save the worst, when evidenced by proper works; and it will not save the best by improper works. Rahab believed the report she had heard of God's powerful presence with Israel; but that which proved her faith sincere, was, that, to the hazard of her life, she received the messengers, and sent them out another way. Observe here, (1.) The wonderful power of faith in transforming and changing sinners. (2.) The regard which an operative faith meets with from God, to obtain his mercy and favour. When works, as God requires, are performed, there must be great acts of self-denial. Rahab must prefer the honour of God and the good of her people before the preservation of her own country. Her former acquaintance must be discarded, her former course of life entirely abandoned, and she must give signal proof and evidence of this, before she can be in a justified state. (4.) After she is justified, yet her former character must be remembered.

Let us then take heed of running into extremes in this case. For, [1.] The best works, without faith, are dead; they want their root and principle. It is by faith that any thing we do is really good; as done with an eye to God, in obedience to him, and so as to aim principally at his acceptance. [2.] The most plausible profession of faith, without works, is dead: as the root is dead when it produces nothing green, nothing of fruit. Faith is the root, good works are the fruits, and we must see to it that we have both. We must not think that either, without the other, will justify and save us. This is the grace of God wherein we stand, and we should, stand to it.

CHAP. III.

The apostle here reproveth ambition, and an arrogant magisterial tongue; and shews the duty and advantage of bridling it, because of its power to do mischief. Those who profess religion, ought especially to govern their tongues, v. 12. True wisdom makes men meek, and avoids the strife and envy; and thereby it may easily be distinguished from a wisdom that is earthly and hypocrical, v. 13, to the end.

1. My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation. 2. For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. 3. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. 4. Behold also the ships, which though they are so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. 5. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! 6. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. 7. For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind: 8. But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. 9. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made after the similitude of God. 10. Out of the same mouth proceed blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. 11. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? 12. Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries, or a vine, figs? So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

The foregoing chapter shews how unprofitable and dead faith is without works; it is plainly intimated by what this chapter first goes upon, that such a faith is, however, apt to make men conceited and magisterial in their tempers and their talk. Those who set up faith in the manner the former chapter condemns, are most apt to run into these sorts of the tongue, which this chapter condemns. And indeed the best need to be cautioned against a dictating, censorious, mischievous use of their tongues. We are therefore taught,

1. Not to use our tongues so as to lord it over others; (v. 1.) My brethren, be not many masters, &c. These words do not forbid doing what we can to direct and instruct others in the way of their
III. We are taught to dread an unruly tongue, as one of the greatest and most pernicious evils. It is compared to a little fire placed among a great deal of combustible matter which soon raises a flame and consumes all before it; (v. 5, 6.) Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity, an abundance of sin in the tongue, that it may be called a world of iniquity. How many defilements does it occasion! How many and dreadful flames does it kindle! So is the tongue among the members, that it defileth the whole body. Observe from hence, there is a great pollution and defilement in sins of the tongue. Delighting passions are kindled, vented, and cherished by this unruly member. And the whole body is brought into slavery by the tongue. Therefore Solomon says, Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin, Eccles. 5, 6. The snares into which men are sometimes led by the tongue, are insufferable to themselves, and destructive of others. It setteth on fire the course of nature. The affairs of mankind and of societies are often thrown into confusion, and all is on a flame, by the tongues of men. Some read it, all our generations are set on fire by the tongue. There is no age of the world, nor any condition of life, private or public, but will afford examples of this. And it is set on fire of hell. Observe from hence, Hell has more to do in promoting the fire of the tongue than men are generally aware of. It is from some diabolical temptations, and to serve some diabolical designs, that men's tongues are inflamed. The devil is expressly called the firesetter of the body; and whenever men's tongues are employed any of these ways, they are set on fire of hell. The Holy Ghost indeed once descended in eleven tongues as of fire, Acts 2. And where the tongue is thus guided and wrought upon by a fire from heaven, here it kindleth good thoughts, holy affections, and ardent devotions. But when it is set on fire of hell, as in all undue heats it is, there it is mischievous; producing rage and hatred, and those things which serve the purpose and designs of the Devil. As therefore you would dread fires and flames, you should dread contentions, revilings, slanders, lies, and every thing that would kindle the fire of wrath in your own spirit, or in the spirits of others. But,

IV. We have next taught how very hard a thing it is to govern the tongue; (v. 7, 8.) For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed, of mankind. But the tongue can no man tame. As if the apostle had said, "Lions, and the most savage beasts, as well as horses and camels, and creatures of the greatest strength, have been tamed and governed by men: and so have birds, notwithstanding their wildness and timorousness, and their wings to bear them up continually out of our reach; even serpents, notwithstanding all their venom, and all their cunning, have been made familiar and harm knowledge among you? Let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. 14. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. 15. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. 16. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. 17. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, with out partiality, and without hypocrisy. 18. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

As the sins before condemned arise from an affection of being thought more wise than others, and being endowed with more knowledge than they; so the apostle in these verses shews the difference between men's pretending to be wise, and their being really so; and between the wisdom which is from beneath, (from earth or hell,) and that which is from above.

I. We have some account of true wisdom, with the distinguishing marks and fruits of it; (v. 13.) Who is a wise man, and endued with knowledge among you? Let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. A truly wise man is a very knowing man: he will not set up for the reputation of being wise, without laying in a good stock of knowledge; and he will not value himself merely upon knowing things, if he has not wisdom to make a right application and use of that knowledge. These two things must be put together, to make up the acceptableness of a man; who is wise, and endowed with knowledge? Now where this is the happy case of any, there will be these following things.

1. A good conversation. If we are wiser than others, this should be evidenced by the goodness of our conversation; not by the roughness or vanity of it. Words that inform, and heal, and do good, are the marks of wisdom; not those that look great, and are mischievous, and are the occasions of evil, either in ourselves or others.

2. True wisdom may be known by its works. The conversation here does not refer only to words, but to the whole of men's practice; therefore it is said, Let him shew out of a good conversation his works. True wisdom does not lie in good notions or speculations so much as in good and useful actions. Not he who thinks well, or he who talks well, is the true enjoyer of the scripture, allowed to be wise, if he do not live and act well.

3. True wisdom may be known by the meekness of the spirit and temper; Let him shew with meekness, &c. It is a great instance of wisdom, prudently to bridle our own anger, and patiently to bear the anger, of others. And as wisdom will evidence itself in meekness, so meekness will be the friend to wisdom, and then it will be found to hinder the regular apprehension, the solid judgment, and impartiality of thought, necessary to our acting wisely, so much as passion. When we are mild and calm, we are best able to hear reason, and best able to speak it. Wisdom produces meekness, and meekness increases wisdom.

II. We have the glorying of those taken away, who were of contrary character to that now mentioned; and their wisdom exposed in all its boasts and productions; (v. 14—16.) ‘ ‘If ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and &c.

13. Who is a wise man and endued with...
JAMES, IV.

Fret not what you will, and think yourselves ever so wise, yet you have abundance of reason to cease your glorying, if you run down love and peace, and give way to bitter envying and strife. Your zeal for truth or orthodoxy, and your boasts of knowing more than others, if you employ these only to make others hateful, and to shew your own spite and heart-burnings against them, are a shame to your profession of Christianity, and a strong argument of your being more controul against the truth.

Observe, 1. Envying and strife are opposed to the meekness of wisdom. The heart is the seat of both; but envy and wisdom cannot dwell together in the same heart. Holy zeal and bitter envying are as different as the flames of seraphim and the fire of hell. Observe, 2. The order of things here laid down.Envying is first, and excites strife; strife endeavours to increase itself by vain-glorying and lying; and then, (v. 16.) hereupon ensue confusion and every evil work. Those who live in malice, envy, and contention, live in confusion; and are liable to be provoked and hurried to any evil work. Such disorders raise many temptations, strengthen temptations, and involve men in a great deal of guilt. One sin begets another; and it cannot be imagined how much mischief is produced; there is every way, everywhere, every where, and in every case, effecting these effects, to be gloried in? This cannot be without giving the lie to Christianity; and pretending that this wisdom is what it is not. For observe, 3. From whence such wisdom cometh; it descendeth not from above, but arises from beneath; and, to speak plainly, it is earthly, sensual, devilish. v. 15. It springs from earthly principles, acts upon earthly motives, and is intent upon serving earthly purposes. It is sensual, indulging the flesh, and making provision to fulfill the lusts and desires of it. Or, according to the original word, σαρκικός, it is animal or human; the mere working of natural reason, without any supernatural light. And it is devilish; such wisdom being the wisdom of devils, to create unseasiness, and to do hurt; and being inspired by devils, whose condemnation is pride, (1 Tim. 3. 6.) and who are noted in other places of scripture for their constant, and their amazing, and their uncanny, and their unseasiness. And therefore those, who are lifted up with such wisdom as this, must fall into the condemnation of the Devil.

III. We have the lovely picture of that wisdom which is from above more fully drawn, and set in opposition to this which is from beneath; (v. 17, 18.) But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, &c.

Observe here, True wisdom is God's gift. It is not gained by conversing with men, or by the knowledge of the world, (as some think and speak,) but it comes from above. It consists of these several things: 1. It is pure, without mixture of maxims or aims that would debase it; and it is free from iniquity and defilements, not allowing of any known sin, but standing forth in the beauty of heart and life. 2. The wisdom that is from above, is not the wisdom of the world, but of the things that perish with it. Peace follows purity, and depends upon it. Those who are truly wise, do what they can to preserve peace, that it may not be broken; and to make peace, that where it is lost, it may be restored. In kingdoms, in families, in churches, in all societies, and in all interviews and transactions, heavenly wisdom makes men peaceable.

3. It is gentle, not striking out upon every thing in it, without saying or doing any thing rigorous in points of censure; not being furious about opinions; urging our own beyond their weight, or their's who oppose us, beyond their intention; not being rude and overbearing in conversation, nor harsh and cruel in temper. Gentleness may thus be opposed to all these. 4. Heavenly wisdom is easy to be entreated, &c.
grace unto the humble. 7. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you: 8. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. 9. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. 10. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

The former chapter speaks of envying one another, as the great spring of strifes and contentions; this chapter speaks of a lust after worldly things, and a setting too great a value upon worldly pleasures; friendship with which carried their divisions to a shameful height.

I. The apostle here reproves the Jewish Christians for their wars, and for their lusts, as the cause of them; (v. 1.) From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? The Jews were a very sedulous people, and busied themselves in frequent wars with their fellow-countrymen, and with the Romans; they were a very quarrelsome and divided people, often fighting among themselves; and many of those corrupt Christians, against whose errors and vices this epistle was written, seem to have fallen in with the common quarrels; hereupon, our apostle informs them, that the original of wars and fightings, was not (as they pretended) a true zeal for their country, and for the honour of God, but that their prevailing lusts were the cause of all. Observe from hence, What is sheltered and shrouded under a specious pretence of zeal for God and religion, often comes from men’s pride, malice, covetousness, ambition, and revenge. The Jews had many struggles with the Roman power, before they were entirely destroyed; they often unnecessarily embroiled themselves, and then fell into parties and factions about the different methods of managing their wars with their common enemies; and hence, it came to pass, that when their cause might be supposed good, yet their engaging in it, and their management of it, came from a bad principle; their worldly and fleshly lusts raised and managed their wars and fightings; but one would think here is enough said to subdue those lusts; for,

1. They make a war within, as well as with fightings without; impetuous passions and desires first war in their members, and then raise wars in their nation: whereas war, be it conscience and corruption, and there is war also between one corruption and another; and from these contentions in themselves arose their quarrels with each other. Apply this to private cases, and may we not then say of fightings and strifes among relations and neighbours, that they come from those lusts which war in the members? From lust of power and dominion, lust of dominion of the lusts of riches, from some one or more of these lusts, arise all the broils and contentions that are in the world; and since all wars and fightings come from the corruptions of our own hearts, it is therefore the right method, for the cure of contentation, to lay the axe to the root, and mortify those lusts that war in the members.

2. It should kill these lusts to think of their disappointment; (v. 2.) Ye lust, and have not; ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain; you covet great things for yourselves, and you think to obtain them by your victories over the Romans, or by suppressing this and the other party among yourselves; you think you shall secure great pleasures and happiness to yourselves, by overthrowing every thing which thwart your eager wishes; but alas, you are losing your labour and your blood, while you kill one another with such views as these.” Inordinate desires are either totally disappointed, or, however, not to be appeased and satisfied by obtaining the things desired. The words here rendered, cannot obtain, signify, cannot gain the happiness sought after. Note hence, Worldly and fleshly lusts are thst disabuse which neither allow of contentation, or satisfaction in the mind.

3. Sinful desires and affections generally exclude prayer, and the working of our desires towards God; “Ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not.” You fight, and do not succeed, because you do not pray; you do not consult God in your undertakings, whether he allow of them or not; and you do not commit your way to him, and make known your request to him, and to your own corrupt inclinations, therefore you meet with continual disappointments; or else .

4. “Your lusts spoil your prayers, and make them an abomination to God, whenever you put them up to him, v. 3. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts.” As it had been said, “Though perhaps you may sometimes pray for success against your enemies, yet is it with a regard to your own great advantage, gain, so as to promote true piety and religion, either in yourselves or others; but pride, vanity, luxury, and sensuality, are what you would serve by your successes, and by your very prayers; you want to live in great power and plenty, in voluptuousness and a sensual prosperity; and thus you disgrace devotion, and dishonour God, by such gross and base ends; and therefore your prayers are rejected.” and we learn from hence, in the management of all our worldly affairs, and in our prayers to God for success in them, to see that our ends be right. When men follow their worldly business, (suppose them tradesmen or husbands,) and ask of God prosperity, but do not receive what they ask for, it is because they ask with wrong aims and intentions; they ask God to give them success in their callings or undertakings, not that they may glorify their heavenly Father, and do good with what they have, but that they may consume it upon their lusts; that they may be enabled to eat better meat, and drink better drink, and wear better clothes, and so gratify their pride, vanity, and voluptuousness. But if we thus seek the things of this world, it is just in God to deny them; whereas, if we seek any thing, that we may serve God with it, we may expect he will either give what we seek for, or give us hearts to be content without it, and give opportunities of serving and glorifying him some other way. Let us remember this, that when we speed not in our prayers, it is because we ask amiss; either we do not ask for right ends, or not in a right manner; not with faith, or not with fervency: unbelieving and cold desires beg denials; and this we may be sure of, that when our prayers are rather the language of our lusts than of our graces, they will return empty.

II. We have fair warning to avoid all criminal friendships with this world; (v. 4.) Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Worldly people are here called adulterers and adulteresses, because of their perfidiousness to God, while they give their best affections to the world. Covetousness is elsewhere called idolatry, and it is here called adultery; it is a sin against God to worship him to whose honour they are espoused, to cleave to other things; there is this brand put upon worldly-mindedness—that it is enmity to God. A man may have a competent portion of the good things of this life, and yet may keep himself in the love of God; but he who sets his heart upon the world, who places his happiness in it, and will conform himself to it, and do anything rather than lose its friendship, is an enemy to God; it is constructive treason and rebellion against God, to set the world upon his throne in our hearts. Whosoever therefore would be a friend of the world, who will act upon this principle, to keep the smiles of the world, and to have its continual friendship, cannot but shew himself, in spirit, and in his actions too, an enemy to God. Ye cannot serve God and mammon, Matt. 6. 24.

From hence arise wars and fightings, even from this adulterous, idolatrous love of the world, and of it; for that false love, of women, men, so long as there is enmity toward God? Or, who can fight against God, and prosper? "Think seriously with yourselves what the spirit of the world is, and you will find that you cannot suit yourselves to it as friends, but it must occasion your being envious, and full of evil inclinations, as the generality of the world are. Do you think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us, lusteth to envy? v. 5. The account given in the holy scriptures of the hearts of men by nature, is, that their imagination is evil, only evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. Natural corruption principally shews itself by envying, and there is a continual propensity to this; the spirit which naturally dwells in man, is always producing one evil imagination or another, always emulating such as we see and converse with, and seeking those things which are possessed; enjoyed by them; now this of the world, affecting pomp and pleasure, and falling into strifes and quarrels for the sake of these things, is the certain consequence of being friends to the world; for there is no friendship without a oneness of spirit; and therefore Christians, to avoid contentions, must avoid the friendship of the world, and must shew that they are actuated by nobler principles, and that a spirit in them, in the way for us behoef to God, he gives more grace than to live and act as the generality of the world do. The spirit of the world teaches men to be churls, God teaches them to be bountiful; the spirit of the world teaches us to lay up, or lay out, for ourselves, and according to our own fancies; God teaches us to be willing to communicate to the necessities, and to the comfort of others, and so as to do good to all about us, according to their necessities, and to the comfort of others. This is contrary to the spirit of the world, and therefore the friendship of the world is to be avoided, if we pretend to be friends of God: yea, the grace of God will correct and cure the spirit that naturally dwells in us; where he giveth grace, he giveth another spirit than that of the world.

III. We are taught to observe the difference God makes between pride and humility; (v. 6.) God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. This is represented as the language of scripture in the Old Testament; for so it is declared in the book of Psalms, that God will save the afflicted people, (if their spirits be suited to their condition,) but will bring down high looks; (Ps. 18. 27.) and in the book of Proverbs it is said, He scorneth the scorners, and giveth grace unto the lowly, Prov. 3. 34. Two things are meant by this: 1. To shew that the proud are not the friends of God; God resists them; the original word, absolutatur, signifies, God’s setting himself as in battle array against them; and can there be a greater disgrace than for God to proclaim a man a rebel, an enemy, a traitor to his crown and dignity, and to proceed against him as such? The proud resisteth God; in his understanding he resisteth the truth of his heart; the words of God; in his passions he resisteth the providence of God; and therefore no wonder that God sets himself against the proud. Let proud spirits hear this and tremble, God resists them. Who can describe the wretched state of those who make God their Enemy? He will certainly fill the faces of such with shame (sooner or later) as have filled their hearts with the pride of this world. We should therefore resist pride in our hearts, if we would not have God to resist us. Observe, 2. The honour and help God gives to the humble; grace, as opposed to disgrace, is honour; this God gives to the humble; and where God gives grace to the humble, there he will give all other graces; and, as in the beginning of this sixth verse, he will give more grace. Wherever God gives true grace, he will give more; for to him that hath, and use what they have he will give more and more; he will especially give more grace to the humble, because they see their need of it, will pray for it, and be thankful for it; and such shall have it. For this reason,

IV. We are taught to submit ourselves entirely to God; (v. 7.) Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the Devil, and he will flee from you. Christians should forsake the friendship of the world, and watch against that envy and pride which they see prevailing in natural men, and should by grace learn to glory in their submissions to God. "Submit yourselves to him, as subjects to their prince, in duty, and, as one friend to another, in love and interest. Submit your understandings to the truths of God; submit your wills to the will of God, the will of his precept, the will of his providence. We are subjects, and must be submissive; not only through fear, but through love, and through interest, but also for conscience sake. "Submit yourselves to God, as considering how many ways you are bound to this, and as considering what advantage you will gain by it; for God will not hurt you by his dominion over you, but will do you good.

Now as this subject and submission to God are what the Devil most industriously strives to hinder, so we ought with great care and steadfastness to resist his suggestions. If he would represent a tame yielding to the will and providence of God as what will bring calamities, and expose to contempt and misery, we must resist these suggestions of fear. If he would represent submissions to God as a hindrance to our outward ease, or worldly preferments, we must resist these suggestions of pride and sloth. If he would tempt us to lay any of our miseries, and circumstances, and to the service of the world, so that we might avoid them by following his directions instead of God’s, we must resist these provocations to anger, not fretting ourselves in any wise to do evil. "Let not the Devil, in these or the like attempts, prevail upon you; but resist him, and he will flee from you."

If we basely yield to temptations, the Devil will continually follow us; but if we put on the whole armour of God, and stand it out against him, he will be gone from us. Resolution shuts and bolsters the door against temptation.

V. We are directed how to act toward God, in our becoming submissive to him, v. 8—10. 1. Draw nigh to God: the heart, that has rebelled, must be brought to the foot of God; the spirit, that was distant and estranged from a life of communion and converse with God, must become acquainted with him; "draw near to God, and he will draw near to you," and in every duty he requires of you. 2. Cleanse your hands: he who comes unto God, must have clean hands. St. Paul therefore directs to lift up holy hands without wrath and doubting, (1 Tim. 2. 8.) hands free from blood and bribes, and every thing that is unjust or cruel; and free from every defilement of sin; he is not subject to God who is a servile person of sin; the hands must be cleansed by faith, repentance, and reformation, or it will be in vain for us to draw nigh to God in prayer, or in any of the exercises of devotion. 3. The hearts of the double-minded must be purified; those who halt between God and the world, are here meant by the double-minded: to purify the heart, is to be sincere, and to act upon this single aim and principle, rather to please God than to seek after any thing in this world: hypocrisy is heart-impurity; but they who submit themselves to God aright, will purify their hearts as well as cleanse their hands. 4. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep; what afflictions God sends take them as he would have you, and be duly sensible of them; be afflicted when afflictions are sent from God, despised in outward things, and be afflicted in your sympathies with those who are so, and in laying to heart the calamities of the Church of God; mourn and weep for your own sins and the sins of others; times of contention and division are times to mourn in; and the sins that occasion wars and fightings, should be mourned for; let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness." This will be taken, either as a prediction of sorrow or a prescription of seriousness; let men think to set grief at defiance, yet God can bring it upon them; none laugh so heartily, but he can turn their laughter into mourning; and this the unconcerned Christians St. James wrote to, are threatened should be their case; they are therefore directed, before things come to the worst, to lay aside their vain mirth and their sensual pleasures, that they might indulge godly sorrow and penitential tears. 5. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord; let the inward acts of the soul be suitable to all these outward expressions of grief, affliction, and sorrow, before mentioned." Humility of spirit is here required, as in the sight of him who looks principally at the spirits of men; let there be a thorough humiliation in bewailing every thing that is evil; let there be great humility in doing that which is good; Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. VI. We have great encouragement to act thus toward God; he will draw nigh to them that draw nigh to him, (v. 8.) and he will lift up those who humble themselves in his sight, v. 10. Those that draw nigh to God in a way of duty, shall find God drawing nigh to them in a way of mercy. Draw nigh to him in faith, and trust, and obedience, and he will draw nigh to you for your deliverance. If there be not a close communion between God and us, it is our fault, and not his. He shall lift up the humble. Thus much our Lord himself declared, He that shall humble himself, shall be exalted, Matt. 23. 12. If we are truly penitent and humble under the marks of God's displeasure, we shall in a little time know the advantages of his favour; he will lift us up out of trouble, or he will lift us up, in our spirits and comforts, under trouble; he will lift us up to honour and safety in the world, or he will lift us up in our way to heaven, so as to raise our hearts and affections above the world; God will revive the spirit of the humble; (Isa. 57. 15.) he will hear the desire of the humble, (Ps. 10. 17.) and he will at last lift them up to glory. Before honour is humility. The highest honour in heaven will be the reward of the greatest humility on earth.

11. Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judgest the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. 12. There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another? 13. Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain: 14. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniseth away. 15. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. 16. But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil. 17. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin. In this part of the chapter, I. We are cautioned against the sin of evil-speaking; (v. 11.) Speak not evil one of another, brethren. The Greek word, καθοριστις, signifies speaking any thing that may hurt or injure another; we must not speak evil things of others, though they are true, unless we be called to it, and there be some necessary occasion for it; much less must we report evil things, when they are false, or, for aught we know, may be so; our lips must be guided by the law of kindness, as well as truth and justice; this, which Solomon makes a necessary part of the character of his virtuous woman, that she openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness, (Prov. 31. 26.) must needs be a part of the character of every true Christian. Speak not evil one of another. 1. Because ye are brethren. The compellation, as used by the apostle here, carries an argument along with it. Since Christians are brethren, they should not revile or defame one another; it is required of us, that we be tender of the good name of our brethren; where we cannot speak well, we had better not speak at all. It is far more than speaking evil of others, to find pleasure in making known the faults of others, divulging things that are secret, merely to expose them, nor in making more of their known faults than really they deserve, and, least of all, in making false stories, and spreading things concerning them, of which they are altogether innocent. What is this but to raise the hatred and encourage the persecutions of the world, against those who are engaged in the same interests with ourselves, and therefore with whom we ourselves must stand and fall? Consider, ye are brethren.

2. Speak not evil one of another, because this is to judge the law. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law. The law of Moses says, Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy brethren, Levit. 19. 16. The law of Christ is, Judge not, that ye be not judged, Matt. 7. 1. The sum and substance of both is, that men should love one another. A detracting tongue therefore condemns the law of God, and the commandment of Christ, when it is defaming its neighbour. To break God's commandments, is, in effect, to speak evil of them, and to judge them, as if they were too short, or too strict, or too great, or too contrary to our humour. The Christians to whom St. James wrote, were apt to speak very hard things of one another, because of their differences about indifferent things; (such as the observance of meats and days, as appears from Rom. 14.) "Now," says the apostle, "he who censures and condemns his brother for not agreeing with him in those things which the law of God has left indifferent, thereby censures and condemns the law, as if it had done ill in leaving them indifferent; he who quarrels with his brother, and condemns him for the sake of any thing not determined in the word of God, does thereby reflect on that word of God, as if it were not a perfect rule; let us take heed of judging the law, for the law of the Lord is perfect; if men break the law, leave that to judge them; if
JAMES, IV.

We will go to such a city; (say they;) perhaps to Antioch, or Damascus, or Alexandria, which were then the great places for traffic; but how can they be sure, when they set out, that they should reach any of these cities? Something might possibly stop their way, or call them elsewhere, or cut the thread of life. Many who have set out on a journey, have gone to their long home, and never reached their journey's end. But suppose they should reach the city they designed for, how did they know they should once more come back? You may have heard, that if you go down with your sword, you come back with your head. This may be said. Not in a slight, but at best an uncertain thing, and they might probably make more losing bargains than gainful ones; and then, as to all these particulars, the frailty, shortness, and uncertainty of life, ought to check the vanity and presumptuous confidence of such projectors for futurity; (v. 14.) What is your life?

It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanishteth away. God hath wisely left us in the future dark, to teach us to gain wisdom in considering the duration of life itself; we know not what shall be on the morrow; we may know what we intend to do, and to be, but a thousand things may happen to prevent us; we are not sure of life itself, since it is but as a vapour; something in appearance, but nothing solid or certain; easily scattered and gone. We can fix the hour and minute of the sun's rising and setting to-morrow, but we cannot fix the certain time of our death. It may be, there is such a life; it appears but for a little time, and then vanishteth away; it vanishteth as to this world, but there is a life that will continue in the other world; and since this life is so uncertain, it concerns us all to prepare and lay up in store for that to come. III. We are taught to keep up a constant sense of our dependence on the will of God, for life, and all the actions of our lives. It is out of our power to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. The apostle, having reproved them for what was amiss, now directs them how to be and do better; "Ye ought to say it in your hearts at all times, and with your tongues upon proper occasions, especially in your constant prayers and devotions, that if the Lord will, we shall live, and if he will own and bless you, you have such and such designs to accomplish." So we must reflect on our words and ways, and shew us many evils that we are apt, through inadvertency, to run into, and continue in. There were some who said of old, as too many say still, We will go to such a city, and do this or that, for such a term of time, while all serious regards to the disposal of Providence were neglected. Observe here,

1. How apt worldly ambitious men are to leave God out of their schemes; where any are set upon earthly things, these have a strange power of engrossing the thoughts of the heart; we should therefore have a care of growing intent or eager in our pursuits after any thing below. Observe,

2. How much of worldly happiness lies in the promises men make to themselves beforehand; their hands are full of fine visions, as to what they shall do, and be, and enjoy, in some future time, when they can neither be sure of time, nor of any of the advantages they promise themselves; therefore observe,

3. How vain a thing it is to look for any thing good in futurity, without the concurrence of Providence.

and all we do, should be with a submissive dependance on God.

V. We are directed to avoid vain boasting, and to look upon it not only as a weak, but a very evil thing; (v. 16.) Ye rejoice in your boastings; all such rejoicing is evil. They promised themselves life and prosperity, and great things, in the world, without any just regard to God; and then they boasted of these things. Such is the joy of worldly people, to boast of all their successes, yea often to boast of their very projects before they know what success they shall have. How common is it for men to boast of things which they have no other title to, than what arises from their own vanity and presumption! Such rejoicing (says the apostle) is evil; it is foolish and it is hurtful to men to boast of worldly things, and of their aspiring projects, when they should be attending to the humbling duties before laid down in v. 8—10. It is a great sin in God's account, it will bring great disappointments upon themselves, and will prove their destruction in the end. If we rejoice in God, that our times are in his hand, that all events are at his disposal, and that he is our God in covenant, this rejoicing is good; the wisdom, power, and providence of God, are then concerned to make all things work together for our good; but if we rejoice in our own vain confidences and presumptuous boasts, this is evil; it is an evil carefully to be avoided by all wise and good men.

V. We are taught, in the whole of our conduct, to act up to our own confessions, and, whether we have to do with God or men, to see that we never go contrary to our own knowledge; (v. 17.) To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin; it is aggravated sin, it is sinning with a witness; and it is to have the worst witness against a man that can be, when he sins against his own conscience. Observe, This stands immediately connected with the plain lesson of saying, If the Lord will, we shall do this or that; they might be ready to say, "This is a very obvious thing; who knows not that we all depend upon almighty God for life, and breath, and all things?" Remember then, if you do know this, that whenever you act unsuitably to such a dependence, to him that knoweth to do good, and does it not, to him it is sin, the greater sin. Observe again, Omissions are sins which will come into judgment, as well as commissions; he that does not the good he should do, as well as he who does the evil he knows should not be done, will be condemned. Let us therefore take care that conscience be rightly informed, and then that it be faithfully and constantly obeyed; for if our own hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God; but if we say, We see, and do not act suitably to our sight, then our sin remaineth, John 9. 41.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle denominates the judgments of God upon those rich men who oppress the poor, shewing them how great their sin and folly are, in the sight of God, and how grievous the punishments would be, which should fall upon themselves. He quotes the words of the faithful who exhorted to patience under their trials and sufferings, v. 7. 11. The sin of swearing is cautioned against, v. 12. We are directed how to act, both under affliction, and in preparing for death, v. 13. Ointments for the body, and anointing oil, are prescribed, v. 14. 15. Christians are directed to acknowledge their faults one to another, and to pray one for another, and the efficacy of prayer is proved, v. 16. 18. And lastly, it is recommended to us to do that we can for the reducing of them that stray from the ways of truth.

1. Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. 2. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3. Your gold and silver are cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. 4. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. 5. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter.

6. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. 7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath great long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. 8. Be ye also patient, establishing your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. 9. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold the judge standeth before the door. 10. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. 11. Behold, we count them happy who endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

The apostle is here addressing first sinners, and then saints.

1. Let us consider the address to sinners; and here we find St. James seconding what his great Master had said; Woe unto you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation, Luke 6. 24. The rich people, to whom this word of warning is sent, were not such as professed the Christian religion, but the worldly and unbelieving Jews, such as are here said to condemn and kill the just, which the Christians had, no power to perform; and though this epistle was written for the sake of the faithful, and was sent principally to them, yet, by an apostrophe, the infidel Jews may be well supposed here spoken to; they would not hear the word, and therefore it is written, that they might read it; and it is observable in the inscription of this epistle, that it is not directed, as Paul's epistles were, to the brethren in Christ, but, in general, to the twelve tribes; and the publication had no power to produce grace and evidence from Christ, but, in general, greeting; ch. 1. 1. The poor among the Jews received the gospel, and many of them believed; but the generality of the rich rejected Christianity, and were hardened in their unbelief, and hated and persecuted those who believed on Christ; to these oppressing, unbelieving, persecuting, rich people, the apostle directs himself in the first six verses.

1. He foretells the judgments of God, that should come upon them; (v. 1, 2.) They should have miseries come upon them, and such dreadful miseries, that the very apprehension of them was enough to make them weep and howl: misery that should arise from the very things in which they placed their happiness, and misery that should be completed by these things witnessing against them at the last, to their utter destruction: and they are now called to reason upon, and thoroughly to weigh the matter, 2. That we may know how they will stand before God in judgment; Go to now, ye rich men. (1.) "You may be assured of this, that very dreadful calamities are coming upon you, calamities that shall carry nothing of support or comfort in them, but all misery, misery in time, misery to eternity; misery in your outward afflictions, misery in your inward frame and temper of mind; misery in this world, misery in hell: you have not a single instance of misery only coming upon you, but miseries; the ruin of your church and nation is at hand; and there will come a day of wrath, when riches shall not profit men, but all the wicked shall be destroyed." (2.) The very apprehension of such miseries as were coming upon them, is enough to make them weep and howl. Rich men are apt to say to themselves, (and others are ready to say to them,) Eat, drink, and be merry; but God says, Weep and howl. It is not said, Weep and repent, for this the most of us does not expect from them, (he speaks in a way of denouncing rather than admonishing,) but, Weep and howl, for, when your doom comes, there will be nothing but weeping, and waiting, and gnashing of teeth. Those who live like beasts, are called to howl like such. Public calamities are most grievous to rich people, who live in pleasure, and are secure and sensual; and therefore, they shall weep and howl as none other, because of the very miseries that shall come upon them. (3.) Their misery shall arise from the very things in which they placed their happiness; Corruption, decay, rust, and ruin, will come upon all your good things, v. 2. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten: those things which you now inordinate ly affect, will hereafter inappositely wound you; they will be of no worth, of no use to you, but, on the contrary, will do you more harm than other people's sorrows: for, (4.) They will witness against you, and they will eat your flesh as it were fire, v. 3. Things inanimate are frequently represented in scripture as witnessing against wicked men. Heaven, earth, the stones of the field, the production of the ground, and here the very rust and canker of ill-gotten and ill-kept treasures, are said to witness against impious rich men. They think to heap up treasure in this world; but God will heap up the very things that are your treasure, and make you, when they come to be old; but alas! they are only heaping up treasures to become a prey to others; (as the Jews had all taken from them by the Romans,) and treasures that will prove at last to be only treasures of wrath, in the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God; then shall their iniquities, in the punishment of them, eat their flesh as it were fire. In the ruin of Jerusalem, many thousands perished by fire; in the last judgment the wicked shall be condemned to everlasting burnings, prepared for the Devil and his angels.

The Lord deliver us from the portion of wicked rich men! and, in order to this, let us take care that we do not fall into their sins, which we are next to consider.

2. The apostle shews what those sins are, which should bring such miseries. To be in so deplorable a condition, must doubtless be owing to some very heinous crime. (1.) Covetousness is laid to the charge of this people; they laid by their garments till they bred moth, and were eaten; they hoarded up their gold and silver till they were rusty and cankered: it is a very great disgrace to these things, that they carry in them the principles of their own corruption and consumption; the garment breeds the moth that frets it, the gold and silver breeds the canker that eats it; but the disgrace falls most heavy upon those who hoard and lay up these things till they come to be thus corrupted, and cankered, and eaten.

God gives us our worldly possessions, that we may honour him, and do good with them; but if, instead of that, we sinfully hoard them up, through an undue affection toward them, or a distrust of the providence of God for the future, this is a very heinous crime, and will be witnessed against by the very rust and corruption of the treasure thus heaped together.

(2.) Another sin charged upon those against whom St. James writes, opposition; (v. 4.) Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped these fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, criev, &c. Those who have wealth in their hands, get power into their hands, and then they are tempted to abuse that power to oppress such as are under them. The rich we here find employing the poor in their labours, and the rich have a much need of the labours of the poor, as the poor have of wages from the rich, and could as ill be without them; but, not considering this, they kept back the hire of the labourers; having power in their hands, it is probable that they made as hard bargains with the poor as they could; and, even after that, would not make good their bargain as they should have done. This is a crying sin, an iniquity that cries so as to reach the ears of God; and, in this case, God is to be considered as the Lord of sabbath, or the Lord of hosts, keeping back the rent money of his poor! It was used in the Old Testament, when the people of God were defenceless, and wanted protection; and when their enemies were numerous and powerful. The Lord of hosts, who has all ranks of beings and creatures at his disposal, and who sets all in their several places, he hears the oppressed when they cry by reason of the cruelty or injustice of the oppressor, and he will give orders to some of those hosts that are under him, (angels, devils, storms, distempers,) to help them, (as he liketh), to aid the faithful laborers. Nothing are dealt with unrighteously and immorally. Take heed of this sin of defrauding and oppressing, and avoid the very appearances of it.

(3.) Another sin here mentioned, is, sensuality and voluptuousness; (v. 5.) Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton, &c. God does not forbid us to use pleasure; but to live in them as if we lived for nothing else, is a very provoking sin; and when they are indulged in them, to what purpose are the rogues and pilgrims, where we are to continue at first for a while, and where we ought to be preparing for eternity; this, this is a grievous aggravation of the sin of voluptuousness. Luxury makes people wanton, as in Hos. 13. 6. According to their pasturage, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me. Wantonness and luxury are commonly the effects of great plenty and abundance; it is hard for people to have great estates, and not too much indulge themselves in carnal, sensual pleasures; "Ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter; ye live as if it was every day a day of sacrifices, a festival; and hereby your hearts are fattened and nourished to stupidity, dulness, pride, and an insensibility to the wants and afflictions of others." Some may say, "What harm is there in good cheer, provided people do not spend above what they have?" What! Is it no harm for people to make gods of their bellies, and to give all to these, instead of abounding in acts of charity and piety? Is it no harm for people to unfit themselves for minding the concerns of their souls, by indulging the appetites of their bodies? Surely that which brought flames upon Sodom, and would bring these miseries for which rich men are here called wanton, which will be brought in the hands of evil! Pride, and idleness, and fulness of bread, mean the same thing with living in pleasure, and being wanton, and nourishing the heart as in a day of slaughter.
vanced it into the place of God; while on the other hand, they who spread commonly and profanely by the name of God, do thereby put him upon the level with every common thing.

But let your yea be yea, and your nay nay; lest ye fall into condemnation; that is, "Let it suffice you to affirm or deny a thing as there is occasion; and be sure to stand to your word, and be true to it, so as to give no occasion for your being suspected of falsehood; and then you will be kept from the condemnation of backing what you say or promise by rash oaths, and from profaning the name of God to justify yourselves. It is being suspected of falsehood that leads men to swearing; Let it be known that you are true, that you are honest, you are good, you are honest: this means you will find there is no need to swear to what you say. Thus shall you escape the condemnation which is expressly annexed to the third commandment; The Lord will not hold him guiltless, that taketh his name in vain."

II. As Christians, we are taught to suit ourselves to the dispensations of Providence (v. 13.) Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms. Our condition in this world is various; and our wisdom is to submit to its being so, and to behave as becomes us, both in prosperity and under affliction. Sometimes we are in sadness, sometimes in mirth; God has set these one over against the other, that we may the better observe the several duties he enjoins; and that the impressions made on our passions and affections may be rendered serviceable to us. Afflictions should put us upon prayer; and prosperity should make us abound in praise. Not that prayer is to be confined to a time of trouble, or singing to a time of mirth; but these several duties may be performed with special advantage, and to the happiest purposes, at such seasons.

1. In a day of affliction nothing is more seasonable than prayer. The person afflicted must pray himself; as well as engage the prayers of others for him. Times of affliction should be praying times. To this end God sends afflictions, that we may be engaged to seek him early; and that those who at other times have neglected him, may be brought to inquire after him. The spirit is then most humble, the heart is broken and tender; and prayer is most acceptable to God when it comes from a contrite, humble spirit. Afflictions naturally draw out complaints; and to whom should we complain but to God in prayer? It is necessary to exceed our faith and our powers by petitions; and prayer is the appointed means both for obtaining and increasing these graces in us. Is any afflicted? Let him pray.

2. In a day of mirth and prosperity singing psalms is very proper and seasonable. In the original it is only said, sing, εὐχλέον, without the addition of psalms, or any other word: and we learn from the writings of several in the first ages of Christianity, (especially the recommendation of the apostles in their epistles and passages in Justin Martyr and Tertullian,) that the Christians were used to sing hymns, either taken out of scripture, or of more private composition, in their worship of God. Though some have thought, that St. Paul's advising both the Colossians and Ephesians to speak to one another ἐν πνεύματι, υἱῶν, μαθητῶν, that is, in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, (Col. 3:16.) the psalms of David being distinguished in Hebrew by (Skhirim, Thelhim, and Miznorim,) words that exactly answer these of the apostle. Let that be as it will, this however we are sure of, that singing psalms is a gospel-ordinance, and that our joy should be holy joy, consecrated to God. Singing is so directed to here, as to shew that if any be in circumstances of mirth and prosperity, he should turn his mirth into thought alone, and by himself, into this channel. Holy mirth becomes families and retirements, as well as public assemblies. Let our singing be such as to make melody with our hearts unto the Lord, and God will assuredly be well pleased with this kind of devotion.

III. We have particular directions given as to sickness: To the end, healing, pardoning mercy, promised, upon the observance of those directions; (v. 14, 15.) If any be sick, they are required, 1. To send for the elders, πρεσβυτέρους τις ἰκαλείσθαι—"the presbyters, pastors or ministers of the church. It lies upon sick people as a duty, to send for ministers and to desire their assistance and their prayers. 2. It is the duty of ministers to pray over the sick, when thus desired and called for. Let them pray for the sick, as they are sent for; and their intercessions be as becomes those who are affected with his calamities. 3. In the times of miraculous healing, the sick was to be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. Expositors generally confine this anointing with oil to such as had the power of working miracles; and when miracles ceased, this institution ceased also. In St. Mark's gospel we read of the apostles anointing with oil that were sick, and healing them. Mark 6:13. And we have accounts of this being practised in the church two hundred years after Christ; but then the gift of healing also accompanied it; when that miraculous gift ceased, this rite was laid aside. The papists indeed have made a sacrament of this, which they call the extreme unction. They use it, not to heal the sick, as it was used by the apostles; but, as they generally use the appointments of their church, so here they ordain, that this should be administered only to such as are at the very point of death. The apostle's anointing was in order to heal the disease; the popish anointing is for the expulsion of the relics of sin, and to enable the soul (as they pretend) the better to combat with the powers of the air. When they cannot prove, by any visible effects, that Christ owns them in the point of the cure. And some protestants have people to believe that the invisible effects are very wonderful. But it is surely much better to omit this anointing with oil, than to turn it quite contrary to the purposes spoken of in scripture. Some protestants have thought that this anointing was only permitted or approved by Christ, not instituted. But it should seem by the words of St. James here, that it was a thing enjoined in cases where there was faith to bear it. And some of this rite, they would however have people to believe that the invisible effects are very wonderful. But it is surely much better to omit this anointing with oil, than to turn it quite contrary to the purposes spoken of in scripture. Some protestants have thought that this anointing was only permitted or approved by Christ, not instituted. But it should seem by the words of St. James here, that it was a thing enjoined in cases where there was faith to bear it. ticular sin was the cause of his sickness. The great thing therefore we should beg of God for ourselves and others in the time of sickness, is, the pardon of sin. Sin is both the root of sickness and the sting of it. If sin be pardoned, either affliction shall be removed in mercy, or we shall see there is mercy in the continuance of it. When healing is founded upon pardon, we may say as Hezekiah did; Thou hast, in love to my soul, delivered it from the pit of corruption, Isa. 38. 17. When you are sick and in pain, it is most common to pray and cry, O give me to health! But your prayer should rather and chiefly be, O that God would pardon my sins!

IV. Christians are directed to confess their faults one to another, and so to join in their prayers with and for one another, v. 16. Some expositors connect this v. 16. with v. 14. As if when sick people send for ministers to pray over them, they should then confess their faults to them. Indeed, many are conscious that their sickness is a vindictive punishment of some particular sin, and they cannot look for the removal of their sickness without particular applications to God for the pardon of such a sin, there it may be proper to acknowledge and tell his case, that those who pray over him may know how to plead rightly for him. But the confession here required, is, that of Christians one to another, Ps. 133. 1. Where persons have injured one another, acts of injustice must be confessed to those against whom they have been committed. Where persons have tempered one another to sin, or have consented in the same evil actions, there they ought mutually to blame themselves, and excuse each other to repentance. Where crimes are of a public nature, and have done any public mischief, there they ought to observe, as much as may be, to remove themselves all who are concerned. And sometimes it may be well to confess our faults to some prudent minister or praying friend, that they may help us to plead with God for mercy and pardon. But then we are not to think St. James puts us upon telling every thing we are conscious is amiss in ourselves, or in one another; but so far as confession is necessary to our reconciliation with such as are at variance with us, or so far as it is necessary for gaining information in any point of confidence, and making our own spirits quiet and easy; so far we should be ready to confess our faults. And sometimes also it may be of good use to Christians, to disclose their peculiar weaknesses and infirmities to one another, where there are great intimacies and friendships; and where they may help each other by their prayer to obtain pardon of their sins, and power against them. Those who make confession of their faults one to another, should thereupon pray with and for one another. The 12th verse directs persons to pray for themselves; Is any afflicted let him pray: the 14th directs to seek for the prayers of ministers; and the 16th directs private Christians to pray one for another; so that here we have all sorts of prayer (ministerial, social, and secret,) recommended.

V. The great advantage and efficacy of prayer is declared and proved; The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, whether he pray for himself or for others; witness the example of Elias, v. 17, 18. He who prays, must be a righteous man; not righteous in an absolute sense, (for this Elias was not, who is here made a pattern to us,) but righteous in a gospel-sense, (or not loving sin,) and not, as the sceptics would, not loving self. If I pray in the fulness of my heart, the Lord will not hear my prayer, Ps. 66. 18. Further, the prayer itself must be a fervent, in-wrought, well-wrought prayer. It must be a pouring out the heart to God; and it must proceed from a faith unfeigned. Such prayer avails much. It is of great advantage to ourselves, it may be very beneficial to our friends, and we are assured of its being acceptable to God. It is good having those for friends, whose prayers are available in the sight of God.

The power of prayer is here proved from the success of Elijah. This may be encouraging to us even in common cases, if we consider that Elijah was a man of like passions with us. He was a zealous good man, and a very great man, but he had his infirmities, and was subject to disorder in his tempers, as well as others. In prayer we must not look to the merit of man, but to the grace of God. Only in this we should copy after Elijah, that he prayed earnestly, or as it is in the original, in prayer he prayed. It is not enough to say a prayer, but we must pray in prayer. Our thoughts must be fixed, our desires firm and ardent, and our graces in exercise; and when we shall so speed in prayer, Elijah prayed that it might not rain; and God heard him in his pleading against an idolatrous persecuting country, so that it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. Again he prayed, and the heaven gave rain, &c. Thus you see prayer is the key which opens and shuts heaven. To this there is an allusion Rev. 11. 6. where the two witnesses are said to have power to shut heaven for a time, that it should rain not on the earth. For the extraordinary efficacy of prayer is recorded for encouragement even to ordinary Christians to be instant and earnest in prayer. God never says to any of the seed of Jacob, seek my face in vain. If Elijah by prayer could do such great and wonderful things, surely the prayers of no righteous man shall return void. Where there may not be so much of miracle in God's answering our prayers, yet there may be equally certainty.

VI. This epistle concludes with an exhortation to do all we can in our places to further and promote the conversion and salvation of others, v. 19, 20. Some interpret these verses as an apology which the apostle is making for himself, that he should so plainly and sharply reprove the Jewish Christians for their many faults and errors. And certainly St. James gives a very good reason why he was so much disposed to complain of them from their errors; because in thus doing he should save souls, and hide a multitude of sins. But we are not to restrain this place to the apostle's converting such as erred from the truth; no, nor to other ministerial endeavours of the like nature; since it is said, If any err, and one convert him, let him be who will that does so good an office for another, he is therein an instrument of saving a soul. Thus when the apostle here calls brethren, he yet supposes liable to err. It is no mark of a wise or holy man, to boast of his being free from error, or to refuse to acknowledge when he is in an error. But if any do err, be they ever so great, you must not be afraid to shew them their error; and be they ever so weak and little, you must not disdain to make them wiser and better. If they err from the truth, that is, from the gospel, (for there is but one rule and standard of truth,) whether it be in opinion or practice, you must endeavour to bring them again to the rule. Errors in judgment and in life generally go together. There is some doctrinal mistake at the bottom of every practical mistake. There is no one habitually bad, but upon some bad principle. Now to convert such, is to reduce them from their error, and to reclaim them from the evils they have been led into. We are not presently to accuse and exclaim against an erring brother, and seek to bring reproaches and calamities upon him, but to convert him; and if by all our endeavours we cannot do this, yet we are no where impoverished to persecute and destroy him.
we are instrumental in the conversion of any, we are said to convert them, though this be principally and efficiently the work of God. And if we can do no more toward the conversion of sinners, yet we may do this—pray for the grace and Spirit of God to convert and change them. And let those that are any way serviceable to convert others, know what will be the happy consequences of their doing this:
they may take great comfort in it at present, and they will meet with a crown at last.
He that is said to err from the truth, (in v. 19,) is described as erring in his way; (in v. 20,) and we cannot be said to convert any, merely by altering their opinions, unless we can bring them to correct and amend their ways. This is conversion—to turn a sinner from the error of his ways, and not to turn him from one party to another, or merely from one notion and way of thinking to another. He who thus converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death. There is a soul in the case; and what is done toward the salvation of that, shall certainly turn to good account. The soul being the principal part of the man, the saving of that only is mentioned, but it includes the salvation of the whole man: the spirit shall be saved from hell, the body raised from the grave, and both saved from eternal death. And then, by such conversion of heart and life, a multitude of sins shall be hid. A most comfortable passage of scripture this is. We learn from hence, that though our sins are many, even a multitude, yet they may be hid or pardoned; and that when sin is turned from or forsaken, it shall be hid.
never to appear in judgment against us. Let peop; contrive to cover or excuse their sin as they will,
there is no way effectually and finally to hide it, but forsaking it. Some make the sense of this text to be, that conversion shall prevent a multitude of sins;
and it is a truth beyond dispute, that many sins are prevented in the party converted; many also may be prevented in others that he may have an influence upon, or may converse with. Upon the whole, how should we lay out ourselves with all possible concern for the conversion of sinners! It will be for the happiness and salvation of the converted; it will prevent much mischief, and the spreading and multiplying of sin in the world; it will be for the glory and honour of God; and it will mightily redound to our comfort and renown in the great day. They that turn many to righteousness, and they who help to do so, shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

Completed by Mr. Z. Marriot.

TWO epistles we have enrolled in the sacred canon of the scripture, written by Peter, who was a most eminent apostle of Jesus Christ, and whose character shines bright, as it is described in the Four Gospels, and in the Acts of the Apostles, but as it is painted by the papists and legendary writers, it represents a person of extravagant pride and ambition.

It is certain from scripture, that Simon Peter was one of the first of those whom our Lord called to be his disciples and followers; that he was a person of excellent endowments, both natural and gracious, of great parts, and ready eloquence, quick to apprehend, and bold to execute, whatever he knew to be his duty. When our Saviour called his apostles, and gave them their commission, he nominated him first in the list; and by his behaviour toward him he seems to have distinguished him as a special favourite among the twelve. Many instances of our Lord's affection to him, both during his life, and after his resurrection, are upon record.

But there are many things confidently affirmed of this holy man, that are directly false: as, That he had a primacy and superior power over the rest of the apostles; that he was more than their equal; that he was their prince, monarch, and sovereign; and that he exercised a jurisdiction over the whole college of the apostles: moreover, That he was the sole universal pastor over all the Christian world, the only vicar of Christ upon earth; that he was for above twenty years bishop of Rome, that the Popes of Rome succeed to St. Peter, and derive from him a universal supremacy and jurisdiction over all churches and Christians upon earth; and that all this was by our Lord's ordering and appointment.
Whereas Christ never gave him any pre-eminence of this kind, but positively forbade it, and gave precepts to the contrary. The other apostles never consented to any such claim. Paul declares himself not a whit behind the very chiefest of the apostles, 2 Cor. 11. 5. and ch. 12. 11. In nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles. Here is no exception of St. Peter's superior dignity, whom St. Paul took the freedom to blame, and withstood him to the face, Gal. 2. 11. And Peter himself never assumed
I. PETER, I.

CHAP. I.

The apostle describes the persons to whom he writes, and salutes them; (v. 1, 2.) blesses God for their regeneration to eternal salvation; (v. 3-5.) in the price of this salvation, he shows they had great cause of rejoicing, though for a little while they were in heaviness and affliction, for the trial of their faith, which would produce joy unspeakable and exceeding great joy. (1 Pet. v. 6.) This is that salvation which the ancient prophets foretold, and the angels desired to look into, v. 10.-12. He exhorts them to sobriety and holiness, which he presses from the consideration of the blood of Jesus, the invaluable price of man's redemption; (v. 13-21.) and to brotherly love, from the consideration of their regeneration, and the excellency of their spiritual state, v. 22-25.

1. PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

In this inscription we have three parts.

1. The author of it described. 1. By his name—Peter. His first name was Simon, and Jesus Christ gave him the surname of Peter, which signifies a rock, as a commendation of his faith, and to denote that he should be an eminent pillar in the church of God, Gal. 2. 9. 2. By his office—an apostle of Jesus Christ. The word signifies one sent, a legate, a messenger, any one sent in Christ's name, and about his work; but more strictly it signifies the highest office in the Christian church; (1 Cor. 12. 28.) God hath set some in the church, first apostles. Their dignity and pre-eminence lay in these things—They were immediately chosen by Christ himself; they were first witnesses, then preachers of the resurrection of Christ, and so of the entire gospel-dispensation; their gifts were excellent and extraordinary; they had a power of working miracles, not at all times, but when Christ pleased; they were led into all truth, were endowed with the spirit of prophecy, and they had an extent of power and jurisdiction beyond all others; every apostle was a universal bishop in all churches, and over all ministers. In this humble manner Peter, (1.) Asserts his own character as an apostle. Hence learn, A man may lawfully acknowledge, and sometimes is bound to assert, the gifts and graces of God to him. To pretend to what we have not, is hypocrisy; and to deny what we have, is ingratitude. (2.) He mentions his apostolical function as his warrant and call to write this epistle to these people. Learn, It concerns all, but especially ministers, to consider well their warrant and call from God to their work. This will justify them to others, and give them inward support and comfort under all dangers and discouragements.

2. They are described by their spiritual condition; Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. &c. These poor strangers who were despised and despised in the world, were nevertheless in high esteem with the great God, and in the most honourable state that any person can be in while living; for they were, (1.) Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. Election is either to an office; (so Saul was the man whom the Lord chose to be king; (1 Sam. 10. 24.) and our Lord tells his apostles, have not I chosen you twain? John 6. 70.) or to the church-state, for the enjoyment of special privileges; (thus Israel was God's elect, (Deut. 7. 6.) for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself above all people that are upon the face of the earth;) or to eternal salvation; God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. This is the election here spoken of, importing God's gracious decree or resolution to save some, and bring them, through Christ, by proper means, to eternal life.

This election is said to be according to the foreknowledge of God. Foreknowledge may be taken two ways. [1.] For mere prescience, foresight, or understanding; such a thing as will be, before it comes to pass. Thus an astronomer certainly foreknows that such a time there will be an eclipse. This sort of foreknowledge is in God, who at one commanding view sees all things that ever were, or are, or ever will be. But such a prescience is not the cause why any thing is so or so, though in the event it certainly will be so; as the astronomer who foresees an eclipse, does not thereby cause that eclipse to be. [2.] Foreknowledge sometimes signifies counsel, appointment, and approbation; (Acts 2. 23.) Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. The death of Christ was not only foreseen, but foreordained, as Acts 2. 20. Take it thus here; so the sense is, elect according to the counsel, ordination and free grace of God.

It is added, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. By the Father we are here to understand the first Person of the blessed Trinity. There is an order among the three Persons, though no superiority; they are equal in power and glory, and have each equal and necessary dignity in their works. Thus in the affair of man's redemption, election is by way of eminency ascribed to the Father, as reconciliation is to the Son, and sanctification to the Holy Ghost; though in each of these one Person is not so entirely interested, as to exclude the other two. Hereby the persons of the Trinity are more clearly discovered to us, and we are taught what obligations we are under to each of them distinctly.

[2.] The word elect means, to choose, to appoint, to ordain, to predetermine; and implies, that God hath pronounced the salvation of such persons to be his will, according to his good pleasure.

They were elected also to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus. They were designed by God's decree to be sanctified by the Spirit, and to be purified by the merit and blood of Christ. Here is a manifest allusion to the typical sprinklings of blood under the law, which language these Jewish converts understood very well. The blood of the sacrifices must not only be shed, but sprinkled; to denote that the benefits designed thereby, are applied and imparted to the offerers. Thus the blood of Christ, the grand and all-sufficient Sacrifice, typified by the legal sacrifices, was not only shed, but must be sprinkled and communicated to every one of these elect Christians, that through faith in his blood they may obtain remission of sins, Rom. 3. 25. This blood of sprinkling justifies before God, (Rom. 5. 9.) seals the covenant between God and us, of which the Lord's supper is a sign, (Luke 22. 20.) cleanses from all sin, (1 John 1. 7.) and admits us into heaven, Heb. 10. 19.

Note, [1.] God hath elected some to eternal life, some, not all; persons, not qualifications. [2.] All those are chosen to eternal life as the end, are chosen to obedience as the way. [3.] Unless a person be sanctified by the Spirit, and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, there will be no true obedience in the life. [4.] There is a consent and co-operation of all the persons of the Trinity in the affair of man's salvation, and their acts are commensurate one to another; whoever the Father elects, the Spirit sanctifies unto obedience, and the Son redeems and sprinkles with his blood. [5.] The doctrine of the Trinity lies at the foundation of all revealed religion. If you deny the proper deity of the Son and Holy Spirit, you invalidate the redemption of the one, and the gracious operations of the other, and by that means destroy the foundation of your own safety and religion.

III. The salutation follows; Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied. The blessings desired for them, are, grace and peace.

1. Grace; the free favour of God, with all its proper effects, pardoning, healing, assisting, and saving.

2. Peace; all sorts of peace may be here intended, domestic, civil, ecclesiastical peace in the church, and spiritual peace with God, with the feeling of it in our own consciences.

Here we have the requisition of prayer, in relation to these blessings—that they may be multiplied; which implies, that they were already possessed in some degree of these blessings, and he wishes them the continuation, the increase, and the perfection of them. Learn,

(1.) They who possess spiritual blessings in their own souls, earnestly desire the communication of the same to others; the grace of God is a generous, not a selfish grace.

(2.) The best blessings we can desire for ourselves, or one for another, are grace and peace, with the multiplication of them; therefore the apostles so often make this their prayer in the beginning and end of their epistles.

(3.) Solid peace cannot be enjoyed where there is no true grace; first grace, then peace. Peace with our grace, is mere stupidity; but grace may be true, where there is for a time no actual peace; as Heman was distracted with terror, and Christ was once in an agony.

(4.) The increase of grace and peace, as well as the first gift of them, is from God; where he gives true grace, he will give more grace; and every good man earnestly desires the improvement and multiplication of these blessings in himself and others.

3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

We come now to the body of the epistle, which begins with a congratulation of the dignity and happiness of the state of these believers, brought in under the form of a thanksgiving to God. Other epistles begin in like manner, 2 Cor. 1. 3. Eph. 1. 3.

1. Here we have the duty performed, which is blessing God. A man blesses God by a just acknowledgment of his excellency and blessedness.

2. Here is the object of this blessing described by his relation to Jesus Christ; the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here are three names of one Person, denoting his threefold office. (1.) He is Lord, a universal King or Sovereign. (2.) Jesus, a Priest or Saviour. (3.) Christ, a Prophet, anointed with the Spirit, and furnished with all gifts necessary for the instruction, conduct, and salvation of his church. This God, so blessed, is the God of Christ, according to his human nature, and his Father, according to his divine nature.

3. You have the reasons that oblige us to this duty of blessing God, which are, in general, his abundant mercy; all our blessings are owing to God's mercy, not to man's merit, particularly regeneration; he hath begotten us again, and this deserves our thanksgiving to God, especially if we consider the fruit it produces in us, which is that excellent grace of hope, and that not such a vain, dead, perishing hope as that of worldlings and hypocrites, but a lively hope, a living, strong, quickening, and durable hope, as that hope which needs be, that has such a solid foundation as the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Learn,

(1.) A good Christian's condition is never so bad but he has great reason still to bless God. As a sinner has always reason to mourn, notwithstanding his present prosperity; so good people, in the midst of their manifold difficulties, have reason still to rejoice and bless God.

(2.) In our prayers and praises we should address God as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; it is only through him that we and our services are accepted.

(3.) The best of men owe their best blessings to the abundant mercy of God; all the evil in the world is from man's sin, but all the good in it is from God's mercy; regeneration is expressly ascribed to the abundant mercy of God, and so are all the rest; we subsist entirely upon divine mercy. Of the nature of regeneration, see John 3. 3.

(4.) Regeneration produces a lively hope of eternal life; every unconverted person is a hopeless creature; whatever he pretends to of that kind, is all confidence and presumption; the right Christian hope is what a man is begotten again unto by the Spirit of God; it is not from nature, but free grace; those who are begotten in the new and spiritual life, are begotten to a new and spiritual hope.

(5.) The hope of a Christian has this excellency, it is a living hope; the hope of eternal life in a true Christian, is a hope that keeps him alive, quickens him, supports him, and conducts him to heaven. Hope invigorates and spirits up the soul to action, to patience, to fortitude, and perseverance to the end. The delusive hopes of the unregenerate are vain and perishing; the hope of the child of God and his hope expire and die both together, Job 27. 8.

(6.) The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, is the ground or foundation of a Christian's hope; the resurrection of Christ is the act of the Father as a Judge, of the son as a Conqueror; his resurrection demonstrates that the Father accepts his death in full discharge for our ransom, that he is victorious over death, the grave, and all our spiritual enemies; and it is also an assurance of our own resurrection, there being an inseparable union between Christ and his People; they rise by virtue of his resurrection, and, new-born, by virtue of his power as a Judge. We are risen with Christ, Col. 3. 1. From all this taken together, Christians have two fast solid foundations whereon to build their hope of eternal life.

4. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you,

The apostle continues his thanksgiving to God, and having congratulated these people on their new birth, and their hope of everlasting life, he goes on to describe that life under the notion of an inheritance; a most proper way of speaking to these people; for,

1. They were poor and persecuted, perhaps turned out of their inheritances to which they were born; to allay this grievance, he tells them they were new-born to a new inheritance, infinitely better than what they had lost.

2. They were Jews, most of them, and so had a great affection to the land of Canaan, as the land of their inheritance, settled upon them by God himself; and to be driven out from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, was looked upon as a sore judgment, 1 Sam. 26. 19. To comfort them under this, they are put in mind of a noble inheritance reserved in heaven for them, such a one, that the land of Canaan was but a mere shadow in comparison of it.

Note, (1.) Heaven is the undoubted inheritance of all the children of God; all that are born again, are born to an inheritance, as a man makes his child his heir; the apostle argues, If children, their heirs, Rom. 8. 17. God giveth his gifts unto all, but the inheritance to none but his children; those that are his sons and daughters by regeneration and adoption, receive the promise of eternal inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. This inheritance is not our purchase, but our Father's gift; not wages that we merit, but the effect of grace, which first makes us children, and then settles this inheritance upon us by a firm unalterable covenant.

Note, (2.) The incomparable excellencies of this inheritance, which are four.

[1.] It is an imitable in which respect it is like its Maker, who is called the incorruptible God, Rom. 1. 23. All corruption is a change from better to worse, but heaven is without change, and without end; the house is eternal in the heavens, and the possessors must subsist for ever; for their corruptible must put on incorruption, 1 Cor. 15. 53.

[2.] This inheritance is undefiled, like the great High Priest that is now in possession of it, who is holy, harmless, and undefiled, Heb. 7. 26. Sin and corruption, the two grand defilements that plague this world, and mar its beauty, have no place there.

[3.] It fadeth not away, but always retains its vigour and beauty, and remains immemorable, ever entertaining and pleasing the saints who possess it, without the least weariness or distaste.

[4.] Reserved in heaven for you; which expression teaches us, First, That it is a glorious inheritance, for it is hid with Christ, and all that is there is glorious, 1. 18. Secondly, It is certain, a reversion in another world safely kept and preserved till we come to the possession of it. Thirdly, The persons for whom it is reserved, are described, not by their names, but by their character; for you, or us, or every one that is begotten again to a lively hope, this inheritance is reserved for them, and none but them; all the rest will be shut out for ever.

5. Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

This inheritance being described as future, and distant both in time and place, the apostle supposes some doubt or uncertainty yet to remain upon the minds of these people, whether they might not possibly fall short by the way; though the happiness be safe in heaven, yet we are still upon earth, liable to abundance of temptations, miseries, and infirmities; Are we in such a safe state that we shall certainly come thither? To this he answers, that they should be safely guarded and conducted thither; they should be kept upon the plain road to heaven, all such as are instruments of their own destruction, and injuries as would prevent their safe arrival at eternal life; the heir to an estate has no assurance that he shall live to enjoy it, but the heirs of heaven shall certainly be conducted safe to the possession of it; the blessing here promised, is, preservation; Ye are kept; the Author of it, God; the means in us made use of for that end, are, our own faith and care; the end to which we are preserved, is, salvation; and the time when we shall see the safe end and issue of all, is, the last time.

Note. 1. Such is the tender care of God over his people, that he not only gives them grace, but preserves them unto glory; their being kept, implies both danger and deliverance; they may be attack'd, but shall not be overcome.

2. The preservation of the regenerate to eternal life is the effect of God's power; the greatness of the work, the number of enemies, and our own infirmities, are such that no power, but what is almighty, can preserve the soul through all unto salvation; therefore the scripture often represents man's salvation as the effect of divine power, 2 Cor. 12. 9. Rom. 14. 4.

3. The preservation of God's power does not supersede man's diligence and care for his own salvation; here is God's power, and man's faith, which implies an earnest desire of salvation, a reliance upon Christ, according to his invitations and promises, a vigilant care to do every thing pleasing to God, and avoid whatever is offensive, an abhorrence of temptations, a respect to the recompense of recompence, and persevering diligence in prayer; by such a patient, operating, conquering faith, we are kept, under the assistance of divine grace, from all sin and Satan's temptations. This faith is a sovereign preservative of the soul through a state of grace unto a state of glory.

4. This salvation is ready to be revealed, in the last time. Here are three things asserted about the salvation of the saints. (1.) That it is now prepared, and made ready, and reserved in heaven for them. (2.) Though it be made ready now, yet it is in a great measure hidden and unrevealed at present, not only to the ignorant, but the world in general, and to them, but even to the heirs of salvation themselves. It does not yet appear what we shall be, 1 John 3. 2. (3.) That it shall be fully and completely revealed in the last time, or at the last day of judgment. Life and immortality are now brought to light by the gospel, but this life will be revealed more gloriously at death, when the soul shall be admitted into the presence of its Lord and Saviour, and after this there will be a further and a final revelation of the amplitude and transcendency of the saints' felicity at the last day, when their bodies shall be raised, and re-united to their souls, and judgment shall pass upon angels and men, and Christ shall publicly honour and applaud his servants in the face of all the world.

6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

The first word, wherein, refers to the apostle's foregoing discourse about the excellency of their present state, and their grand expectations for the future; in this condition you greatly rejoice, though now for a season, or a little while, if need be, ye are made sorrowful through manifold temptations. The apostle grants they were in great affliction, and propounds several things in mitigation of their sorrows.

Note. 1. Every sound Christian has always something wherein he may greatly rejoice; great rejoicing contains more than an inward placid serenity of mind or sensation of comfort; it will show itself in the countenance and conduct, but especially in praise and gratitude.

2. The chief joy of a good Christian arises from things spiritual and heavenly, from his relation to God and to heaven; in these every sound Christian greatly rejoices; his joy arises from his treasure, which consists of matters of great value, and the title to them is sure.

3. The best Christians, those who have reason greatly rejoice, may yet be in great heaviness through manifold temptations; all sorts of adversities are temptations, or trials of faith, patience, and constancy; these seldom go singly, but are manifold, and come from different quarters; the effect of all which is great heaviness. As men, we are subject to sorrows, personal and domestic; as Christians, our duty to God obliges us to frequent sorrow: and our compassion toward the miserable, the dishonour done to God, the calamities of his church, and the destruction of his enemies, is a great ground for deep and fervent, and from divine vengeance, raise, in a generous and pious mind, almost continual sorrow; (Rom. 9. 2.) I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart.

4. The afflictions and sorrows of good people are but for a little while, they are but for a season; though they may be smart, they are but short; life itself is but for a little while, and, for sorrows of it cannot survive it; the shortness of any affliction does much abate the heaviness of it.

5. Great heaviness is often necessary to a Christian's good; if need be, ye are in heaviness. God does not afflict his people willingly, but acts with judgment in proportion to our needs; there is a convenience and fitness, nay, an absolute necessity in the case, for so the expression signifies, it must be; and it is conducted through the sorest trials for the afflicting objects: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto, I Thess. 3. 3. These troubles, that lie heavily, never come upon us but when we have need, and never stay any longer than they need must.

7. That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:

These words express the end of good people's afflictions, and the ground of their joy under them; the end of afflictions is the trial of their faith; the nature of this trial, it is much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire; the effect of the trial is this, it will be found unto praise, honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Note. 1. The afflictions of serious Christians are designed for the trial of their faith. God's design in afflicting his people, is, their probation, not their destruction; their advantage, not their ruin: a trial, as the word signifies, is an experiment or search made upon a man, by some affliction, to prove the value and strength of his faith; this trial is made upon faith principally, rather than any other grace, because the trial of that is, in effect, the trial of all that is good in us; our Christianity depends upon our faith; if that be wanting, there is nothing else that is spiritually good in us; Christ prays for this apostle, that his faith might not fail; if that be supported, all the rest will stand firm; the faith of good people is tried, that they themselves may have the comfort of it, God the glory of it, and others the benefit of it.

2. A tried faith is much more precious than tried gold; there is a double comparison of faith and gold, and the trial of the one with the trial of the other; gold is the most valuable, pure, useful, and durable, of all the metals; so is faith among the Christian virtues, it lasts till it brings the soul to heaven, and then it issues in the glorious fruition of God for ever; the trial of faith is much more precious than the trial of gold; in both there is a purification, a separation of the dross, and a discovery of the soundness and goodness of the things; gold does not increase and multiply by trial in the fire, it rather grows less; but faith is established, improved, and multiplied, by the oppositions and afflictions that it meets with; gold must perish at last; gold that perisheth; but faith never will; I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, Luke 22. 32.

3. The trial of faith will be found to praise, and honour, and glory. Honour is properly that esteem and value which one has with another, and so God and man will honour the saints. Praise is the expression or declaration of that esteem; so Christ will commend his people in the great day, Come, ye blessed of my Father, &c. Glory is that lustre wherein a person, so honoured and praised, shines in heaven; glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, Rom. 2. 10. If a tried faith be found to praise, honour, and glory, let this recommend faith to you, as much more precious than tried gold; it will be assaulted and tried by afflictions; if you made your estimate either from present use, or the final event of both, it will be found true; however the world takes it for an incredible paradox.

4. Jesus Christ will appear again in glory, and, when he does so, the saints will appear with him, and their graces will appear illustrious; and the more our Lord is gazed on, the more bright they will then appear; the trial will some day be over, but the glory, honour and praise will last to eternity. This should reconcile you to your present afflictions: they work for you a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory.

8. Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now you see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory:

The faith of these primitive Christians is further commented upon two accounts: 1. The excellency of its Object, the unseen Jesus; the apostle had seen him, but he does not pretend that the sheep saw him, and yet they believed in him. It is one thing to believe God, or Christ, (so the devils believe,) another thing to believe in him; which denotes subjection, reliance, and expectation of all promised good from him. 2. On account of two notable productions or effects of their faith, love and joy; and this joy so great, as to be above description; ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory.

Learn, (1.) The faith of a Christian is properly conversant about things revealed, but not seen; sense converses with things sensible and present; reason is a higher guide, which by sure deductions can infer the operation of causes, and the certainty of events; but faith ascends further still, and assures us of abundance of particulars that sense and rea

9. Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.

Well might these Christians rejoice with joy unspeakable, since they were every day receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls.

Note. 1. The blessing they were receiving, the salvation of souls; the more noble part being put to the test of the whole man; which last discovery is by an experimental taste of it; it is full of glory, full of heaven; there is much of heaven and the future glory in the present joys of improved Christians; their faith removes the causes of sorrow, and affords the best reasons for joy: though good people sometimes walk in darkness, it is often owing to their own mistakes and ignorance, or to a fearful, melancholy disposition, or to some late sinful conduct, or perhaps to some sad occurrence; salvation, if it sinks their comfort for the present, yet they have reason to rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation, Hab. 3. 18.

2. He speaks of the present time; you are now actually receiving the end of your faith, &c.

Note. 3. The word used alludes to the games at which the conquerors received or bore away from the judge of the contest, a crown or reward, which he carried about in triumph as the evidence of their victory, the soul was the prize these Christians sought for, the crown they laboured for, the end they aimed at, which came nearer and more within their reach every day.

Learn, (1.) Every faithful Christian is daily receiving the salvation of his soul; salvation is one permanent thing, begun in this life, not interrupted by death, and continued to all eternity. These believers had the beginnings of heaven in the possession of holiness, and a heavenly mind, in their duties and communion with God, in the earnest of the inheritance, and the witness of the divine Spirit. This was properly urged to these distressed people; they were on the losing side in the world, but the apostle puts them in mind of what they were receiving; if they lost an inferior good, they were all the while saving their immortal souls.

(2.) It is lawful for a Christian to make the salvation of his soul his end; the glory of God and our own felicity are so connected, that if we regularly seek the one we must attain the other.

10. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you:

The apostle having described the persons to whom he wrote, and declared to them the excellent advantages they were under, he goes on to shew them what warrant he had for what he had delivered; and, because they were Jews, and had a profound veneration for the Old Testament, he produces the authority of the prophets to convince them the doctrine of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ was no new doctrine, but the same which the old prophets did inquire and search diligently into.

Note, 1. Who made this diligent search; the prophets, who were persons inspired by God to the doing or saying of things extraordinary, above the reach of their own studies and abilities, foretelling things to come, and revealing the will of God, by the direction of the Holy Spirit.

2. The object of their search; which was, salvation, and the grace of God which should come unto you; the general salvation of men of all nations by Jesus Christ, and more especially the salvation afforded to the Jews; the grace that should come to them from him who was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. They foresaw glorious times of light, grace and Comfort, coming upon the church, which made the prophets and righteous desire to see and hear the things which came to pass in the days of the gospel.

3. The manner of their inquiry; they inquired and searched diligently; the words are strong and emphatical, alluding to miners, who dig to the bottom, and break through not only the earth, but the rock, to come to the ore; so these holy prophets had an earnest desire to know, and were proportionably diligent in their inquiries after the grace of God, which was to be revealed in the days of the Messiah: their being inspired did not make their industrious search needless; for, notwithstanding their extraordinary assistance from God, they were obliged to make use of all the ordinary methods of improvement in wisdom and knowledge. Daniel was a man greatly beloved and inspired, yet he understood by books and study the computations of time, ch. 9. 2. Even their own revelation required their study, meditation, and prayer; for many prophecies had a double meaning; in their first intention they aimed at some person or event near at hand, but their ultimate design was to describe the Person, sufferings, or kingdom of Christ.

Observe, (1.) The doctrine of man's salvation by Jesus Christ, has been the study and admiration of the greatest and wisest of men; the nobleness of the subject, and their own concern in it, have engaged them, with most accurate attention and seriousness, to search into it.

(2.) A good man is much affected and pleased with the grace and mercy of God to others, as well as to himself; the prophets were highly delighted with the prospects of mercy to be shewn both to Jews and Gentiles at the coming of Christ.

(3.) They who were acquainted with this great salvation, and the grace that shines therein, must inquire and search diligently into it; if it were necessary for an inspired prophet to do so, much more for persons so weak and injudicious as we are.

(4.) The grace that came by the gospel, excels all that was before it; the gospel-dispensation is more glorious, evident, intelligible, extensive, and effectual, than any dispensation that ever did precede it.

11. Searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

The particular matters which the ancient prophets chiefly searched into are here expressed; Jesus Christ was the mainSubject of their studies; and in relation to him, they were most inquisitive into. 1. His humiliation and death, and the glorious consequences of it; the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow; this inquiry would lead them into a view of the whole gospel, the sum whereof is this, that Christ Jesus was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification.

2. The time, and the manner of the times, wherein the Messiah was to appear; undoubtedly these holy prophets earnestly desired to see the days of the Son of man; and therefore, next to the thing itself, their minds were set upon the time of its accomplishment, so far as the Spirit of Christ, which was in them, had signified any thing toward that purpose. The nature of the times was also under their strict consideration, whether they would be quiet or troublesome times; times of peace, or times of war.

Learn, (1.) Jesus Christ had a being before his incarnation; for his Spirit did then exist in the prophets, and therefore he whose that Spirit then was, must be in being also.

(2.) The doctrine of the Trinity was not wholly unknown to the faithful in the Old Testament; the prophets knew that they were inspired by a Spirit that was in them, this Spirit they knew to be the Spirit of Christ, and consequently distinct from Christ himself: here is a plurality of persons, and from other parts of the Old Testament a Trinity may be collected.

(3.) These works here ascribed to the Holy Ghost prove him to be God; he did signify, discover, and manifest to the prophets, many hundreds years beforehand, the sufferings of Christ, with a multitude of particular circumstances attending them; and he did also testify, or give proof and evidence beforehand, of the certainty of that event, by inspiring the prophets to reveal it, to work miracles in confirmation of it, and by enabling the faithful to believe it.

These works prove the Spirit of Christ to be God, since he is possessed of almighty power and infinite knowledge.

(4.) From the example of Christ Jesus, learn to expect a time of services and sufferings before you are received to glory; it was so with him, and the disciple is not above his Lord; the suffering time is but short, but the glory is everlasting; let the suffering season be ever so sharp and severe, it shall not hinder, but work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

12. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.

These words contain an answer to the prophets, inquiry; their holy endeavours to inform themselves were not slighted, for God gives them a satisfactory revelation to quiet and comfort their minds; they were informed that these things should not come to pass in their time, but the prophet and should come to pass in the times of the apostles; not unto themselves, but to us; and we must report them, under the infallible direction of the Holy Ghost, to all the world; which things the angels, &c.

You have here three sorts of students, or inquirers into the great affair of man's salvation by Jesus Christ: 1. The prophets search diligently into it; the affair of the prophecies, and were witnesses of the accomplishment of them, and so reported what they knew to others in the preaching of the gospel. 3. The angels, who most attentively pry into these matters.

Learn, (1.) A diligent endeavour after the knowledge of Christ and our duty, will certainly be answered with good success. The prophets were-answered with a revelation; Daniel's studies, and receives information; the Bereans search the scriptures, and were confirmed.

(2.) The holiest and best of men sometimes have their lawful and pious requests denied. It was both law and prophetic: the prophets desire to know more than they were permitted to know about the time of the appearance of Christ in the world, but they were denied. It is lawful and pious for good parents to pray for their wicked children, for the poor to pray against poverty, for a good man to pray against death; yet, in these honest requests, they often are denied. God is pleased to answer our necessities rather than our requests.

(3.) It is the honour and practice of a Christian to be useful to others in many cases, rather than to himself; the prophets ministered to others, not unto themselves; none of us liveth to himself, Rom. 14. 7. Nothing is more contrary to man's nature and Christian principles, than for a man to make himself his own end, and live to himself.

(4.) The revelations of God to his church, though gradual, and given by parables, are all perfectly consistent; the doctrine of the prophets and of the apostles exactly agree, as coming from the same Spirit of God.

(5.) The efficacy of the evangelical ministry depends upon the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; the gospel is the ministration of the Spirit; the success of it depends upon his operation and blessing.

(6.) The mysteries of the gospel, and the methods of man's salvation, are so glorious, that the blessed angels earnestly desire to look into them; they are curious, accurate, and industrious in pry ing into them; they consider the whole scheme of man's redemption with deep attention and admiration, particularly the points the apostle had been discoursing of; which things the angels desire to stoop down and look into, as the cherubims did continually toward the mercy-seat.

13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ;

Here the apostle begins his exhortation to them, whose glorious state he had before described, thereby instructing us, that Christianity is a doctrine according to godliness, which engaged not only to make us wiser, but better; "Wherefore, since you are so honoured and distinguished, as above," "Gird up the loins of your mind; you have a journey to go, a race to run, a warfare to accomplish, and a great work to do; as the traveller, the racer, the warrior, and the labourer, gather in, and gird up, their long and loose garments, that they may be more ready, prompt, and expeditious in their business; so you by your minds, your inner man, and affections seated there; gird them, gather them in, let them not hang loose and neglected about you; restrain their extravagances, and let the loins, or strength and vigour of your minds, be exerted in your duty; disengage yourselves from all who would hinder you, and go on resolutely in your obedience."

Beloved, be vigilant against all your spiritual dangers and enemies, and be temperate and modest in eating, drinking, apparel, recreation, business, and in the whole of your behaviour; be sober-minded also in opinion, as well as in practice, and humble in your judgment of yourselves."

And hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Some refer this to the last judgment, as if the apostle directed their hope to the final revelation of Jesus Christ; but it seems more natural to take it, as it might be rendered, "Hope perfectly, and thoroughly, for the grace that is brought to you in, or by the revelation of Jesus Christ; by the gospel, which brings life and immortality to light; hope perfectly, trust without doubting to that grace which is more often referred to in the gospel."

Learn, 1. The main work of a Christian lies in the right management of his heart and mind; the apostle's first direction is to gird up the loins of the mind.

2. The best Christians have need to be exhorted to sobriety; these excellent Christians are put in mind of it; it is required of a bishop, (1 Tim. 3. 2.) "that aged women exercise rule, young women are to be taught it, and the young men are directed to be sober-minded, Tit. 2. 4, 6.

3. A Christian's work is not over as soon as he is got into a state of grace; he must still hope and strive for more grace; when he has entered the strait gate, he must still walk in the narrow way, and gird up the loins of his mind for that purpose.

4. A strong and perfect trust in God's grace is very consistent with our best endeavours in our duty; we must hope perfectly, and yet gird up our loins, and address ourselves vigorously to the work we have to do, encouraging ourselves from the grace of Jesus Christ.

14. As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance:

The exhortation is continued, and the words may be taken either as a rule of holy living, which is both positive, (you ought to live as obedient children, as those whom God hath adopted into his family, and regenerated by his grace;) and negative; (you must not fashion yourselves according to the former lusts, in your ignorance;) or the words may be taken as an argument to press them to holiness from the consideration of what they now are, children of obedience, and what they were when they lived in lust and ignorance."

Learn, 1. The children of God ought to prove themselves to be such by their obedience to God, by their present, constant, universal obedience.

2. The best of God's children have had their times of lust and ignorance; the time has been when the whole scheme of their lives, their way and fashion, was, to accommodate and gratify their unlawful desires and vicious appetites, being grossly ignorant of God and themselves, of Christ and the gospel.

3. Persons, when converted, differ exceedingly from what they were formerly; they are people of another fashion and manner from what they were before; their inward frame, behaviour, speech and conversation, are much altered from what they were in times past. The lusts and extravagances of sinners are both the fruits and the signs of their ignorance.

15. But as he who hath called you, is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;" 16. Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy.

Here is a noble rule enforced by strong arguments; Be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Who is sufficient for this? And yet it is required in strong terms, and enforced by three reasons, taken from the grace of God, in calling us; from his command, it is written; and from his example, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

Learn, 1. The grace of God in calling a sinner, is a powerful engagement to holiness; it is a great favour to be called effectually by divine grace out of a state of sin and misery into the possession of all the blessings of the new covenant; and great favours are strong obligations; they enable as well as oblige to be holy.

2. Complete holiness is the desire and duty of every Christian: here is a twofold rule of holiness; (1.) It must, for the extent of it, be universal; we must be holy, and in all manner of conversation;
in all civil and religious affairs, in every condition, prosperous or adverse; towards all people, friends or enemies; in all our intercourse and business still we must be holy. (2.) For the pattern of it, we must be holy as God is holy: we must imitate him, though we can never equal him; he is perfectly, unchangeably, and eternally holy; and we should aspire after such a state. The consideration of the holiness of God should oblige us to the highest degrees of holiness we can attain unto.

3. The written word of God is the surest rule of a Christian's life, and by this rule we are commanded to be holy every way.

4. The Old-Testament commands are to be studied and obeyed in the times of the New Testament; the apostle, by virtue of a command deliverated several times by Moses, requires holiness in all Christians.

17. And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear:

The apostle does not here express any doubt at all whether these Christians would call upon their heavenly Father, but supposes they would certainly do it, and from that argues with them to pass the time of their sojourning here in fear; "If you own the great God as a Father and a Judge, you ought to live the time of your sojourning here in his fear."[1]

Learn, 1. All good Christians look upon them-

1 Theit themselves in this world as pilgrims and sojourners, as strangers in a distant country, passing to another, to which they properly belong, Ps. 39. 12. Heb. 11. 13.
2. The whole time of our sojourning here is to be passed in the fear of God.

3. The consideration of God as a Judge, is not improper for those who can truly call him Father, Holy confidence in God as a Father, and an awful fear of him as a Judge, are very consistent; to re-yard this, as a Judge, is a singular means to endeavor him to us as a Father.

4. The judgment of God will be without respect of persons, according to every man's work. No external relation to him will protect any; the Jew can God Father, and Abraham father, but God will not respect persons, nor favour their cause, from personal considerations, but judge them according to their works; the works of men will in the great day discover their persons: God will make all the world to know who are his by their works; we are obliged to faith, holiness, and obedience, and our works will be an evidence whether we have complied with our obligations or not.

18. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; 19. But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot.

The apostle having exhorted to pass the time of our life in the fear of God, from this consideration, that we call on the Father, he adds, in these words, a second argument, because, or forasmuch as we are redeemed by the Son, &c. Herein he puts them in mind, 1. That they were redeemed, or brought back again, by a ransom paid to the Father. 2. That they were redeemed for their redemption; not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ. 3. They knew this; Forasmuch as ye know, and cannot pretend ignorance of this great affair. 4. From what they were redeemed; from a vain conversation received by tradition.

Learn (1.) The consideration of our redemption ought to be a constant and powerful inducement to holiness, and the fear of God.

(2.) God expects that a Christian should live answerably to what he knows, and therefore we have great need to be put in mind of what we already know, Ps. 39. 4.

(3.) Neither silver nor gold, nor any of the cor-rutable things of this world, can redeem so much as one soul; they are often snares, temptations, and hindrances to man's salvation, but they can by no means purchase or procure it; they are corruptible, and therefore cannot redeem an incorruptible and immortal soul.

(4.) The blood of Jesus Christ is the only price of man's redemption; the redemption of man is real, not metaphorical; we are bought with a price, and the price is equal to the purchase, for it is the precious blood of Christ, it is the blood of an innogent Lamb without blemish and without spot, whom the paschal Lamb represented, and of an infinite Person, being the Son of God, and therefore is called the blood of God, Acts 20. 28.

(5.) The design of Christ in shedding his most precious blood, was, to redeem us, not only from eternal misery hereafter, but from a vain conversation in this world. That conversation is vain, which is empty, frivolous, trifling, and unserviceable to the glory of God; religion, the conviction of unbelievers, and the comfort and satisfaction of a man's own conscience. Not only the open wickedness, but the vanity and unprofitab-ility of our conversation is highly dangerous.

(6.) A man's conversation may carry an appearance of devotion, and may please antiquity, custom, and tradition, in its defence, and yet after all be a most vain conversation. The Jews had a deal to say to the Gentiles, and argued high for their formalities, and yet their conversation was so vain, that only the blood of Christ could redeem them from it. An-iquity is no certain rule of verity, nor is it a wise resolution, "I will live and die in such a way, because my forefathers did so."

20. Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, 21. Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God.

The Redeemer is further described, not only as a Lamb without spot, but as one, 1. That was foreordained before the foundation of the world, foreordained or foreknown. When prescience is ascribed to God, it implies more than bare prospect or consideration. It imports an act of the will, a resonovation that the thing shall be, Acts 2. 23. God did not only foreknow, but determine and decree, that his Son should die for man, and this decree was before the foundation of the world. Time and the world began together; before the commencement of time there was nothing but eternity.

2. That he was manifest in these last days for you. He was manifested or demonstrated to be that Redeemer whom God had fore-ordained. He was manifested by his birth, by his Father's testimoni, and by his own works, especially by his resurrec
22. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

Here the apostle begins another exhortation, to brotherly love, wherein he supposes that the gospel had already such an effect upon them, as to purify their souls, while they obeyed it through the Spirit, and that had produced in them an unfeigned love of the brethren; and from thence he argues with them to proceed to a higher degree of affection, to love one another with a pure heart fervently.

Learn. 1. It is not to be doubted but that every sincere Christian purifies his soul. The apostle takes that for granted; seeing ye have, &c. To purify the soul supposes some great uncleanness and defilement, which had preceded it. The Apostle John answers the question of how the heart is removed. Neither the Levitical purifications under the law, nor the hypocritical purifications of the outward man, can effect this.

2. The word of God is the great instrument of a sinner’s purification; Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth. The gospel is called truth, in opposition to types and shadows, and to error and falsehood. This truth is effectual to purify the soul, if it be obeyed, John 17. 17. Many hear the truth, but are never purified by it, because they will not submit to it, nor obey it.

3. The spirit of God is the great Agent in the purification of man’s soul. The Spirit convinces the soul of its impurities, furnishes those virtues and graces that both adorn and purify, such as faith, (Acts 15. 9.) hope, (1 John 3. 5.) and the love of Jesus Christ. The Spirit excites our endeavours, and makes them successful. The aid of the Spirit does not supersede our own industry; these people purified their own souls, but it was through the Spirit.

4. The souls of Christians must be purified before they can so much as love one another unfeignedly. There are those lusts and partialities in man’s nature, that without divine grace we can neither love God nor one another as we ought to do; there is no charity but out of a pure heart.

5. It is the duty of all Christians sincerely and fervently to love one another. Our affection to one another must be sincere and real, and it must be fervent, constant, and extensive.

23. Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

This duty of loving one another with a pure heart fervently, the apostle further presses upon Christians from the consideration of their spiritual relation; they are all born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, &c. Hence we may learn,

1. That all Christians are born again. The apostle speaks of it as what is common to all serious Christians, and by this they are brought into a new and a near relation to one another, they become brethren by their new birth.

The word of God is the great means of regeneration, Jam. 1. 18. The grace of regeneration is conveyed by the gospel.

3. This new and second birth is much more desirable and excellent than the first. This the apostle teaches by preferring the incorruptible to the corruptible seed. By the one we become the children of men, by the other the sons and daughters of the Most High. The word of God, being compared to seed, teaches us that though it be little in appearance, yet it is wonderful in operation; though it lies hid a while, yet it grows up and produces excellent fruit at last.

4. Those that are regenerate should love one another with a pure heart fervently. Brethren by nature are bound to love one another; but the obligation is double where there is a spiritual relation, they are under the same government, partake of the same privileges, and stand in the same interest.

5. The word of God liveth and abideth for ever. This word is a living word, or a lively word, Heb. 4. 12. It is a means of spiritual life, to begin it and persevere in it, animating and exciting us in our duty, till it brings us to eternal life; and it is abiding; it remains eternally true, and abides in the hearts of the regenerate for ever.

24. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: 25. But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

The apostle having given an account of the excellency of the renewed spiritual man as born again, not of corruptible but incorruptible seed, he now sets before us the vanity of the natural man, taking him with all his ornaments and advantages about him; For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; and nothing can make him a solid substantial being, but the being born again of the incorruptible seed, the word of God, which will transform him into a most excellent creature, whose glory will not fade like a flower, but shine like an angel; and this word is daily set before you in the preaching of the gospel.

Learn, 1. Man, in his utmost flourish and glory, is still a withering, fading, dying creature. Take him singly, all flesh is grass. In his entrance into the world, in his life and in his fall, he is like to grass, Job 14. 2. Isa. 40. 6. 7. Take him in all his glory, even that is as the flower of grass; his wit, beauty, strength, vigour, wealth, honour; these are but as the flower of grass, which soon withers and dies away.

2. The only way to render this perishing creature solid and incorruptible, is, to entertain and receive the word of God, for that remains everlasting truth, and, if received, will preserve him to everlasting life, and abide with him for ever.

The bosom of God, the apostles preached the same doctrine. This word which Isaiah and others delivered in the Old Testament, is the same which the apostles preached in the New.

CHAP. II.

The general exhortation to holiness is continued and enforced by several reasons taken from the foundation on which Christians are built, Jesus Christ, and from their spiritual blessings and privileges in him. The means of obtaining it, the word of God, is recommended, and all contrary qualities are condemned, v. 1. 12. Particular directions are given, how subjects ought to obey the magistrates, and serve their masters, patiently suffering in well doing, in imitation of Christ, v. 13, to the end.

1. WHEREFORE laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil-speaking.

The holy apostle has been recommending mutual charity, and setting forth the excellencies of the word of God, calling it an incorruptible seed, and saying that it liveth and abideth for ever. He pursues his discourse, and very properly comes in with this necessary advice, Wherefore laying aside all malice, &c. These are such sort of sins as both destroy charity, and hinder the efficacy of the word, and consequently prevent our regeneration. His advice is, to lay aside or put off what is evil, as one would do an old rotten garment; “Cast it away with indignation, never put it on more.” The sins to be put off, or thrown aside, are,

1. Malice, which may be taken more generally for all sorts of wickedness, as Jam. 1. 21. 1 Cor. 5. 8. But in a more confined sense, malice is anger resting in the bosom of a man, who is continually offended at everything, and when it cannot be appeased, or when it cannot be satisfied with injuries, it is a disposition to mischief, to be always on the look out for mischief, as is shown by the two following.

2. Guile, or deceit in words. So it comprehends flattery, falsehood, and delusion, which is a crafty imposing upon another’s ignorance or weakness, to his damage.

3. Hypocrisies. The word being plural, comprehends all sorts of hypocrisies. In matters of religious hypocrisy is counterfeit piety. In civil conversation hypocrisy is counterfeit friendship, which is much practised by those who give high compliments, which they do not believe, or make promises which they never intend to perform, or pretend friendship when mischief lies in their hearts.

4. All envies; every thing that may be called envy, which is a grieving at the good and welfare of another; at their abilities, prosperity, fame, or successful labours.

5. Evil speaking, which is detraction, speaking against another, or defaming him; it is rendered backbiting, 2 Cor. 12. 20. Rom. 1. 30.

Learn, 1. The best Christians have need to be cautious and warned against the worst sins, such as malice, hypocrisy, envy. They are but sanctified in part, and are still liable to temptations.

2. Our best services toward God will neither please him, nor profit us, if we are not conscientious in our duties to men. The sins here mentioned are offences against the second table. These must be laid aside, or else we cannot receive the word of God as we ought to do.

3. Whereas it is said, all malice, all guile, learn, That one sin, not laid aside, will hinder our spiritual profit and everlasting welfare.

4. Malice, envy, hatred, hypocrisy and evil-speaking, generally go together. Evil-speaking is a sign that malice and guile lie in the heart; and all of them combine to hinder our profiting by the word of God.

2. As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

The apostle, like a wise physician, having prescribed the purging out vicious humours, goes on to direct to diet, and regular food, that they may benefit thereby. The duty exhorted to, is, a strong and constant desire of the word of God, which word is here called reasonable milk. Only that phrase not being proper English, our translators rendered it the milk of the word, by which we are to understand food proper for the soul, or a reasonable creature, whereby the mind, not the body, is nourished and strengthened. This milk of the word must be sincere, not adulterated by the mixtures of men, who often corrupt the word of God, 2 Cor. 2. 17. The manner how they are to desire this sincere milk of the word, is stated thus; As new-born babes. He puts them in mind of their regeneration. A new life requires suitable food. They being newly born, must desire the milk of the word. Infants desire common milk, and their desires towards it are fervent and frequent, arising from an impatient sense of hunger, and accompanied with the best endeavours the infant is capable of; such must Christians’ desires be after the word of God: and that for this end, that they may grow thereby, that we may improve in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, 2 Pet. 3. 18.

Learn, 1. Strong desires and affections to the word of God, are a sure evidence of a person’s being born again. If they be such desires as the baby has for the milk, they prove that the person is new-born. They are the lowest evidence, but yet they are certain.

2. Growth and improvement in wisdom and grace are the design and desire of every Christian; all spiritual means are for edification and improvement. The word of God, rightly used, does not leave a man as it finds him, but improves and makes him better.

3. If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious.

If so be, or since that, or forasmuch as, ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. The apostle does not express a doubt, but affirms that those good Christians had tasted the goodness of God, and from hence argues with them, “You ought to lay aside these vile sins; (v. 1.) you ought to desire the word of God, you ought to grow thereby, since you cannot deny but that you have tasted that the Lord is gracious.” The next verse assures us, that the Lord has given grace to all men, He has not chosen only a certain of the elect:—

Learn, 1. Our Lord Jesus Christ is very gracious to his people. He is in himself infinitely good; he is very kind, free, and merciful to miserable sinners, he is pitiful and good to the undeserving; he has in him a fulness of grace.
a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

The foundation was laid, v. 4. Here is the superstructure, the materials built up in it: Ye also, as lively stones, are built up. The apostle, recommending the Christian church and constitution to these dispersed Jews. It was natural for them to object, that the Christian church had no such glorious temple, nor such a numerous priesthood; but its dispensation was mean, the services and sacrifices of it having nothing of the pomp and grandeur which the Jewish dispensation had. To which the apostle answers, that the Christian church is a much nobler fabric than the Jewish temple, it is a living wall, consisting not of dead materials, but of living parts. Christ, the Foundation, is a living Stone, Christians are lively stones, and these make a spiritual house, and they are a holy priesthood; and though they have no bloody sacrifices of beasts to offer, yet they have much better and more acceptable, and they have an Altar too on which to present their offerings; for they offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

Learn. 1. All sincere Christians have in them a principle of spiritual life, derived to them from Christ their Head: therefore as he is called a living Stone, so they are called lively, or living stones; not dead in trespasses and sins, but alive to God by regeneration and the working of the divine Spirit.

2. The Christian church is a spiritual house.

The Foundation is Christ, Eph. 2. 20. The builders are ministers. 1 Cor. 3. 10. The Inhabitant is God, Eph. 2. 22. It is a house for its strength, beauty, variety of parts, and usefulness of the whole; it is spiritual in its Foundation—Christ Jesus; in its materials of it—spiritual persons; in its furniture—the graces of the Spirit; in its connexion—being held together by the Spirit of God, and by one common faith; and in its use—which is spiritual work, to offer up spiritual sacrifices. This house is daily built up, every part of it improving, and the whole supplied in every age by the addition of new particular members.

3. All good Christians are a holy priesthood. The apostle speaks here of the generality of Christians, and tells them they are a holy priesthood; they are all select persons, sacred to God, serviceable to others, well-endowed with heavenly gifts and graces, and well employed.

4. This holy priesthood must and will offer up spiritual sacrifices to God. The spiritual sacrifices which Christians are to offer, are, their bodies, souls, affections, prayers, praises, alms, and other duties.

5. The most spiritual sacrifices of the best men are not acceptable to God, but through Jesus Christ; he is the only High Priest, through whom and our services can be accepted; therefore bring all your oblations to him, and by him present them to God.

6. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

What was asserted before of Christ, his being a living Stone, &c. is here proved from Isa. 28. 16. Observe the manner of the apostle's quoting scripture; not by book, chapter and verse; for those distinctions were not then made, so no more was said than a reference to Moses, David, or the prophets, except once a particular psalm was named, Acts 13. 33. In their quotations they kept rather to the sense than the words of scripture, as appears from what is recited from the prophet in this place.
He does not quote the scripture, either the Hebrew or LXX, word for word, yet makes a just and true quotation. The true sense of scripture, may be justly and fully expressed in other than in scripture-words. It is contained. The verb is active, but our translators render it passively, to avoid the difficulty of finding a nominative case for it, which had puzzled many interpreters before them.

The matter of the quotation is this, Behold, I lay in Zion.

Learn. 1. In the weighty matters of religion we must depend entirely upon scripture-proof; Christ and his apostles appealed to Moses, David, and the ancient prophets. The word of God is the only rule God hath given us; it is a perfect and sufficient rule; and it is an intelligible and a certain rule.

2. The accounts that God hath given us in scripture concerning his Son Jesus Christ, are what require our strictest attention; Behold, I lay— John calls for the like attention, John 1. 29. These demands of attention to Christ show us the excellency of the matter, the importance of it, and our stupidity and dulness.

3. The constituting of Christ Jesus Head of the church, is an eminent work of God; I lay in Zion. The latter part of the purpose for head of the church, is a human contrivance and an arrogant presumption; Christ only is the Foundation and Head of the church of God.

4. Jesus Christ is the chief Corner-stone that God hath laid in his spiritual building. The corner-stone stays inseparably with the building, supports it, unites it, and adorns it. So does Christ by his holy church, his spiritual house.

5. Jesus Christ is the Corner-stone for the support and salvation of nations but such as are his sincere people: none but Zion, and such as are of Zion; not for Babylon, not for his enemies.

6. True faith in Jesus Christ is the only way to prevent a man’s utter confusion. Three things put a man into great confusion, and faith prevents them all—disappointment, sin, and judgment. Faith has a remedy for each.

7. Unto you therefore who believe, he is precious; but unto them who are disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner.

These words are an inference from what went before. Jesus Christ is said to be the chief Cornerstone. Hence the apostle infers with respect to good men: ‘To you therefore who believe he is precious, or he is an Honour. Christ is the Crown and Honour of a Christian; you who believe will be so far from being ashamed of him, that you will boast of him, and glory in him for ever.’

As to wicked men, the disobedient will go on to disallow and reject Jesus Christ; but God is resolved that he shall be, in despite of all opposition, the Head of the corner.

Learn. 1. Whatever is by just and necessary consequence deduced from scripture, may be depended upon with as much certainty as if it were contained in express words of scripture. The apostle draws an inference from the prophet’s testimony. The prophet did not expressly say so, but yet he said that from which the consequence was unavoidable. Our Saviour bids them search the scriptures, because they testified of him; and yet no place in those scriptures to which he there refers them, said, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah. Yet those scriptures do say, that he who should be born of a virgin, before the scripture departed from Judah, during the second temple, and after Daniel’s seventy weeks, was the Messiah; but such was Jesus Christ.

To collect which conclusion, one must make use of reason, history, eye-sight, experience; and yet it is an infallible scripture-conclusion for all that.

2. The business of a faithful minister is, to apply general truths to the particular condition and state of their hearers. The apostle quotes a passage (1. 5.) out of the prophet, then he applies it severally to good and bad. This requires wisdom, courage, and ability. But it is very profitable to the hearers.

3. Jesus Christ is exceeding precious to all the faithful. The majesty and grandeur of his person, the dignity of his office, his near relation, his wond'rous works, his immense love; every thing engages the faithful to the highest esteem and respect for Jesus Christ.

4. Disobedient people have no true faith. By disobedient people, understand those that are unpersuadable, incredulous, and impenitent. These may have some right notions, but no solid faith.

5. They that ought to be builders of the church of Christ, are often the worst enemies that Christ has in the world. In the Old Testament the false prophets did the most mischief; and in the New Testament the greatest opposition and cruelty that Christ met with, were from the scribes, pharisees, chief-priests, and elders. If Christ pretended to build and take care of the church; still the hierarchy of Rome is the worst enemy in the world to Jesus Christ and his interest.

6. God will carry on his own work, and support the interest of Jesus Christ in the world, notwithstanding the falseness of pretended friends, and the opposition of his worst enemies.

3. And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them who stumble at the word, being disobedient; whereunto also they were appointed.

The words are taken from Isa. 8. 13, 14. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself—and he shall be for a Stone of stumbling, and for a Rock of offence. From whence it is plain, that Jesus Christ is the Lord of hosts, and consequently the most high God.

The Lord of hosts is the chief priest, the head, and the people followed their leaders; and so Christ became to them a Stone of stumbling, and a Rock of offence, at which they stumbled, and hurt themselves; and in return he fell upon them as a mighty stone or rock, and punished them with destruction; (Matt. 21. 44.) Whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

Learn. 1. All those that are disobedient, take offence at the word of God; They stumble at the word, being disobedient. They are offended with Christ himself, with his doctrine and the purity of his precepts; but the Jewish doctors more especially stumbled at the meanness of his appearance, and the proposal of trusting only to him for their justification before God. They could not be brought to seek justification by faith, but as it were by the works of the law; for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone, Rom. 9. 32.

2. The same blessed Jesus, who is the Author of salvation to some, is to others the occasion of their sin and destruction. He is set for the rising and fall of many in Israel. He is not the author of their sin, but only the Occasion of it; their own disobedience makes them stumble at him, and reject him; which he punishes, as a judge, with destruction. Those who rejected him as a Saviour, will split upon him as a Rock.

3. God himself hath appointed everlasting destruction to all those who stumble at the word, being disobedient. All those who go on resolutely in their infidelity and contempt of the gospel, are appointed to eternal destruction; and God from eternity knows who they are.

4. To see the Jews generally rejecting Christ, and multitudes in all ages slaying him, ought not to discourage us in our love and duty to him; for this had been foretold by the prophets long ago, and is a confirmation of our faith both in the scriptures and in the Messiah.

9. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

The Jews were exceeding tender of their ancient privileges, of being the only people of God, taken into a special covenant with him, and separated from all the nations of the world. "Now," says the apostle, "if we submit to the gospel-constitution, we shall lose all this, and stand upon the same level with the Gentiles." To this objection the apostle answers, 1. That if they did not submit, they were ruined, v. 7, 8. 2. That if they did submit, they should lose no real advantage, but continue still what they desired to be, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, &c.

Learn, (1.) All true Christians are a chosen generation; they all make one family, a sort and species of people distinct from the common world; of another spirit, principle, and practice; which they could never be, if they were not chosen in Christ to be such, and sanctified by his Spirit.

(2.) All the true servants of Christ are a royal priesthood; they are royal in their relation to God and Christ; in their power with God, and over themselves; in their spiritual enemies they are princely in the improvements and the excellency of their own spirits, and in their hopes and expectations; they are a royal priesthood, separated from sin and sinners, consecrated to God, and offering to God spiritual services and oblations acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.

(3.) All Christians, wheresoever they be, compose one holy nation; they are one nation, collected under one head, growing up in the same manners and customs, and governed by the same laws. And they are a holy nation, because consecrated and devoted to God, renewed and sanctified by his Holy Spirit.

(4.) It is the honour of the servants of Christ, that they are God's peculiar people. They are the people of his acquisition, choice, care, and delight. These four dignities of all genuine Christians are not natural to them; for their first state is a state of horrid darkness, but they are effectually called out of darkness into a state of marvellous light, joy, pleasure, and prosperity; with this intent and view, that they should shew forth, by words and actions, the virtues and praises of him who hath called them.

10. Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

To make this people content, and thankful for the great mercies and dignities brought unto them by the gospel, the apostle advises them to compare their former and their present state. Time was, when they were not a people, nor had they obtained mercy, but were solemnly disgraced and divorced; (Jer. 3. 8. Hos. 1. 6, 9.) but now they are taken in again to be the people of God, and have obtained mercy.

Learn, 1. The best people ought frequently to look back upon what they were in time past.

2. The people of God are the most valuable people in the world; all the rest are not a people; good for little.

3. To be brought into the number of the people of God is a very great mercy, and it may be obtained.

11. Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul.

Even the best of men, the chosen generation, the people of God, need an exhortation to abstain from the worst sins, which the apostle here proceeds most earnestly and affectionately to warn them against. Knowing the difficulty, and yet the importance of the duty, he uses his utmost interest in them; Dearly beloved, I beseech you.

The duty is to abstain from, and to suppress, the first inclination or rise of fleshly lusts. Many of them proceed from the corruption of nature, which in their exercise depend upon the body, gratifying some sensual appetite, or inordinate inclination of the flesh. These Christians ought to avoid, considering,

1. The respect they have with God and good men; they are dearly beloved.

2. Their condition in the world: they are strangers and pilgrims, and should not impede their passage by giving into the wickedness and lusts of the country through which they pass.

3. The mischief and danger these sins do: "they war against the soul; and therefore your souls ought to war against them."

Learn, (1.) The grand mischief that sin does to man is this; it wars against the soul; it destroys the moral liberty of the soul; it abates the dignity of the soul; hinders its present prosperity, and plunges it into everlasting misery.

(2.) Of all sorts of sin, none are more sinful to the soul than fleshly lusts. Carnal appetites, lewdness, and sensuality, are most odious to God, and destructive to man's soul. It is a sore judgment to be given up to them.

12. Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.

These Christian people are here exhorted to adorn their profession by an honest conversation. Their conversation in every turn, every instance and every action of their lives, ought to be honest; that is, good, lovely, decent, amiable, and without blame, and that because they lived among the Gentiles, people of another religion, and who were inveterate enemies to them, who did already slander them, and constantly speak evil of them as of evil-doers.

"A clean, just, good conversation may not only stop their mouths, but may possibly be a means to bring them to glorify God, and turn to you, when they shall see you excel all others in good works. They now call you evil-doers; vindicate yourselves by good works, this is the way to convince them. There is a day of visitation coming, wherein God may call them by his word and his grace to repentance; and then they will glorify God, and applaud you, for your excellent conversation, Luke 1. 68. When the gospel shall come among them, and take effect, a good conversation will encourage them in their conversion, but an evil one will obstruct it."

Note, 1. A Christian profession should be attended with an honest conversation, Phil. 4. 8.
13. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; 14. Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

The general rule of a Christian conversation, is, this, it must be honest; which it cannot be, if there be not a conscientious discharge of all relative duties: the apostle here begins to treat of those distinctly. Christians were not only reputed innovators in religion, but disturbers of the state; it was highly necessary therefore, that the apostle should settle the rules and measures of obedience to the civil magistrate, which he does here; where,

1. The duty required is submission, which contains loyalty and reverence to their persons, obedience to their just laws and commands, and subjection to legal penalties.

2. The persons or objects to whom this submission is due are described.

(1.) More generally; every ordinance of man. Magistracy is certainly of divine right; but the particular form of government, the power of the magistrate, and the persons who are to execute this power, are of human institution; and are governed by the laws and constitutions of each particular state; and this is a general rule, binding in all nations, let the established form of government be what it will.

(2.) Particularly; to the king, as supreme; first in dignity and most eminent in degree; the king is a legal person, not a tyrant: or unto governors, deputies, proconsuls, rulers of provinces, who are sent by him, that is, commissioned by him to govern.

3. The reasons to enforce this duty, are,

(1.) For the Lord's sake, who has ordained magistracy for the good of mankind, who has required obedience and submission, (Rom. 13.) and whose honour is concerned in the dutiful behaviour of subjects to their sovereigns.

(2.) From the end and use of the magistrate's office, which is, to punish evil-doers, and to praise and encourage all them that do well. They were appointed for the good of societies; and where this end is not pursued, the fault is not in their institution, but their practice.

(3.) True religion is the best support of civil government; it requires submission for the Lord's sake, and for conscience sake.

[2.] All the punishments, and all the magistrates in the world, cannot hinder, but there will be evil-doers in it.

[3.] The best way the magistrate can take to discharge his own office, and to amend the world, is, to punish well and reward well.

15. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

Here is another reason why Christians should submit to the civil magistrate, because it is the will of God, and, consequently, their duty; and because it is the way to put to silence the malicious slanders of ignorant and foolish men.

Learn, 1. The will of God is, to a good man, the strongest reason for any duty.

2. Obedience to magistrates is a considerable branch of a Christian's duty; so is the will of God.

A greater duty than this is none, in all relations, to behave himself so as to put to silence the unreasonably reproaches of the most ignorant and foolish men.

4. Those who speak against religion and religious people, are ignorant and foolish.

16. As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

The Jews, from Deut. 17. 15. concluded, that they were bound to obey no sovereign, but one taken from among their own brethren; and the converted Jews thought to be free from submission, by their relation to Christ. To prevent these mistakes, the apostle tells the Christians that they were free; but from what? Not from duty and obedience to God's law, which requires subjection to the civil magistrate; they were free spiritually from the bondage of sin and Satan, and the ceremonial law; but they must not make their Christian liberty a cloak for covering any wickedness, or the neglect of any duty toward God, or toward their superiors, but must still remember they were the servants of God.

Learn, 1. All the servants of Christ are free men; (John 8. 36.) they are free from Satan's dominion, the law's condemnation, the wrath of God, the uneasiness of duty, and the terrors of death.

2. The servants of Jesus Christ ought to be very careful not to abuse their Christian liberty; they must not make it a cover or cloak for any wickedness against God, or disobedience to superiors.

The apostle concludes his discourse concerning the duty of subjects with four admirable precepts;

1. Honour all men. A due respect is to be given to all men; the poor are not to be despised; (Prov 17. 5) the wicked must be honoured, not for their wickedness, but for any other qualities, such as wit, prudence, courage, eminency of employment, or the holy head: as David, Job, Moses, Elijah, the prophets, and the apostles, never scrupled to give due honour to bad men.

2. Love the brotherhood. All Christians are a fraternity, united to Christ the Head, alike disposed and qualified, nearly related in the same interest, having communion one with another, and going to the same home, they should therefore love one another with fraternal affection.

3. Fear God with the highest reverence, duty, and submission; if this be wanting, none of the other three duties can be performed as they ought.

4. Honour the king, with that highest honour that is peculiarly due to him above other men.

18. Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

The case of servants wanted an apostolical determination as well as that of subjects, for they imagined that their Christian liberty set them free from their brutal, cruel masters; to this the apostle answers, Servants, be subject. By servants, he means those who were strictly such, whether hired, or bought with money, or taken in the wars, or born in the house, or those who served by contract for a limited time, as apprentices; these he orders to be subject, to do their business faithfully and honestly, to conduct themselves, as inferiors ought, with reverence and affection, and to submit patiently to hardships and inconveniences; this subjection they owe to their masters, who have a right to their service; and that not only to the good and gentle, such as use them well, and abate somewhat of their right, but even to the crooked and perverse, who are scarcely to be pleased at all.

Learn. 1. Servants ought to conduct themselves to their masters with submission, and fear of displeasing them.

2. The sinful misconduct of one relation does not justify the sinful behaviour of the other; the servant is bound to do his duty, though the master be sinfully misconducted.

3. Good people are to be meek and gentle to their servants, and inferiors.

19. For this is thank-worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. 20. For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

Our holy apostle shows his love and concern for the souls of poor servants, as well as for higher people; herein he ought to be imitated by all inferior ministers, who should distinctly apply their counsels to the younger, the meaner, the younger, and the poorer sort of their hearers, as well as others. Having charged them to be subject, he concedes to reason with them about it: if they were patient under their hardships, while they suffered unjustly, and continued doing their duty to their unbelieving and outward masters, this would be acceptable to God, and he would reward all that they suffered for conscience toward God, but to be patient when they were justly chastised, this deserves no condemnation at all; it is only doing well and suffering patiently for that, which is acceptable with God.

Learn, 1. There is no condition so mean, but a man may live conscientiously in it, and glorify God in it; the meanest servant may do so.

2. The most conscientious persons are very often the greatest sufferers; for conscience toward God they suffer wrongfully; they do well, and suffer for it, but these are the greatest sufferers; they are praise-worthy, they do honour to God and to religion, and they are accepted of him; and this is their highest support and satisfaction.

3. Deserved sufferings must be endured with patience; if ye be buffeted for your faults, ye must take it patiently. Sufferings in this world are not always pledges of our future happiness; if children, or servants are rude and undutiful, and suffer for it, this will neither be acceptable with God, nor procure the praise of men.

21. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

More reasons are given to encourage Christian servants to patience under unjust sufferings: 1. From their Christian calling and profession; hereunto were ye called. 2. From the example of Christ, who suffered for us, and so became our Example, that we should follow his steps. From whence learn,

(1.) Good Christians are a sort of people called to be sufferers, and therefore they must expect it; by the terms of Christianity they are bound to deny themselves, and take up the cross; they are called by the commands of Christ, by the dispensations of Providence, by the preparations of divine grace, and, by the practice of Jesus Christ, they are bound to suffer, when thus called to it.

(2.) Jesus Christ suffered for you, or for us; it was not the Father that suffered, but he whom the Father sanctified, and sent into the world, for that end; it was both the body and soul of Christ that suffered, and he suffered for us, in our stead, and for our good, v. 24.

(3.) The sufferings of Christ should quiet us under the most unjust and cruel sufferings we meet with in the world; he suffered voluntarily, not for himself, but for us, with the utmost readiness, with perfect patience, from all quarters, and all this, though he was God-man; shall not we sinners, who deserve the worst, submit to the light afflictions of this life, which work for us unspeakable advantages afterward?

22. Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: 23. Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

The example of Christ's submission and patience is here explained and amplified; Christ suffered, 1. Wrongfully, and without cause; for he did no sin, but was obedient to God even unto death, being reviled, reviled not any one; he wrought no iniquity of any sort whatever; neither was guile found in his mouth; (Isa. 53. 9.) his words, as well as actions, were all sincere, just and right.

2. Patiently; when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when they blasphemed him, mocked him, called him foul names, he was dumb, and opened not his mouth; when they went further, to real injuries, beating, buffeting, and crowning him with thorns, he threatened not; but committed himself and his cause to God that judgeth righteously, who would in time clear his innocency, and avenge him on his enemies.

Learn, (1.) Our blessed Redeemer was perfectly holy, and so free from sin, that no temptation, no provocation whatsoever, could extort from him so much as the least sinful or indecent word.

(2.) Provocations to sin can never justify the commission of it; the rudeness, cruelty, and injustice of enemies, will not justify Christians in reviling and revenging; the reasons for sin can never be so great, but we have always stronger reasons to avoid it.

(3.) The judgment of God will determine justly upon every man, and every cause; and thither we ought, with patience and resignation, to refer ourselves.

24. Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we were healed.
1. The sufferings he underwent, were, stripes, wounds, and death, the death of the cross; servile and ignominious punishments!
2. The reason of his sufferings; he bare our sins; which teaches,
   (1.) That Christ, in his suffering, stood charged with our sins, as one who had undertaken to put them away, by the sacrifice of himself; Isa. 53. 12.
   (2.) That he bare the punishment of them, and thereby satisfied divine justice.
3. That hereby he takes away our sins, and removes them away from us; as the scape-goat did typically bear the sins of the people on his head, and then carried them quite away, (Lev. 16. 21.) so the Lamb of God does first bear our sins in his own body, and thereby take away the sin of the world, John 1. 29.
4. The fruits of Christ's sufferings are, (1.) Our sanctification, consisting of the death, the mortification of sin, and a new holy life of righteousness; for both which we have an example, and powerful motives and abilities also, from the death and resurrection of Christ. (2.) Our justification; Christ was bruised and crucified as an expiatory Sacrifice, and by his stripes we are healed.

Learn, [1.] Jesus Christ bore the sins of all his people, and expiated them by his death upon the cross.
[2.] No man can depend safely upon Christ, as having borne his sin, and expiated his guilt, till he dies unto sin, and lives unto righteousness.

25. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

The apostle concludes his advice to Christian servants, putting them in mind of the difference between their former and present condition. They were as sheep going astray; which represents, 1. Man's sin; he goes astray; it is his own act, he is not driven, but does voluntarily go astray. 2. His misery, he goes astray from the pasture, from the shepherd, and from the flock, and so exposes himself to innumerable dangers. 3. Here is the recovery of these by conversion; but are now returned. The word is passive, and shews that the return of sinners is the effect of divine grace. This return is, from all their errors and wanderings, to Christ, who is the true careful Shepherd, that loves his sheep, and laid down his life for them; who is the most vigilant Pastor, and Bishop, or Overseer of souls.

(2.) Jesus Christ is the supreme Shepherd and Bishop of souls, who is always resident with his flock, and watchful over them.
(3.) Those that expect the love and care of this universal Pastor, must return to him; must die unto sin, and live unto righteousness.

CHAP. III.

Wherein the apostle describes the duties of husbands and wives one to another, beginning with the duty of the wife, v. 1. 7. He exhorts Christians to unity, love, compassion, peace, and patience under sufferings; to oppose the slanders of their enemies, not by returning evil for evil, or railing for railing, but by blessing; by a ready account of their faith and hope, and by keeping a good conscience, v. 8. 17. To encourage them to this, he proposes the example of Christ, who suffered, the just for the unjust, but yet punished the old world for their disobedience, and saved the few who were faithful in the days of Noah.

1. Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; 2. While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear.

The apostle having treated of the duties of subjects to their sovereigns, and of servants to their masters, he comes now to explain the duty of wives to their husbands, lest the Christian matrons should imagine, that the interest in all Christian privileges, exempted them from subjection to their Pagan or Jewish husbands; the apostle here tells them, that the duty of wives consists, 1. In subjection, or an affectionate submission to the will, and obedience to the just authority, of their own husbands; which obliging conduct would be the most likely way to win those disobedient and unbelieving husbands, who had rejected the word, or who attended to no other evidence of the truth of it, than what they saw in the prudent, peaceable, and exemplary conversation of their wives.

2. In a chaste conversation, which their unbelieving husbands would accurately observe and attend to.
3. In fear, or reverence to their husbands, Eph. 5. 33.

Learn, (1.) Every distinct relation has its particular duties, which ministers ought to preach, and the people ought to understand.
(2.) A cheerful subjection, and a loving, reverential respect, are duties which Christian women owe their husbands, whether they be good or bad; these were due from Eve to Adam before the Fall, and are still required, though much more difficult now than they were before, Gen. 3. 16. 1 Tim. 2. 11.

(3.) Though the design of the word of the gospel is to win and gain souls to Christ Jesus, yet there are many so obstinate, that they will not be won by the word.

(4.) There is nothing more powerful, next to the word of God, to win people, than a good conversation, and the careful discharge of relative duties.
(5.) Irreligion and infidelity do not dissolve the bonds, nor dispense with the duties, of civil relations; the wife must discharge her duty to her own husband, though he obey not the word.

(6.) Evil men are strict observers of the conversation of the professors of religion; their curiosity, envy, and jealousy, make them watch narrowly the ways and lives of good people.

(7.) A chaste conversation, attended with due and proper respect to every one, is an excellent means to win them to the faith of the gospel and obedience to the word.

3. Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel:

This rule relates to the dress of religious women: here are three sorts of ornaments forbidden; plaiting of hair, which was commonly used in those times by lewd women; wearing of gold, or ornaments made of gold, was practised by Rebecca, and Esther, and other religious women, but afterwards became the attire chiefly of harlots and wicked people; putting on of apparel is not absolutely forbidden, but only too much curiosity and costliness in apparel.

Learn, 1. Religious people should take care that all their external behaviour be answerable to their profession of Christianity; they must be holy in all manner of conversation.

2. The outward adorning of the body is very often sensual and excessive; for instance, when it is immoderate, and above your degree and station; when you are proud of it, and puffed up with it; when you dress, designing to allure and

4. But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

Instead of the outward adorning of the body, the apostle directs Christian wives to put on such inward adorning as becometh the meek and quiet spirit, as a tractive easy temper of mind, void of passion, pride, and immediate anger; discovering itself in a quiet, oblicyng behaviour towards their husband and families. If the husband be harsh, and averse to religion, (which was the case of these good wives to whom the apostle gives this direction,) there is no way so likely to win him, as a prudent meek behaviour. However, a quiet spirit will make a good woman easy to herself, which, being visible to others, becomes an amiable ornament to a person in the eyes of the world.

3. The excellency of it; meekness and calmness of spirit are, in the sight of God, of great price; amiable in the sight of men, and precious in the sight of God.

Learn, (1.) A true Christian's chief care lies in the right ordering and commanding of his own spirit; where the hypocrite's work ends, there the true Christian's work begins.

(2.) The endowments of the inner man are the chief ornaments of a Christian; but especially a composed, calm, and quiet spirit, renders either man or woman beautiful and lovely.

5. For after this manner, in the old time, the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands: 6. Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

The duties of Christian wives being in their nature difficult, the apostle enforces them by the example, 1. Of the holy women of old, who trusted in God; "You can pretend nothing of excuse from the weakness of your sex, but what they might; they lived in old time, and had less knowledge to inform them, and fewer examples to encourage them; yet, when they practised this duty; they were holy women, and therefore their example is obligatory; they trusted in God, and yet did not neglect their duty to man: the duties imposed upon you, of a quiet spirit, and of submission to your own husbands, are not new, but what have ever been practised by the greatest and best women in the world."

2. Of Sara, who obeyed her husband, and follow-ed him when he went from Ur of the Chaldeans, not knowing whither he went, and called him lord, thereby shewing him reverence, and acknowledging his superiority over her; and all this, though she was declared a princess, by God from heaven, by the change of her name; "whose daughters ye are, if ye imitate her in faith and good works, and do not, through fear of your husbands, either quit the truth ye profess, or perform your duty to them, but readily perform it, without either fear or force, out of conscience toward God, and sense of duty to them."

Learn, (1.) God takes exact notice, and keeps an exact record, of the actions of all men and women in the world.

(2.) The subjection of wives to their husbands, is a duty which has been practised universally by holy women in all ages.

(3.) The greatest honour of any man or woman, lies in a humble and faithful deportment of themselves in the relation or condition in which Providence has placed them.

(4.) God takes notice of the good that is in his servants, to their honour and benefit, but covers a multitude of failings; Sara's infidelity and derision are overlooked, when her virtues are celebrated.

(5.) Christians ought to do their duty to one another, not out of fear, nor from force, but from a willing mind, and in obedience to the command of God; wives should be in subjection to their churlish husbands, not from dread and amazement, but from a desire to do well and to please God.

7. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life: that your prayers be not hindered.

The husband's duty to the wife comes next to be considered; the particulars whereof are,

1. Cohabitation; which forbids unnecessary separation, and implies a mutual communication of goods and persons one to another, with delight and concord.

2. Dwelling with the wife according to knowledge; not according to lust, as brutes; nor according to passion, as devils; but according to knowledge, as wise and sober men, who know the word of God, and their own duty.

3. Giving honour to the wife; giving due respect unto her, and maintaining her authority, protecting her person, supporting her credit, delighting in her conversation, affording her a handsome maintenance, and placing a due trust and confidence in her.

The reasons are, Because she is the weaker vessel by nature and constitution, and so ought to be defended: but then the wife is, in other and higher respects, equal to her husband; they are heirs together of the grace of life, of all the blessings of this life and another, and therefore should live peaceably and quietly one with another, which, if they do not, their prayers one with another, and one for another, will be hindered, so that often you will not pray at all, or if you do, you will pray with a discomposed ruffled mind, and so without success.

Learn, (1.) The weakness of the female sex is no just reason either for separation or contempt, but on the contrary it is a reason for honour and respect; giving honour to the wife as unto the weaker vessel.

(2.) There is an honour due to all who are heirs of the grace of life.

(3.) All married people should take care to be themselves so lovingly and peaceably one to another, that they may not by their broils hinder the success of their prayers.

8. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous:

The apostle here passes from special to more general exhortations; he advises Christians to be all of one mind, to be unanimous in the belief of the same faith, and practice of the same duties of religion; and whereas the Christians at that time were many of them in a suffering condition, therefore he charges them to have compassion one of another, to love as brethren, to pity those who were in distress, and to be courteous to all. Hence, LXX., Christians should endeavour to be all of one mind in the great points of faith, in real affection, and in Christian practice; they should be like-minded one to another, according to Christ Jesus, (Rom. 15. 5.) not according to man's pleasure, but God's word.

2. Though Christians cannot be exactly of the same mind, yet they should have compassion one of another; they should not to persecute or hate one another, but love one another with more than common affection; they should love as brethren.

3. Christianity requires pity to the distressed, and civility to all. He must be a flagrant sinner, or a vile apostate, who is not a proper object of civil courtesy, 1 Cor. 5. 11. 2 John 10. 11.

9. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing, knowing that we are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.

The former direction teaches us how Christians and friends should treat one another; this verse instructs us how to behave towards enemies. The apostle knew that Christians would be hated and evil-entreated of all men for Christ's sake; therefore he warns them not to return evil for evil, or railing for railing; “But, on the contrary, when they rail at you, do you bless them; when they give you evil words, do you give them good ones; for Christ has both by his word and example called you to bless them that curse you, and has settled a blessing on you as your everlasting inheritance, though you were unworthy.” To bear evils patiently, and to bless, 1. to enemies, is the way to obtain this blessing of God.

Learn, 1. To render evil for evil, or railing for railing, is a sinful unchristian practice; the magistrate may punish evil-doers, and private men may seek a legal remedy when they are wronged; but private revenge by duelling, scolding, or secret mischief, is forbidden, Prov. 20. 22. Luke 6. 27. Rom. 12. 17. 1 Thes. 5. 15. To rail is to revile another in bitter, fierce, and reproachful terms; but for ministers to rebuke sharply, and to preach earnestly against the sins of the times, is not railing; all the prophets and apostles practised it, Isa. 56. 10. Zeph. 3. 3. Acts 20. 29.

2. The laws of Christ oblige us to return blessing for railing, (Matt. 5. 44.) “Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that persecute you.” We must pity, pray for, and love them who rail at us.

3. A Christian's calling, as it invests him with glorious privileges, so it oblige him to difficult duties.

4. All the true servants of God shall infallibly inherit a blessing; they have it already in a great degree, but the full possession of it is reserved to another state and world.

10. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: 11. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it.

We have here an excellent prescription for a comfortable happy life in this quarrelsome ill-natured world, taken from Ps. 34. 12—14. “If you earnestly desire that your life should be long, and your day's peaceable and prosperous, keep your tongue from reviling, evil-speaking and slandering; and your lips from lying, deceit and dissimulation; avoid doing any real damage or hurt to your neighbour, but be ever ready to do good, and to overcome evil with good; and seek peace with all men, and pursue it, though it retire from you; this will be the best way to dispose people to speak well of you, and live peaceably with you.”

Learn, 1. Good people under the Old and New Testament were obliged to the same moral duties; to refrain the tongue from evil, and the lips of guile, was a duty in David's time as well as now.

2. It is lawful to consider temporal advantages as motives and encouragements to religion.

3. The practice of religion, particularly the right government of the tongue, is the best way to make this life comfortable and prosperous; a sincere, inoffensive, discreet tongue, is a singular means to pass us peaceably and comfortably through the world.

4. The avoiding of evil, and doing of good, is the way to contentment and happiness both here and hereafter.

5. It is the duty of Christians not only to embrace peace when it is offered, but to seek and pursue it when it is denied: peace with societies, and peace with particular persons, in opposition to division and contention, is what is here intended.

12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.

The allegation is continued from Ps. 34. Christians need not fear that such patient inoffensive behaviour as is prescribed, v. 10, 11, will invite and encourage the cruelty of their enemies, for God will thereby be engaged on their side; For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous; he takes special notice of them, exercises a providential constant government over them, and bears a special respect and affection to them; his ears are open to their prayers; so that if any injuries be offered to them, they have this remedy, they may complain of it to their heavenly Father, whose ears are always attentive to the prayers of his servants in their distresses, and who will aid them in all their righteous enemies; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil; his anger and displeasure and revenge will pursue them; for he is more an enemy to wicked persecutors than men are.

Learn, 1. We must not in all cases adhere to the express words of scripture, but study the sense and meaning of them, otherwise we shall be led into errors and absurdities; we must not imagine that God hath eyes, and ears and face, though these are the express words of the scripture.

2. God hath a special care and paternal affection towards all his righteous people.

4. Though God is infinitely good, yet he abhors inconstant sinners, and will pour out his wrath upon themselves. He will do him no good; and all the world justice; and his goodness is no obstruction to his doing so.

13. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? 14. But and if ye suffer for righteousness’ sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled;

The patient humble behaviour of Christians, recommended above, is here urged again from two considerations: 1. This will be the best and surest way to prevent suffering; for who is he that will harm you? This, I suppose, is spoken of Christians in an ordinary condition, not in the heat of persecution; ordinarily, there will be but few so diabolical and impious as to harm them. Fear not them so far as only and usefully as you do. 2. This is the way to increase suffering; “If you be followers of that which is good, and yet suffer, this is suffering for righteousness sake; and that will be your glory and your happiness, as it entitles you to the blessing promised by Christ; (Matt. 5. 10)” therefore you need not be afraid of anything they can do to strike you with terror, neither be much troubled or concerned about the rage or force of your enemies.”

15. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear:

Instead of terrifying yourselves with the fear of men, be sure to sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; let him be your Fear, and let him be your Dread. Isa. 8. 12, 13. Fear not them that can only kill the body, but fear him that can destroy body and soul, Luke 12. 4.

We sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, when we with sincerity and fervency adore him; when our thoughts of him are awful and reverend; when we rely upon his power, trust to his faithfulness, submit to his wisdom, imitate his holiness, and give him the glory due to his most illustrious perfections. We sanctify God before others, when our deportment is such as invites and encourages others to glorify and honour him; both are required, Lev. 10. 3. “When this principle is laid deep into your hearts, the next thing, as to men, is, to be always ready, that is, able and willing, to give an answer, or make an apology or defence, of the faith you profess, and that to every man that asketh a reason of your hope, what sort of hope you have, for which you suffer such hardships in the world.”

Learn. 1. An awful sense of the divine perfections is the best antidote against the fear of sufferings; did we fear God more, we should certainly fear men less.

2. The hope and faith of a Christian are defensible against all the world; there may be a good reason given for religion, it is not a fancy, but a rational scheme revealed from heaven, suited to all the necessities of miserable sinners, and centering entirely in the glory of God through Jesus Christ.

3. Every Christian is bound to answer and apologize for the hope that is in him: Christians should have a reason ready for their Christianity, that it may appear they are not actuated either by folly or fancy; this be necessary more than once or twice, so that Christians should be always prepared to make it, either to the magistrate, if he demand it, or to any inquisitive serious Christian, who desires to know it for his information or improvement.

4. These confessions of our faith ought to be made with meekness and fear; apologies for our religion ought to be made with meekness and meekness, in the fear of God, with jealousy over ourselves, and reverence to our superiors.

16. Having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. 17. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

The confession of a Christian’s faith cannot credibly be supported but by the two means here specified—a good conscience, and a good conversation. Conscience is good, when it does its office well, when it is kept pure and uncorrupt, and clear from guilt; then it will justify you, though men accuse you. A good conversation in Christ is a holy life, according to the doctrine and example of Christ; “Look well to your conscience, and to your conversation; and that, though it be spoken of evil of you, and falsely accuse you as evil-doers, you will clear yourselves, and bring them to shame. Perhaps you may think it hard to suffer for well-doing, for keeping a good conscience, and a good conversation; but be not discouraged; for it is better for you, though worse for your enemies, that you suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.”

Learn. 1. The most conscientious persons cannot escape the censures and slanders of evil men; they will speak evil of them, as of evil doers, and charge them with crimes which their very souls abhor; Christ and his apostles were so used.

2. A good conscience and a good conversation are the best means to secure a good name; these give a solid reputation, and a lasting one.

3. False accusation generally turns to the accusers’ own shame, by discovering at last the accuser’s indiscretion, injustice, falsehood, and uncharitableness.

4. It is sometimes the will of God that good people should suffer for well-doing, for their honesty and for their faith.

5. As well-doing sometimes exposes a good man to suffering, so evil-doing will not exempt an evil man from it. The apostle supposes here that a man may suffer for both. If the sufferings of good people for well-doing be so frequent that all the sufferings of wicked people be for evil-doing? It is a sad condition that that person is in, upon whom sin and suffering meet together at the same time; sin makes sufferings to be extreme, unprofitable, comfortless, and destructive.

18. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

The example of Christ is here proposed as an argument for patience under sufferings, the strength of which will be discerned, if we consider the several points contained in the words; observe therefore,

I. Jesus Christ himself was not exempted from sufferings in this life, though he had no guilt of his own, and could have declined all suffering if he had pleased.

2. The reason or meritorious cause of Christ's suffering was the sins of men; Christ suffered for sins. The sufferings of Christ were a true and proper punishment; this punishment was suffered, to expiate and to make an atonement for sin; and it extends to all sins.

3. In the case of our Lord's suffering, it was the just sufferings for the unjust; he substituted himself in our room and stead, and bore our iniquities; he that knew no sin, suffered instead of them that knew no righteousness.

4. The merit and perfection of Christ's sacrifice were such, that for him to suffer once was enough; the legal sacrifices were repeated from day to day, and from year to year; but the sacrifice of Christ, once offered, purgeth away sin, Heb. 7. 27. —9. 26, 28. 10. 12, 14.

5. The blessed end and design of our Lord's sufferings, were, to bring us to God, to reconcile us to God, to give us access to the Father, to render us and our services acceptable, and to bring us to eternal glory, Eph. 2. 13, 18. —3. 12. Heb. 10. 21, 22.

6. The issue and event of Christ's suffering, as to himself, were these, he was put to death in his human nature, but he was quickened and raised again by the Spirit.

Now if Christ was not exempted from sufferings, why should Christians expect it? If he suffered, to expiate sins, why should not we be content when our sufferings are only for trial and correction, but not for expiation? If he, though perfectly just, why should not we, who are all criminals? If he once suffered, and then entered into glory, shall not we, who are patient under trouble, since it will be but a little time and we shall follow him to glory? If he suffered, to bring us to God, shall not we submit to difficulties, since they are of so much use to quicken in our return to God, and in the performance of our duty to him?

19. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; 20. Which sometime were disobedient, when the once suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water.

Here the apostle passes from the example of Christ to that of the old world, and sets before the Jews, to whom he wrote, the different event of those who believed and obeyed Christ preaching by Noah, from them that continued disobedient and unbelieving; intimating to the Jews, that they were under a like sentence. God would not wait much longer upon them; they had now an offer of mercy, those that accepted of it should be saved, but those who rejected Christ and the gospel should be as certainly destroyed as ever the disobedient in the times of Noah were.

Observe here. 1. The preacher; Christ Jesus, who interested himself in the affairs of the church and of the world, ever since he was first promised to Adam, Gen. 3. 15. He went, not by a local motion, but by special operation, as God is frequently said to move, Gen. 11. 5. Mic. 1. 3. Hos. 5. 15. He went and preached, by the Spirit striving with them, and inspiring and enabling Enoch and Noah to plead with them, and preach righteousness to them, as 2 Pet. 2. 5.

2. The hearers; because they were dead and disembodied when the apostle speaks of them, therefore he properly calls them spirits now in prison; not that they were in prison when Christ preached to them, as the vulgar Latin translation and the postil expositors pretend.

3. The sin of these people; they were disobedient, that is, rebellious, unpersuadable and unbelieving, as the word signifies; this their sin is aggravated from the patience and long-suffering of God, which once waited upon them 120 years together, while Noah was preparing the ark, and by that, as well as by his preaching, giving them fair warning of what was coming upon them.

4. The event of all; their bodies were drowned, and their spirits cast into hell, which is called a prison; (Matt. 5. 25. 2 Pet. 2. 4, 5.) but Noah and his family, who believed and were obedient, were saved in the ark.

Learn, (1.) God takes exact notice of all the means and advantages that people in all ages have had for the salvation of their souls; it is put to the account of the old world, that Christ offered them his help, sent his Spirit, gave them fair warning by Noah, and waited a long time for their amendment.

(2.) Though the patience of God wait long upon sinners, yet it will expire at last; it is beneath the majesty of the great God always to wait upon man in vain.

(3.) The spirits of disobedient sinners, as soon as they are out of their bodies, are committed to the prison of hell, from whence there is no redemption.

(4.) The way of the most is neither the best, the wisest, nor the safest way to follow: better to follow the eight in the ark than the eight millions drowned by the flood and damned to hell.

21. The like figure whereunto, even baptism, doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

Noah's salvation in the ark upon the water, prefigured the salvation of all good Christians in the church by baptism; that temporal salvation by the ark was a type, the antitype whereunto is the eternal salvation of believers by baptism; to prevent mistakes about which, the apostle does, 1. Declare that he was intended by the outward ceremony of washing with water, which, in itself, does no more than put away the filth of the flesh, but it is that baptism wherein there is a faithful answer or restitution of a resolved good conscience, engaging to believe in, and be entirely devoted to, God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, renewing at the same time the flesh, the world and the Devil. The baptismal covenant, made and kept, will certainly save us. Washing is the visible sign of this is the thing signified. 2. The apostle shews that the efficacy of baptism to salvation depends not upon the work done, but upon the resurrection of Christ; which supposes his death, and is the foundation of our faith and hope, to which we are rendered conformable by dying to sin, and rising again to holiness and newness of life.

Observe here. 1. The sacrament of baptism, rightly received, is a mean and a pledge of salvation. Baptism now saveth us. God is pleased to convey his blessings to us in and by his ordinances, Acts 2. 38. 22. 16.

(2.) The external participation of baptism will save no man without an answerable good conscience and conversation. There must be the answer of a good conscience toward God. —Obj. Infants cannot make such an answer, and therefore ought not to be baptized. Answer, The true circumcision was that of the heart and of the spirit, (Rom. 2. 29.) which children were no more capable of then, than our infants are capable of making this answer now; yet they were allowed circumcision at eight days old. The infants of the Christian church therefore may be admitted to the ordinance with as much reason as the infants of the Jewish, unless they are barred from it by some express prohibition of Christ.

22. Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

The apostle, having mentioned the death of Christ, (v. 18.) and his resurrection, (v. 21.) proceeds to speak of his ascension, and sitting at the right hand of the Father, as a subject fit to be considered by these believers for their comfort in their suffering condition. If the advancement of Christ was so glorious after his deep humiliation, let not his followers despair, but expect that after these short distresses they shall be advanced to transcendent joy and glory.

Learn. 1. Jesus Christ, after he had finished his labours and his sufferings upon earth, ascended triumphantly into heaven, of which see Acts 1. 9—12; Mark 16. 19. He went to heaven, to receive his own acquired crown and glory, (John 17. 5.) to finish that part of his mediatorial work which could not be done on earth, and make intercession for his people; to demonstrate the fulness of his satisfaction; to take possession of heaven for his people, to prepare mansions for them, and to send down the Comforter, who was to be the First-fruits of his intercession, John 16. 7.

2. Upon his ascension into heaven, Christ is enthroned at the right hand of the Father. His being said to sit there, imports absolute rest and cessation from all further troubles and sufferings, and an advancement to the highest personal dignity and sovereign power.

3. Angels, authorities, and powers, are all made subject to Christ Jesus; all power in heaven and earth, to command, to give law, issue orders, and pronounce a final sentence, is committed to Jesus, God-man, which his enemies will find to their everlasting sorrow and confusion, but his servants to their eternal joy and satisfaction.

CHAP. IV.

The work of a Christian is twofold—doing the will of God, and suffering his pleasure. This chapter directs us in both.

1. FORASMUCH then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin;

The apostle here draws a new inference from the consideration of Christ's sufferings. As he had before made use of it to persuade to patience in suffering, so here on the consideration of his own death he makes a further equivalent of suffering, or submission is, that Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, or in his human nature. The consequent or inference is, "Arm and fortify yourselves likewise with the same mind, courage, and resolution."

The word flesh in the former part of the verse signifies Christ's human nature, but in the latter part it signifies man's corrupt nature. So the sense is, "As Christ suffered in his human nature, do you, according to your baptismal vow and profession, make your corrupt nature suffer, by putting to death the body of sin by self-denial and mortification; for if you do thus suffer in the flesh, or make the flesh suffer, you will be conformable to Christ in his death and resurrection, and will receive the like reward."

Learn. 1. Some of the strongest and best arguments against all sorts of sin are taken from the sufferings of Christ. All sympathy and tenderness for Christ as a sufferer are lost if you do not put away sin. He died, to destroy it; and though he could cheerfully submit to the worst sufferings, yet he could never submit to the least sin.

2. The beginning of all true mortification lies in the mind; not in penances and hardships upon the body. The mind of man is carnal, full of unclean; the understanding is darkened, being alienated from the life of God, Eph. 4. 18. Man is not a sincere creature, but partial, blind, and wicked, till he be renewed and sanctified by the regenerating grace of God.

2. That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

Here the apostle explains what he means by being dead to sin, and ceasing from sin. Negatively, a Christian ought no longer to live the rest of his time in the flesh, to the sinful lusts and corrupt desires of carnal wicked men; but positively, he ought to conform himself to the revealed will of the holy God.

Learn. 1. The lusts of men are the springs of all their wickedness, Jam. 1. 13, 14. Let occasional temptations be what they will, they could not prevail, were it not for men's own corruptions.

2. All good Christians make the will of God, not their own lusts or desires, the rule of their lives and actions.

3. True conversion makes a marvellous change in the heart and life of every one who partakes of it. It brings a man off from all his old, fashionable, and delightful lusts, and from the common ways and vices of the world, to the will of God. It alters the mind, judgment, affections, way, and conversation of every one who has experienced it.

3. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquets, and abominable idolatries:

Here the apostle argues from equity. "It is but just, equal, and reasonable, that as you have hitherto all the former part of your life served sin and Satan, so you should now serve the living God." Though these were Jews to whom the apostle writes, yet living among the Gentiles, they had learned their way.

Learn. 1. When a man is truly converted, it is very grievous to him to think how the time past of his life has been spent; the hazard he has run so many years; the mischief he has done to others; the dishonour done to God, and the loss he has sustained, are very afflicting to him.

2. While the will of man is unsanctified and corrupt, he walks continually in wicked ways; he makes them his choice and delight, his work and business, and he makes a bad condition daily worse and worse.

3. One sin, allowed, draws on another. Here are six named, and they have a connexion and dependence one upon another. (1.) Lasciviousness or
I. Peter, IV.

1. The word of God is vivifying, expressed in looks, gesture, or behaviour, Rom. 13. 13. (2.) Lusts, acts of lewdness, such as whoredom and adultery. (3.) Excess of wine, though short of drunkenness, an immorality of it, to the prejudice of health or business, is here condemned. (4.) Revelations, or luxurious feasting, too frequent, too full, or too expensive. (5.) Banquetings, by which is meant gluttony, or excess in eating. (6.) Abominable idolatry; the idol-worship of the Gentiles was attended with lewdness, drunkenness, gluttony, and all sorts of brutality and cruelty; and these Jews living long among them were, some of them at least, debauched and corrupted by such practices.

2. It is a Christian’s duty not only to abstain from what is grossly wicked, but also from those things that are generally the occasions of sin, or carry the appearance of evil. Excess of wine and immoderate feasting is forbidden as well as lust and idolatry.

3. Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

Here you have the visible change wrought in those who in the foregoing verse were represented as having been in the former part of their life very wicked. They no longer run on in the same courses, or with the same companions, as they used to do. Hereupon observe the conduct of their wicked acquaintance toward them.

1. They think it strange, they are surprised and astonished at it, it is something new and unusual, that their old friends should be so much altered, and not run with as much violence as they used to do to the same excess of riot, to the same sottish excesses and luxury which before they had greedily and madly followed.

2. They speak evil of them. Their surprise carries them to blasphemy. They speak evil of their persons, of their way, their religion, and their God.

Learn, (1.) That they are once really converted, will not return to their former course of life, though ever so much tempted by the frowns or flatteries of others to do so. Neither persuasions nor reproaches will prevail with them to be or to do as they were wont to do.

(2.) The temper and behaviour of true Christians seem very strange to ungodly men—that they should despise that which every one else is fond of; that they should believe many things which to others seem incredible; that they should delight in what is ilksome and tedious, be zealous where they have no visible interest to serve, and depend so much upon hope.

(3.) The best actions of religious people cannot escape the censures and slanders of those who are irreligious. Those actions which cost a good man the most pains, hazard, and self-denial, shall be most censured by the uncharitable and ill-natured; they will speak evil of good people, though they themselves reap the fruits of their charity, piety, and goodness.

5. Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

For the comfort of the servants of God, it is here added, that all wicked people, especially those who speak evil of them who are as good as themselves, shall give an account, and be put to give a reason of their behaviour, to him who is ready to judge, that is both able and duly authorized, and who will ere long judge and pass sentence upon all who shall then be found alive, and all such as being dead shall then be raised again, Jam. 5. 8, 9. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

Learn, The malignant world shall in a little time give an account to the great God of all their evil speeches against his people, Jude 14, 15. They will soon be called to a sad account for all their curses, their foolish jests, their slanders and falsehoods, uttered against the faithful people of God.

6. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit.

Some understand this difficult place thus; For this cause was the gospel preached to all the faithful of old, that are now dead in Christ, that thereby they might be taught and encouraged to bear the unrighteous judgments and persecutions which the rage of men put upon them in the flesh, but might live in the Spirit unto God. Others take the expression, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, in a spiritual sense, thus; The gospel was preached to them, to judge them, condemn them, and reprove them, for the corruption of their natures, and the viciousness of their lives; while they lived after the manner of the heathen, or the mere natural man; and that, having thus mortified their lusts, they might live according to God, a new and spiritual life. Take it thus; and thence, Learn, The mortifying of our sins and living to God, are the expected effects of the gospel preached unto us.

2. God will certainly reckon with all those who have had the gospel preached unto them, but without these good effects produced by it. God is ready to judge all those who have received his gospel in vain.

3. It is no matter how we are judged according to men in the flesh, if we do but live according to God in the Spirit.

7. But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

We have here an awful position or doctrine, and an inference drawn from it. The position is, that the end of all things is at hand. “The miserable destruction of the Jewish church and nation foretold by our Saviour, is now very near; consequently, the time of their persecution and your sufferings is very near. Your own life and that of your enemies will soon come to their utmost period. Nay, the world itself will not continue very long. The conflagration, 111 the end times; and all things must be swallowed up in an endless eternity. The inference from this is, Be ye therefore sober. Let the frame and temper of your minds be grave, stayed, and solid; and observe strict temperance and sobriety in the use of all worldly enjoyments. Do not suffer yourselves to be caught with your former sins and temptations, v. 5. And watch unto prayer. Take care that you be continually in a calm, sober disposition, fit for prayer; and that you be frequent in prayers, lest this end come upon you unawares.” Luke 21. 34. Matt. 26. 40, 41.

Learn, 1. The consideration of our approaching end is a powerful argument to make us sober in all worldly matters, and earnest in religious affairs.

2. They who would pray to purpose, must watch unto prayer. They must watch over their own spirits, and guard against occasions, and do their duty in the best manner they can.

3. The right ordering of the body is of great use to promote the good of the soul. When the appetites and inclinations of the body are restrained and governed by God’s word and true reason, and the interests of the body are submitted to the interests and necessities of the soul; then it is not the soul’s enemy, but its friend and helper.
8. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

Here is a noble rule in Christianity. The grace recommended is charity among yourselves. Christians ought to look more to love; which implies an affection to their persons, a desire of their welfare, and a hearty endeavour to promote it. This mutual affection must not be cold, but fervent, that is, sincere, strong and lasting. This sort of earnest affection is recommended above all things; which shews the importance of it, Col. 3. 14. It is greater than faith or hope, 1 Cor. 13. 13. One excellent effect of it, is that it will cover a multitude of sins.

Learn, 1. There ought to be in all Christians a more fervent charity towards one another, than towards other men; Have charity among yourselves. He does not say, for pagans, or for idolaters, or for apostates, but among yourselves. Let brotherly love continue, Heb. 13. 1. There is a special relation between all sincere Christians, and a particular amiableness and good in them, which require special affection.

2. It is not enough for Christians not to bear malice, or to have common respect for one another, they must intensely and fervently love each other.

3. It is the property of true charity to cover a multitude of sins. It inclines people to forgive and forget offences against themselves; to cover and conceal the sins of others, rather than aggravate them and spread them abroad. It teaches us to love those who are but weak, and who have been guilty of many slights and injuries. It is therefore a virtue, which is necessary to be attended to. It prepares for mercy at the hand of God, who hath promised to forgive them that forgive others, Matt. 6. 14.

9. Use hospitality one to another, with out grudging.

The hospitality here required, is, a free and kind entertainment of strangers and travellers. The proper objects of a Christian's hospitality, are, one another. The nearness of their relation, and the necessity of their condition in those times of persecution and distress, obliged Christians to be hospitable one to another. Sometimes Christians were spoiled of all they had, and were driven away to distant countries for safety. In this case they must starve, if their fellow-Christians would not receive them. Therefore it was a wise and necessary rule which the apostle here laid down. It is elsewhere commanded, Heb. 13. 1. Rom. 12. 13. The manner of performing this duty, is this; it must be done in an easy, kind, handsomely manner, without grudging or grumbling at the expense or trouble.

Learn, 1. Christians ought not only to be charitable, but hospitable, one to another.

2. Whatever a Christian does by way of charity or of hospitality, he ought to do it cheerfully, and without grudging. Freely you have received, freely give.

10. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

Here the apostle gives direction about the improvement of talents. The rule is, that whatever gift, ordinary or extraordinary; whatever power, skill, or capacity of doing good, which is given to us, we should minister, or do service, with the same one to another; accounting ourselves not masters, but only stewards of the manifold grace, or the various gifts of God.

Learn, 1. Whatever ability we have of doing good, we must own it to be the gift of God, and ascribe it to his grace.

12. Whatever gifts we have received, we ought to look upon them as received for the use one of another. We must not assume them to ourselves, or hide them in a napkin, but do service with them one to another in the best manner we are able.

3. In receiving and using the manifold gifts of God, we must look upon ourselves as stewards only, and act accordingly. The talents we are intrusted with, are our Lord's goods, and must be employed as he directs. And it is required in a steward, that he be found faithful.

11. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

The apostle exemplifies his direction about gifts in two particulars—speaking and ministering; concerning which he gives these rules. 1. If any man, whether a minister in public or a Christian in private conference, speak or teach, he must do it as the oracles of God; which direct us as to the matter of our speech. What Christians in private, or ministers in public, teach and speak, must be the pure word of God and oracles of God. As to the manner of speaking, it must be with the seriousness, reverence, and solemnity, that become those holy and divine oracles. 2. If any man minister, either as a deacon distributing the alms of the church, and taking care of the poor, or as a private person, by charitable gifts and contributions, let him do it as of the ability which God gives. He who has received plenty and ability from God, ought to minister plentifully; and according to his ability. These rules ought to be followed, and practised for this end; that God in all things, in all your gifts, ministations, and services, may be glorified; that others may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven; (Matt. 5. 16.) through Jesus Christ, who has procured and given these gifts to men, (Eph. 4. 8.) and through whom alone we and our services are accepted of God; (Heb. 13. 15.) to whom, Jesus Christ, be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Learn, (1.) It is the duty of Christians in private, as well as ministers in public, to speak to one another of the things of God, Mal. 3. 16. Eph. 4. 29. Ps. 145. 10—12.

(2.) It highly concerns all preachers of the gospel to keep close to the word of God, and to treat that word as becomes the oracles of God.

(3.) Christians must not only do the duties of their place, but they must do it with vigour, and according to the best of their abilities. The nature of a Christian's work, which is high work and hard work, the goodness and kindness of the Master, and the excellency of the reward, all require that our endeavours should be serious and vigorous; and that whatever we are called to do for the honour of God and the good of others, we should do it with all our might.

(4.) In all the duties and services of life, we should aim at the glory of God as our chief end; all other views must be subservient to that, which would sanctify our common actions and affairs, 1 Cor. 10. 31.

(5.) God is not glorified by any thing we do, if we do not offer it to him through the mediation and merits of Jesus Christ. God in all things must be glorified through Jesus Christ, who is the only Way to the Father.

(6.) The apostle's adoration of Jesus Christ, and ascribing unlimited and everlasting praise and dominion to him, prove that Jesus Christ is the most high God over all blessed for evermore. Amen.
cerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: 13. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

The frequent repetition of counsel and comfort to Christians, considered as sufferers, in every chapter of this epistle, shews, that the greatest danger these new converts were in arose from the persecutions to which their embracing of Christianity exposed them. The good behaviour of Christians under sufferings, is the most difficult part of their duty, but yet necessary both for the honour of Christ and their own comfort: and therefore the apostle, having exorted them in the former part of this chapter to the great duty of mortification, comes here to direct them in the necessary duty of patience under sufferings. An unmortified spirit is very unfit to bear trials.

Observe, 1. The apostle's kind manner of address to these poor despised Christians; they were his beloved.

2. His advice to them, relating to their sufferings, which is, that they should not think them strange, nor be surprised at them, as if some unexpected event befell them; for though they be sharp and fiery, yet they are designed only to try, not to ruin them; to try their sincerity, strength, patience, and trust in God.

On the contrary, they ought rather to rejoice under their sufferings, because their's may properly be called Christ's sufferings. They are of the same kind, and for the same cause, that Christ suffered; they make us conformable to him; he suffers in them, and feels our infirmities; and if we be partakers of his sufferings, we shall be also sharers of his glory, and shall meet him with exceeding joy at his great appearing to judge his enemies, and crown his faithful servants, 2 Thess. 1. 7, &c.

Learn, (1.) True Christians love and own the children of God in their lowest and most distressing circumstances. The apostle owns these poor afflicted Christians, and calls them his beloved. True Christians never look more amiable one to another than in their adversities.

There is no reason for Christians to think strange, or to wonder, at the unkindnesses and persecutions of the world, because they are forewarned of them. Christ himself endured them; and forsaking all, denying ourselves, and bearing the cross, are the terms upon which Christ accepts of us to be his disciples.

(3.) Christians ought not only to be patient, but to rejoice, in their sharpest and sorest sufferings for Christ, because they are tokens of divine favour; they promote the gospel, and prepare for glory. They who rejoice in their sufferings for Christ, shall eternally triumph and rejoice with him in glory.

14. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

From the fiery trial the apostle descends to a lower degree of persecution—that of the tongue by slander and reproach. He supposes this sort of suffering would fall to their lot: they would be reviled, evil spoken of, and slandered for the name or sake of Christ in such a case; and, Happy are ye; the reason of which is, "Because ye have the Spirit of God with you, to fortify and comfort you; and the Spirit of God is also the Spirit of glory, that will carry you through all, bring you off gloriously, and prepare and seal you up for eternal glory. This glorious Spirit resteth upon you, resident with you, dwelleth in you, supporteth you, and is pleased with you; and is not this an unspeakable privilege? By your patience and fortitude in suffering, by your dependence upon the promises of God, and adhering to the word which the Holy Spirit hath revealed, he is on your part glorified; but by the contempt and reproaches cast upon you the Spirit itself is evil spoken of and blasphemed."

Learn, 1. The best men and the best things usually meet with reproaches in the world. Jesus Christ and his followers, the Spirit of God and the gospel, are all evil-spoken of.

2. The happiness of good people not only consists with, but even flows from, their afflictions; Happy are ye; for the Spirit of God, &c.

3. That man who hath the Spirit of God resting upon him, cannot be miserable, let his afflictions be ever so great; Happy are ye; for the Spirit of God, &c.

4. The blasphemies and reproaches which evil men cast upon good people, are taken by the Spirit of God as cast upon himself; On their part he is evil-spoken of.

5. When good people are vilified for the name of Christ, his Holy Spirit is glorified in them.

15. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

One would think such a caution as this needless to such an excellent set of Christians as these were. But their enemies charged them with these and other foul crimes: therefore the apostle, when he was setting the rules of the Christian religion, thought these cautions necessary, forbidding every one of them to hurt the life or the estate and property of any one, or to do any sort of evil, or, without call and necessity, to play the bishop in another man's charge, or busy himself in other men's matters. To this caution he adds a direction, that if any man suffer for the cause of Christianity, and with a patient Christian spirit, he ought not to account it a shame, but an honour to him; and ought to glorify God who hath thus dignified him.

Learn, 1. The best of men need to be warned against the worst of sins.

2. There is very little comfort in sufferings, when we bring them upon ourselves by our own sin and folly. It is not the suffering, but the cause, that makes the martyr.

3. We have reason to thank God for the honour, if he calls us out to suffer for his truth and gospel, for any of the doctrines or duties of Christianity.

17. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?

The usual method of Providence has been this; When God brings great calamities and sore judgments upon whole nations, he generally begins with his own people, Isa. 10. 12. Jer. 25. 29. Ezek. 9. 6. "Such a time of universal calamity is now at hand, which was foretold by our Saviour, Matt. 24. 9, 10. This sentence, therefore, is added: "The Lord is the former exhortations to patience necessary for you. And you have two considerations to support you." 1. "That these judgments will but begin with you that are God's house and family, and will soon be over: your trials and corrections will not last long." 2. "Your troubles will be but light and short, in comparison of what shall befall the wicked world; your own countrymen the Jews, and the infidels and idolatrous people among whom you live. What shall the end be of them that disobey not the gospel of God?"

Learn, (1.) The best of God's servants, his own household, have so much amiss in them, as renders it fit and necessary that God should sometimes correct and punish them with his judgments; Judgment begins at the house of God.

(2.) How then are the family of God, have their worst things in this life. Their worst condition is tolerable, and will soon be over.

(3.) Such persons or societies of men as disobey the gospel of God, are not of his church and household; though possibly they may make the lowest pretensions to it. The apostle distinguishes the disobedient from the house of God.

(4.) The sufferings of good people in this life are demonstrations of the unspeakable torments that are coming upon the disobedient and unbelieving; What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel? Who can express or say how dreadfull their end will be?

6. And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

This whole verse is taken from Prov. 11. 31. Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; how much more the wicked and the sinner? This the LXX translate exactly as the apostle here quotes them: whence we may learn, 1. The grievous sufferings of good people in this world are sad presages of much heavier judgments coming upon impenitent sinners. But if we take the salvation of the sinner to mean his preservation, if we make it a sign that the wicked and unbelieving shall undoubtedly be saved, as much as the best can do, to secure the salvation of their souls; there are so many sufferings, temptations, and difficulties to be overcome; so many sins to be mortified; the gate is so strait, and the way so narrow, that it is as much as the righteous can do to be saved. Let the absolute necessity of salvation balance the difficulty of it. Consider, Your difficulties are greatest at first; God offers his grace first, and the comfort will not last long; be; but faithful to the death, and God will give you the crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. 3. The ungodly and the sinner are unquestionably in a state of damnation. Where shall they appear? How will they stand before their Judge? Where can they shew their heads? If the righteous scarcely be saved, the wicked must certainly perish.

19. Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Here the apostle finishes his discourse concerning sufferings, and gives this general advice; Let them that suffer according to the will of God, look chiefly to the safety of their souls, which are put into hazard by affliction, and cannot be kept secure otherwise than by committing them to God, who is both most faithful to the death, and God will give you the crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. They that suffer according to the will of God, look chiefly to the safety of their souls, which are put into hazard by affliction, and cannot be kept secure otherwise than by committing them to God, who is both most faithful to the death, and God will give you the crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. 3. The ungodly and the sinner are unquestionably in a state of damnation. Where shall they appear? How will they stand before their Judge? Where can they shew their heads? If the righteous scarcely be saved, the wicked must certainly perish.

Learn, 1. All the sufferings that befall good people, come upon them according to the will of God.

2. It is the duty of Christians, in all their distresses, to look more to the keeping of their souls than to the preserving of their bodies. The soul is of greatest value, and yet in most danger. If suffering from without raise uneasiness, vexation, and other sinful and tormenting passions within, the soul is the greatest sufferer. If the soul be not well kept, persecution will drive people to apostacy, Ps. 125. 3.

3. The only way to keep the soul well, is, to commit it to God, in well-doing. Commit your souls to God by solemn dedication, prayer, and patient perseverance in well-doing, Rom. 2. 7.

4. Good people, when they are in affliction, have great encouragement to commit their souls to God, because he is their Creator, and faithful in all his promises.

CHAP. V.

In which the apostle gives particular directions, first to the elders, how to behave themselves toward their flock, in the first, first verses; and with this under prenur, to be obedient and humble, and to cast their care upon God, the first two verses. From thence to the end he exults all to sobriety, watchfulness against temptations, and steadfastness in the faith, praying earnestly for them; and so concludes his epistle with a solemn doxology, mutual salutations, and his apostatical benediction.

1. THE elders which are among you exhort, who are also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed.

Here we may observe, 1. The persons to whom this exhortation is given; to the presbyters, pastors, and spiritual guides of the church; elders by office, rather than by age, ministers of those churches to whom he wrote this epistle. 2. The person who gives this exhortation; the apostle Peter. He exhorts: and to give force to this exhortation, he tells them it was his brother-presbyter or fellow-elder. It was his own advice; and so nothing puts upon them but what he was ready to perform himself. He was also a witness of the sufferings of Christ, being with him in the garden, attending him to the palace of the high-priest, and, very likely, was a spectator of his suffering upon the cross at a distance among the crowd, Acts 3. 15. He adds, that he was also a partaker of the glory that was in some degree revealed at the transfiguration, (Matt. XIX. 33.) It was his privilege, as he cast a view of the cross and the glory together, to be completely enjoyed at the second coming of Jesus Christ.

Learn, (1.) They whose office it is to teach others, ought carefully to study their own duty, as well as teach the people their's. (2.) How different the spirit and behaviour of Peter were from that of his pretended successors! He does not command and domineer, but exhort. He does not claim sovereignty over all pastors and churches, nor style himself prince of the apostles, vicar of Christ, or head of the church, but values himself upon being an elder. All the apostles were elders, though every elder was not an apostle.

3. It was the peculiar honour of Peter, and a few more, to be the witnesses of Christ's sufferings; but it is the privilege of all true Christians to be partakers of the glory that shall be revealed.

2. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; 3. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

Here you have the pastor's duty described, and the manner how that duty ought to be performed. The pastoral duty is threefold. 1. To feed the flock; by preaching to them the word of God, and ruling them according to such directions and discipline as the word of God prescribes: both which are implied in this expression, Feed the flock.
2. The pastors of the church must take the oversight thereof. The elders are exhorted to do the office of bishops, (as the word signifies,) by personal care and vigilance over all the flock committed to their charge.
3. They must be examples to the flock, and practise the holiness, self-denial, mortification, and all other Christian duties, which they preach and recommend to their people.

These duties must be performed not by constraint, not because you must do them, not from compulsion of the civil power, or constraint for fear of shame, but from a willing mind that takes pleasure in the work: not for filthy lucre, or any emoluments and profits attending the place where you reside, or any perquisite belonging to the office, but of a ready mind; regarding the flock more than the fleecy, sincerely and cheerfully endeavouring to serve the church of God; neither as being lords over God's heritage, tyrannizing over them by compulsion and coercive force, or imposing unscriptural and human inventions upon them instead of necessary duty, Matt. 20. 25, 26. 2 Cor. 1. 24.

Learn. (1.) The eminent dignity of the church of God, and all the true members of it. These poor, dispersed, suffering Christians were the flock of God. The area of the world is a brutal herd. These are an orderly flock, redeemed to God by the great Shepherd, living in holy love and communion one with another, according to the will of God. They are also dignified with the title of God's heritage or clergy; his peculiar lot, chosen out of the common multitude for his own people, to enjoy his special favour, and to do him special service. The word is never restrained in the New Testament to the ministers of religion only.

(2.) The pastors of the church ought to consider their people as the flock of God, as God's heritage, and treat them accordingly. They are not their's, to be LORDed over at pleasure; but they are God's people, and should be treated with love, meekness, and tenderness, for the sake of him to whom they belong.

(3.) Those ministers who are either driven to the work by necessity, or drawn to it by filthy lucre, cannot perform their duty as they ought, because they do not do it willingly, and with a ready mind.

(4.) The best way a minister can take to engage the respect of a people, is, to discharge his own duty among them in the best manner that he can, and to be a constant example to them of all that is good.

And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

In opposition to that filthy lucre which many proposed to themselves as their principal motive in their undertaking and discharge of the pastoral office, Peter sets before them the crown of glory designed by the great Shepherd Jesus Christ, for all his faithful ministers.

Learn. 1. Jesus Christ is the chief Shepherd of the whole flock and heritage of God. He bought them, and rules them; he defends and saves them for ever. He is also the chief Shepherd over all inferior shepherds; they derive their authority from him, act in his name, and are accountable to him at last.

2. This chief Shepherd will appear to judge all ministers and under-shepherds, to call them to account, whether they have faithfully discharged their work both publicly and privately, according to the foregoing directions.

3. They that are found to have done their duty, shall have what is infinitely better than temporal gain; they shall receive from the grand Shepherd a high degree of everlasting glory, a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

5. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

Having settled and explained the duty of the pastors or spiritual guides of the church, he comes now to instruct the flock how to behave themselves to their ministers, and to one another; he calls them the younger, as being generally younger than their grave pastors, and to put them in mind of their inferiority, the term younger being used by our Saviour to signify an inferior: (Luke 22. 26.) he exHORTS those that are younger and inferior, to submit themselves to the elder, to give due respect and reverence to their persons, and to yield to their admonitions, reproof, and authority, enjoining and commanding what the word of God requires, Heb. 13. 17. As to one another, the rule is, that they should all be subject one to another, so far as to receive the rebukes of another, and be ready to bear one another's burdens, and perform all the offices of friendship and charity one to another; and particular persons should submit to, the directions of the whole church, Eph. 5. 21. Jam. 5. 16. These duties of submission to superiors in age or office, and submission to one another, being contrary to the proud nature and selfish interests of men, he advises them to be clad with humility; "Let your minds be changed to the heavenly, and whole frame, be adorned with humility, as the most beautiful habit you can wear; this will render obedience and duty easy and pleasant; but if you be disobedient and proud, God will set himself to oppose and crush you; for he resisteth the proud, when he giveth grace to the humble."

Learn. 1. Humility is the great preserver of peace and order in all Christian churches and societies; consequently, pride is the great disturber of them, and the cause of most dissensions and breaches in the church.

2. There is a mutual opposition between God and the proud, so the word signifies; they war against him, and he scourns them: he resisteth the proud, because they are like the Devil, enemies to himself and to his kingdom among men, Prov. 3. 34.

3. Where God giveth grace to be humble, he will give more grace, more wisdom, faith, holiness, and humility.

6. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

Since God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble, therefore humble yourselves, not only one to another, but to the great God, whose judgments are coming upon the world, and must begin at the house of God; (ch. 4. 17.) his hand is almighty, and can easily pull you down if you be proud, or exalt you if you be humble; and it will certainly do it, either in this life, if he see it best for you, or at the day of general retribution.

Learn. 1. The consideration of the omnipotent hand of God should make us humble and submissive to him in all things upon us.

2. Humbling ourselves to God under his hand, is the next way to deliverance and exaltation; patience under his chastishments, submission to his pleasure, repentance, prayer, and hope in his mercy, will engage his help and release in due time, Jam. 4. 7, 10.
7. Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.

The apostle, knowing that these Christians were already under very hard circumstances, rightly supposes that what he had foretold of greater hardships yet a coming, might excite in them abundance of care and fear about the event of these difficulties, whereas they should be to themselves, their families, and the church of God; foreseeing this anxious care would be a heavy burden, and a sore temptation, he gives them the best advice, and supports it with a strong argument; his advice is, to cast all their care, or all care of themselves, upon God; “Throw your cares, which are so cutting and distracting, which wound your souls, and pierce your hearts, upon the wise and gracious providence of God; trust in him with a firm composed mind, for he careth for you; he is willing to release you of your care, and take the care of you upon himself; he will either avert what you fear, or support you under it; he will order all events to you, so as shall convince you of his paternal love and tenderness toward you; and all shall be so ordered, that no hurt, but good, shall come unto you.” Matt. 6. 25. Ps. 15. 11. Rom. 8. 31.

Learn. 1. The best of Christians are apt to labour under the burthen of anxious and excessive care; the apostle calls it, all your care, intimating, that the cares of Christians are various, and of more sorts than one; personal cares, family cares, cares for the present, and cares for the future; for themselves, for others, for the church.

2. The cares even of good people are very burdensome, and too often very sinful; when they arise from unbelief and diffidence, when they torture and distract the mind, unfit us for the duties of our place, and hinder our delightful service of God, they are very criminal.

3. The best remedy against immoderate care, is, to cast our care upon God, and resign every event to his wise and gracious determination. A firm belief of the rectitude of the divine will and counsels calms the spirit of man. We ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done, Acts 21. 14.

8. Be sober minded, be vigilant; because your adversary the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: 9. Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

Here the apostle does three things:
1. He shews them their danger from an enemy more cruel and restless than even the worst of men, whom he describes, (1.) By his characters and names; [1.] He is an adversary, that adversary of yours; not a common adversary, but an enemy that implades you, and lites against you in your grand depending cause, and aims at your very souls. [2.] The Devil, the grand accuser of all the brethren; this title is derived from a word which signifies to strike through, or to stab; he would strike malignity into our natures, and poison into our souls; if he could have struck these people with passion and murmuring in their sufferings, perhaps he might have drawn them to apostasy and ruin. [3.] He is a roaring lion, hungry, fierce, strong and cruel; the fierce and greedy pursuer of souls. (2.) By his business; he walks about, seeking whom he may devour; his whole design is to devour and destroy souls; to that end he is unrearied and restless in his malicious endeavours; for he always, night and day, goes about studying and contriving whom he may ensnare to their eternal ruin.

2. Our duty inferred from hence is, (1.) To be sober, and to govern both the outward and the inward man by the rules of temperance, modesty, and mortification. (2.) To be vigilant; not secure or careless, but rather suspicious of constant danger from this spiritual enemy, and, under that apprehension, to be watchful and diligent to prevent his designs, and save our souls. (3.) To resist him steadfast in the faith; it was the faith of these people that Satan aimed at; if he could overturn their faith, and draw them into apostasy, then he knew he should gain his point, and ruin their souls; therefore, to destroy their faith, he raises bitter persecutions, and sets the grand potencies of the world against them; this strong trial and temptation they must resist, by being well-grounded, resolute, and steadfast in the faith; to encourage them to this,

3. The apostle tells them that their care was not singular, for they knew that the like afflictions befell their brethren in all parts of the world, and that all the people of God were their fellow-soldiers in this warfare.

Learn. (1.) All the great persecutions that ever were in the world, were raised, spirited up, and conducted, by the Devil; he is the grand persecutor, as well as the deceiver and accuser, of the brethren; men are his willing, spiteful instruments, but he is the chief adversary that wars against Christ and his people, Gen. 3. 15. Rev. 12. 12.

(2.) The design of Satan in raising persecutions against the faithful servants of God, is, to bring them to apostasy, by reason of their sufferings, and so to destroy their souls.

(3.) Sobriety and watchfulness are necessary virtues at all times, but especially in times of suffering and persecution; “You must moderate your affection to worldly things, or else Satan will soon overcome you.”

(4.) “If you would overcome Satan, either as a tempter, accuser, or persecutor, you must resist him steadfast in the faith; if your faith give way, you are gone; therefore, above all, take the shield of faith,” Eph. 6. 16.

(5.) The consideration of what others suffer, is proper to encourage us to bear our own share in any affliction; the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren.

10. But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that we have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

We come now to the conclusion of this epistle, which the apostle begins with a most weighty prayer, which he had already mentioned, that God of all grace, the Author and Finisher of every heavenly gift and quality, acknowledging, on their behalf, that God had already called them to be partakers of that eternal glory, which, being his own, he had promised and settled upon them, through the merit and intercession of Jesus Christ. You may observe what he prays for on their account; not that they might be excused from sufferings, but that their sufferings might be moderate and short, and, after they had suffered a while, that God would restore them to a settled and peaceable condition, and perfect his work in them; that he would establish them against wavering, either in faith, or duty; that he would strengthen those who are weak, and settle them upon Christ the foundation, so firmly, that their union with him might be indissoluble and everlasting.

Learn. 1. All grace is from God; it is he who restrains, converts, comforts, and saves men by his grace.

2. All who are called into a state of grace, are called to partake of eternal glory and happiness.

3. Those who are called to be heirs of eternal life through Jesus Christ, must, nevertheless, suffer in this world, but their sufferings will be but for a little while.

4. The perfecting, establishing, strengthening, and settling, of good people in grace, and their perseverance therein, is so difficult a work, that only the God of all grace can accomplish it; and therefore he is earnestly to be sought unto by continual prayer, and dependence upon his promises.

11. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

From this doxology we may learn, that they who have obtained grace from the God of all grace, should, and will, ascribe glory, dominion, and power, to him for ever and ever.

12. By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

Here the apostle, 1. Recapitulates the design of his writing this epistle to them, which was, (1.) To testify, and, in the strongest terms to assure them, that the doctrine of salvation, which he had explained, and they had embraced, was the true account of the grace of God, foretold by the prophets, and published by Jesus Christ. (2.) To exhort them earnestly that, as they had embraced the gospel, they would continue steadfast in it, notwithstanding the arts of seducers, or the persecutions of enemies.

2. He recommends Silvanus, the person by whom he sent them this brief epistle, as a brother whom he esteemed faithful and friendly to them, and hoped they would account him so, though he was a minister of the circumcision.

Learn, (1.) An honourable esteem of the ministers of religion tends much to the success of their labours; when we are convinced they are faithful, we shall profit more by their ministerial services; the prejudices that some of these Jews might have against Silvanus, as a minister of the Gentiles, would soon wear off, when they were once convinced that he was a faithful brother.

(2.) The main thing that ministers ought to aim at in their labours, is, to convince their people of the certainty and excellency of the Christian religion, this the apostles did exhort and testify with all their might.

(3.) A firm persuasion that we are in the true way to heaven, will be the best motive to stand fast, and persevere therein.

13. The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

St. Peter, being at Babylon in Assyria, when he wrote this epistle (whither he travelled, as the apostle of the circumcision, to visit that church, which was the chief of the dispersion,) sends the salutation of that church to the other churches to whom he wrote, telling them, that God had elected or chosen the Christians at Babylon out of the world, to be his church, and to partake of eternal salvation through Christ Jesus, together with them and all other faithful Christians, ch. 1. 2. In this salutation he particularly joins Mark the evangelist, who was then with him, and who was his son in a spiritual sense, being begotten by him to Christianity.

All the churches of Jesus Christ ought to have a most affectionate concern one for another; they should love and pray for one another, and be as helpful one to another as they possibly can.

14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

He exhorts them to fervent love and charity one towards another, and to express this by giving the kiss of peace, according to the common custom of those times and countries, and so concludes with a benediction, which he confines to those only that are in Christ Jesus, united to him by faith, and sound members of his mystical body. The blessing he pronounces upon these, is, peace, by which he means all necessary good, all manner of prosperity; to this he adds his amen, in token of his earnest desire and undoubted expectation, that the blessing of peace would be the portion of all the faithful.
AN EXPOSITION, WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS, OF THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF PETER.

Completed by Mr. J. Hill.

THE penman of this epistle appears plainly to be the same who wrote the foregoing; and whatever difference some learned men apprehend they discern in the style of this epistle from that of the former, this cannot be a sufficient argument to assert that it was written by Simon who succeeded the apostle James in the church at Jerusalem, inasmuch as he who wrote this epistle, calls himself Simon Peter, and an apostle, (v. 1.) and says, that he was one of the three apostles that were present at Christ's transfiguration, (v. 18.) and says expressly, that he had written a former epistle to them; (ch. 3. 1.) moreover, the design of this second epistle is the same with that of the former, as is evident from the first verse of the third chapter; whence observe, that, in the things of God, we have need of

II. PETER, I.

1. Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ: 2. Grace, and peace, be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, 3. According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: 4. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

The apostle Peter, being moved by the Holy Ghost to write once more to those who from among the Jews were turned to faith in Christ, begins this second epistle with an introduction, wherein the same persons are described, and the same blessings are desired, that are in the preface to his former letter; but there are some additions or alterations, which ought to be taken notice of in all the three parts of the introduction. I. We have here a description of the person who wrote the epistle, by the name Simon, as well as Peter, and by the title of servant, as well as that of apostle; Peter, being in both epistles, seems to be the name most frequently used, and with which he may be thought to be best pleased, being given him by our Lord, upon his confessing Jesus to be Christ the Son of the living God; and the very name signifying and sealing that truth to be the fundamental article, the rock on which all must build; but the name Simon, though omitted in the former epistle, is mentioned in this, lest the total omission of that name, which was given him when he was circumcised, should make the Jewish believers, who were all zealous of the law, to become jealous of the apostle, as if he disowned and despised circumcision; he here styles himself a servant (as well as an apostle) of Jesus Christ; in this he may be allowed to glory, as David does, Ps. 116. 16. The service of Christ is the way to the highest honour, John 12. 26. Christ himself is King of kings, and Lord of lords; and he makes all his servants kings and priests unto God, Rev. 1. 6. How great an honour is it to be the servants of this Master? This is what we cannot, without sin, be ashamed of. To triumph in being Christ's servants, is very proper for those who are engaging others to enter into, or abide in, the service of Christ. II. We have an account of the people to whom the epistle is written; they have been described in the former epistle, as elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father; and here, as having obtained precious faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; for the faith here mentioned, is vastly different from the false faith of the heretic, and the feigned faith of the hypocrite, and the fruitless faith of the formal preacher. For what is it—(1.) That knowledge of God’s elect, (Tit. 1. 1.) wrought out the whole power of God in effectual calling. Observe, 1. True saving faith is a precious grace, and that not only as it is very uncommon, very scarce, even in the visible church, a very small number of true believers among a great multitude of visible professors, (Matt. 22. 14.) but true faith is very excellent, and of very great advantage to them that have it; the just lives by faith, as Christ does, by faith; faith procures all the necessary supports and comforts of this excellent life; faith goes to Christ, and buys the wine and milk, (Isa. 55. 1.) that are the proper nourishment of the new creature; faith buys and brings home the tried gold, the heavenly treasure that enriches; faith takes and puts on the white raiment, the royal robes that clothe and adorn, Rev. 3. 18. Observe, 2. Faith is alike precious in the privyChristian and in the apostle; it produces the same precious effects in the one that it does in the other. Faith unites the weak believer to Christ, as really as it does the strong one, and purifies the heart of one as truly as of another; and every sincere believer is by his faith justified in the sight of God, and that from all sins, Acts 13. 39. Faith, in whomsoever it is, takes hold of the same precious Saviour, and applies the same precious promises. 3. This precious faith is obtained of God. Faith is the gift of God, wrought by the Spirit, who raised up Jesus Christ from the dead. 4. The preciousness of faith, as well as our obtaining it, is through the righteousness of Christ. The satisfactory, meritorious righteousness and obedience of Christ gives faith all its value and preciousness; and the righteousness of such a Person cannot but be of infinite value to those who by faith receive it. For, (1.) This Jesus Christ is God, yea our God, as it is in the original. He is truly God, an infinite Being, who has wrought out this righteousness, and therefore it must be of infinite value; (2.) He is the Saviour of them that believe, and as such he yielded this meritorious obedience; and therefore it is of such great benefit and advantage to them, because, as Surety and Saviour, he wrought out this righteousness in their stead.

III. We have the apostolical benediction, wherein is mentioned the multiplication and increase of the divine favour to them, and the advancement and growth of the work of grace in them, and that peace with God and in their own consciences, (which cannot be without grace,) may abound in them; this is the very same benediction that is in the former epistle; but here it adds, 1. An account of the way and means whereby grace and peace are multiplied—it is through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ; the knowledge and believing in the only living and true God, and Jesus Christ, who has given us eternal life, is the great improvement of spiritual life, or it could not be the way to life eternal, John 17. 3. We have, 2. The ground of the apostle’s faith in asking, and of the Christian’s hope in expecting, the increase of grace; what we have already received, should encourage us to ask for more; he who has begun the work of grace, will perfect it. Observe, (1.) This is the foundation of spiritual blessings, is, the divine power of Jesus Christ, who has not only discharged all the office of Mediator, unless he was God as well as man. (2.) All things that have any relation to, and influence upon, the true spiritual life, the life and power of godliness, are from Jesus Christ; in him all fulness dwells, and it is from him that we receive, and grace for grace, (John 1. 16.) even all that is necessary for the preserving, improving, and perfecting of grace and peace, which, according to some expositors, are called here in this verse godliness and life. (3.) Knowledge of God, and faith in him, are the channels whereby all spiritual supports and comforts are conveyed to us; but then we must own and acknowledge God as the Author of our effectual calling, for so he is here described; him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Observe here, the design of God in calling or converting men, is to bring them to glory and virtue, that is, peace and grace, as some understand it; but many prefer the marginal rendering, by glory and virtue; and so we have effectual calling set forth as the work of the glory and virtue, or the glorious, flower of God, which is described Eph. 1. 19. It is the glory of God’s power to convert sinners; this is the flower and glory of God which are seen and experienced in his sanctuary; (Ps. 63. 2.) this flower or virtue is to be extolled by all that are called out of darkness into marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9.

In the fourth verse the apostle goes on to encourage their faith and hope in seeking for an increase of grace and peace, because the same glory and virtue are employed and evidenced in giving the promise of the gospel, that he has placed his seal upon it by his seal of call. Observe, [1.] The great things which the promises make over, are exceeding great; pardon of sin is one of the blessings here intended; how great this is, all who know any thing of the power of God’s anger, will readily confess; and this is one of those promised favours, in bestowing whereof the flower of the Lord is great, Numb. 14. 17. To pardon sins that are numerous and heinous, (every one of which deserves God’s wrath and curse,) and that for ever, is a wonderful thing, and so said, Ps. 119. 18. [2.] The promised blessings of the gospel are very precious; as the great promise of the Old Testament, was, the Seed of the woman, the Messiah, (Heb. 11. 39.) so the great promise of the New Testament, is, the Holy Ghost; (Luke 24. 49.) and how precious must the enlightening, enlightening, sanctifying Spirit be! [5.] They who receive the promises of the gospel, partake of the divine nature; these are renewed in the spirit of their mind, after the image of God, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness; their hearts are set for God and his service; they have a divine temper and disposition of soul; though the law be the ministration of death, and the letter killeth, yet the gospel is the ministration of life, and the Spirit quickeneth those who are naturally dead in trespasses and sins. [4.] Those in whom the Spirit works the divine nature, are freed from the bondage of corruption. They who have the Spirit of grace, renewed in the spirit of their mind, are translated into the liberty of the children of God; for it is the world in which corruption reigns; they who are not of the Father, but of the world, are under the power of sin; the world lies in wickedness, 1 John 5. 19. And the dominion that sin has in the men of the world, is through lust; their desires are to it, and therefore it rules over their souls. The dominion of sin has over us, is according to the delight we have in it. 5. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; 6. And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; 7. And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charitv.
of the divine nature; this is a very good beginning, but it is not to be rested in, as if we were already perfect; the apostle had prayed that grace and peace might be multiplied to them, and now he exhorts them to press forward, for the obtaining of more grace; we should, as we have opportunity, exhort those we pray for, and excite them to the use of all proper means to obtain what we desire God to bestow upon them; and they who will make any progress in religion, must be very diligent and industrious in their endeavours; without giving all diligence, there is no gaining any ground in the work of holiness; they who are slothful in the business of religion, will never make any considerable progress; but seeing it is a faithful saying, and constantly to be asserted, that they who have faith, be careful to maintain good works, (Tit. 3. 8.) by virtue here we may understand strength and courage, without which the believer cannot stand up for good works, by abunding and excelling in them. The righteous must be bold as a lion; (Prov. 26. 1.) a bread of the Lord, (Deut. 8. 3.) a light in the darkness, (Isa. 60. 19.) and a salt in the way; (Psa. 119. 105.) and every one of these is a virtue; and therefore it is requisite to practice the duties of the gospel, must expect that Christ will be ashamed of him another day; "Let not your hearts fail you in the evil day, but shew yourselves valiant in standing against all opposition, and resisting every enemy, world, flesh, Devil, yea and death too." Have we need of virtue while we live, and it will be of excellent use when we come to die; the law of nature is written in our hearts, and is to be discerned and observed, (Rom. 2. 15.) and here we may understand, that the knowledge and wisdom that are profitable to direct, both as to the proper method and order wherein all Christian duties are to be performed, and as to the way and manner of performing them.

3. We must add knowledge to his virtue; prudence to his courage; there is a knowledge of God's name, which must go before our faith, (Ps. 9. 10.) and we cannot approve of the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, till we know it; but there are proper circumstances for duty, which must be known and observed; we must use the appointed means, and observe the accepted time. Christian prudence regards the persons we have to deal with and the matter in hand; every believer must labour after the knowledge and wisdom that are profitable to direct, both as to the proper method and order wherein all Christian duties are to be performed, and as to the way and manner of performing them.

4. Add to temperance, patience; which must have its perfect work, or we cannot be perfect and entire, wanting nothing, (Jam. 1. 4.) for we are born to trouble, and must through many tribulations enter into the kingdom of heaven; and it is this tribulation, (Rom. 5. 3.) which worketh patience, that is, requires the exercise, and occasions the increase, of this grace; whereby we bear all calamities and crosses with silence and submission, without murmuring against God, or complaining of him; but justifying him who lays all affliction upon us, owning that our sufferings are less than our sins deserve, and believing they are no more than we ourselves need.

5. To patience we must add godliness, and this is the very thing which is produced by patience, for that works experience, Rom. 5. 4. When Christians bear afflictions patiently, they get an experimental knowledge of the loving-kindness of their heavenly Father, which he will not take from his children, even when he visits their iniquity with the rod, and their transgressions with stripes; (Ps. 89. 32, 33.) and hereby they are brought to the childlike fear and reverential love wherein true godliness consists: to which,

6. We must add brotherly-kindness, a tender affection to all our fellow-Christsians, who are children of the same Father, servants of the same Master, members of the same family, travellers to the same country, and heirs of the same inheritance, and therefore are to be loved with a pure heart fervently, with a love of complacency, as those who are peculiarly near and dear to us, in whom we take particular delight, Ps. 16. 3. 7. Charity, or a love of good-will to all mankind, must be added to the love of delight which we have for those who are the children of God. God has made of one blood all nations, and all the children of men are partners of the same human nature, are all capable of the same mercies, and liable to the same afflictions, and therefore, though upon a spiritual account Christians are distinguished and dignified above those who are without Christ, yet are they to sympathize with others in their calamities, and relieve their necessities, and promote their welfare both in body and soul, as they have opportunity; thus must all believers in Christ evidence that they are the children of God, who is good to all, but is especially good to Israel.

All the forementioned graces must be had, or we shall not be thoroughly furnished for all good works —for the duties of the first and second table, for active and passive obedience, and for those services wherein we are to imitate God, as well as for those wherein we only obey him.

8. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things, is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: 11. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

To engage us to an industrious and unwearied pursuit of all the forementioned graces, the apostle sets forth the advantages that redound to all who successfully labour so as to get these things to be and abound in them. This is proposed.

More generally: 8. The having these things maketh barren, (or slothful,) or unfruitful; where, according to the style of the Holy Ghost, we must understand a great deal more than is expressed; for when it is said concerning Ahaz, the vilest and most provoking of all the Kings of Judah, that he did... not right in the sight of the Lord, (2 Kings 16, 2.) we are to understand as much as if it had been said, He did what was most offensive and abominable, as the following account of his life shews; so when it is here said, that the being and abounding of all Christian graces in us will make us neither inactive nor unfruitful, we are thereby to understand, that it will make us very zealous and lively, vigorous and active, in all practical Christianity, and eminently fruitful in the works of righteousness; these will bring much glory to God, by bringing forth much fruit among men, being fruitful in knowledge, or the acknowledging of our Lord Jesus Christ, owning him to be their Lord, and evidencing themselves to be his servants, by their abounding in the work that he has given them to do; this is the necessary consequence of adding one grace to another; for where all Christian graces are in the heart, they improve and strengthen, encourage and cherish, one another; so that all grow and thrive; (as the apostle intimates in the beginning of v. 8.) and wherever grace abounds, there will be an abounding in good works.

How desirable it is to be in such a case, the apostle evidences, v. 9. There he sets forth how miserable it is to be without those quickening, quickening graces; for he who has not, or though he pretends or seems to have, the forementioned graces, does not exercise and improve them, is blind, that is, is altogether in darkness, which words explain it; he cannot see far off: this present evil world he can see, and doth upon, but has no discerning at all of the world to come, so as to be affected with the spiritual privileges and heavenly blessings thereof; he who sees the excellencies of Christianity, must needs be diligent in endeavours after all those graces that are absolutely necessary for obtaining glory, honour, and immortality; but where these graces are not obtained nor endeavoured after, men are not able to look forward to the things that are but a very little way off in reality, though, in appearance or in their apprehension, they are at a great distance, because they put them far away from them; and how wretched is their condition, who are thus blind, as to the awfully great things of the other world; who cannot see any thing of the reality and certainty, the greatness and nearness of the glorious rewards God will bestow on the righteous, and the dreadful punishment he will inflict on the ungodly!

But this is not all the misery of those who do not add to their faith, virtue, knowledge, &c. They are as unable to look backward as forward, their memories are slippery and unable to retain what is past, as their sight is short and unable to discern what is future; they forget that they have been baptized, and had the means, and been laid under the obligations to holiness of heart and life. By baptism we are engaged in a holy war against sin, and are solemnly bound to fight against the flesh, the world, and the Devil. (Often call to mind, and seriously meditate on, your solemn engagement to be the Lord's, and your peculiar advantages and encouragements to lay aside all filthiness of flesh and spirit. St. Peter, 1.) Two particular advantages that will attend or follow upon diligence in the work of a Christian: 1. Stability in grace. A triumphant entrance into glory. This he brings in by re-assuming his former exhortation, and laying it down in other words; for what, v. 5, is expressed by giving diligence to add to faith virtue, &c. is here expressed by giving diligence to make our calling and election sure, to clear it up to themselves, that they are the chosen of God. (2.) The way to make sure their eternal calling, is, to make out their effectual calling: none can look into the book of God's eternal counsels and decrees; but as much as whom God did predestination, them he also called, if we can find we are effectually called, we may conclude we are chosen to salvation. (3.) It requires a great deal of diligence and labour to make sure our calling and election; there must be a very close examination of ourselves, a very careful search and strict inquiry, whether we are thoroughly converted, our minds enlightened, our wills renewed, and our whole souls changed as to the bent and inclination thereof; and come to a fixed certainty in this respect; and in this we must be diligent, almost diligence, and cannot be attained and kept without divine assistance, as we may learn from Ps. 139. 23. Rom. 8. 16.

"But how great soever the labour is, do not think much of it, for great is the advantage you gain by it; for," [1.] “By this you will be kept from falling, and that at all times and seasons, even in those hours of temptation that shall be on the earth.” When men will fall into heinous and scandalous sins, these shall be enabled to walk circumspectly, and keep on in the way of their duty; and when many fall into errors, these shall be preserved sound in the faith, and stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. [2.] They who are diligent in the work of religion, shall have a triumphant entrance into glory; while of those few who get to heaven, some are scarcely saved, (1 Pet. 4. 18.) with a great deal of sorrow and pain. (2 Cor. 3. 13.) these, who are growing in grace, and abounding in the work of the Lord, shall have an abundant entrance into the joy of their Lord, even that everlasting kingdom where Christ reigns, and they shall reign with him for ever and ever.

12. Therefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. 13. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; 14. Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. 15. Moreover I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

The importance and advantage of progress and perseverance in grace and holiness, made the apostle to be very diligent in doing the work of a minister of Christ, that he might thereby excite and assist them to be diligent in the duty of Christians. If ministers be negligent in their work, it can hardly be expected that the people will be diligent in their's; therefore St. Peter will not be negligent, that is, at no time or place, in no part of his work, to no part of his charge, but will be exemplary and universally diligent, and that in the work of a remembrancer; this is the office of the best ministers, even the apostles themselves; they are the Lord's remembrancers; (Isa. 62. 6.) they are employed to make mention of the promises, and put God in mind of his engagements to do good to his people; and they are the people's remembrancers, making mention of God's precepts, and putting them in mind of the doctrines and duties of Christianity, that they may remember God's commandments, to do them.

And this the apostle does, though some persons might think it needless, inasmuch as they already knew these things that he writes about, and were established in the very truth that he insists upon. Observe, 1. We need to be put in mind of what we do already know, to prevent our forgetting it, and to improve our knowledge, and reduce all to practice. 2. We must be established in the belief of the truth, that we may not be shaken by every wind of doctrine, and especially in that which is the present truth, what is the truth more peculiarly necessary for us to know in our day, what belongs to our peace, and what is more especially opposed in our time. The great doctrines of the gospel, that Jesus is the Christ; that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners; that those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ shall be saved, and all that believe in God must be careful to maintain good works. These are truths the apostles insisted on in their day; these are faithful sayings, and worthy of all acceptance in every age of the Christian church. And as these must be constantly affirmed by ministers, (Tit. 3. 8.) so the people are to be well instructed and estab- lished in the truth; and yet must, as the apostle adds, not attainments in knowledge, be put in mind of such things as cannot be too clearly known, nor too firmly believed. The most advanced Christians cannot, while in this world, be above ordinances, or beyond the need of those means which God has appointed and does afford. And if the people need teaching and exhortation while they are in the body, it is very much that sinners should be taught also as they are in this tabernacle, instruct and exhort them, and bring those truths to their remembrance, that they have formerly heard; this being a proper means to stir them up to be diligent and lively in a course of gospel-obedience.

The apostle, being set upon the work, tells us (v. 14.) what makes him earnest in this matter, even the knowledge he had, not only that he must certainly, but also that he must shortly, put off this taber- nacle. Observe, (1.) The body is but the tabernacle of the soul. It is a mean and moveable structure, whose stakes can be easily removed, and its cords presently broken. (2.) This tabernacle must be put off. We are not to continue long in this earthly house. As at night we put off our clothes, and lay them by, so at death we must put off our bodies, and they must be laid up in the grave till the morrow of the resurrection, when our bodies must rise in new life, and this taber- nacle diligent in the business of life. Our Lord Jesus had shewn him, that the time of his departure was at hand, and therefore he bestirs himself with greater zeal and diligence, because the time is short; he must soon be removed from those to whom he wrote; and his ambition being that they should re- member the doctrine he had delivered to them, after he himself was taken away from them, he commits his charge to them. He had great opinion of oral tradition; that was not so proper a means to reach the end he was in pursuit of. He would have them always to remember those things, and not only to keep them in mind, but also to make mention of them, as the original words import. They who fear the Lord, make mention of his name, and talk of his loving-kindness. This is the way to spread the knowledge of the Lord; and this the apostle had at heart; and they who have the written word of God, are thereby put into a capacity to do this.

16. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Je- sus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. 17. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the ex- cellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 18. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

Here we have the reason of giving the foregoing exhortation, and that with so much diligence and seriousness. These things are not idle tales, or a vain thing, but of undoubted truth and vast concern. The gospel is not a cunningly devised fable. These are not the words of one who hath a devil, or the contrivance of any number of men who by cunning contriving an endeavour to deceive. The way of salvation by Jesus Christ is eminently the counsel of God, the most excellent contrivance of the infinitely wise Jehovah; it was he that invented this way of saving sinners by Jesus Christ, whose power and coming are set forth in the gospel, and the apostle's preaching was a making these things known. 1. The preaching of the gospel is a making known the power of Christ, that he is able to save to the uttermost all those who believe in God, and therefore can save from both the guilt and the filth of sin. 2. The coming of Christ also is made known by the preaching of the gospel. He who was promised immediately after the fall of man, as in the fulness of time to be born of a woman, is now come in the flesh; and whosoever deniers this, is an antichrist; (1 John 4. 3.) he is actuated and controlled by the spirit of antichrist; but those who are truly religious and ministers of the gospel, are true and are directed and guided by the Spirit of Christ, they evidence that Christ is come according to the promise, which all the Old-Testament believers died in the faith of, Heb. 11. 39. Christ is come in the flesh; inasmuch as those whom he undertakes to save, are partakers of flesh and blood, he himself also took part of the same, that he might suffer in their nature and stead, and thereby make an atone- ment. This coming of Christ, the gospel is, a very plain and circumstantial in setting forth; but there is a second coming, which it likewise mentions, which the ministers of the gospel ought also to make known, when he shall come in the glory of his Fa- ther with all his holy angels, for he is appointed to be Judge both of quick and dead. He will come to judge the world in righteousness by the everlasting gospel, and call us all to give account of all things done in the body; the body of this world.

And though this gospel of Christ has been blasphemously called a fable by one of those wretches who call themselves the successors of St. Peter; yet our apostle proves that it is of the greatest certainty and reality, inasmuch as during our blessed Saviour's abode here on earth, when he took on him the form of a servant, and was found in fashion as a man, he sometimes manifested him by to be God, and partic- ularly to our apostle and the two sons of Zebedee, who were eye-witnesses of his divine majesty, when he was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light, exceeding white, as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them. This Peter, James, and John, were eye-witnesses of, and therefore might and ought to attest it; and surely their testimony is true, when they witness what they have seen with their own eyes, yea, and heard with their ears: for beside the visible glory that Christ was invested with here on earth, there was an audible voice from heaven. Where observe,

(1.) What a gracious declaration was made; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased—the best voice that ever came from heaven to earth; God is well pleased with Christ, and with his people. This is the Messiah who was promised, through whom all who believe in him shall be accepted and saved. (2.) This declaration is made by God the Father, who thus publicly owns his Son, (even in his state of humiliation, when he was in the form of a servant,) yea, proclaims him to be his beloved Son, when he was in that holy condition; yea, so far are Christ's mean and humble circumstances from abating the love of the Father to him, that his laying down his life is said to be one special reason of the Father's love, John 10. 17. (3.) The design of this voice was to do our Saviour a singular honour while he was here below; He received honour and glory from God the Father. This is the Person whom God delights to honour. As he requires us to give honour and glory to his Son by confessing him to our Saviour, so doth he give glory and honour to our Saviour by declaring him to be his Son. (4.) This voice is from heaven, called here the excellent glory, which still reflects a greater glory upon our blessed Saviour. This declaration is from God the Fountain of honour, and from heaven the seat of glory, where God is most gloriously present. (5.) This voice was heard, and that so as to be understood by Peter, James and John. They not only heard a sound, as the people did, (John 12. 28, 29.) but they understood the sound. God opens the ears and understandings of his people to receive what they are concerned to know, when others are like Paul's companions, who only heard a sound of words, (Acts 9. 7.) but understood not the meaning thereof, and therefore are said not to hear the voice of him that spake, Acts 22. 9. Blessed are those who not only hear, but understand; who believe what they hear, and feel what they hear, as the voice from heaven, as he did, who testifieth these things—and we have all the reason in the world to receive his testimony; for who would refuse to give credit to what is so circumstantially laid down as this account of the voice from heaven, of which the apostle tells us? (6.) It was heard by them in the holy mount, when they were with Jesus. The place wherein God affords any peculiarly gracious manifestation of himself, is that holy, apart, not with an inherent holiness, but as the ground was holy, where God appeared to Moses, (Exod. 3. 5.) and the mountain holy, on which the temple was built, Ps. 87. 1. Such places are relatively holy, and to be regarded as such during the time that men in themselves experience, or may, by warrant from the word, believingly expect, the special presence and gracious influence of the holy and glorious God.

19. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts: 20. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

In these words the apostle lays down another argument to prove the truth and reality of the gospels, and intimates that this second proof is more strong and convincing than the former, and more unanswerably makes out, that the doctrine of the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, is not a mere fable or cunning contrivance of men, but the wise and wonderful counsel of the holy and gracious God. For this is foretold by the prophets and penmen of the Old Testament, who spake and wrote under the influence, and according to the direction, of the Spirit of God. Here note, 1. The description that is given of the scriptures of the Old Testament; they are called a more sure word of prophecy. 2. It is a prophetic declaration of the power and coming, the Godhead and incarnation of our Saviour, which we have in the Old Testament. It is the Godhead and incarnation of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. His power to destroy the Devil and his works, and his being made of a woman, are there foretold; and the great and awful Old-Testament name of God, Jehovah, (as read by some,) signifies only He will be; and that name of God, (Exod. 3. 14.) is rendered by many, I will be that I will be; and thus understood, they point at God's being incarnate in order to the redemption and salvation of his people, as what was to come. But the New Testament is a history of that whereof the Old Testament is a prophecy. All the prophets and the law prophesied until John, Matt. 11. 13. And the evangelists and apostles have written the history of what was before delivered as prophecy. Now the accomplishment of the Old Testament by the New, and the agreeableness of the New Testament to the Old, are a full demonstration of the truth of both. Read the Old Testament as a prophecy of Christ, and with diligence and thankfulness use the New as the best exposition of the Old. 2. The Old Testament is a more sure word of prophecy. It is so to the Jews who received it as the oracles of God. Following prophets confirmed what had been delivered to those who went before, and these prophecies had been written by the express command, and preserved by the particular care of God. They were confirmed by the wonderful providence, of God, and therefore were more certain to them who had all along received and read the scriptures, than the apostle's account of this voice from heaven. Moses and the prophets more powerfully persuade than even miracles themselves, Luke 16. 31. How firm and sure should our faith be, who have such a firm and sure word to rest upon! All the prophecies of the Old Testament are more sure and certain to us who have the history of the exact and most minute accomplishment of them.

II. The encouragement the apostle gives us to search the scriptures. He tells us, We do well if we take heed to them; that is, apply our minds to understand the sense, and our hearts to believe the truth, of this sure word, yea, to bend ourselves to it, that we may be moulded and fashioned by it. The word is to be searched out and diligently expounded, (Rom. 6. 17.) that formulary of knowledge, (Rom. 2. 20.) by which we are to regulate our thoughts and sentiments, our words and confessions, our whole life and conversation. If we thus apply ourselves to the word of God, we certainly do well in all respects, what is pleasing to God, and profitable to ourselves; and this indeed is but a paying that regard which is due to the oracles of God. But in order to this giving heed to the word, the apostle suggests some things that are of singular use to those who would attend to the scriptures to any good purpose. 1. They must account and use the scripture as a light which God hath sent into and set up in the world, to dispel that darkness which is upon the face of the whole earth. The word is a lamp to the feet of those who use it aright; this discovers the path wherein men ought to walk; this is the lamp of God and the light of life. 2. They must acknowledge their own darkness. This work is a place of error and ignorance, and every man in the world is naturally without that knowledge which is necessary in order to attain eternal life. 3. If ever men are made wise to salvation, it is by the shining of the light of God into their hearts. Naturally no light of God abides in men; what we can for fallen men, who does at best actually know a great deal less, and yet does absolutely need to know a great deal more, of God than Adam did while he continued innocent. 4. When the light of the scripture is darted into the blind mind and dark understanding by the holy Spirit of God, then the spiritual day dawns, and the day-star arises in that soul. This enlightening of a darkened mind is like the day-break that improves and advances, spreads and diffuses itself through the whole soul, till it make perfect day, Prov. 4. 18. It is a growing knowledge; they who are this way enlightened, never think they know enough, till they come to know as they are known. To give heed to this light must needs be the interest and duty of all; nor do we see that many profit by it, while evil-doers keep at a distance from it.

III. The apostle lays down one thing as previously necessary in order to our giving heed to, and getting good by, the scriptures, and that is, the knowing that all prophecy is of divine original. Now this important truth he not only asserts, but proves. 1. Observe, No scripture-prophecy is of private interpretation, (or a man’s own proper opinion, an explication of his own mind,) but the revelation of the mind of God. This was the difference between the prophets of the Lord and the false prophets who have been in the world. The prophets of the Lord did not speak or do any thing of their own mind, as Moses, the chief of them, says expressly, (Num. 16. 28.) I have not done any of the works, (nor delivered any of the statutes and ordinances,) of which ye speak, through a spirit of their own heart, not out of the mouth of the Lord, Jer. 23. 16. The prophets and penmen of the scripture spake and wrote what was the mind of God; and though, when under the influence and guidance of the Spirit, it may well be supposed, that they were willing to reveal and record such things, yet it is because God would have them spoken and written. But though the scripture be not the effusion of man’s own private invention, but the revelation of the mind and will of God, yet every private man ought to search it, and come to understand the sense and meaning thereof. 2. This important truth of the divine original of the scriptures, (that what is contained in them is the mind of God and not of man,) is to be known and owned by all who will give heed to the sure word of prophecy. That the scriptures are the word of God is one of the most certain articles of faith, but also a matter of science or knowledge. As a man not barely believes, but knows assuredly, that that very person is his particular friend, in whom he sees all the proper peculiar distinguishing marks and characters of his friend: so the Christian knows that book to be the word of God, in and upon which he sees all the proper marks and characters of a divinely inspired book. He tastes a sweetness, and feels a power, and sees a glory, in it truly divine. 3. The divinity of the scriptures must be known and acknowledged in the first place, before men can profitably use them, before they can give good heed to them. To call off our minds from all other writings, and apply them in a peculiar manner to these as the only certain and infallible rule, necessarily requires our being fully persuaded that they are Holy Ghost inspired and contain what is truly the mind and will of God.

Now seeing it is so absolutely necessary that persons be fully persuaded of the scripture’s divine original, the apostle, (v. 21.) tells us how the Old Testament came to be compiled, and that, (1.) Negatively; It came not by the will of man. Neither the things themselves that are recorded, and make up the several parts of the Old Testament, are the operation of men, nor was the will of any of the prophets or penmen of the scriptures the rule or reason why any of those things were written, which make up the canon of the scripture. (2.) Affirmatively; Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Observe, [1.] They were holy men of God who were employed about that book which we receive as the word of God. If Balaam and Balaam’s ass, and other’s who were destitute of holiness, had any thing of the spirit of prophecy, upon occasion, yet such sort of persons were not employed to write any part of the scriptures for the use of the church of God. All the penmen of the scriptures were holy men of God. [2.] These holy men were moved by the Holy Ghost, in what they delivered as the mind and will of God. The Holy Ghost is the supreme Agent, the holy men are but instruments. This Holy Ghost inspires and dictates to them what they were to deliver of the mind of God. Secondly, He powerfully excites and effectually engages them to speak (and write) what He had put into their mouths. Thirdly, He so wisely and carefully assists and directs them in the delivery of what they had received from him, that they were effectually secured from any the least mistake in expressing what they revealed. So that the very words of scripture are to be accounted the words of the Holy Ghost, and all the plainness and simplicity, all the power and virtue, and all the elegance and propriety, of the very words and expressions are to be regarded by us as proceeding from God. Mix faith therefore with what you find in the scriptures; esteem and reverence your Bible as a book written by holy men, inspired, influenced and as sisted by the Holy Ghost.

CHR. II.

The apostle having in the foregoing chapter exhorted them to proceed and advance in the Christian race, he now comes to remove, as much as in him lay, what he could not but apprehend would hinder their complying with his exhortation. He therefore gives them fair warning of false teachers, by whom they might be in danger of being seduced. To prevent this, I. He describes these seducers as impious in themselves, and very pernicious to others, v. 1. 2. He assures them of the punishment that shall be inflicted on them, v. 3. 4. 50. III. He tells us how, and by what method, the said persons are seduced, which is, which God takes with those who fear him, v. 7. 9. 14. He fills up the rest of the chapter with a further description of those seducers of whom he would have them beware.

1. But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. 2. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil-spoken of. 3. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you:—

In the end of the former chapter, there is mention made of holy men of God, who lived in the times of the Old Testament, and were used as the amanuences of the Holy Ghost, in writing the sacred oracles; but in the beginning of this, he tells us they had, even in that time, false prophets in the church as well as true. In all ages of the church, and under all dispensations, when God sends true prophets, the Devil sends some to seduce and deceive; false prophets in the Old Testament; and false Christ, false apostles, false prophets in the New. Concerning these observe, 1. Their business is to bring in destructive errors, even damnable heresies; as the business of teachers sent of God is to shew the way of truth, even the true way to everlasting life. There are damnable heresies as well as damnable practices; and false teachers are... industrious to spread pernicious errors. 2. Damnable heresies are commonly brought in privily, under the cloak and colour of truth. 3. They who introduce destructive heresies, deny the Lord that bought them. They reject and refuse to hear and learn of the great Teacher sent from God, though he has endeavoured to deliver them. They paid a price sufficient to redeem as many worlds of sinners as there are sinners in the world. 4. They who bring in errors destructive to others, bring swift (and therefore sure) destruction upon themselves. Self-destroyers are soon destroyed; and those who are so hardened as to propagate errors destructive to others, shall surely and suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

He proceeds, in the second verse, to tell us the consequence with respect to others; and here we may learn, (1.) Corrupt leaders seldom fail of many to follow them; though the way of error is a pernicious way, yet many are ready to walk therein. Men drink in iniquity like water, and are pleased to live in error. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the people love to have it so. (2.) The spreading of error will bring up an evil report on the way of truth. Jesus Christ, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Christian religion is from the God of truth as the Author, and leads to true happiness in the enjoyment of the true God as the end, and works truth in the inward part as the means of acceptably serving God. And yet this way of truth is traduced and blasphemed by those who embrace and advance destructive errors. This the apostle has foretold, as what should certainly come to pass. Let us not be offended at any thing of this in our day, but take care that we give no occasion to the enemy to blaspheme the holy name whereby we are called, or speak evil of that way whereby we hope to be saved.

Observe, in the next place, the method seducers take to draw disciples after them. They use feigned words; they flatter, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple, inducing them to give in entirely into the opinions which these seducers endeavour to propagate, and sell and deliver themselves over to the instruction and government of these false teachers, who make a gain of them whom they make their proscyletes: for all this is through covetousness, with a desire and design to get more wealth, or credit or commendation, by increasing the number of their followers. The faithful ministers of Christ, who shew men the way of truth, desire the profit and advantage of their followers, that they may be saved; but these seducing teachers desire and design only their own temporal advantage and worldly grandeur.

3. Whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. 4. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; 5. And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; 6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly.

Men are apt to think that a reprobate is the forerunner of a pardon, and that if judgment be not speedily executed, it is, or will be, certainly reversed. But the apostle tells us, that how successful and prosperous soever false teachers may be, and that for a time, yet their judgment lingereth not. God has determined long ago how he will deal with them. Such unbelievers, who endeavour to turn others from the faith, are condemned already, and the day that God writeth upon them. The righteous Judge will speedily take vengeance; that day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste. To prove this assertion, here are several examples of the righteous judgment of God, in taking vengeance on sinners, proposed to our serious consideration.

I. See how God dealt with the angels who sinned. Observe, 1. No excellency will exempt a sinner from punishment. If the angels, who are vastly in strength and knowledge, violate the law of God, the sentence, which that law awards, shall be executed upon them, and that without mercy or mitigation, for God did not spare them. Whence observe, 2. By how much the more excellent the offender, by so much the more severe the punishment. These angels, who had the advantage of men, as to the dignity of their nature, are immediately or perpetually punished. For in a few days, no favour at all shewn them. 3. Sin desbyases and degrades the persons who commit it. The angels of heaven are cast down from the height of their excellency, and divested of all their glory and dignity, upon their disobedience. Whoever sins against God, does a manifest hurt to himself. 4. They who rebel against the God of heaven, shall all be sent down to hell. There is no place or state between the height of glory and the depth of misery, in which they shall be allowed to rest. If creatures sin in heaven, they must suffer in hell. 5. Sin is the work of darkness, and darkness is the wages of sin. The darkness of misery and torment follows the darkness of sin. They who will not walk according to the light and direction of God's law, shall be deprived of the light of God's countenance and the comforts of his presence. 6. As sin binds men over to punishment, so misery and torment hold men under punishment. The darkness, which is their misery, keeps them so that they cannot get away from their torment. 7. The last degree of torment is not till the day of judgment. The sinning angels, though in hell already, are yet reserved to the judgment of the great day.

II. See how God dealt with the old world, even in much the same way that he dealt with the angels. He spared not the old world, when—

1. The number of offenders signifies no more to procure any favour, than the quality. If the sin be universal, the punishment shall likewise extend to all. But, 2. If there be but a few righteous, they shall be preserved. God does not destroy the good with the bad. In wrath he remembers mercy. 3. They who are preachers of righteousness in an age of universal corruption and degeneracy, holding forth the excellency of life in exemplary conversation, shall be preserved in a time of general destruction. 4. God can make use of those creatures as the instruments of his vengeance in punishing sinners, which he at first made and appointed for their service and benefit. He destroys the whole world by water. But observe, 5. What is the procuring cause of this; it was a world of ungodly men, ingodliness and wickedness of life, that provoked God to destroy it by water, and causes them to utter destruction.

III. See how God dealt with Sodom and Gomorrah: though they were situated in a country like the Garden of the Lord, yet, if in such a fruitful soil they shall abound in sin, God can soon turn a fruitful land into barrenness, and a well watered country into dust and ashes. Observe, 1. No political union or confederacy can keep off judgments from a sinful people. Sodom and the neighbouring cities were no more secured by their regular government, than the angels by the dignity of their nature, or the old world by their vast number. 2. God can make of contrary creatures to punish incorrigible sinners.
He destroyed the old world by water, and Sodom by fire. He who keeps fire and water from hurting his people, (Isa. 43. 2.) can make either to destroy his enemies; therefore they are never safe. 3. Most heinous sins bring most grievous judgments. They who are abominable in their vices, are remarkable for their plagues. They who are sinner exceedingly before the Lord, must expect the most dreadful vengeance. 4. The punishment of sinners in former ages, is designed for the example of those who come after; ‘Follow them, not only in the time of living, but in their course and way of living.’. Men who live ungodly, must see what they are to expect if they go on still in a course of impiet. Let us take warning by all the instances of God’s taking vengeance, which are recorded for our admonition, and to prevent our promising ourselves impunity, though we go on in a course of sin.

7. And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. 8.
(For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day, with their unlawful deeds;) 9. The Lord knew how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to preserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished:

When God sends destruction on the ungodly, he commands deliverance for the righteous; and if he rain fire and brimstone on the wicked, he will cover the heavens with clouds, and they shall be hidden in the day of his anger. This we have an instance of in his preserving Lot. Where observe, 1. The character given of Lot; he is called a just man; this he was to the generally prevailing bent of his heart, and through the main of his conversation. God does not account men just or unjust from one single act, but from their general course of life. And here is a just man in the midst of a most corrupt and prolific generation, when not one soul was spared from sin and death. He does not follow the multitude to do evil, but in a city of injustice he walks uprightly. 2. The impression the sins of others have upon this righteous man.
Though the sinner takes pleasure in his wickedness,
it is a grief and vexation to the soul of the righteous.
In bad company we cannot escape either guilt or grief. Let the sins of others be a trouble to us, otherwise it will not be possible for us to keep ourselves in a particular manner. [10. The Lord knows that, &c.] 3. Hence, is that God knows how to de-deliver his people, and punish his enemies. It is here presupposed, that the righteous must have their temptations and trials. The Devil and his instruments will thrust sore at them, that they may fall; and if we will get to heaven, it must be through many tribulations; it is therefore our duty to reckon upon, and prepare for them. Observe here, (1.)
The Lord knows them that are his, and will not apart him who is godly, for himself; and if there is but one in five cities, he knows him; and where there is a greater number, he cannot be ignorant of or overlook any one of them. (2.) The wisdom of God is never at a loss about ways and means to de-

10. But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. 11. Whereas angels, who are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord 12. But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption; 13. And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day-time. Spots they are, and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you; 14. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: a heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children: 15. Who have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, through the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness;
16. But was rebuked for his iniquity: the dumb ass, speaking with man’s voice, forbade the madness of the prophet. 17.
These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.
18. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error. 19. While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.
20. For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. 21. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered to them. 22. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire.

The apostle's design being to warm us of, and arm us against, seducers, he now returns to discourse more particularly of them, and give us an account of their character; for it is evident that he justifies the righteous Judge of the world in preserving them in an especial manner for the most severe and heavy doom; as Cain is taken under special protection, that he might be kept for uncommon vengeance. But why will God thus deal with these false teachers? This he shews in what follows.

1. These walk after the flesh; they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts, they give up themselves to the conduct of their fleshly nature, refusing to make their reason stoop to divine revelation, and bring every thought to the obedience of Christ; they, in their lives, act directly contrary to God's righteous precepts, and comply with the demands of corrupt nature. Evil opinions are often accompanied with evil practices; and they who are for propagating error, are for improving in wickedness; they will not sit down contented in the measure of iniquity to which they have attained, nor is it enough for them to stand up, and maintain, and defend, what wickedness they have already committed, but they walk after the flesh, they go on in their sinful course, and increase unto more ungodliness, and greater degrees of impurity and uncleanness too; they also pour contempt on those whom God has set in authority over them, and requires them to honour; these therefore despise the ordinance of God, and we need not say for they are bold and daring, obstinate and refractory, and will not only cherish contempt in their hearts, but with their tongues will utter slanderous and reproachful words of those who are set over them.

2. This he aggravates, by setting forth the very different conduct of more excellent creatures, even the angels; of whom observe, 1. They are greater in power and might, and that even than those who are clothed with authority and power among the sons of men, and much more than those false teachers, who are slanderous revilers of magistrates and governors; the good angels vastly exceed us in all natural and moral excellencies, in strength, understanding, and holiness too. 2. Good angels are accusers of sinful creatures, either of their own kind, or of them who are known by them to be concerned to be made to behold the face of God, and stand before him, and therefore have a zeal for his honour, and accuse and blame those who dishonour him. 3. Angels bring their accusations of sinful creatures before the Lord; they do not publish their faults, and tell their crimes to their fellow-creatures, in a way of calumni and slander; but it is before the Lord, who is the Judge, and without the shadows of any unrighteousness or injustice. 4. Good angels mingle no bitter revilings or base reproaches with any of the accusations or charges they bring against the wickedest and worst of criminals.

Let us, who pray that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven, imitate the angels in this particular; if we complain of wicked men, let it be to God, and that not with rage and reviling, but with compassion and composedness of mind, that may evidence that we belong to him who is meek and merciful.

3. The apostle, having shewn (v. 11.) how unlike seducers are to the most excellent creatures, proceeds (v. 12.) to shew how like they are to the most inferior; they are like the horse and mule, which have no understanding; they are as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed. Men, under the power of sin, are so far from observing the revelation of the Gospel, that by reason of carnal sense, or act according to the direction thereof; they walk by sight, and not by faith, and judge of things according to their senses; as they represent things pleasant and agreeable, so they must be approved and esteemed; brute-creatures follow the instinct of their sensitive appetite, and sinful man follows the inclination of his carnal mind; these reject for these are not only riotous and lascivious, but they have given them, and so are ignorant of what they might and ought to know; and therefore observe, 1. Ignorance is the cause of evil-speaking; and, 2. Destruction will be the effect of it; these persons shall be utterly destroyed in their own corruption; their vices not only expose them to the wrath of God in another world, but often bring them to misery and ruin in this life; and surely such sort of impudent offenders are not to be cast out of the Church, and left for a while to show their openness in sin is an improvement of the pleasure of sinning, most justly deserve all the plagues of this life and the pains of the next in the greatest extremity. Therefore whatever they meet with, is the just reward of their unrighteousness. Such sinners as sport themselves in mischief, deceive themselves, and disgrace all they belong to; for by one sort of sins they prepare themselves for another; and their extravagance and sloth are the forerunners of ruin. They who are the greatest spenders, are the greatest spenders in their own fortunes; and therefore their dissipations and drinking, bring them to commit all manner of lewdness, so that their eyes are full of adultery; their wanton looks shew their own impure lusts, and are designed and directed to kindle the like in others; and this is what they cannot cease from; the heart is insatiate in lust, and the eye incessant in looking after what may gratify their unclean desires; and they who are themselves impudent and inconstant in their ways, are often successful in deceiving others, and drawing others into the same excess of riot. But here observe who they are, who are in the greatest danger of being led away into error and impurity, even the unstable; those whose hearts are not established with grace, are easily turned into the way of sin, or else such sort of sensual wretches would not be able to prevail upon them; and therefore observe, 1. That the apostle does not call all these ungodly, unrighteous, and covetous also; and these kinds of practices their hearts are exercised with; they pant after riches, and the desire of their souls is to the wealth of this world: it is a considerable part of their work to contrive to get wealth; in this their hearts are exercised, and then they execute their projects; and if men abandon themselves to all sorts of lusts, we cannot say that the apostle speaks of them cursed children, for they are liable to the curse of God denounced against such ungodly, unrighteous men, and they bring a curse upon all who hearken and adhere to them.

4. The apostle (v. 15, 16.) proves that they are cursed children, even such covetous persons as the Lord abhors, by shewing, 1. They have forsaken the right way; and it cannot be but such souls, whoever they are, must be set out of the right way, which is a self-deceiving way. 2. They are gone into a wrong way; they have erred and strayed from the way of life, and gone over into the path which leads to death, and takes hold of hell; and this he makes out by shewing it to be the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor. 1. That is a way of unrighteousness, into which men are led by the wages of unrighteousness.
And it is just with God to deal thus with them, because, (1.) They allure those they deal with, and draw them into a net, or catch them as fish upon a hook. (2.) It is with great solemnity of vanity; left expressions which have a great sound, but little sense. (3.) They work upon the corrupt affections and carnal fleshly lusts of men, proposing what is grateful to them. And, (4.) They seduce persons who in reality avoided and kept at a distance from those who spread and those who embraced hurtful and destructive errors. Observe, [1.] By application and industry men attain a skillfulness and success in promoting error; they are successful and as successful as the fisher, who makes angling his daily employment; the business of these men is to draw disciples after them, and in their methods and management there are some things worth observing, how they suit their bait to those they desire to catch. [2.] Erroneous teachers have a peculiar advantage to win men over to them, because they have sensual pleasures to take with them; whereas the ministers of Christ put men upon self denial, and the mortifying of such lusts that others gratify and please; wonder not therefore that truth prevails no more, or that errors spread so much. [3.] Persons who have for a while adhered to the truth, and kept clear of errors, may by the subtlety and industry of seducers be so far deceived, as to fall into those errors they had for a while clean escaped; "Be therefore always upon your guard, maintain a godly jealousy of yourselves, search the scriptures, pray, let not the Spirit to instruct and establish you in the truth, walk humbly with God, and watch against every thing that may provoke him to give you up to a reprobate mind, that you may not be taken with the fair and specious pretences of these false teachers who promise liberty to all who will hearken to them, not true Christian liberty for the service of God, but a licentiousness in sin, to follow the devices and desires of the world." To these things, says another, he tells us, that "in the midst of all their talk of liberty, they themselves are the vilest slaves, for they are the servants of corruption; their own lusts have gotten a complete victory over them, and they are actually in bondage to them, making provision for the flesh, to satisfy its cravings, complying with its directions, and obey its commands; their minds and hearts are so far corrupted and depraved, that they have neither power or will to do anything against the flesh; they are conquered and capitivated by their spiritual enemies, and yield their members servants of unrighteousness: and what a shame it is to be overcome and commanded by those who are themselves the servants of corruption, and slaves to their own lusts!" This consideration should prevent our being led away by these seducers; and to this he adds another; (v. 20.) it is not only a shame that these should be seduced by those who are themselves the slaves of sin, and led captive by the Devil at his pleasure, but it is a real detriment to those who have clean escaped from them who live in error, for hereby their latter end is made worse than their beginning. Here we see, First, It is an advantage to escape the pollutions of the world, to be kept from gross and scandalous sins, though men are not thoroughly converted and saved, as those who are, yet we may be saved from them, and engrossed by those who are truly serious, and emboldening those who are openly profane; whereas, if we run with others to the same excess of riot, and abandon ourselves to the sins of the age, we afflict and dishonour those who endeavour to walk as becomes the gospel, and strengthen the hands of those who are already engaged in open rebellion against the Most High, as well as alienate ourselves from God, and harden our hearts against him. Secondly, Some men are, for a time, kept from the pollutions of the world, by the knowledge of Christ, who are not savagely renewed in the spirit of their mind. A religious education has restrained many whom the grace of God has not renewed; if we receive the light of the truth, and have a rational knowledge of Christ in our heads, it may be of some present service to us; but we must receive the light of the truth, and hide God's word in our heart, or it will not sanctify and save us. Thirdly, Those who have, for a time, escaped the pollutions of the world, and have been sanctified by false teachers: they first perplex men with some plausible and specious objections against the truths of the gospel; and the more ignorant and unstable are hereby made to stagger, and brought to question the truth of doctrines they have received, because they cannot solve all the difficulties, nor answer all the objections, that are urged by these seducers. Fourthly, When men are once entangled, they are easily overcome; therefore should Christians keep close to the word of God, and watch against those who seek to perplex and bewilder them; and that because if men who have once escaped, are again entangled, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

The apostle, in the two last verses of the chapter, sets himself to prove that a state of apostasy is worse than the state of ignorance: for this is a condemning the way of righteousness, after they have had some knowledge of it, and expressed some liking to it; this carries in it a declaring that they have found some iniquity in the way of righteousness, and some falseness in the word of truth: now to bring up such an evil report upon the good way of God, and such a false charge against the way of truth, must necessarily expose to the heaviest condemnation; the misery of such deserters of Christ and his gospel is more unavoidable, and more intolerable, than that of other offenders; for, 1. God is more highly provoked by them who by their conduct despise the gospel, as well as disobey the law, and who reproach and pour contempt upon God and his grace. 2. The Devil more narrowly watches and more closely confines those whom he has recovered, after they had once gone off from him, and professed to be the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ (Matt. 12. 45.) they are kept under a stronger guard, and no wonder it should be so, when they have licked up their own vomit again, returning to the same errors and impieties that they had once cast off, and seemed to detest and loathe, and wallow in that filthiness from which they appeared once to be really cleansed. Well, if the scripture gives such an account of Christianity, upon one hand, and of sin on the other, as we have here in these two verses, we cannot wholly approve of the former, and persevere therein, because it is a way of righteousness, and a holy commandment, and to loathe and keep at the greatest distance from the latter, because it is set forth as most offensive and abominable.

CHAP. III.
The apostle, drawing toward the conclusion of his second epistle, begins this last chapter of it, with repeating the account of his design and scope in writing a second time to them, v. 1, 2. He proceeds to mention one thing that induced him to write this second epistle, namely, the coming of scoffers, whom he wishes to be noticed. 3. 7. He instructs and establishes them in the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, v. 8. 10. He sets forth the use and improvement which Christians ought to make of Christ's second coming, and the introduction and renovation of things, which will accompany that solemn coming of our Lord, v. 11. 18.

1 THIS second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: 2. That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

That the apostle might the better reach his end in writing this epistle, which is, to make them steady and constant in a fiducial and practical remembrance of the doctrine of the gospel, he, 1. Expresses his special affection and tenderness of them, by calling them beloved, hereby evidencing that he aided to godliness, brotherly-kindness; as he had (ch. 1. 7.) exhorted them to do. Ministers must be examples of love and affection, as well as life and conversation. 2. He evidences a sincere love to them, and hearty concern for them, by writing the same thing to them, though in other words; it being safe for them, it shall not be grievous to him to write upon the same subject, and pursue the same design, by those methods which are most likely to succeed. 3. The better to recommend the matter, he tells them, that what he would have them to remember, are, (1.) The words spoken by the holy prophets, who were divinely inspired, both enlightened and sanctified by the Holy Ghost; and seeing these persons' minds were purified by the sanctifying operation of the same Spirit, they were the better disposed to receive and retain what came from God by the holy prophets. (2.) The commandments of the apostles of the Lord and Saviour; therefore the disciples and servants of Christ ought to regard what those who are sent by him have declared unto them to be the will of their Lord; what God has spoken by the prophets of the Old Testament, and Christ has commanded by the apostles of the New, cannot but demand and deserve to be frequently remembered; and they who meditate on these things, will feel the quickening virtues thereof; it is by these things the pure minds of Christians are to be stirred up, that they may be active and lively in the work of holiness, and zealous and unwearied in the way to heaven.

3. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts. 4. And saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: 6. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: 7. But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men.

To quicken and excite us to a serious mind and firm adhering to what God has revealed to us by the prophets and apostles, we are told that there will be scoffers, men who will make a mock of sin, and of salvation from it. God's way of saving sinners by Jesus Christ, is what men will scoff at, and that in the last days, under the gospel. This, indeed, may seem very strange, that the New-Testament dispensation of the covenant of grace, which is spiritual, and therefore more agreeable to the nature of God, than the Old; should be ridiculed by many; and yet it is not strange, but the spirituality and simplicity of New-Testament worship are directly contrary to the carnal mind of man; and this accounts for what the apostle seems here to hint at, namely, that scoffers shall be more numeros and more bold in the last days than ever before: though in all ages those who were born and walked after the flesh, persecuted, reviled, and re-proached them who were born and did walk after the spirit, yet in the last days there will be a great increase of it. Without this, all the other marks of serious godliness, and those who firmly adhere to the circumcision and self-denial which the gospel precribes; this is what is mentioned as a thing well known to all Christians, and therefore they ought to reckon upon it, that they may not be surprised and shaken, as if some strange thing happened unto them.

Now to prevent the true Christian's being overcome, when attacked by these scoffers, we are told,

I. What sort of persons they are; they walk after their own lusts, they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts, and carnal, corrupt affections, not the dictates and directions of right reason, and an enlightened, well-informed judgment; this they do in the course of their conversation, they live as they list, and they speak as they list; it is not only for the sake of amassing wealth, but for the satisfaction of their vicious passions, as the mind of every unregenerate sinner is, (Rom. 8. 7.) alienated from God, ignorant of him, and averse to him; but they are grown to such a height of wickedness, that they proclaim openly what is in the hearts of others who are yet carnal; they say that their tongues are their own, and their strength, and time, and all; and "Who is Lord over us? Who shall contradict or control us, or ever call us to an account?" (Ps. 73. 12.) 7. In the first place, this will be confined by no laws of God in their conversation, so neither will they bear that the revelations of God should dictate and prescribe to them what they are to believe; as they will walk in their own way, and talk their own language, so will they also think their own thoughts, and form principles which are altogether their own; here also their own lusts alone shall be fulfilled by them, and as they are adulterous libertines as are here described, can take a seat, at least they cannot sit in the seat of the carnal. "By this ye shall know them, that ye may the better be upon your guard against them." 8.

II. We also are foretold how far they will proceed; they will attempt to shake and unsettle us, even as to our belief of Christ's second coming; they will scoffingly say, Where is the promise of his coming? For ever since the Christian faith will signify very little; this is that which fills up, and gives the finishing stroke to, all the rest; the promised Messiah is come, he was made Flesh, and dwelt among us; he is altogether such a one as is stated before, and has done all that for us which has been before taken notice of; these principles the enemies of Christianity have all along endeavoured to overturn; but, as these are all rest upon this, that there is nothing in the Christian faith which the other apostles have given us the most sure and satisfying evidence, it is probable that they will at last grow weary of their opposition to them; and yet, while one very principal article of our faith refers to what is still behind, and only has a promise to rest upon, here they will still attack us, even to the end of time; till our Lord is come, they will not themselves believe that they are evidence of his coming, but are very ready to excommunicate him, and to put all out of countenance who seriously believe and wait for it. Now therefore let us see how this point stands, both on the believer's part, and on the part of these scoffers: the believer not only desires that he may come, but, having a promise that he will come, a promise that he himself has made and often repeated, a promise received and reported by faithful witnesses, and left upon sure record, he is also firmly and fully persuaded that he will come: on the other hand, these seducers, because they wish he never may, therefore do all that in them lies, to cheat themselves and others into a persuasion that he never will come; if they cannot deny that there is a promise, yet they will laugh at that very promise, and argue much higher degrees of infidelity and contempt; Where is the promise? say they, of his coming?

III. We are also forewarned of the method of their reasoning; for while they laugh, they will pretend to argue too; to this purpose they add, that since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation, v. 4. This is a subtle, though not a solid way of reasoning: it is applied to the father's death, and especially upon wicked hearts; because sentence against them is not speedily executed, therefore they flatter themselves that it never will, whereupon their hearts are fully set in them to do evil; (Eccle. 8. 11.) thus they act themselves, and thus they would persuade others to act; so here, say they, "The fathers are fallen asleep, they are all dead, to whom the promise was made, and it never was made good to them; therefore there is no likelihood that it ever will be in any time; why should we trouble ourselves about it? If there had been any truth or certainty in the promise you speak of, we should surely have seen somewhat of it before this time, some signs of his coming, some preparatory steps in order to it, whereas we find to this very day, all things continue as they were, without any change, even from the beginning of the creation; and has anyone not been surprised, in the course of so many thousand years, why should we afflict ourselves as if it were to have an end?" Thus do these scoffers argue! Because they see no changes, therefore they fear not God, Ps. 55. 19. They neither fear him nor his judgments; what he never has done, they would conclude he never can do, or never will.

IV. Here is the falsehood of their argument detected; whereas they suppose, as evidently had said, there had not been any change from the beginning of the creation, the apostle puts us in remembrance of a change already past, which, in a manner, equals that which we are called to expect and look for; which was the drowning of the world in the days of Noah: this these scoffers had overlooked, they took no notice of it; though they might have known it, and ought to have known it, yet this they willingly are ignorant of, (v. 5.) as they choose to break minds of the divine power, as if they had never heard or known any thing of it; if they knew it, they did not like to retain it in their knowledge; they did not receive this truth in the love of it, neither did they care to own it. Note, It is hard to persuade men to believe what they are not willing to find true; they are ignorant in many cases, because they are willing to be ignorant; and they do not know, because they do not care to know; and if they do not think that such ignorance as this will be admitted as an excuse for whatever sin it may betray them into; they who crucified Christ, did not know who he was; for had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; (1 Cor. 2. 8.) but, though ignorant, they were not therefore innocent; their ignorance itself was a sin, willing and wilful ignorance; and one sin be no excuse for another; and had these scoffers known these known of the dreadful vengeance with which God swept away a whole world of ingodly wretches at once, they would not surely have scoffed at his threatenings of any after equally terrible judgment; but here they were willingly ignorant; they did not know what God had done, because they had no mind to know it. Now therefore we shall proceed to consider the representation which the apostle here lays down, both of the destruction of the old world by water, and that which awaits this present world at the final conflagration. He mentions the one as what God had done, to convince and persuade us the rather to believe that the other both might be and will be. First, we begin with the apostle's account of the destruction which has come already upon the world; (v. 5, 6.) By the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. Originally, the world was otherwise situated, the waters were most wisely divided at the creation, and most beneficially for us; some of the waters had proper provisions above the firmament, here called the heavens, (as it is also, Gen. 1. 8.) and others under the firmament, gathered together unto one place; there were then both sea and dry land, a commodious habitation for the children of men; but now, at the time of the universal deluge, the case is strangely altered; the waters which God had divided before, and assigned to each their proper receptacle, now does he, in anger, throw together again in a heap; he breaks up the fountain of the deep, and throws open the windows, the clouds of heaven, (Gen. 7. 11.) till the whole earth was overflowed with water, and not a spot can be found upon the highest mountains but what was fifteen cubits under water, Gen. 7. 20. Thus he made known at once his terrible power and his fierce anger, and made an end of a whole world; and the earth which then was, being overflowed with water, perished.

This is the change, and a most awful change: And then it is to be observed, that all this was done by the word of God; it was by his powerful word that the world was made at first, and made in so commodious and beautiful a frame and order, Heb. 11. 3. This says our apostle, by the word of the Lord the heavens were, as they were of old, that is, at the first creation, and the earth (as it was at first a terraqueous globe) standing out of the water and in the water. Nor was it only the first frame and order of the world that is here said to be by the word of God, but the after confusion and ruin of the world, as well as the destruction of the wicked, was also by the same word; none but that God who stretched out the heavens and laid the foundation of the earth, could destroy and overthrow such a vast fabric at once. This was done by the word of his power, and it was also done according to the word of his promise; God had said that he would destroy man, even all flesh, and that he would do it by bringing a flood of waters upon the earth, Gen. 6. 17, 13, 17. This was the change which God had before brought upon the world, and which these scoffers had overlooked; and now we are to consider, in the second place, what the apostle says of the destructive change which is yet to come upon it; the heavens and the earth which now are, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, v. 7. Here we have the final dissolution of the world, and which we are yet more nearly concerned in: the ruin that came upon the world and its inhabitants by the flood, we read, and hear, and think of, with concern, though those who were swept away by it were such as we never knew; but the judgment here spoken of is yet to come, and will come, though we know not when, nor upon what particular age or generation of men; and therefore we are not, we cannot be, sure that it may not happen in our own times: and this makes a very great difference, though it should be admitted that they were equal in every other respect; which yet must not be allowed, for there were some, though very few, who escaped that deluge, but not one can escape in this conflagration; besides, we were not in reach of the one, but are not sure that we shall not be included in the other calamity.

Now therefore to see the world to which we belong, destroyed at once; not a single person only, not a particular family only, nor yet a nation, (even that which we are most nearly interested in and concerned for,) but the whole world, I say, sinking at once, and no ark provided, no possible way left of escaping for any one from the common ruin; this makes all who have any sense of their relation to God, and what we yet are to expect. The one is already past, and never to return upon us any more; (for God has said expressly, that there shall never any more be a flood to destroy the earth, Gen. 9. 11-15.) the other is still behind, and as certain to come as the truth and the power of God can make it: the one came gradually upon the world, and was growing upon its inhabitants forty days, before it made an utter end of them; (Gen. 7. 12, 17.) this other will come upon them swiftly and all at once; (2 Pet. 2. 1.) besides, there were in that overthrow (as we have said) a few who escaped, but the ruin which yet awaits this world, whenever it comes, will be absolutely a universal one; there will not be any part but what the devouring flames will seize upon, not a sanctuary left any where for the inhabitants to flee to, not a single spot in all this world where any of these who are most interested will not have their destruction. Consequences may be assigned between that destruction of the world and this here spoken of, do indeed represent the approaching as the most terrible judgment; yet that the world has once been destroyed by a universal deluge, renders it the more credible that it may be ruined by a universal conflagration; let therefore the scoffers, who laugh at the coming of our Lord to judgment, at least consider this; there is nothing said of it in the word of God, but what is within reach of the power of God: and though they still should laugh, they shall not put us out of countenance; we are well assured that it will be, because he has said it, and we can depend upon his promise; they err, not knowing (at least not believing) the scriptures, nor the power of God; but we know, and we do or ought to depend upon it.

The destruction of the world, which will certainly make good, is, that the heavens and the earth which now are, which we are now related to, and which still subsist in all the beauty and order in which we see them, and which are so agreeable and useful to us, as we find they are, are kept in store, not to be what earthly minds would wish to have them, treasures for us, but to be what God will have them, in his treasury, securely lodged and kept safe for his purposes; if so be, they are reserved unto fire. Observe, God's following judgments are more terrible than those which went before; the old world was destroyed by water, but this is reserved unto fire, which shall burn up the wicked at the last day; and though this seems to be delayed, yet as this wicked world is upheld by the word of God, so it is only reserved for the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men; and hence we may conclude that the day of judgment is the day of the perdition of ungodly men; they who now scoff at a future judgment, shall find it a day of vengeance and utter destruction; "Beware therefore of being among these scoffers; never question but the day of the Lord will come; give diligence therefore to be found in Christ, that this may be a time of refreshment and day of redemption to you, which will be a day of indignation and wrath to the ungodly world."
one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. 9. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. 10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up.

The apostle comes in these words to instruct and establish Christians in the truth of the coming of the Lord, where we may clearly discern the tenderness and affection wherewith he speaks to them, calling them beloved; he had a compassionate concern and a love of good-will for the ungodly wretches who had been the subjects of his former discourse; he has a peculiar respect for the true believers, and the remaining ignorance and weakness that he apprehends to be in them make him jealous, and put him on giving them a caution. Here we may observe,

I. The truth which the apostle asserts—that with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Though, in the account of men, there is a great deal of difference between a day and a year, and a vast deal more between one day and a thousand years, yet, in the account of God, who inhabits eternity, in which there is no succession, there is no difference; for all things past, present, and future, are ever before him; and the delay of a thousand years cannot be so much to him as the deferring of any thing for a day or hour is to us.

II. The importance of this truth; this is the one thing the apostle would not have us ignorant of; a holy awe and reverential fear of God are necessary in order to our worshipping and glorifying him; and a belief of the inconceivable distance between him and us is very proper to beget and maintain that religious fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom. This is a truth that belongs to our peace, and therefore he endeavours that it may not be lost from our care; it is in the signal, Let not this one thing be hid from you. If men have no knowledge or belief of the eternal God, they will be very apt to think him such a one as themselves. Yet how hard is it to conceive of eternity! It is therefore not very easy to attain such knowledge of God as is absolutely necessary.

In v. 9, we are told, The Lord is not slack; he does not delay beyond the appointed time; as God kept the time that he had appointed for the delivering Israel out of Egypt, to a day, (Exod. 12. 41.) so he will keep to the time appointed, in coming to judge the world. What a difference is there between the account which God makes, and that which men make! Good men are apt to think God stays beyond the appointed time, that is, the time when they have set for their own and the world's deliverance; but he that knows God sets another, and he will not fail to keep the day which he has appointed. Ungodly men dare charge a culpable slackness upon God, as if he had slipt the time, and laid aside the thoughts of coming. But the apostle assures us, that what men count slackness, is truly long-suffering, and that to us-ward; it is a giving more time to his own people, whom he has chosen before the foundation of the world, many of whom are not as yet converted; and those who are in a state of grace and favour with God, are to advance in knowledge and holiness, and in the exercise of faith and patience, to abound in good works, doing and suffering what they are called to, that they may bring glory to God, and improve in a meetness for heaven; for God is not willing that any of these should perish, but that all of them should come to repentance. Repentance is absolutely necessary in order to salvation. Except we repent, we shall perish, Luke 13. 3, 5. God has no delight in the death of sinners: as the punishment of sinners is a torment unto his creatures, a merciful God does not take pleasure in it; and though the principal design of God, in his long-suffering, is, the blessedness of those whom he has chosen to turn from their evil, and to instruction of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, yet his good forbearance do in their own nature invite and call to repentance all those to whom they are exercised; and if men continue impenitent when God gives them space to repent, he will deal more severely with them; though the great reason why he did not hasten his coming, was, because he had not accomplished the number of his elect; "Abuse not therefore the patience and long-suffering of God, by abandoning yourselves to a course of ungodliness; presuming not to go on boldly in the way of sinners, nor to sit down securely in an unconverted impenitent state, as he who said, (Matt. 24. 48.) My Lord delayeth his coming, lest he come and surprise you; for, as we read, (v. 10.) The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." Here we may observe,

(1.) The certainty of the day of the Lord; though it is now above sixteen hundred years since this epistle was written, and the day is not yet come, it assuredly will come; God has appointed a day wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, and he will keep his appointment. It is appointed to men once to die, and after this the judgment, Heb. 9. 27. 28. Settle it therefore in your hearts that the day of the Lord will certainly come, and you shall certainly be called to give an account of all things done in the body, whether good or evil; and let your exact walking before God, and your frequent judging yourselves, evidence your firm belief of a future judgment, when many live as if they were never to give any account at all." (2.) The suddenness of this day; it will come as a thief in the night, at a time when men are sleeping and secure, as if they have no more account to make. The expectation of the day of the Lord, any more than the highway man, or a thief when they are in a deep sleep, in the dark and silent night. At midnight there was a cry, Behold, the bridegroom comes; (Matt. 25. 6.) and at that time not only the foolish, but also the wise virgins, slumbered and slept. The Lord will come in a day when we look not for him, and an hour came, men were asleep; That time which men think to be the most impenetrable to any, and therefore are most secure, will be the time of the Lord's coming. Let us then beware how we in our thoughts and imaginations put that day far away from us; but rather suppose it to be so much nearer in reality, by how much further off it is in the opinion of the ungodly world.

(3.) The solemnity of this coming; [1.] The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; and this shall be very sudden, and with such a noise as the breaking and tumbling down of so great a fabric must necessarily occasion. [2.] The elements shall melt with fervent heat. At this coming of the Lord it shall not only be very tempestuous round about him, so that the very heavens shall pass away as in a mighty violent storm, but a fire shall go before him, that shall melt the elements.
II. Peter, III.

11. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, 12. Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat! 13. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. 14. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless: 15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; 16. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. 17. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. 18. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

The apostle, having instructed them in the doctrine of Christ's second coming, takes occasion thence to exhort them to purity and godliness in their whole conversation; all the truth which is revealed in scripture, should be improved for our advancement in practical godliness: this is the effect that knowledge must produce, or we are never the better for it. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. Seeing all these things must be dissolved, how holy should we be, that are assured of it, departing from and dying to sin, that has so corrupted and defiled all the visible creation, that there is an absolute need of its dissolution! All that was made for man's use, is subject to vanity by man's sin; and if the sin of man has brought the visible heavens, and the elements and earth, under a curse, from which they cannot be freed without being dissolved, what an abominable evil is sin, and how much to be hated by us! And inasmuch as this is the case in order that they being restored to their primitive beauty and excellence, Let us therefore be holy, so let us be, in order to our being fit for the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness! It is a very exact and universal holiness that he exhorts to, not resting in any lower measure or degree, but labouring to be eminent beyond what is commonly attained; holy in God's house and in our own; holy in our worshipping of God, and in our conversing with men; all our conversation, whether with high or low, rich or poor, good or bad, friends or enemies, must be holy; we must keep ourselves unspotted from the world in all our conversations with it; we must be perfecting holiness in the fear of God, and in the love of God too; we must exercise ourselves unto godliness of all sorts, in all its parts, trusting in God and delighting in God only, who continues the same when the whole visible creation shall be dissolved; devoting our whole being to God, and therefore diligently exhorting one another to our being eminently holy and godly in all manner of conversation; "Look for the day of God as what you firmly believe shall come, and what you earnestly long for." The coming of the day of God is what every Christian must hope for and earnestly expect; for it is a day when Christ shall appear in the glory of the Father, and evidence his Divinity and Godhead even to those who counted him a mere man of the earth. If our Lord Jesus Christ, when he appeared in the form of a servant, was what the people of God earnestly waited and looked for; that coming was for the consolation of Israel, Luke 2. 25. How much more should they wait with expectation and earnestness for his second coming, which will be the day of their complete redemption, and of his most glorious manifestation! Then he shall come to be admired in his saints, and glorified in all them that believe. For though it cannot but terrify and affright the meekly, to see the visible heavens all in a flame, and the elements melting, yet the believer, whose faith is the evidence of things not seen, can rejoice in hope of more glorious heavens after these have been melted and refined by that dreadful fire which shall burn up all the dross of this visible creation. Here we must to m.}

I. What true Christians look for — new heavens and a new earth, in which a great deal more of the wisdom, power and goodness of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ will be clearly discerned than we are able to discover in what we now see; for in these new heavens and earth, freed from the vanity the former were subject to, and the sin there polluted, only the righteousness and glory of God to the service of such righteous persons as do righteousness, and are free from the power and pollution of sin; all the wicked shall be turned into hell; those only who are clothed with the righteousness of Christ, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, shall be admitted to dwell in this holy place. II. What is the ground and foundation of this expectation and hope— the promise of God. To look for any thing which God has not promised, is presumption; but if our expectations are according to the promise, both as to the things we look for, and the time and way of their being brought about, we cannot meet with a disappointment; for he is faithful, who has promised, See therefore that you fail not to delay his vengeance for all the wicked things that are to come according to the word of God; and as to the new heavens and new earth, look for them as God has allowed and directed by the passages we have in this portion of scripture now before you, and in Is. 65. 17. — 66. 22. to which the apostle may be thought to allude."

As in v. 11. he exhorts to holiness, from the consideration that the heavens and the earth shall be dissolved, so in v. 14. he resumes his exhortation, from the consideration that they shall be again renewed: "Seeing you expect the day of God, when our Lord Jesus Christ will appear in his glorious majesty, and these heavens and earth shall be dissolved and melted down, and, being purified and refined, shall be erected and rebuilt, prepare to meet him. It nearly concerns you to see in what state you are now called to be made ready, to pass sentence upon men, and to determine how it shall be with them to all eternity; this is the court of judicature whence there lies no appeal; whatever sentence is here passed by this great Judge, is irreversible; therefore get ready to appear before the judgment seat of Christ: and see to it."

"That you be found of him in peace, in a state of peace and reconciliation with God through Christ, in whom alone you have true rest and salvation. (1.) Peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. (2.) Peace in all sciences, through the Spirit of grace witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God. (3.) Peace with men, by having a calm and peaceable disposition wrought in us, resembling that of our blessed Lord."

2. That ye be found of Christ without spot, and blameless; follow after holiness as well as peace: and even spotless and perfect; we must not only take heed of all spots which are not the spots of God's children, (this only prevents us from being found of men without spot,) but we must be found of Christ without spot, we must be pressing toward spotless purity, absolute perfection. Christians must be perfecting holiness, that they may be not only blameless before men, but also in the sight of God; and all this deserves and needs the greatest (though this he does not very negligently, can never do it successfully."

"Never found at that day of God in peace, if you are lazy and idle in this your day, in which we must finish the work that is given us to do. It is only the diligent Christian who will be the happy Christian in the day of the Lord. Our Lord will suddenly come to us, or shortly call us to him; and would you have our Lord in the judgment of all the world, he is a curse denounced against him who does the works of the Lord negligently, Marj. Jer. 48. 10. Heaven will be a sufficient recompense for all our diligence and industry, therefore let us labour and take pains in the work of the Lord; he will certainly reward us, if we be diligent in the work he has allotted us; now, that you may be diligent, account the long-
were brought to believe in Christ; for it is generally thought that what is here alluded to, is contained in the epistle to the Romans; (ch. 2. 4.) though in all his epistles there are some things that refer to one or other of the subjects treated of in this and the foregoing chapter; and it cannot seem strange that those who were pursuing the same general design, should in their epistles insist upon the same things. But the apostle Peter proceeds to tell us, that in those things which are to be met with in St. Paul's epistles, there are some things hard to be understood. Among the variety of subjects treated of in scripture, some are not easy to be understood, because of their own obscurity, such are prophecies; others cannot be so easily understood because of their excellency and sublimity, as the mysterious doctrines; and others are with difficulty taken in, because of the weakness of men's minds, such as the things of the Spirit of God, mentioned 1 Cor. 2. 14. And here the unlearned and unstable make wretched work; for they wrest and torture the scriptures, to make them speak what the Holy Ghost did not intend. Those who are not well instructed and well established in the truth, are in great danger of perverting the word of God. Those who have heard and learned of the Father, are best secured from misunderstanding and misapplying any part of the word of God; and where there is a divine power to establish as well as to instruct men in divine truth, persons are effectually secured from falling into errors. How great a blessing this is, we learn by observing what is the pernicious consequence of the errors that ignorant and unstable men fall into—even their own destruction. Errors in particular concerning the holiness and justice of God are the utter ruin of multitudes of men. Let us therefore earnestly pray for the Spirit of God to instruct us in the truth, that we may know it as it is in Jesus, and have our hearts established with grace, that we may stand firm and unshaken, even in the most stormy times, when others are tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

In v. 17, the apostle gives them a word of caution, where he intimates, that the knowledge we have of these things should make us very wary and watchful, inasmuch as there is a twofold danger. First, We are in great danger of being seduced, and turned away from the truth. The unlearned and unstable, and they are very numerous, do generally wrest the scripture. Many who have the scriptures and read them, do not understand what they read; and too many of those who have a right understanding of the sense and meaning of the word, are not established in the belief of the truth, and all these are liable to fall into error. Few attain to the knowledge and acknowledgment of doctrinal Christianity; and fewer find, so as to keep in the way of practical godliness, which is the narrow way, which only leads unto life. There must be a great deal of self-denial and suspicion of ourselves, and submitting to the authority of Christ Jesus our great Prophet, before we can heartily receive all the truths of the gospel, and therefore we are in great danger of rejecting the truth. Secondly, We are in great danger by being seduced. For, 1. So far as we are turned from the truth, so far are we turned out of the way to true blessedness, into the path which leads to destruction. If men corrupt the word of God, it tends to their own utter ruin. 2. When men wrest the word of God, they fall into the error of the wicked, men without law, who keep to no rules, set no bounds to themselves; a sort of free-thinkers, which the psalmist detests, (Ps. 119. 113.) I hate vain thoughts, but thy law do I love. Whatever opinions and thoughts of men are not conformable to the law of God, and warranted by it, the good man disclaims and abhors; they are the conceits and counsels of the ungodly, who have forsaken God's law; and if we imitate their opinions, we shall too soon imitate their practices. 3. They who are led away by error, fall from their own steadfastness. They are wholly unhinged and unsettled, and know not where to rest, but are at the greatest uncertainty, like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. It nearly concerns us therefore to be upon our guard, seeing the danger is so great.

Now that we may the better avoid being led away, the apostle (v. 18.) directs us what to do. And, (1.) We must grow in grace. He had in the beginning of the epistle exhorted us to add one grace to another, and here he advises us to grow in all grace, in faith, and virtue, and knowledge. By how much the stronger grace is in us, by so much the more steadfast shall we be in the truth. (2.) We must grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Follow on to know the Lord. Labour to know him more clearly and more fully, to know more of Christ, and to know him to better purpose, so as to be more like him, and to love him better." This is the knowledge of Christ the apostle Paul reached after, and desired to attain to, Phil. 3. 10. Such a knowledge of Christ as conforms us more to him, and endears him more to us, must needs be of great use to us to preserve us from falling off in times of general apostasy; and they who experience this effect of the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, will, upon receiving such grace from him, give thanks and praise to him, and join with our apostle in saying, To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.
EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF JOHN.

Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds

THOUGH the continued tradition of the Church attests that this epistle came from St. John the apostle, yet we may observe some other evidence that will confirm (or with some perhaps even outweigh) the certainty of that tradition. It should seem, that the penman was one of the apostolical college, by the sensible palpable assurance he had of the truth of the Mediator’s person in his human nature; that which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life, v. 1. He here takes notice of the evidence the Lord gave to Thomas of his resurrection, by calling him to feel the prints of the nails and of the spear, which is recorded by John. And he must have been one of the disciples present, when the Lord came on the same day in which he arose from the dead, and shewed them his hands and his side, John 20. 20. But, that we may be assured which apostle this was, there is scarcely a critic or competent judge of diction, or style of argument and spirit, but will adjudge this epistle to the writer of that gospel that bears the name of the apostle John. They wonderfully agree in the titles and characters of the Redeemer; the Word, the Life, the Light; his name was the word of God. Compare 1 John 1. 1. and ch. 5. 7. with John 1. 1. and Rev. 19. 13. They agree in the commendation of God’s love to us, (1 John 3. 1. and ch. 4. 9. John 3. 16.) and in speaking of our regeneration, or being born of God; 1 Epist. 3. 9. ch. 4. 7. and ch. 5. 1. John 3. 5. 6. Lastly, (to add no more instances, which may be easily seen in comparing this epistle with that gospel) they agree in the allusion to, or application of, that passage in that gospel, which relates (and which alone relates) the issuing of water and blood out of the Redeemer’s opened side; This is he that came by water and blood, ch. 5. 6. Thus the epistle plainly appears to flow from the same pen as that gospel did. Now I know not that the text, or the intrinsic history of any of the gospels, gives us such assurance of its writer or penman, as that ascribed to John plainly does. There (viz. ch. 21. 24.) the sacred historian thus notifies himself; This is the disciple that testified these things, and wrote these things; and we know that his testimony is true. Now who is this disciple, but he concerning whom Peter asked, What shall this man do? And concerning whom the Lord answered, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? v. 22. And who (in v. 20.) is described by these three characters: 1. That he is the disciple whom Jesus loved; the Lord’s peculiar friend. 2. That he also leaned on his breast at supper. 3. That he said unto him, Lord, who is he that betrayeth thee? As sure then as it is that that disciple was John, so sure may the church be that that gospel and this epistle came from the beloved John. The epistle is styled general, as being not inscribed to any particular church; it is, as a circular letter, (or a visitation charge,) sent to divers churches, (some say of Parthia,) in order to confirm them in their steadfast adherence to the Lord Christ, and the sacred doctrine concerning his person and office, against seducers; and to instigate them to adorn that doctrine by love to God and man; and particularly to each other, as being descended from God, united by the same Head, and travelling toward the same eternal life.

I. JOHN, I.

CHAP. I.

1. THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; 2. (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shewed unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;) 3. That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ. 4. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

The apostle omits his name and character, (as also the author to the Hebrews does,) either out of humility, or as being willing that the Christian reader should be swayed by the light and weight of the word, rather than by the name of the writer and the authority that might recommend them. And so he begins.

I. With an account or character of the Mediator's person. He is the great Subject of the gospel; the Foundation and Object of our faith and hope: the Bond and Cement that unites us unto God. He should be well known; and he is represented here, 1. As the Word of life, v. 1. In the gospel these two are digressed, and he is called first, The word, v. 1. and afterward Life, intimating, that he is intellectual Life. In him was life, and that life was (efficiently and objectively) the light of men, v. 4. Here both are conjoined; the Word of life: the vital Word.

In that he is the Word, it is intimated that he is the Word of some person or other; and that is God, even the Father. He is the Word of God, and so he is intimated to issue from the Father, as truly (not in the same manner) as a word (or speech), which is a sound of words) from a speaker: But he is not a mere vocal word, (a bare λεγενς φαινεται) but a vital one; the Word of Life; the living word; and thereby, 2. As eternal Life. His duration shews his excellency. He was from eternity; and so is, in scripture-account, necessary, essential, uncreated life. That the apostle speaks of his eternity, a parte ante, (as they say) and as from everlasting, seems evident in that he speaks of him, as he was in and from the beginning; when he was then with the Father, before his manifestation to us, yea, before the making of all things that were made; as John 1. 1, 3. So that he is the eternal, vital, intellectual Word of the eternal living Father. 3. As life manifested; (v. 2.) manifested in the flesh; manifested to us. The eternal Life would assume mortality; would put on flesh and blood, (in the entire human nature,) and so dwell among us, and converse with us, John 1. 14. Here were diverse words and notions needed, that eternal Life (a Person of eternal, essential life) should come to visit mortals, and to procure eternal life for them, and then confer it on them!

II. With the evidence and convicptive assurances that the apostle and his brethren had of the Mediator's person, and of the world in the way of his manifestation. 1. The Life, the Word of life, the eternal Life, as such, could not be seen and felt; but the Life manifested, might be, and was so. The Life was clothed with flesh; put on the state and habit of abused human nature; and, as such, gave sensible proof of its existence and transactions here. The Divine Life, or Word incarnate, presented and evinced itself to the very senses of the apostles, as, to their ears. That which we have heard, v. 1, 3. The Life assumed a mouth and tongue, that he might utter words of life. The apostles not only heard of him, but they heard him himself. Above three years might they attend his ministry, be auditors of his public sermons and private expositions, (for he expounded them in the house,) and be charmed with the words of him who spake apostles, v. 1. To their ears. That which we have seen with our eyes, v. 1—3. The word would become visible; would not only be heard, but seen; publicly, privately, at distance, and at nearest approach; which may be intimated in the expression, with our eyes; with all the use and exercise that we could make of our eyes. We saw him in his life and ministry; saw him in his transfiguration on the mount, hanging, bleeding, dying and dead, upon the cross; and we saw him after his return, from his resurrection, in the midst of his apostles. His apostles must be eye-witnesses as well as ear-witnesses of him. Wherefore, of these men that have accompanied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection, Acts 1. 21, 22. And we were eye-witnesses of his majesty, 2 Pet. 1. 16. 3. To their minds the same internal sense; to the eyes of their mind; for so (possibly) may the next clause be interpreted. To which we have looked upon. This may be distinguished from the foregoing perception, seeing with the eyes; and may be the same with what the apostle says in his gospel; (ch. 1. 14.) And we beheld,—οι σωματεις, his glory, the glory as of the Only-Begotten of the Father. The word is not applied to the immediate object of the eye, but that was rationally collected from what they saw. What we have seen, with our eyes, is distributed, and their evidence is, in this passage, we have well known of this word of life, we report to you.” The senses are to be the informers of the mind. 4. To their hands and sense of feeling; And our hands have handled (touched and felt) the word of life. This surely refers to the full conviction our Lord afforded his apostles of his truth, reality, solidity, and organization of his body after his resurrection from the dead. When he shewed them his hands and his side, 20. or that he gave them leave to touch him: at least, he knew of Thomas’s unbelief, and his professed resolution too not to believe, till he had found and felt the places and signatures of the wounds by which he died. Accordingly, at the next congress he called Thomas, in the presence of the rest, to satisfy the very curiosity of his unbelief. And probably others of them did so too. Our hands have handled of the Word of life. The apostles were eye-witnesses of the event of the testimony of sense. Sense, in its place and sphere, is a means that God has appointed, and the Lord Christ has employed, for our information. Our Lord took care to satisfy (as far as might be) all the senses of his apostles, that they might be the more authentic witnesses of him to the world. They that apply all this to the law and the gospel, lose the variety of sensations here mentioned in the propriety of the expressions and the reason of their inculcation and repetition here. That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, v. 3. The apostles could not be deceived in such long and various exercise of their sense. Sense must minister to reason and judgment; and reason and judgment must minister to the reception of the Lord Christ and his gospel. The rejection of the Christian revelation is at last resolved into the rejection of sense itself; He upholdeth them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed them not who had seen him after he was risen, Mark 16. 14.

III. With a solemn assertion and attestation of these grounds and evidences of the Christian truth and doctrine, the apostles publish these assurances for our satisfaction; We bear witness, and shew unto you, v. 2. That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, v. 3. It became both the apostles and ourselves to do our utmost to establish the evidence by which we were led; the reasons by which they were constrained to proclaim and propagate the Christian doctrine in the world. Wisdom and integrity obliged them to demonstrate that it was not either private fancy, or a cunningly devised fable, that they presented to the world. Evident truth would open their mouths, and force a public profession. We cannot base our trust on Scriptural warrant when we have Acts 4. 20. It concerned the disciples to be well assured of the truth of the institution they had embraced. They should see the evidences of their holy religion. It fears not the light, nor the most judicious examination. It is able to afford rational conviction, and solid persuasion of mind and conscience. I would that ye knew what great conflict I have (or concern of mind) for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in truth. That their hearts might be knit together in love, and unto all riches of full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, even the Father, and of Christ, Col. 2. 1, 2.

IV. With the reason of the apostle's exhibiting and asserting this summary of sacred faith, and this breviate of evidence attending it. This reason is twofold:

1. That the believers of it may be advanced to the same happiness with them; (with the apostles themselves;) That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye may have fellowship with us, v. 3. The apostle means not personal fellowship or consociation in the same church-administrations, but such as is consistent with personal distance from each other. It is communion with heaven, and in blessings that come from thence, and tend thither. 4. This we declare and testify, that you may share with us in our privileges and happiness. Gospel-spirits (or those that are made happy by gospel-grace) would fain have others happy too. We see also, there is a fellowship or communion that runs through the whole church of God. There may be some personal distinctions and peculiarities, but there is a communion (or common participation of privilege and dignity) belonging to all saints, from the highest apostle to the lowest believer. As there is the same precious faith, there are the same precious promises dignifying and crowning that faith, and the same precious blessings and graces enriching and filling those promises. Now that believers may be ambitious of this communion, that they may be instigated to retain and hold fast the faith that is the means of such communion, that the apostles also may manifest their love to the disciples in assisting them to the same communion with themselves, they indicate to them what it is, and truly such fellowship (or communion) is with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. We have communion with the Father, and with the Son of the Father (as 2 Epist. 7. 3. he is most emphatically styled) in our happy relation to them, in our receiving heavenly blessings from them, and in our spiritual converse with them. We have now such supernatural conversation with God and the Lord Christ, as is an earnest and foretaste of what it is, and truly such communion with the Father and the Son. See for what end the eternal Life was made flesh—that he might advance us to eternal life in communion with the Father and himself. See how far they live beneath the dignity, use, and end of the Christian faith and institution, which is why some that have not joyned with believers in eternal communion with the Father and the Son Jesus Christ.

2. That believers may be enlarged and advanced in holy joy; And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full, v. 4. The gospel-dispensation is not properly a dispensation of fear, sorrow, and dread, but of peace and joy. Terror and astonishment may well attend mount Sinai, but exultation and joy mount Zion; where appears the eternal Word, the eternal Life, manifested in our flesh. The mystery of the Christian religion is directly calculated for the joy of mortals. It should be joy to us, that the eternal Son should come to seek and save us; that he has made a full atonement for our sins; that he has consummated the divine and full bliss he lives as our Intercessor and Advocate with the Father; and that he will come again to perfect and glorify his persevering believers. And therefore they live beneath the use and end of the Christian revelation, who are not filled with spiritual joy. Believers should rejoice in their happy relation to God, as his sons and heirs, his beloved and adopted; in their happy relation to the Son of the Father, as being members of his beloved body, and coheirs with himself; in the pardoning of their sins, in the sanctification of their natures, in the adoption of their persons, in the prospect of grace and glory that will be revealed at the return of their Lord and Head from heaven. Were they confirmed in their holy faith, how would they rejoice! The disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost, Acts 13. 52.

5. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, That God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. 6. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: 7. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

The apostle, having declared the truth and dignity of the Author of the gospel, brings a message or report from him; from which a just conclusion is to be drawn for the consideration and conviction of the professors of religion, or professed entertainers of the glorious doctrine. This is the light of the gospel-revelation.

1. Here is the message or report that the apostle avers to come from the Lord Jesus; This then is the message which we have heard of him, (v. 5.) of his Son Jesus Christ. As he was the immediate Sender of the apostles, so he is the principal Person spoken of in the preceding context, and the next antecedent also to whom the article him can relate. The apostles and apostolical ministers are sent from the Lord Jesus; it is the from him, the chief they have their commission from, and according to this they are to bring his mind and messages to the world and to the churches. This is the wisdom and present dispensation of the Lord Jesus, to send his messages to us by persons like ourselves. He put on human nature, will honour earthen vessels. It was the ambition of the apostles, to be found faithful, and faithfully to deliver the errands and messages they had received. What was communicated to God the Son, he is zealous to impart; This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you. A message from the Word of life, from the eternal Word, we should gladly receive: and the present one is this; relating to the nature of God, whom we are to serve, and with whom we should covet all indubitable communion—That God is light, and in him is no darkness at all, v. 5. This report asserts that the excellency of the divine nature is all that beauty and perfection that can be represented to us by light. He is self-active, uncompounded spirituality, purity, wisdom, holiness, and glory; and then the absoluteness and fulness of that excellency and perfection. There is no defect or imperfection, no mixture of any thing alien or contrary to absolute excellency, no mutability or capacity of any decay in him; In him is no darkness at all, v. 5. Or this report may more immediately relate to what is usually called the moral perfection of the divine nature; what we are to imitate, or what is more directly to influence us in our gospel-work. And so it will comprehend the holiness of God, the absolution of his nature and will; his providence, knowledge, (particularly of hearts,) his jealousy and justice, which burn as a most bright and vehement flame. It is meet that to this dark world the great God should be represented as pure and perfect light. It is the Lord Jesus that best of all opens to us the name and nature of the unsearchable God; The only-begotten, that is in the bosom of the Father. This is the representative of the Christian revelation, to bring us the most noble, the most august, and agreeable account of the blessed God; such as is most suitable to the light of reason, and what is demonstrable thereby; most suitable to the magnificence of his works round about us, and to the nature and office of him that is the supreme Administrator, Governor, and Judge of the world. What more (relating to and comprehensive of all such things, could be concluded in one word than this, God is Light, and in him is no darkness at all? Then,

2. There is a just conclusion to be drawn from this message and report; and that for the consideration and conviction of professors of religion, or professed entertainers of this gospel. This conclusion issues into two branches. (1.) For the conviction of such professors of religion, who have fellowship with God; if we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. It is known, that to walk, in scripture-account, is to order and frame the course and actions of the moral life, that is, of the life so far as it is capable of subjecting to the divine law. To walk in darkness, is to live and act according to such ignorance, error, and erroneous practice, as are contrary to the fundamental dictates of holy religion. Now there may be those who may pretend to great attainments and enjoyments in religion; they may profess to have communion with God; and yet their lives may be irreligious, immoral, and impure. To such the apostle would not fear to give the lie; They lie, and do not the truth. They belie God; for he holds no heavenly fellowship or intercourse with unholy souls. What communion hath light with darkness? They belie themselves, who pretend a communion with God by misapprehensions of communications from God, nor access to him. There is no truth in their profession or in their practice; or their practice gives their profession and pretences the lie; and demonstrates the folly and falsehood of them. (2.) For the conviction, and consequent satisfaction of those that are near to God; But if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. As the blessed Light, eternal, boundless Light, and the Mediator, is from him, the Light of the world; so the Christian institution is the great luminary that appears in the sphere, and shines here below. A conformity to this in spirit and practice, demonstrates fellowship or communion with God. They that so walk, shew that they know God, that they have received of the Spirit of God. Not that the relation of blood and fellowship is stamped upon their souls. Then we have fellowship one with another; they with us, and we with them, and both with God, in his blessed or beatific communications to us. And this is one of those beneficial communications to us—that his Son's blood or death is applied or imputed to us; The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. The eternal life of God the Son, both the glory and the blood, and so became Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ hath shed his blood for us, or died to wash us from our sins in his own blood. His blood applied to us discharges us from the guilt of all sin, both original and actual, inherent and committed; and so far we stand righteous in his sight; and not only so, but his blood cures for us those sacred influences by which sin is to be subdued more and more, till it is quite abolished, Gal. 3. 13, 14.

8. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 10. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

The apostle, having supposed, that even they of this heavenly communion have yet their sin, proceeds here to justify that supposition; and this he does by shewing the dreadful consequences of denying it; and that in two particulars. 1. If we say, We have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us, v. 8. We must be here self-deceived. We must beware of deceiving ourselves in denying or excusing our sins. The more we see them, the more we shall esteem and value the remedy. If we deny them, the truth is not in us: either the truth that is contrary to such denial; (we lie in denying our sin;) or, the truth of religion is not in us. The Christian religion is the religion of sinners; of such as have sinned, and have sinned against the Lord. And that still dwells. The Christian life is a life of continued repentance, humiliation for, and mortification of, sin; of continual faith in, thankfulness for, and love to, the Redeemer, and hopeful joyous expectation of a day of glorious redemption, in which the believer shall be fully and finally acquitted, and sin abolished for ever. 2. If we say, We have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us, v. 10. The denial of our sin not only deceives ourselves, but reflects dishonour upon God. It challenges his veracity. He has abundantly testified of, and testified against, the sin of the world. And the Lord said in his heart, (determined thus with himself) I will not again curse the ground (as he had then lately done) for man's sake; for, (or with the learned bishop Patrick,) though, the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth, Gen. 8. 21. But God has given this weighty testimony, because he has shown to us this testimony in the practical effect of the blood of his Son, by his providing a sufficient effectual Sacrifice for sin, that will be needed in all ages; and to the continued sinfulness of believers themselves, by requiring them continually to confess their sins, and apply themselves by faith to the blood of that Sacrifice. And therefore, if we say either that we have not sinned, or do not yet sin, the word of God is not in us, either in our minds, as to the acquaintance of it, or in our hearts, as to the practical influence it should have upon us.

The apostle then instructs the believer in the way to the continued pardon of his sin. Here we have, (1.) His duty in order thereto; If we confess our sins, v. 9. Penitent confession and acknowledgment of sin are the believer's business, and the means of his deliverance from his guilt. And (2.) His encouragement thereto; and he shall have it, v. 10. This is the veracity, righteousness, and clemency of God, to whom he makes such confession; He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, v. 9. God is faithful to his covenant and word, who hath therein promised forgiveness to penitent believing confessors. He is just to himself and his glory, has promised such a sacrifice, only which his righteousness, is declared the justification of sinners. He is just to his Son, who has (not only sent him for such service, but) promised to him, that those who come through him shall be forgiven on his account. By his knowledge (by the believing apprehension of him) shall my righteous servant justify many, Isa.
53. 11. He is clement and gracious also, and so will forgive, to the contrite confessor, all his sins, cleanse him from the guilt of all unrighteousness, and in due time deliver him from the power and practice of it.

CHAP. II.

Here the apostle encourages against sins of incontinency, v. 1. 2. Shews the true knowledge and love of God; (v. 3. 8.) renews the precept of fraternal love; (v. 7. 11.) addresses the several ages of Christians; (v. 15. 14.) warns against worldly love, (v. 15. 17.) against seducers; (v. 18. 19.) shews the security of true Christians; (v. 20. 27.) and advises to abide in Christ, v. 28, 29.

My little children, these things I write unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: 2. And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our's only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

These verses relate to the concluding subject of the foregoing chapter, in which the apostle proceeds upon the supposition of the real Christian's sin. And here he gives them both disussion and support. I. Dissuasion. He would leave no room for sin; "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not, v. 1. The design and purport of this letter, the design of what I have just said concerning sin, is to shew them, that it is the sin of all by nature, and that it is the sin of it by an irreligious course, is, to dissuade and drive you from sin." See the familiar affectionate compellation with which he introduces his admonition; My little children: children, as having perhaps been begotten by his gospel; little children, as being much beneath him in age and experience. My little children: as being dear to him in the bonds of the gospel. Certainly the gospel most prevailed where and when such ministerial love most abounded; or perhaps the judicious reader will find reason to think that the apostle's meaning in this disssuasion or caution, is this, or amounts to this reading; These things write I unto you, not that ye sin. And so the words will look back to what he had said before concerning the assured pardon of sin; God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, &c. ch. 1. 9. And so the words are a preclusion of all abuse of such favours and indulgences. "Then all sins will be forgiven to penitent confessors, yet this I write, not to encourage you in sin, but upon another account." Or this clause will look forward to what the apostle is going to say about the Advocate for sinners; and so it is a prolepsis, a prevention of like mistake or abuse; "These things write I unto you, not that ye sin, but that ye may see your remedy for sin." And so the following particle (as the learned know) may be rendered adversatively; But if a man sin, he may know his help and cure. And so we see,

II. The believer's support and relief in case of sin; And (or but) if any man sin, (any of us, or of our aforesaid communion,) we have an Advocate with the Father, &c. v. 1. Believers themselves, those that are advanced to a happy gospel-state, have yet their sins. There is a great distinction therefore between the sinners that are in the world. These are Christianized (such as are instated in the sacred, saving privileges of Christ's mystical or spiritual body) and unchristianized; converted and unconverted sinners. There are some who, though they really sin, yet, in comparison with others, are said not to sin; as ch. 3. 9. Believers, as they have had an atonement applied unto them, at their entrance into a state of pardon and justification, so they have an Advocate in heaven still to continue with them that state, and procure their continued pardon and forgiveness. And this must be the support, satisfac- tion, and refuge of believers, (or real Christians,) in or upon their sins; We have an Advocate. The original name is sometimes given to the Holy Ghost; and then it is rendered, the Comforter. He acts within us; he puts pleas and arguments into our hearts and mouths; and so is our Advocate, by procuring us to intercede for ourselves. But here is an Advocate without us, in heaven and with the Father. The proper office and business of an advocate is with the judge; with him he pleads the client's cause. The Judge with whom our Advocate pleads, is, the Father; his Father and our's. He who was our Judge in the legal court, (the court of the violated law) is our Father and Judge in the greater court, in the gates of heaven and of grace. His throne or tribunal is the mercy-seat. And he that is our Father, is also our Judge; the supreme Arbiter of our state and circumstances, either for life or death, for time or eternity. Ye are come— to God, the Judge of all, Heb. 12. 23. That believers may be encouraged to hope that their cause will go well, as their Judge is represented to them in the relation of a Father, so their Advocate can be to them in the capacity of the Advocate. Another advocate (or an advocate in another court) may be an unjust person himself, and yet may have a just cause (and the cause of a just person in that case) to plead, and may accordingly carry his case. But here the clients are guilty; their innocence and legal righteousness cannot be pleaded; their sin must be confessed or supposed. It is the Advocate's own righteousness that he must plead for the criminals. He has been righteous to the death, righteous for them; he has brought in everlasting righteousness. This the Judge will not deny. Upon this score he pleads, that the clients' sins may not be imputed to them. By the plea he has to make; the ground and basis of his advocacy. And he is the Propitiation for our sins, v. 2. He is the expiatory Victim, the propitiatory Sacrifice that has been offered to the Judge for it; our offences and their consequent punishment have been removed. In vain do the professors of Rome distinguish between an advocate of redemption and an advocate of intercession, or a mediator of such different service. The Mediator of intercession, the Advocate for us, is the Mediator of redemption, the Propitiation for our sins. It is his propitiation that he pleads. And we might be apt to suppose that his blood had lost its value and efficacy, were no mention made of it in his advocacy since the time it was shed. But now we see that it is of esteem there, since it is continually represented in the intercession of the great Advocate (the Attorney-General) for the church of God. He ever lives to make intercession for those that come to God through him. 4. By the extent of his plea; the latitude of his propitiation. It is not confined to one nation, and not particular to his own nation and countries. As he is the only, so he is the universal Atonement and Propitiation for all that are saved and brought home to God, and to his favour and forgiveness.
I. JOHN, 11.

3. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. 4. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. 5. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

These verses may seem to relate to the seventh verse of the former chapter, between which and these verses there occurred an incidental discourse concerning the believer’s duty and relief in case of sin, occasioned by the mention of one of the believer’s privileges—his being cleansed from sin by the Mediator’s blood. In that verse the apostle asserts the beneficial consequence of walking in the light; “We have then fellowship with one another, such divine fellowship and communion as are the prerogative of the church of Christ.” Here now succeeds the trial or test of our light and of our love:

I. The trial of our light; And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments, v. 3.

3. Divine light and knowledge are the beauty and improvement of the mind; it becomes the disciples of the Mediator to be persons of wisdom and understanding. Young Christians are apt to magnify their new light, and applaud their new knowledge, especially if they have been suddenly or in a short time communicated; and old ones are apt to suspect the sufficiency and fullness of their knowledge; they lament that they know God and Christ, and the rich contents of his gospel, no more: but here is the evidence of the soundness of our knowledge, if it constrains us to keep God’s commands; each perfection of his nature enforces his authority; the wisdom of his counsels, the riches of his grace, the grandeur of his works, recommend his law and government; a careful conscientious obedience to his commandments shews that the apprehension and knowledge of these things is graciously impressed upon the soul; and therefore it must follow in the reverse, that he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, v. 4.

Professors of the truth are often ashamed of their ignorance, and of their own declension; and pretend to great attainments in the knowledge of divine mysteries; Thou makes thy boast of God, and knowest his will, and approves (in the rational judgment) the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law, and are confident that thou thyself art (or art fit to be) a guide to the blind, &c. Rom. 2. 17, &c. But what knowledge of God can that be, which sees not that he is most worthy of the most entire and unreserved obedience? And if that men and known, how vain and superficial is even that knowledge, when it sways not the heart unto obedience! A disobedient life is the contumacy and shame of pretended religious knowledge; it gives the lie to such boasts and pretences, and shews that there is neither religion nor honesty in them.

II. The trial of our love; But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him, v. 5. To keep the word of God, or of Christ, is sacrately to attend thereto in all the conduct and motion of life; in him that does so is the love of God perfected. Possibly, some may here understand God’s love to us; and doubtless, his love to us cannot be perfected (or obtain its perfect design and fruit) without our practical observance of his word: we are chosen, to be holy and blameless before him in love; we are redeemed, to be a peculiar people zealous of good works; we are pardoned and justified, that we may be partakers of larger measures of the divine Spirit for sanctification; we are sanctified, that we may walk in ways of holiness and obedience: no act of divine love, that here terminates upon us, obtains its proper tendency, issue, and effect, without our holy attendance to God’s word; but the phrase rather denotes here our love to God; so v. 15. The love of (to) the Father, is not in him; so ch. 3. 17. How dwelleth the love of (to) God in him? Now light is to kindle love; and love must and will keep the word of God; it inquires wherein the beloved may be pleased and served, and finding he will be so by the observance of his declared will, there it employs and exerts itself; there love is demonstrated; there it has its perfect (or complete) exercise, operation, and delight; and hereby (by this dutiful attendance to the will of God, or Christ) we know that we are in him; (v. 5.) we know that we belong to him, and that we are united to him by that Spirit which elevates and assists us to this obedience; and if we acknowledge our relation to him, and our union with him, it must have this continued enforcement upon us; He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself to walk, even as he walked, v. 6. The Lord Christ was an Inhabitant of this world, and walked here below; here he gave a shining example of absolute obedience to God: they who profess to be on his side, and to abide with him, must walk with him, after his pattern and example. The partisans of the several sects of philosophers of old paid great regard to the dictates and practice of their respective teachers and sect-masters; much more should the Christian, he who professes to abide in and with Christ, aim to resemble his infallible Master and Head, and conform to his course and prescriptions; Then are ye my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you, John 15. 14.

7. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning. 8. Again, a new commandment write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 9. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. 10. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. 11. But he that hateth his brother, is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whether he goeth, because darkness hath blinded his eyes.

This seventh verse may be supposed either to look backward to what immediately preceded; (and then it is walking as Christ walked) that is here represented as no new, but an old commandment; it is that which the apostles would certainly inculcate, where to the Jews brought (Christ’s gospel) it looks forward to what the apostle is now going to recommend, and that is the law of fraternal love; this is the message heard from the beginning, (ch. 3. 11.) and the old commandment, 2 John 5. Now while the apostle addresses himself to the recommendation of such a practice, he is ready to give an instance thereof in his affectionate appellation; “Brethren, you who are dear to me in the bond of that
I. AN OLD ONE; I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. The same is life eternal, old as human nature; but it might admit divers emacions, enforcements, and motives. In the state of innocence, had human nature then been propagated, men must have loved one another, as being of one blood, made to dwell on the earth, as being God's offspring, and bearing his image. In the state of sin and promised recovery, they must love one another, as related to God the maker, as related to each other by blood, and as partners in the same hope. When the Hebrews were peculiarly incorporated, they must accordingly love each other, as being the privileged people, whose were the covenants and the adoption, and of whose race the Messiah and Head of the church must spring; and the law of love must be conveyed with new obligations to the new Israel of God, to the gospel-church; and so it is the old commandment, or the word which the children of the gospel-Israel have heard from the beginning, v. 7.

II. As a new one; "Again, to constrain you to this duty the more, a new commandment I write unto you, the law of the new society, the Christian corporation, which thing is true in him; the matter of which was first true in and concerning the Head of it; the truth of it was first, and was abundantly, in him; he loved the church, and gave himself for it: and it is true in you; this law is, in some measure, written upon your hearts; ye are taught of God to love one another, and that because," (or since, or forasmuch as) "the darkness is past, the darkness of your prejudiced unconverted (whether Jewish or Gentile) minds; your deplorable ignorance of God and of his Christ is now past, and the true light now shineth; v. 8.) the light of evangelical revelation hath shone with life and efficacy into your hearts, hence ye have seen the excellency of Christian love, and the fundamental obligation thereto. Hence we see the fundamentals (and particularly the fundamental precepts) of the Christian religion may be represented either as new or old; the reformed doctrine, or doctrine of religion in the reformed churches, is new and old; new, as taught after long darkness, by the lights of the reformation; new, as purged from the additions of it, old, as having been taught and heard from the beginning.

We should see that that grace or virtue which was true in Christ, should be true also in us; we should be conformable to our Head; the more our darkness is past, and gospel-light shines into us, the deeper should our subjection be to the commandments of our Lord, whether considered as old or new.

Light should produce a suitable heat. According, hence, there is another law wherein the Christian light; before, it was lighted by obedience to God; here by Christian love: 1. He who wants such love, in vain pretends his light; He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now, v. 9. It is proper for sincere Christians to acknowledge what God has done for their souls; but in the visible church there are often those who assume to themselves more than is true; there are those who say they love the Lord and his church; but in their divisions and dispositions they have no influence upon their minds and spirits, and yet they walk in hatred and enmity toward their Christian brethren; these cannot be swayed by the sense of the love of Christ to their brethren, and therefore remain in their dark state, notwithstanding their pretended conversion to the Christian religion.

2. He who is managed by such love, approves his light to be good and genuine; He that loveth his brother, (as his brother in Christ,) abideth in the light, v. 10. He sees the foundation and reason of Christian love; he discerns the weight and value of the Christian redemption; he sees how meet it is that we should love those whom Christ hath loved; and then the consequence will be, that there is no occasion of stumbling in you, (v. 16.) he will be no scandal, no stumbling-block to his brother; he will conscientiously beware that he neither induce his brother to sin, nor turn him out of the way of religion; Christian love teaches us highly to value our brother's soul, and dread every thing that will be injurious to his innocence and peace. 3. Hatred is a sign of spiritual darkness; But he that hateth his brother, is in darkness, v. 11. Spiritual light is instilled by the Spirit of grace, and one of the fruits of that Spirit is love; he then who is possessed with malignity toward the Christian brother, must needs be destitute of spiritual light; consequently, he walks in darkness, (v. 11.) his life is agreeable to a dark mind and conscience, and he knows not whether he goes; he sees not whither this dark spirit carries him, and particularly that it will carry him to the world of outer darkness, because darkness hath blinded his eyes, v. 11. The darkness of ungeneracy, evidenced by a malignant spirit, is contrary to the light of life; where that darkness dwells, the mind, the judgment, and the conscience will be darkened, and so will mistake the way to heavenly endless life. Here we may observe how effectually our apostle is now cured of his once hot and flaming spirit. Time was, when he was for calling for fire from heaven upon poor ignorant Samaritans who received them not, Luke 9. 54. But his Lord had shewed him that he knew not his own spirit; nor whither it led him. Having now imbibed more of the Spirit of Christ, he breathes out good-will to man, and love to all the brethren. It is the Lord Jesus that is the great Master of love; it is his school (his own church) that is the school of love. His disciples are the disciples of love, and his family must be the family of love.

12. I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. 13. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcame the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. 14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. 15. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 16. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. 17. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

This new command of holy love, with the incentives thereto, may possibly be directed to the several ranks of disciples that are here accosted; the several graduates in the Christian university, the catholic church, must be sure to preserve the bond of sacred love; or, there being an important dehortation and dissuasion to follow, without the observance of which, vital religion in the love of God and love of the brethren cannot subsist, the apostle may justly seem to preface it with a solemn address to the several forms or orders of the Christian church; let the infants, or children, the adult, the seniors, (or the aedēsus, the ἀπόστολος, the most perfect,) in the Christian institution, know that they must not love this world; and so, I.

We have the address itself made to the various forms and ranks in the church of Christ. All Christians are not of the same standing and stature; there are babes in Christ; there are grown men, and old disciples; as these have their peculiar services; but there are precepts and a correspondent obedience common to them all, as particularly mutual love and contempt of the world. We see also that wise pastors will judiciously distribute the word of life, and give to the several members of Christ's family their several suitable portions; I write unto you, children, fathers, and young men. In this distribution the apostle addresses.

1. The lowest in the Christian school; I write unto you, little children, v. 12. There are novices in religion, babies in Christ, those who are learning the rudiments of Christian godliness: the apostle may seem to encourage them by applying to them first; and it may be useful to the greater proficient, to hear what is said to their juniors; elements are to be repeated; first principles are the foundation of all. He addresses the disciples immediately after the child. (1.) Because their sins were forgiven them for his name's sake, v. 12. The youngest sincere disciple is pardoned; the communion of saints is attended with the forgiveness of sins; sins are forgiven, either for God's name's sake, for the praise of his glory, his glorious perfections displayed in forgiveness; or for Christ's name's sake, upon his score, and upon the account of the redemption that is in him; and they that are for God and Christ, are strong to vanquish this world which so interferes with the love of God. (2.) Because of their knowledge of God; I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father, v. 13. Children are wont to know none so soon as their father; children in Christianity must and do know God; They shall all know me, from the least to the greatest, Heb. 8. 11. Children in Christ should know that God is their Father; it should be a distinguishing mark of all the children of God, as in every other nation and dispensation of the world, to know his father; these children cannot but know their's; they can well be assured by whose power they are regenerated, and by whose grace they are adopted; they that know the Father, may well be withdrawn from the love of this world. Then the apostle proceeds.

2. To those of the highest station and stature; to the seniors in Christianity; to whom he gives an honourable appellation; I write unto you, fathers; (v. 13, 14,) unto you, My son, thou old disciple, Acts 21. 16. The apostle immediately passes from the bottom to the top of the school, from the lowest form to the highest, that they in the middle may hear both lessons, may remember what they have learned, and perceive what they must come to; I write unto you, fathers. They that are of longest standing in Christ's school, have need of further advice and instruction; the old disciple must go to heaven, (the university above,) with his book, his Bible, in his hand; fathers must be written unto, and preached unto; none are too old to learn; he writes to them upon the account of their knowledge: I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning, v. 13, 14. Old men have knowledge and experience, and expect deference. The apostle is ready to own his debt of gratitude to his readers, to congratulate them thereupon. They know the Lord Christ, particularly him that was from the beginning; as ch. 1. 1. As Christ is Alpha and Omega, so he must be the Beginning and End of our Christian knowledge. I count all things but loss for the excellence of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, Phil. 3. 8. They who know him that was from the beginning, before this world was made, may well be in due fashion to relinquish this world. Then,

3. To the middle age of Christians; to those who are in their bloom and flower; I write unto you, young men, v. 13, 14. There are the adult in Christ Jesus, those that are arrived at the strength of spirit and manhood, sensible of the good and evil, the apostle applies to them upon these accounts: (1.) Upon the account of their martial exploits. Dæterous soldiers they are in the camp of Christ; Because ye have overcome the wicked one, v. 13. There is a wicked one that is continually warring against souls; and particularly against the disciples: but they that are grown in Christ's school, can handle their arms and vanquish the evil one; and that they can vanquish him, may be called to vanquish the world too, which is so great an instrument for the Devil. (2.) Upon the account of their strength, discovered in this their achievement; Because ye are strong, and ye have overcome the wicked one, v. 14. Young men are wont to glory in their strength; it will be the glory of youthful persons to be strong in Christ and in his grace; it will be their glory, and it will try their strength, to overcome the Devil; if they can not be stronger than the Devil, he will be too strong for them: let vigorous Christians shew their strength in conquering the world; and the same strength must be exerted in overcoming the world, as is employed in overcoming the Devil. (3.) Because of their acquaintance with the word of God; And the word of God abideth in you, v. 14. The word of God must abide in the adult disciples; it is the nutriment and supply of strength to them; it is the weapon by which to overcome the wicked one. The word of God overcomes the world; because it is the sword of the Spirit, whereby the Devil and his fiery darts are put to flight; and they, in whom the word of God dwells, are well furnished for the conquest of the world.

II. We have the dehorption or dissuasion thus prefaces and introduced; a caution fundamental to vital practical religion; "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world, v. 15. Be crucified to the world, and mortify the things, which are for the world, and live not for the world." The several degrees of Christians should unite in this, in being dead to the world; were they thus united, they would soon unite upon other accounts; their love should be reserved for God; throw it not away upon the world. Now here we see the reasons of this dissuasion and caution; they are several, and had need to be so; it is hard to dispute or dissuade disciples themselves from the love of the world; the first is taken from the inconsistency of this love with the love of God; If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him, v. 15. The heart of man is narrow, and cannot contain both loves; the world draws down the heart from God; and so the more the love of the world prevails, the more the love of God dwindles and decays. The second is taken from the prohibition of worldly love or lust; it is not ordained of God; it is not of the Father, but is of the world; (v. 16.) This love or lust is not appointed of God, he calls us from it, but it intrudes itself from the world; the world is a usurper of our affection. Now here we have the due consideration and notion of the world, according to which it is to be crucified and renounced. The world, physically considered, is good, and is to be admired as the work of God, and a glass in which his perfections shine, but it is to be considered in its relation to God and his people; it is the world that works upon our weakness, and instigates and inflames our vile affections; there is great affinity and alliance between this world and the flesh, and this world intrudes and encroaches upon the flesh, and thereby makes a party against God; the things of the world therefore are distinguished into three classes, according to the three predominant inclinations of depraved nature; as, 1. There is the lust of the flesh; the flesh here, being distinguished from the eyes and the life, imports the body; the lust of the flesh is, subjectively, the humours and appetites of the body; and objectively, all those things that excite and inflame the pleasures of the flesh; this lust is usually called luxury. 2. There is the lust of the eyes; the eyes are delighted with treasures; riches and rich possessions are craved by an extravagant eye; this is the lust of covetousness. 3. There is the pride of life; a vain mind craves all the grandeur, equipment, and pomp of a vain-glorying life; this is ambition and worldly honour and applause; this is, in part, the disease of the ear; it must be flattered with admiration and praise. The objects of these appetites must be abandoned and renounced; as they engage and engross the affection and desire, they are not of the Father, but of the world, v. 16. The Father disallows them, and the world should keep them to itself. The lust and appetite to these things must immediately be avoided and rejected; and it is not appointed by the Father, but is insinuated by the insinuating world. The third reason is taken from the vain and vanishing state of earthly things and the enjoyment of them; And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, v. 17. The things of the world are fading and dying space; the lust itself and the pleasure of it wither and decay; desire itself will endure fail and cease, Eccl. 12. And what is become of all the pomp and pleasure of all those who now lie mouldering in the grave? The fourth reason is taken from the immortality of the divine lover, the lover of God; But he that doeth the will of God, which must be the character of the lover of God, in opposition to this lover of the world, abideth for ever, v. 17. The Object of his love, in opposition to the world that passeth away, abideth for ever; his sacred passion or affection, in opposition to the lust that passeth away, abideth for ever; love shall never fail; and he himself is an heir of immortality and endless life, and shall in time be translated therewith. From the whole of these verses we should observe the purity and spirituality of the apostolical doctrine; the animal life must be subjected to the divine; the body with its affections should be subjected to the soul; the soul should be swayed by religion, or the victorious love of God.

Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be manifested that they were not all of us.

Here is, 1. A moral prognostication of the time; the end is coming; Little children, it is the last time, v. 18. Some may suppose that the apostle here addresses the first rank of Christians again; the juniors are most apt to be seduced; and therefore, Little children, you that are young in religion, take heed to yourselves that ye be not corrupted. But it may be, as elsewhere, a universal appellation, introductive of an alarm to all Christians; Little children, it is the last time; our Jewish polity in church and state is hastening to an end; the Mosai- cal institution and discipline are just upon vanishing away; Daniel's weeks are now expiring; the de struction of the Hebrew city and sanctuary is approaching; the end whereof must be with a flood, and to the end of the world desolations are determined, Dan. 9. 26. It is meet that the disciples should be warned and instructed, and to be watched as much as may be of the prophetic periods of time.

2. The sign of this last time; Even now there are many antichrists, (v. 18.) many that oppose the person, doctrine, and kingdom of Christ. It is a mysterious portion of Providence, that antichrists should be permitted; but when they are come, it is good and safe that the disciples should be informed of them; ministers should be watchful to the base of Israel. Now it should be no great offence or prejudice to the disciples, that there are such antichrists: (1.) One great one has been foretold; As ye have heard that antichrist shall come, v. 18. The generality of the church have been informed by divine revelation, that there must be a long and fatal adversary to Christ and his church, 2 Thess. 2. 8. 10. No wonder then that there are many harbingers and forerunners of the great one; even now there are many antichrists; the mystery of iniquity already worketh. (2.) They were foretold also as the sign of this last time; For there shall arise false christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect, &c. Matt. 24. 24. And these were the forerunners of the dissolution of the Jewish state, nation, and religion, whereby we know it to be the last time, v. 18. For from that time we see there has been of seducers arising in the Chris- tian world, fortify us against their seduction.

3. Some account of these seducers or antichrists. (1.) More positively; they were once entertainers or professors of apostolical doctrine; They went out from us, (v. 19.) from our company and communion; possibly from the church of Jerusalem, or some of the churches of Judæa, Acts 15. 1. Certain men came down from Judæa, and taught the people there by the purer churches may have their apostates and revolters; the apostolical doctrine did not convert all whom it convinced of its truth. (2.) More privately; They were not inwardly such as we are; but they were not of us; they had not from the heart obeyed the form of sound doctrine delivered to them; they were not of our union with Christ the Head. Then here is, [1.] The reason upon which it is concluded that they were not of us, because what they pretended, or what we are, and that is, their actual defection; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; (v. 19.) had the sacred truth been rooted in their hearts, it would have held them with us; had they the anointing from above, by which they had been made true and real Christians, they had not turned anti- christs. They that apostatize from religion, sufficiently indeed, bestow, before the word of God, in religion: they who have imbibed the spirit of gospel-truth, have a good preservative against destructive error. [2.] The reason why they are permitted thus to depart from apostolical doctrine and communion, that their insincerity may be detected; but this was done, or they went out, that they may be made manifest that they were not all of us, v. 19. The church is not to take all for believers, and who are not; and therefore the church, considered as internally sanctified, may well be styled invisible. Some of the hypocritical must be mani- fested here, and that for their own shame and benefit too, in their reduction to the truth, if they have not sinned unto death, and for the terror and caution of others. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. But grow in grace, 2 Pet. 3. 17, 18.
20. But ye have an uncture from the Holy One, and ye know all things. 21. I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth: but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. 22. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. 23. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: (but) he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father also. 24. Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father. 25. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. 26. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. 27. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

Here,

I. The apostle encourages the disciples (to whom he writes) in these dangerous times, in this hour of seducers; he encourages them in the assurance of their stability in this day of apostasy; But ye have an uncture from the Holy One, and ye know all things. We see, 1. The blessing wherewith they were enriched—an unguent from heaven; Ye have an uncture. True Christians are anointed ones, their name intimates as much; they are anointed with the oil of grace, with gifts and spiritual endowments, by the Spirit of grace; they are anointed into a similitude of their Lord's offices, as subordinate prophets, priests, and kings, unto God. The Holy Spirit is compared unto oil, as well as to fire or water; and the communication of his salifice grace is our anointing. 2. From whom this blessing comes—from the Holy One; either from the Holy Ghost, or from the Lord Christ, as Rev. 5. 7. These things saith he that is holy; the Holy One. The Lord Christ is glorious in his holiness; The Lord Christ disposes of the graces of the divine Spirit, and he anoints the disciples to make them like to himself, and to secure them in his interest. 3. The effect of this uncture—it is a spiritual eye-salve; it enlightens and strengthens the eyes of the understanding; and thereby ye know all things, (v. 20.) all these things concerning Christ and his religion, it was promised and given you for that end.” John 14. 26. The Lord Christ does not deal alike by all his professed disciples; some are more anointed than others. There is great danger lest those that are not thus anointed, should be so far from being true to Christ, that they should, on the contrary, turn antichrists, and prove adversaries to Christ's person and kingdom and glory.

II. The apostle indicates to them the mind and meaning with which he wrote to them: 1. By way of negation; not as suspecting their knowledge, or supposing their ignorance in the grand truths of the gospel; “I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, v. 21. I could not then be so well assured of your stability therein, nor congratulate you on your uncture from above.” It is good to surmise well concerning our Christian brethren; we ought to do so till evidence overthrows our surmise a just confidence in religious persons may both encourage them and contribute to their fidelity. 2. By way of assertion and acknowledgment, as relying upon their judgment in these things; But because ye know it, (ye know the truth in Jesus,) and that no lie is of the truth. They who know the truth in any kind, are thereby prepared to discern what is contrary thereto, and to be an insistent thereupon. Revelation 1. 18. Sedex sui et obliqui—The line which shews itself to be straight, shews also what line is crooked. Truth and falsehood do not well mix and suit together. They that are well acquainted with Christian truth, are thereby well fortified against antichristian error and delusion. No lie belongs to religion, either natural or revealed. The apostles most of all condemned lies, and shew the inconsistency of lies in their doctrine: they would have been the most self-condemned persons, had they propagated the truth by lies. It is a commendation of the Christian religion, that it so well accords with natural religion, which is the foundation of it, that it so well accords with the Jewish religion, which contained the elements or rudiments of it. No lie is of the truth: frauds and impostures then are very unfit means to support and propagate the other truths. It would have been better with the state of religion, if they had not been used; the result of them appears in the infidelity of our age; the detection of ancient pious frauds and wires has almost run our age into atheism and irreligion; but the greatest actors and sufferers for the Christian revelation would assure us that no lie is of the truth.

III. The apostle further implores and arraigns the scribes and Pharisees, who were nearly related to these liars, egregious opposers of sacred truth; Who is a liar, or the liar, the notorious liar of the time and age in which we live, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? The great and pernicious lies that the father of lies, or of lies, spreads in the world, were of old, and usually are, falsehoods and errors relating to the person of Christ. There is no truth so sacred and fully attested, but some or other will contradict or deny it. That Jesus of Nazareth was the Son and the Christ of God, had been attested by heaven and earth and hell. It should seem that some, in the tremendous judgment of God, are given up to strong delusions. 2. They are direct enemies to God as well as to the Lord Christ; He is antichrist, who denieth the Father and the Son, v. 22. He that opposes Christ, denies the witness and testimony of the Father, and the seal that he hath given to his Son; for him hath God the Father sealed, John 6. 27. And he that denies the witness and testimony of the Father concerning Jesus Christ, denies that God is the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ; and consequently abandons the knowledge of God in Christ, and thereupon the whole revelation of God in Christ, and particularly of God in Christ recouping the world unto himself; and therefore the apostle may well infer, Whosoever denies the Son, the same has not the Father; (v. 23.) he has not the true knowledge of the Father; for the Son has most and best revealed him; he has no interest in the Father, in his favour and grace and salvation; for none cometh to the Father but by the Son. But, as some copies add, he that acknowledgeth the Son, has the Father also, v. 23. As there is an intimate relation between the Father and the Son, so there is an indivisible union in the doctrine, knowledge, and interests of both; the whole is the knowledge of, and right to, the Son, has the knowledge of, and right to, the Father also. They that adhere to the Christian revelation, hold the light and benefit of natural religion withal.

IV. Hereupon the apostle advises and persuades
I. JOHN, II. 843

1. The disciples to continue in the old doctrine at first communicated to them; Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning, v. 24. But as soon as Christ, that was at first delivered to the saints, is not to be exchanged for novelties. So sure were the apostles of the truth of what they had delivered concerning Christ and from him, that after all their toils and sufferings they were not willing to relinquish it. The Christian truth may plead antiquity, and be recommended thereby. This exhortation is enforced by these considerations. 1. From the sacred advantage they would receive by adhering to the primitive truth and faith: (1.) They will continue thereby in holy union with God and Christ; If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father, v. 24. The truth of Christ, abiding in us, is the means of seversing us from sin, and uniting us to the Son of God, John 15. 3, 4. The Son is the Medium or Mediator by whom we are united to the Father. What value then should we put upon gospel-truth! (2.) They will thereby secure the promise of eternal life; And this is the promise that he (even God the Father, ch. 5. 11.) hath promised us, even eternal life, v. 25. Great is the promise that God makes to his faithful adherents; it is suitable to his own greatness, power, and goodness; it is eternal life, which none but God can give. The blessed God puts great value upon his Son, and the truth relating to him; he is pleased to promise to those who continue in that truth, (under the light and power and influence of it,) eternal life. Then the exhortation aforesaid is enforced, 2. From the design of the apostle's writing to them. This letter is to fortify them against the deceivers of the age. "These things have I written to you concerning them that seduce you;" v. 26. and therefore if you continue not in what you have heard from the beginning, we will not continue, nor will we be continued. We should beware lest the apostolical letters, yea, lest the whole scripture of God, should be to us insignificant and fruitless. I have written to him the great things of my law, (and my gospel too,) but they were counted as a strange thing, Hos. 8. 12. 3. From the instructive blessing they had received from heaven; But the anointing which ye have received from him, abideth in you, v. 27. True Christians are shut up in the anointing of the Son of God, and therefore they have imbibed: the Holy Spirit has imprinted it on their minds and hearts. It is meet that the Lord Jesus should have a constant witness in the hearts of his disciples. The unction, the pouring out of the gifts of grace upon sincere disciples, is a seal to the truth and doctrine of Christ; since none giveth that seal but God; Now he who establisheth us with you, (and you with him,) is Christ in you, and hath sent me, v. 28. In the discharge of the Chrisch or divine unction is commended on these accounts: (1.) It is durable and lasting; oil or unguent is not so soon dried up as water; it abideth in you, v. 27. Divine illumination, in order to confirmation, must be something continued or constant; temptations, snares, and seductions, arise; the anointing must abide. (2.) It is better than human instruction; it will teach you what is right, and ye need not that any man teach you, v. 27. Not that this anointing will teach you what is needful for your appointed ministry; it could, if God so pleased; but it will not; but it will teach you better than we can; and ye need not that any man teach you, v. 27. You were instructed by us before ye were anointed; but now our teaching is nothing in comparison to that. Who teacheth like him? Job 36. 22. The divine unction does not supersede ministerial teaching, but surmount it. (3.) It is a sure evidence of truth; and all that it teaches, is infallible truth; But as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, v. 27. The Holy Spirit must needs be the Spirit of truth, as he is called, John 14. 17. The instruction and illumination that he affords, must needs be in bond of the truth. The Spirit of truth will not lie: and he teacheth all things, all things in the present dispensation, all things necessary to our knowledge of God in Christ, and their glory in the gospel. And, (4.) It is of a conserva tive influence; it will preserve those in whom it abideth, against seducers and their seduction; "And even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him, v. 27. It teaches you to abide in Christ; and as it teaches you, it secures you; it lays upon your minds and hearts, that you may not revolt from him. And he that hath anointed us, is God; who also hath sealed us for himself, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22.

28. And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.
will disclaim all acquaintance with them; will confound them with shame and confusion; will abandon them to darkness, devils and endless despair, by professing before men and angels, that he is ashamed of them, Mark 8. 38. To the same advice and exhortation he proceeds,

2. From the consideration of the dignity of those who still adhere to Christ and his religion; if ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness, is born of him, v. 29. The particle here rendered if, seems not to be vax dubinitas, but consequentis; not so much a conditional particle, as a suppositional one, if I may call it so; a note of allowance or concession; and so seems to be of the same import with our English inasmuch, or whereas, or since. So the sense runs more clear. Since ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness, is born of him. He that doeth righteousness, may here be justly enough assumed as another name for him that abideth in Christ. For he that abideth in Christ, abideth in the law and love of Christ, and consequently in his allegiance and obedience to him; and so must do, or work, or practise, righteousness, or the parts of gospel-holiness. Now such a one must be born of him. He is renewed by the Spirit of Christ, after the image of Christ; created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath fore-ordained that they should walk in them, Eph. 2. 10. "Since then ye know that the Lord Christ is righteous, Righteousness in his quality and capacity; the Lord our Righteousness, and the Lord our Sanctifier or our Sanetification; as 1 Cor. 1. 30.) ye cannot but know thereupon," (or know ye, it is for your consideration and regard,) "that he who by the continued practice of Christianity abideth in him, is born of him." The new spiritual nature is derived from the Lord Christ. He that is constant to the practice of religion in trying times, gives it evi-dence that he is born from above, from the Lord Christ. The Lord Christ is an everlasting Father. It is a great privilege and dignity to be born of him. They that are so, are the children of God. To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God, John 1. 12. And this introduces the context of the following chapter.

CHAP. III.

1. BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. 2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. 3. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

The apostle, having shewn the dignity of Christ's faithful followers, that they are born of him, and thereby nearly allied to God, now here, 1. Breaks forth into the admiration of that grace that is the spring of such a wonderful vouchsafement; Behold, (see ye, observe,) what manner of love, or how great love, the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called, effectually called. He who calls things that are not, makes them to be what they were not—the sons of God! The Father adopts all the children of the Son. The Son indeed calls them, and makes them his brethren; and thereby he confers upon them the power and dignity of the sons of God. It is wonderful condescending love of the eternal Father, that such as we should be made and called his sons; we who by nature are heirs of sin and guilt, and the curse of God; we who by practice are children of corruption, disobedience, and ingratitude! Strange, that the holy God is not ashamed to be called our Father, and to call us his sons. And the more so, the more un-deserving are we. The heaven-believers above the cognizance of the world. Unbelievers know little of them. Therefore, (or where-fore upon this score,) the world knoweth us not, v. 1. Little does the world perceive the advancement and happiness of the genuine followers of Christ. They are here exposed to the common calamities of earth and time; all things fall alike to them as to others, unless they are subject to the greater sorrow: for they have often reason to say, If in this life only we had hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. The unchristian world, therefore, that walks by sight, knows not their dignity, their privileges, the enjoyments they have in hand, or what they are entitled to. Little does the world think that these poor, humble, contemptible ones are the favourites of heaven, and will be inhabitants there ere long. And they may bear their cross, a little suffering, since they have no such as the world. Because it knew him not, v. 1. Little did the world think how great a Person was once sojourning here; that the Maker of it was once an Inhabitant of it. Little did the Jewish world think that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, was one of their blood, and dwelt in their land; he came to his own, and his own received him not. He came to his own, and his own crucified him; but surely, had they known him, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. To me this has reference to the followers of Christ be content with hard fare here, since they are in a land of strangers, among those who little know them, and their Lord was so treated before them. Then the apostle, 3. Exalts these persevering disciples in the prospect of the certain revelation of their state and dignity. Where, (1.) Their present honourable relation is asserted; Beloved, ye may well be our beloved, for ye are the sons of God, v. 9.

2. We have the nature of sons by regeneration: we have the title and spirit and right to the inheritance of sons by adoption. This honour have all the saints. (2.) The discovery of the bliss belonging and suitable to this relation is defined; And it doth not yet appear what we shall be, v. 2. The glory pertaining to the sonship and adoption is adjourned and reserved for another world. The discovery of it is put a step to the current of affairs that must now proceed. The sons of God must walk by faith, and live by hope. (3.) The time of the revelation of the sons of God in their proper state and glory, is determined; and that is, when their Elder Brother comes to call and collect them all together. But we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him. The particle εἰ, usually translated if, is here null rendered when; for the Hebrew particle εἰ, to what is thought to be the corresponding) is observed so to signify, as Dr. Whitby has here noted; and not only is εἰ, sometimes used for εἰ, but some copies even here read εἰ, when. And accordingly it seems proper so to render it in John 14. 3, where we read it, And if I go, and prepare a place; but more naturally and properly, When I shall have gone, and shall have prepared the place, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; or εἰ, εἰ, εἰ, εἰ, take you along with myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. When the Head of the church, the Only-begotten of the Father, shall appear, his members, the adopted of God, shall appear and be manifested together with him. They may then well wait in faith, hope, and earnest desire, for the revelation of the Lord Jesus; as even the creation itself waiteth for their perfection, and the full manifestation of the sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. The sons of God will be known, and their like shall see their likeness in him. He, they shall be like him; just as he is in honour and power and glory. Their vile bodies shall be made like his glorious body; they shall be filled with life, light, and bliss from him; when he, who is their Life, shall appear, they also shall appear with him in glory, Col. 3. 4. Then, (4.) Their likeness to him is argued from the sight they shall have of him; We shall be like him, for we shall, see as he is, and their likeness shall enable them to see the cause of that sight which they shall have of him. Indeed, all shall see him, but not as they do; not as he is, that is, those in heaven; they shall see him in his frowns, in the terror of his majesty, and the splendor of his avenging perfections. But these shall see him in the smiles and beauty of his face; in the correspondence and amiableness of his glory; in the harmony and agreeableness of his beatific perfections. And the sight of him shall enable them to see him as the blessed do in heaven. Or, the sight of him shall be the cause of their likeness; it shall be a transformative sight, they shall be transformed into the same image by the beatific view that they shall have of him. Then the apostle, 4. Urges the engagement of these sons of God to the prosecution of holiness; And every man that hath this hope in him, purifies himself even as he is pure, v. 3. The sons of God know that their Lord is holy and pure; he is of purer heart and eyes than to admit any pollution or impurity to dwell with him. They then who hope to live with him, must study the utmost purity from the world and flesh and sin; they must grow in grace and holiness. Not only does their Lord command them to do so, but their new nature inclines them so to do; yea, their hope of heaven will dictate and constrain them so to do. They know that their High Priest is holy, harmless, and undefiled. They know that their God and Father is the high and holy One; that all the society is pure and holy; that their inheritance is an inheritance of saints in light. It is a contradiction to such hope, to indulge sin and impurity. And therefore as we are sanctified by faith, we must be sanctified by hope. That we may be saved by hope, we must be purified by hope. We are the hope of hypocrites, and not of the sons of God, that makes an allowance for the gratification of impure desires and lusts.

4. Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. 5. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin, v. 5. The Son of God appeared, and was known, in our nature; and he came to vindicate and exalt the divine law, and that by obedience to the precept, and by subjection and suffering under the penal sanction; under the curse of it. He came therefore to take away our sins; to take away the guilt of them by the sacrifice of himself; to take away the commission of them by implanting a new nature in us; (for we are sanctified by virtue of his death;) and to dissipate and save from it by his own example. And (or for) in him was no sin; or, he takes sin away, that he might conform us to himself; and in him is no sin. They that expect communion with Christ above, should study communion with him here in utmost purity. And the Christian world should know and consider the great end of the Son of God's coming hither; it was, to take away our sin; and ye know, (and this knowledge should be deep and effectual) that he was manifested to take away our sins. III. From the forgiven sin and a real union with, or adhesion unto, the Lord Christ; Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not, v. 6. To sin here is the same as to commit sin; (v 8, 9,) and to commit sin is to practise sin. He that abideth in Christ, continues not in the practice of sin. As vital union with the Lord Jesus broke the power of sin in the heart and nature; so continuance therein prevents the regency and prevalence thereof in the life and conduct; or, the negative expression is put for the positive. He sinneth not, that is, he is obedient, he keeps the commandments, (in sincerity, and in the ordinary course of life,) and does those things that are pleasing in his sight, as is said v. 22. They that abide in Christ, abide in his covenant with him, and consequently watch against the sin that is contrary thereto. They abide in the potent law and know that the work of his power as it will be concluded, that he that sinneth, (abideth in the predominant practice of sin,) hath not seen him. (hath not his mind impressed with a sound evangelical discerning of him,) neither known him, hath no experimental acquaintance with him. Practical remuneration of sin is the great evidence of spiritual union with, continuance in, and saving knowledge of, the Lord Christ.
IV. From the connexion between the practice of righteousness and a state of righteousness; intimating withal, that the practice of sin and a justified state are inconsistent; and this is introduced with a supposition that a surmise to the contrary is a gross deceit; Little children, dear children, and as much children as ye are, herein let no man deceive you. There will be those who will magnify your new light and entertainment of Christianity; who will make you believe that your knowledge, profession, and baptism, will excuse you from the care and accuracy of the Christian life. But beware of such seducers. He that doeth righteousness, is righteous. It may appear that righteousness may in several places of scripture be justly rendered religion, as Matt. 5. 10. Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness sake, that is, for religion's sake. And 1 Pet. 3. 14. But if ye suffer for righteousness sake, (religion's sake) happy are ye. And 2 Tim. 3. 16. All scripture, or the whole scripture, is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine— and for instruction in righteousness, that is, in the nature and branches of religion. I do righteousness then, especially being set in opposition to the doing, committing, or practising, of sin, is to practise religion. Now he who practiseth religion, is righteous; he is the righteous person on all accounts; he is sincere and upright before God. The practice of religion cannot subsist without a principle of integrity in the soul; and this principle of integrity consists in a faith in Jesus Christ and love to him, founded upon the imputation of the Mediator's righteousness. He has a title to the crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge will give, according to his covenant and promise, to those that love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4. 8. He has communion with Christ, in conformity to the divine law, being in some measure practically righteous as he; and he has communion with him in the just state, being now relatively righteous together with him.

V. From the relation between the sinner and the Devil; and thereupon from the design and office of the Lord Christ against the Devil: 1. From the relation between the sinner and the Devil. As elsewhere sinners and saints are distinguished, (though even saints are sinners largely so called,) so to commit sin habitually is the practice of those sinners which consists in pardon of sin and right to life, founded upon the imputation of the Mediator's righteousness. He has a title to the crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge will give, according to his covenant and promise, to those that love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4. 8. He has communion with Christ, in conformity to the divine law, being in some measure practically righteous as he; and he has communion with him in the just state, being now relatively righteous together with him.

11. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. 12. Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

13. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

The apostle, having intimated that one note of the Devil's children, is, hatred of the brethren, takes occasion thence,

1. To recommend fraternal Christian love, and that from the excellence, or as quite, or primariness of the intention relating therto; And this is the message (the errand or charge) which ye heard from the beginning, (this came among the principal parts of practical Christianity,) that we should love one another, v. 11. We should love the Lord Jesus, and value his love, and consequently love all the objects of it, and thereupon all our brethren in Christ.

2. To dissuade from what is contrary thereto, all ill toward the brethren, and that by the example of Cain. His envy and malignity should deter us from harbouring the like passion, and that upon these accounts. (1.) It showed that he was as the first-born of the serpent's seed; even he, the eldest son of the first man, was of the wicked one. He imitated and resembled the first wicked one, the Devil. (2.) His ill-will had no restraint; it proceeded so far as to contrive and accomplish murder, and that of a near relation, and that in the beginning of things, when there were but few to replenish it. He slew his brother, v. 12. Sin, indulged, knows no bound. And, (3.) It proceeded so far, and had in it so much of the Devil, that he murdered his brother for religion's sake. He was vexed with the superiority of Abel's service, and envi'd him the favour and acceptance he had with God. And for these he martyred his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous, v. 12. Ill-will will teach us to hate and revenge what we should admire and imitate. And then,

3. To infer, that it is no wonder that good men are so served now; Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you, v. 13. The serpentine nature still continues in the world. The great serpent himself reigns as the God of this world. Wonder not then that the serpentine world hates and hisses at you who belong to that Seed of the woman, that is to bruise the serpent's head.

14. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. 15. Whosoever hateth his brother, is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. 17. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed, and in truth. 19. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him.

The beloved apostle can scarcely touch upon the mention of sacred love, but he must enlarge upon the enforcement of it; as here he does by divers arguments and incentives thereto; as,

I. That it is a note of our evangelical justification, of our transition into a state of life; We know that we have escaped from death to life, because we love the brethren, v. 14. We are by nature children of wrath and heirs of death. By the gospel (the gospel-covenant or promise) our state towards another world is altered and changed. We pass from death to life; from the guilt of death to the right of life. And this transition is made upon one condition, that we believe in our Lord Jesus; He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; and he who believeth not, hath the wrath of God abiding on him, John 3. 36. Now this happy change of state we may come to be assured of; We know that we are passed from death to life; we may know it by the evidences of our faith in Christ, of which this love to our brethren is one, which leads us to characterize this love that is such a mark of our justified state. It is not a zeal for party in the common religion, or an affection for, or an affectation of, those who are of the same denomination and subordinate sentiments with ourselves. But this love, 1. Supposes a general love to mankind: the law of Christian love, in the Christian community, is founded on the catholic law, in the society of mankind, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. This love is directed principally on these two accounts, (1.) As the object is God; and, (2.) As being beloved in Christ. [1.] As the excellent work of God, made by him, and made in wonderful resemblance of him. The reason that God assigns for the certain punishment of a murderer, is a reason against our hatred of any of the brethren of mankind, and consequently a reason for our love to them; for in the image of God he made him, c. 6. He is, being in some measure, beloved in Christ. The whole being of hominis humanae, should be considered, as being, in distinction from fallen angels, a redeemed nation, as having a divine Redeemer designed, prepared, and given for them. So God loved the world, even this world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whatsoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3. 16. A world so beloved of God, should and can be only-begetted and loved by us. And this love will exert itself in earnestness, in the warfare, and attempts, for the conversion and salvation of the yet uncalled blinded world; My heart's desire and prayer for Israel are, that they may be saved. And then this love will include all due love to enemies themselves. 2. It includes a peculiar love to the Christian society, to the catholic church, and that for the sake of her Head, as being his body, as being redeemed, justified, and sanctified, in and by him; and this love particularly acts and operates toward those of the catholic church, that we have opportunity of being personally acquainted with, or credibly informed of. They are not so much loved for their own sakes as for the sake of God and Christ, who have loved them. And it is God and Christ, or, if you will, the love of God and grace of Christ, that are beloved and valued in them and toward them. And so this is the issue of faith in Christ; and is thereupon a note of our passage from death to life.

II. The hatred of our brethren is, on the contrary, a sign of our deadly state, of our continuance under the legal sentence of death; He that loveth not his brother, (his brother in Christ,) abideth in death, v. 14. He yet stands under the curse and condemnation of the law. This the apostle argues, by a clear reasoning, as Ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him; but he who hateth his brother is a murderer; and therefore ye cannot but know that he who hates his brother, hath not eternal life abiding in him, v. 15. Or, he abideth in death, as it is expressed, v. 14. Whosoever ha-teth his brother, is a murderer. For, hatred of the person is, so far as it prevails, a hatred of life and welfare, and naturally tends to desire the extinction of Cain hated, and then slew his brother. Hatred will shut up the bowels of compassion from the poor brethren, and will thereby expose them to the sorrows of death. And it has appeared that hatred of the brethren has in all ages drest them up in ill names, odious characters and calumnies, and exposed them to persecution and the sword. No wonder then, that he who has a considerable acquaintance with the heart of man, or is taught by him who fully knows it, who knows the natural tendency and issue of vile and violent passions, and who knows with the fulness of the divine law, declares him who has his brother, to be a murderer. Now he who by the frame and disposition of his heart is a murderer, cannot have eternal life abiding in him: for he who is such, must needs be carnally-minded; and to be carnally-minded is death, Rom. 8. 6. The apostle by the expression of having eternal life abiding in us, may seem to mean the possession of an internal principle of endless life. According to that of the Saviour, Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst, shall never be totally destitute thereof; but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life, John 4. 14. And thereupon some may be apt to surmise, that the passing from death to life, (v. 14.) does not signify the relative change made in our justification of life, but the real change made in the regeneration to life; and accordingly, that the abiding in death, as mentioned in v. 16. is continuance in spiritual death, as it is usually called, or abiding in the corrupt deadly temper of nature. But as these passages more naturally denote the state of the person, whether adjudged to life or death; so the relative transition from death to life may well be proved or disproved by the possession or non-possession of the inward principle of eternal life: whether abiding in the guilt of sin is inseparably united with washing from the fifth and power of sin. But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God, 1 Cor. 6. 11.

III. The example of God and Christ should inflame our hearts with this holy love; Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. This may be elsewhere repeated, because we are required to lay down our lives for the safety and salvation of the dear brethren; And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren, (v. 16.) either in our ministrations and services to them; if ye, and if I be offered upon the service and sacrifice of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all; I shall congratulatethis for the glory of God and the edification of the church than we can be; Who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles, Rom. 16. 4. How mortified should the Christian be to this life! How prepared to part from it, and to be ready to lay it down? For this it must be, in the next degree, compassionate, liberal, and communicative to the necessities of the brethren; For whose hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and sheweth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? v. 17. It pleases God, that some of the Christian brethren should be poor, for the exercise of the charity and love of those that are rich. And this makes the greater grace, that the God of the Christian brethren this world's good, that they may exercise their grace in communicating to the poor saints. And they who have this world's good, must love a good God more, and their good brethren more, and be ready to distribute it for their sakes. It appears here, that this love to the brethren is founded upon love to God, in that it is here called so by the apostle; How dwelleth the love of God in him? This love to the brethren is love to God in them, and where there is none of this love to them, there is no true love to God at all. 3. I was going to intimate the third and lowest degree in the next verse; but the apostle has prevented me, by intimating that this last charitable communicative love, in persons of ability, is the lowest that can consist with the love of God. But there may be other fruits of this love; and therefore the apostle desires that in all it should be unfeigned and not according to what men might allow; My little children, (my dear children in Christ,) let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth, v. 18. Compliments and flatteries become not Christians; but the sincere expressions of sacred affection, and the services or labours of love, do. Then, IV. This love will evince our sincerity in religion, and give us hope toward God; And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him, v. 19. It is a great happiness to be assured of our integrity in religion. They that are so assured, may have holy boldness or confidence toward God; they may appeal to him from the censures and condemnation of the world. The way to arrive at the knowledge of our own truth and uprightness in Christianity, and to secure our inward peace, is, to abound in love, and in the works of love toward the Christian brethren.

20. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 21. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. 22. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. The apostle, having proposed this flaming, constraining example of love, and motive to it, proceeds to show us what should be the temper and effect of this our Christian love. And so, 1. It must be, in the highest degree, so fervent as to make us willing to suffer even death itself for the brethren; For the love of the brethren, (v. 16.) either in our ministrations and services to them; (yea, and if I be offered upon the service and sacrifice of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all;) I shall congratulate for the safety and preservation of those that are more serviceable to the glory of God and and let their conscience be a constant witness to the inward man.

The spirit of man, thus capacitated and empowered, is the candle of the Lord, a luminary lighted and set up by the Lord, searching all the inward parts of the heart, taking into scrutiny, and visiting the

v. 20. God is a greater Witness than our conscience, and knoweth more against us than it does; he knoweth all things; he is a greater Judge than conscience; for as he is supreme, so his judgment shall stand, and shall be fully and finally executed. This seems to be the case as often as we consider, as he says, I know nothing by myself, that is, in the present instance. I am censured by some; I am not conscious of any gule, or allowed unfaithfulness, in my stewardship and ministry, yet am I not hereby justified, it is not by my own conscience that I must ultimately stand or fall; the justification, or justifying sentence of my conscience, or self-consciousness, will not determine the controversy between you and me; as you do not appeal to its sentence, so neither will I be determined by its decision; but he that judgeth himself, superficially and finally judgeth me, and by whose judgment you and I must be determined, is, the Lord, 1 Cor. 4. 4. Or, 2. If conscience acquit us, God does so too; Beloved, if our heart condemn us, then have we confidence toward God; (v. 21) then have we assurance that he accepts us now, and will acquit us in the great day of account. But, possibly some presuming soul may here say, I am glad of this; my heart does not condemn me, and therefore I may conclude God does not. As, on the contrary, upon the foregoing verse, some pious trembling soul will be ready to cry out, God forbid! My heart or conscience condemns me, and must I then infallibly expect the condemnation of God? But let such know, that the errors of the witness are not here reckoned as the acts of the heart; ignorance, prejudice, partiality, and presumption, may be said to be faults of the officers of the court, or of the attendants of the judge, (as the mind, the will, appetite, passion, sensual disposition, or disordered brain,) or of the jury, who gives a false verdict, not of the judge itself; conscience, properly self-consciousness; acts of ignorance and error are not acts of self-consciousness, but of some mistaken power; and the conscience, even as it is here described, is not in the present instance, according to the original constitution of it by God himself; according to which process, what is bound in conscience, is bound in heaven; let conscience therefore be heard, be well-informed, and diligently attended to.

II. To indicate the privilege of those who have a good conscience toward God; they have interest in his court in another sense; they stand there; And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, v. 22. It is supposed that the petitioners do not desire, or do not intend to desire, any thing that is contrary to the honour or glory of the court, or to their own intended spiritual good; and then they may depend upon receiving the good things they ask for; and this supposition may well be made concerning the petitioners, or they may well be supposed to receive the good things they ask for, considering their qualification and practice; because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, v. 22. Obidient souls are prepared for blessings, and they have promise of audience; who them commit things displeasing to God, cannot expect that he should please them in hearing and answering their prayers, Ps. 66. 18. Prov. 28. 9.

23. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. 24. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

The apostle, having mentioned keeping the commandments, and pleasing of God, as the qualification of effectual petitioners in and with Heaven, here suitably proceeds.

1. To represent to us what those commandments primarily and summarily are; they are comprehended in this driving sentence; and this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment, v. 23. To believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, is, 1. To discern what he is, according to his name; to have an intellectual view of his person and office, as the Son of God, and the anointed Saviour of the world; that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, John 6. 40. 2. To approve him in judgment and conscience, in conviction and consciousness of our case, as one wisely and wonderfully prepared and adapted for the whole work of the eternal salvation. 3. To consent to him, and acquiesce in him, as our Redeemer and Recessor unto God. 4. To trust to him, and rely upon him, for the full and final discharge of his saving office. They that know thy name, will put their trust in thee, Ps. 9. 10. I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day, 2 Tim. 1. 12.

This faith is a needed requisite to those who would be prevalent petitioners with God; because it is by the Son that we must come to the Father; through his grace and righteousness our persons must be accepted or ingratiated with the Father; Eph. 1. 6.) through his purchase all our desired blessings must come; and through his intercession our prayers must be heard and answered. This is the first part of the commandment that must be observed by acceptable worshippers; the second is, that we love one another, as he gave us commandment, v. 23. The command of Christ should be continually before our eyes; Christian love must possess our souls when we go to God in prayer; to this end we must remember, that the Lord obliges us, (1.) To forgive those who offended us, (Matt. 6. 14.) and, (2.) To reconcile ourselves to those whom we have offended, Matt. 5. 23. 24. As good-will to men was proclaimed from heaven, so good-will to men, and particularly to the brethren, must be carried in the hearts of those who go to God and heaven.

II. To represent to us the blessedness of obedience to these commandments; the obedient enjoy communion with God; and this is his commandments, and particularly these of faith and love, dwelleth in him, and he in him, v. 24. We dwell in God by a happy relation to him, and spiritual union with him, through his Son, and by a holy converse with him; and God dwelleth in us by his word, and our faith fixed on him, and by the operations of his Spirit; then there occurs the trial of his divine habitation; And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us, (v. 24.)
by the sacred disposition and frame of soul that he hath conferred upon us; which, being a spirit of faith in God and Christ, and of love to God and man, appears to be of God.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, the apostle exhorts to try spirits, v. 1. Gives a note to try by, v. 2, 3. Shews who are of the world, and who of God, v. 4, 5. Untold benefits of love by divers considerations, v. 7. 16. Describes our love to God, and the effect of it, v. 17. 21.

1. BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 2. Hereby know ye the spirit of God: every spirit that con-fesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. 3. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

The apostle, having said that God’s dwelling in and with us may be known by the Spirit that he hath given us, intimates that that Spirit may be discerned and distinguished from other spirits that appear in the world; and so here,

He calls the disciples, to whom he writes, to cautions and scrutiny about the spirits, and spiritual professors, that were now risen. (1.) To caution; "Beloved, believe not every spirit; regard not, trust not, follow not, every pretender to the Spirit of God, or every professor of vision, or inspiration, or revelation from God." Truth is the foundation of simulation and counterfeits; there had been real communications from the divine Spirit, and therefore others pretended thereto. God will take the way of his own wisdom and goodness, though it may be liable to abuse; he has sent inspired teachers to the world, and given us a supernatural revelation, though others may be so evil and so impudent as to pretend the same; every pretender to the divine Spirit, or to inspiration, and extraordinary illumination thereby, is not to be believed. Time was, when the spiritual man (the man of the Spirit, who made a correct and good impression upon those who were spiritual,) was mad, Hos. 9. 7. (2.) To scrutiny; to examination of the claims that are laid to the Spirit; But try the spirits, whether they are of God, v. 1. God has given of his Spirit in these latter ages of the world, but not to all who profess to come furnished therewith; to the disciples is allowed a judgment of discretion, in reference to the spirits that would be believed of the world. A reason is given for this trial, Because many false prophets are gone out into the world, v. 1. There being much about the time of our Saviour’s appearance in the world a general expectation among the Jews of a Redeemer to Israel, and the humiliation, spiritual reformation, and sufferings of the Saviour being taken as a prejudice against him, others were induced to take up some prophets and messiahs to Israel, according to the Saviour’s prediction, Matt. 24. 23.
It should not seem strange to us, that false teachers set themselves up in the church, it was so in the apostle’s times; fatal is the spirit of delusion, sad that men should vaunt themselves for prophets and inspired preachers, that are by no means so!

2. He gives a test whereby the disciples may try these pretending spirits; these spirits set up for prophets, doctors, or dictators in religion, and so they are to be tried by their doctrine; and the test whereby in that day, or in that part of the world where the apostle now resided, (for in various seas-sons, and in various churches, tests were different,) must be this; Hereby know ye the Spirit of God, Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God, v. 2. Or, that confess-seth Jesus Christ that came in the flesh. Jesus Christ is to be confessed as the Son of God, the eternal Son, and Man, that was sent forth from the beginning; as the Son of God that came into, and came in, our human mortal nature, and therein suffered and died at Jerusalem. He who confesses and preaches this, by a mind supernaturally instructed and enlightened therein, does it by the Spirit of God, or God is the Author of that illuminaton. On the contrary, “Every spirit that con-fesseth not: Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, (or, that Jesus Christ that came in the flesh,) is not of God, v. 3. God has given so much testimony to Jesus Christ, who was lately here in the world, and in the flesh; (or in a fleshly body like our’s,) though now in heaven, that ye may be assured that any impulse or pretended inspiration that contradicts this, is far from being from heaven and of God.”

The sum of revealed religion is comprehended in the domine confessing Christ, his person and office. We see then the aggravation of a formed opposition against him and it. And this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come and even now already is it in the world, v. 3. It was foreknown by God, that antichrists would arise, and antichristians spirits oppose his Spirit and his truth; it was foreknown also that one eminent antichrist would arise, and make a long and fatal war against the Christ of God, and his institution, and honour, and kingdom in the world; this great antichrist would have his way prepared, and his rise facilitated by other lesser antichrists, and the spirit of error working and disposing men’s minds for him; the antichristian spirit began by times, even in the apostles’ days. Dreadful and unsearchable is the judgment of God, that persons should be given over to an antichristian spirit, and to such dangerous and delusion, as to set at defiance the Son of God, and all the testimony that the Father hath given to the Son! But we have been foretold and forewarned that such opposition would arise; we should therefore cease to be offended;
and the more we see the word of Christ fulfilled,
the more confirmed we should be in the truth of it.

4. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world. 5. They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. 6. We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

In these verses the apostle encourages the disciples against the fear and danger of this seducing antichristian spirit, and that by such methods as these: 1. He assures them of a more divine principle in them: Ye are of God, little children, Ye are God’s little children. We are of God, v. 6. We are born of God, taught of God, anointed of God, and so secured against infectious fatal deluisions. God has his chosen, who shall not be mortally seduced. 2. He gives them hope of victory; “And have overcome them, v. 4. Ye have hitherto overcome these deceivers and their temptations, and there is good ground of hope that ye will do so still, and that upon these two accounts." (1.) "There is a strong preserver within you; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world," v. 4. The Spirit of God dwells in you, and that Spirit is more mighty than man or devils. It is a great happiness to be under the influence of the Holy Ghost. (Ye are not of the world, but I have set thee apart from the world, v. 17.) But the sense and meaning of this lesson is not to be discover’d by these deceiver’s; the Spirit of God hath fram’d your mind for God, and heaven; but they are of the world; the spirit that prevails in them, leads them to this world, their heart is addicted thereto; they study the pomp, the pleasure, and interest of the world; and therefore speak they of the world: they profess a worldly messiah and saviour, they project a worldly kingdom and dominion; the possessions and treasures of the world, would they engross to themselves, forgetting that the true Redeemer’s kingdom is not of this world. This worldly design procures them prosegles: the world heareth them, v. 5. They are followed by such as themselves; the world will love its own, and its own will love it. But they are in a fair way to conquer pernicious seductions, who have conquered the love of the world, and are set therein in all beauty. This is one, v. 3. He represents them, that though their company might be the smaller, yet it was the better; they had more divine and holy knowledge; "He that knoweth God, heareth us." He who knows the purity and holiness of God, the love and grace of God, the truth and faithfulness of God, the ancient word and prophecies of God, the signals and testimonial of God, must know that he is with us; and he who knows this, will attend to us, and abide with us." He that is well furnished with natural religion, will the more faithfully cleave to the Christian. "He that knoweth God, heareth us." He who knows not God regards us not. He that is not born of God, (walking according to his natural disposition) knows not us, and abides with us;" (v. 6.) the further thy are from God, (as appears in all ages,) the further they are from Christ, and his faithful servants; and the more addicted persons are to this world, the more remote they are from the spirit of Christianity. Thus you have a distinction between us and others; hereby we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error, v. 6. This doctrine concerning the Saviour’s person leading you from the world to God, is a sign, (symbol) of the Spirit of truth, in opposition to the spirit of error. The more pure and holy any doctrine is, the more likely to be of God."

7. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God. 8. He that loveth not, knoweth not God: for God is love. 9. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. 10. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 11. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. 12. No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwell-eth in us, and his love is perfected in us. 13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

As the Spirit of truth is known by doctrine, (so service, and such an end; for such service, to be the Propitiation for our sins; consequently to die for us, to die under the law and curse of God, to bear our sins in his body upon the tree, to be crucified, to be wounded in his side, and pierced in his side, to be dead and buried for us; (v. 10.) and then for such an end, for such a good and beneficial end to us—that we might live through him, (v. 9.) might live for ever through him, might live in heaven, live with God, and live in eternal glory and blessedness with him and through him: O what love is here! Then,

IV. The Christian love is an assurance of the divine inhabitation; If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, v. 12. Now God dwelleth in us, not by any visible presence, or immediate appearance to the eye; (No man hath seen God at any time, v. 12.) but by his Spirit; (God is love, 1 John 4:14.) and several kinds of love may be had in the same body, and in its parts, in the fullest and most entire sense God dwelleth in them and with them, is God to be loved; and thus, if we love one another, God dwelleth in us; the sacred lovers of the brethren are the temples of God; the Divine Majesty has a peculiar residence there.

V. Therein the divine love attains a considerable end and accomplishment in us, "And his love is perfected in us; (v. 12.) It has obtained its completion in and upon us. God's love is not perfected in him, but in and with us. His love could not be designed to be effectual and fruitless upon us; when its proper genuine end and issue are attained and produced thereunto, it may be said to be perfected; so faith is perfected by its works, and love perfected by its operations. When the divine love has wrought us to the same image, to the love of God, and thereupon to the love of the brethren, the children of God, and the holy Ghost, and the love perfected, though this love of ours is not at present perfect, nor the ultimate end of the divine love to us," How ambitious should we be of this fraternal Christian love, when God reckons his own life to us perfected thereby! To this the apostle, having mentioned the high favour of God's dwelling in us, subjoins the note and character thereof; Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit, v. 13. Certainly this mutual inhabitation is something more noble and great than we are well acquainted with, or can declare. One would think, that for God to dwell in us, and we in him, were words too high for us, if God had not God gone before us therein. What it is, has been briefly said on ch. 3. 24. What it fully is, must be left to the revelation of the blessed world. But this mutual inhabitation we know, says the apostle, because he hath given us of his Spirit; he has lodged the image and fruit of his Spirit in our hearts; (v. 13.) and the Spirit that he hath given us, appears to be his, or of him, since it is the Spirit of truth, and manifests the divine love to God and man, and of a sound mind, of an understanding well instructed in the affairs of God and religion, and his kingdom among men, 2 Tim. 1. 7.

14. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. 15. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. 16. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Since faith in Christ works love to God, and love to God must kindle love to the brethren, the apostle here confirms the prime article of the Christian faith as a great argument of this. 1. He proclaims the fundamental article of the Christian religion, which is so representative of the love of God; And we have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world, v. 14. We here see, 1. The Lord Jesus's relation to God; he is Son to the Father, such a Son as no one else is, and so as to be God with the Father. 2. His relation and office towards us— the Saviour of the world, in his death, and resurrection from the dead, and royal ascent to heaven; they had so seen him as to be satisfied that he was the Only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. 5. The apostle's attestation of this, in pursuance of such evidence; We have seen and do testify; the weight of this truth obliges us to testify it, the salvation of the world lies upon it, the evidence of the truth warrants us to testify it; our eyes, and ears, and hands, have been witnesses of it. Thereupon, II. The apostle states the excellency, or the excellent privilege attending the due acknowledgment of this truth; Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, v. 15. This confession seems to include faith in the heart as the foundation of it; acknowledge the name in the mouth to the glory of God and Christ; and profession in the life and conduct, in the practice of God's holy and obedient duties. Thus no man says that Jesus is in the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost, by the external attestation and internal operation of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 3. And so he who thus confesses Christ, and God in him, is enriched with, or possessed by, the Spirit of God, and has a complacient knowledge of God, and much holy enjoyment of him. Then, III. The apostle applies this in order to the exaltation of holy love. God's love is thus seen and exerted in Christ Jesus; and thus have we known and believed the love that God hath to us, v. 16.
The Christian revelation is, what should endure it to us, the revelation of the divine love; the articles of our revealed faith are but so many articles relating to the divine love; the history of the Lord Jesus Christ is the history of God’s love to us; all his transactions in and with his Son were but testifications of his love to us, and means to advance us to the love of God; and was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, 2 Cor. 5. 19. Hence we may learn, 1. That God is Love, (v. 16.) he is essential boundless love; he has incomparable, incomprehensible love for us of this world, which he has demonstrated in the mission and mediation of his beloved Son. It is the great objection and prejudice against the Christian revelation, that the love of God should be so obvious as to beguile the height of any perfection of his. When he shew somewhat of his power and wisdom, he makes such a world as this; when he would shew more of his grandeur and glory, he makes heaven for the ministering spirits that are before the throne; what will he do not then, when he designs to demonstrate his love, and to demonstrate his highest love, or that he himself is Love, or that love is one of the most bright, dear, transcendent, operative excellencies of his unbounded nature; and to demonstrate this not only to us, but to the angelical world, and to the principalities and powers above, and this not for our surprise for a while, but for the admiration, and praise, and adoration of our most exalted powers to all eternity? What will not God then do? Surely then will it look more agreeable to the design, and grandeur, and pregnancy of his love, (if I may so call it,) to give an eternal Son for us, than to make a Son on purpose for our relief. In such a dispensation as that of giving a natural eternal Son for us and to us, he will command his love to us indeed; and what will the God of love do, when he designs to commend his love, and to commend it in the view of heaven, and earth and hell; and when he will command himself and recommend himself to us, and to our highest conviction, and also affection, and the love of God to us; but the highest manifestation only that God is love to himself, in vindicating his own law and government, and love and glory; but that the damned ones are made so, or are so punished, (1.) Because they despised the love of God already manifested and exhibited: (2.) Because they refused to be believed in what was further proposed and promised: and, (3.) Because they made themselves unprofitable to the objects of divine condescension and delight? If the consciences of the damned should accuse them of these things, and especially of rejecting the highest instance of divine love; if the far greatest part of the intelligent creation should be everlastingl3ly blessed through the highest instance of the divine love, then may it well be inscribed upon the whole creation of God, God is love. 2. That hereupon, he that dwelleth in love, dwell-the sense and evidence of his love to us, shed abroad in our heart's love to him; and thereupon we have confidence toward him, and peace and joy in him; he will give the crown of righteousness to all that love his appearing; and we have this boldness toward Christ, because of our conformity to him, because as he is, so are we in this world, (v. 17.) love hath confirmed us to him; as he was the great Lord, so we are his children, he is our measure to be so too, and he will not deny his own image; love teaches us to conform in sufferings too, we suffer for him and with him, and therefore cannot but hope and trust that we shall also be glorified together with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12.

2. It prevents or removes the uncomfortable result and fruit of servile fear; There is no fear in love, (v. 18.) so far as love is concerned. In the meantime, I judge, between fear and being afraid; or in this case, between the fear of God and being afraid of him; the fear of God is often mentioned and commanded as the substance of religion, (1 Pet. 2. 17. Rev. 14. 7.) and so it imports the high regard and veneration we have for God and his authority and government; such fear is consistent with love, yea, with perfect love, as being in the moral cause of duty. Such fear arises from the fear of God, that arises from a sense of guilt, and a view of his vindictive perfections; in the view of them, God is represented as a consuming Fire; and so fear here may be rendered dread; there is no dread in love; love considers its object as good and excellent, and therefore amiable, and worthy to be beloved; love considers God as most eminently good, and most eminently loving us in Christ, and so puts off dread, and puts on joy in him; and as love grows, joy grows too; so that perfect love casteth out fear or dread. They who perfectly love God, are, from his nature, and counsel, and covenant, perfectly assured of his love, and consequently are perfectly free from any dismal dreadful suspicions of his punitive power and justice, as armed against them; they well know that God loves them, and they thereupon triumph in his love. That perfect love casteth out fear, the apostle thus sensibly argues, that it casteth out torment, casteth out fear or dread, because fear hath torment; (v. 18.) fear is known to be a disquieting, torturing passion, especially such a fear as is the dread of an almighty avenging God; but perfect love casteth out torment, for it teaches the mind a perfect acquiescence and complacency in the beloved, and therefore perfect love casteth out fear. Or, which is here equivalent, he that feareth, is not made perfect in love; (v. 18.) it is a sign that our love is far from being perfect, since our doubts and fears, and dismal apprehensions of God, are so many. Let us long for, and hasten to, the world of perfect love, where our serenity and joy in God will be as perfect as our love!

3. From the source and rise of it, which is the antecedent love of God; We love him, because he first loved us, v. 19. His love is the incentive, the move and moral cause of our love. We cannot but love so good a God, who was first in the act and work of love; who loved us when we were both unloving and unlovely; who loved us at so great a rate; who has been seeking and soliciting our love at the expense of his Son's blood, and has condescended to beseech us to be reconciled unto him. Let heaven and earth stand amazed at such love! His love is the power of our love; and we cannot but own will (of his own free loving will) begat he us. To those that love him all things work together for good, to them who are the called according to his purpose; they that love God, are the called thereto according to his purpose; (Rom. 8. 28.) according to whose purpose they are called, is sufficiently intimated in the following clauses; whom he did predestinate, or antecedently purpose, to the image of his Son, them he also called, effectually recovered thereto. The divine love stamped love upon our souls; may the Lord still and further direct our hearts into the love of God! 2 Thess. 3. 5.

II. As love to our brother and neighbour in Christ; such love is argued and urged on these accounts: 1. As suitable to our Christian profession and vocation. In the profession of Christianity we profess to love God as the Root of religion; "If then a man say, or profess as much as thereby to say, I love God, I am a lover of his name, and house, and worship, and yet hate his brother, whom he should love for God's sake, he is a liar, (v. 20.) he therein gives his profession the lie." That such a one loves not God, the apostle proves by the usual facility of loving what is seen rather than what is unseen; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? v. 20. The eye is wont to affect the heart; things unseen less catch the mind, and thereby the heart; the incomprehensibleness of God very much arises from his invisibility; the member of Christ has much of God visible in him; how then shall the hater of a visible image of God pretend to love the unseen Original of his nature?

2. As suitable to the express law of God, and the just reason of it; And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also, v. 21. As God has communicated his image in nature and in grace, so he would have our love to be suitably diffused. We must love God originally and supremely, and others in him, on the account of their derivation and reception from him, and of his interest in and consequent on the invisible God himself.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, the apostle asserts, I. The dignity of believers, v. 1. II. Their obligation to love, and the trial of it, v. 1. . 3. III. Their victory, v. 4. 5. IV. The credibility and confirmation of their faith, v. 6. . 10. V. The advantage of their faith in eternal life, v. 11. . 13. VI. The audience of their prayers, unless for those who have sinned unto death, v. 14. . 17. VII. Their preservation from sin and Satan, v. 18. VIII. Their happy distinction from the world, v. 19. IX. Their true knowledge of God; (v. 20.) upon which, they must depart from idols, v. 21.

1. W HOSOEVER believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him. 2. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. 3. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous. 4. For whatsoever is born of God, overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. 5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

1. The apostle having, as was there observed, in the conclusion of the last chapter, urged Christian love upon those two accounts; 1. As suitable to Christian profession; 2. As suitable to the divine command; here adds a third; such love is suitable, or indeed demanded by their eminent relation; our
I. JOHN, V.

Christian brethren or fellow-believers are nearly related to God; they are his children; Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, v. 1. Wherein the Christian brother is, (1.) Described by his faith; be that believeth that Jesus is the Christ; that he is Messiah the Prince; that he is the Son of God by nature and office; that he is the Chief of all the anointed world; Chief of all the priests, prophets, or kings, who were ever anointed by God or for him; that he is perfectly prepared and furnished for the whole work of the eternal salvation; the believer, accordingly, yields himself up to his care and the Lord; and then he is, (2.) Descried by his descent, he is born of God, v. 1. This principle of faith, and the new nature that attends it, or from which it springs, are ingenerated by the Spirit of God; and so sonship and adoption are not now appropriated to the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, nor to the ancient Israel of God; all believers, though by nature sinners of the Gentiles, are spiritually descended from God, and accordingly are to be beloved; as it is added, Every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him, v. 1. It seems but natural that he who loves the Father, should love the children also; and that in some proportion to their resemblance to their Father, and to the Father's love to them; and so we must first and principally love the Son of the Father, as he is most emphatically styled, 2 John 3. The Only (necessarily) begotten Son of his love, who are voluntarily begotten, and renewed by the Spirit of grace: thereupon,

II. The apostle shews, 1. How we may discern the truth, or the true evangelical nature of our love to the regenerate; the ground of it must be our love to God, whose they are; By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, v. 2. Our love to them appears to be sound and genuine, when we regard them, not merely upon any secular account, as because they are rich, or learned, or kind to us, or of our denomination among religious parties; but because they are God's children, his regenerating grace appears in them, his image and superscription are upon them, and so in them God himself is loved; thus we see what that love to the brethren is, that is so pressed in this epistle; it is love to them as the children of God, and the adopted, 1 John 3. 1. Or, Thy love to me, saith the Lord, is more than all these; to know the love of God, that, as thereby we are determined to obedience, and to keep the commandments of God, so his commandments are thereby made easy and pleasant to us. The lover of God says, O how I love thy law! "I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart, (Ps. 119. 32.) when thou shalt enlarge it either with love or thy enemy is not prepared to conquer this; as it is added, And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith, v. 4. Faith is the cause of victory, the means, the instrument, the spiritual armour and artillery by which we overcome; for, (1.) In and by faith we cleave to Christ, in contempt of, and opposition to, the world. (2.) Faith works in and for God, the Christ, and so withdraws us from the love of the world. (3.) Faith sanctifies the heart, and purifies it from those sensual lusts by which the world obtains such sway and dominion over souls. (4.) It receives and derives strength from the Object of it, the Son of God, for conquering the frowns and flatteries of the world. (5.) It obtains by gospel promise a right to the indwelling Spirit of grace, that is greater than he who the other. (6.) It sees an invisible world at hand, with which this world is not worthy to be compared, and into which it tells the soul, in which it resides, it must be continually prepared to enter; and thereupon,

III. The apostle concludes, that it is the real Christian that is the true conqueror of the world; Who is he then that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? v. 5. It is the world that lies in our way to heaven, and is the great impediment to our entrance there. But he who believes that Jesus is the Son of God, believes therein that Jesus came from God to be the Saviour of the world, and powerfully to conduct us from the world to heaven, and to God, who is fully to be enjoyed there. And he who so believes, must needs by this faith overcome the world. For, 1. He must believe that this world is a vehement enemy to his soul, to his happiness, to his times, and his blessedness; For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world, ch. 2. 16. 2. He sees it must be a great part of the Savior's work, and of his own salvation, to be redeemed and rescued from this malignant world, who gave himself for us, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, Gal. 4. 4. He sees in and by the life and conduct of the Lord Jesus on earth, that this world is to be renounced and overcome. 4. He perceives that the Lord Jesus conquered the world, not for himself only, but for his followers; and they must study to be partakers of his victory. Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. 5. He is taught and influenced by the Lord Jesus' death to be mortified and crucified to the world, and not to be afraid of it, but to take our cross, and follow our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world, Gal. 6. 14. 6. He is begotten by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to the lively hope of a blessed world above, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 7. He knows that the Saviour is gone to heaven, and is there preparing a place for his serious believers, John 14. 2. 8. He knows that his Saviour will come again from thence, and will put an end to this world, and judge the inhabitants of it, and receive his believers to his presence and glory, John 14. 3. 9. He is possessed with a spirit and disposition that cannot be satisfied with this world, that looks beyond it, and is still tending, striving, and pressing, toward the world in heaven. In this we grow, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, 2 Cor. 5. 2. So that it is the Christian's part, in the Christian's religion, to prepare and press for the Christian's universal empire. It is the Christian revelation that is the great means of conquering the world, and gaining another that is most pure and peaceful, blessed and eternal. It is there, in that revelation, that we see what are the occasion and ground of the quarrel and contest between the holy God and this rebellious world. It is there that we meet with satan, who afflicts the church (both speculative and practical,) quite contrary to the tenour, temper, and tenacity of this world. It is by that doctrine that a spirit is communicated and diffused, which is superior and adverse to the spirit of the world. It is there we see that the Saviour himself was not of this world, that his kingdom was not, and is not so; that it must be separated from the world, and gathered out of it for heaven and for God. There we see that the Saviour designs not this world for the inheritance and portion of his saved company. As he is gone to heaven himself, so he assures them he goes to prepare for their residence there, as designing they should always dwell with him; and allowing them to believe that if in this life, and this world only, they had been near him, they should at last be but miserable. It is there that the eternal blessed world is most clearly revealed and proposed to our affection and pursuit. It is there that we are furnished with the best arms and artillery against the assaults and attempts of the world. It is there that we are taught how the world may be out-shot in its own bow, or its artillery turned against itself; and its oppositions, encounters, and persecutions, be made sure and need not be well founded; but lies hold on the eternal world of life, and in a sacred sense takes the kingdom of heaven by violence too. Who in all the world but the believer on Jesus Christ can thus overcome the world?

6. This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. 7. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. 8. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. 9. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

The faith of the Christian believer (or the believer in Christ) being thus mighty and victorious, it had need to be well founded; to be fixed, and with motion and ascent to the higher heavenly world: and there we are encouraged by a whole army and cloud of holy soldiers, who have in their several ages, posts, and stations, overcome the world, and won the crown. It is the real Christian that is the proper hero; who vanquishes the world, and rejoices in a universal victory. Nor does he (for he is far superior to the Greek or Roman monarch) on that throne take his crown, and is not subjected to be subdued, but lays hold on the eternal world of life, and in a sacred sense takes the kingdom of heaven by violence too. Who in all the world but the believer on Jesus Christ can thus overcome the world?

1. In the way and manner by which he came; not barely by which he came into the world; but by and with water and blood, and appeared, and acted, as a Saviour in the world; This is he that came by water and blood. He came to save us from our sins; to give us eternal life, and bring us to God; and that he might the more assuredly do this, he came by, or with, water and blood; even Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ, I say, did so; and none but he. And I say it again, not by or with water only, but and with water and blood. 6. Jesus Christ came with water and blood, as the notes and signatures of the true effectual Saviour of the world; and he came by water and blood, as the means by which he would heal and save us. That he must and did thus come in his saving office, may appear by our remembering these things: 1. We are inwardly and outwardly defiled; inwardly, by the power and pollution of sin in our nature. For our cleansing from this we need spiritual water; such as can reach the soul and the powers of it. Accordingly, there is it and by Christ Jesus, the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. And this was intimated to the apostles by our Lord, when he washed their feet; and said to Peter, who refused it, Except I wash thee, thou hast no part in me. We are defiled outwardly, by the guilt and condemning power of sin upon our persons. By this we are separated from God, and banished from his favourable, gracious, beatific presence for ever. From this we must be purged by atoning blood. It is the law or determination in the court of heaven, that without shedding of blood there shall be no remission, Heb. 9, 22. The Saviour from sin therefore must come with blood. 2. Both these ways of cleansing were represented in the old ceremonial institutions of the Jewish dispensation. For in this we are purified inwardly by water and blood. There were divers washings and carnal ordinances imposed till the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 10. The ashes of a heifer, mixt with water, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifeth to the purifying of the flesh, Heb. 9. 13. Numb. 19. 9. And likewise, almost all things are, by the law, purged with blood, Heb. 9. 22. As these shew us our double defilement, so they indicate the several and purging ways and means of our being polluted and defiled inwardly and outwardly, and that side being pierced with a soldier's spear, out of the wound there immediately issued water and blood. This the beloved apostle saw, and seems to have been affected with the sight; he alone records it, and seems to reckon himself obliged to record it, as containing something mysterious in it; And he that saw it, bare record, and his record is true. And he kneweth, being an eye-witness, that he saith truly, and declareth not his own voice, but he calleth him grievously and particularly, that out of his pierced side forthwith there came water and blood, John 19. 35. Now this water and blood are comprehensive of all that is necessary and effectual to our salvation. By the water our souls are washed and purified for heaven and the region of saints in light. By the blood God is glorified, his law is honoured, and his vindicative excellences are illustrated and displayed. Whom God hath accepted in his blood, or Propitiation through faith in his blood, or a Propitiation in or by his blood through faith, to declare his righteousness, that he may be just, and the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus, Rom. 3. 25, 26. By the blood we are justified, reconciled, and presented righteous to God. By the blood, the curse of the law being satisfied, the purifying Spirit is obtained in all persons and things our most precious Saviour hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit, the promised Spirit, through faith, Gal. 3. 13, &c. The water, as well as the blood, issued out of the side of the sacrificed Redeemer. The water and the blood then comprehend all things that can be requisite to our salvation. They will consecrate and sanctify to that purpose all that God shall appoint or make use of in order to that great end. He loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, Eph. 5. 25—27. He who comes by water and blood, is an accurate perfect Saviour. And this is he who comes by water and blood, even Jesus Christ! Thus we see in what way and manner, or, if you please, with what allusion, he comes. But we see his credentials also, II. In the witness that attends him, and that is, the divine Spirit: that Spirit to whom the perfecting of the works of God is usually attributed: And it is...
the Spirit that beareth witness, v. 6. It was meet that the commissioned Saviour of the world should have a constant Agent to support his work, and testify of him to the world. It was meet that a divine power should attend him, his gospel, and his cause; and that on what errand and office they came, and by what authority they were sent: this was done in and by the Spirit of God; according to the Saviour's own prediction, "He shall glorify me, even when I shall be rejected and crucified by men, for he shall receive or take of mine; he shall not receive my immediate office, he shall not die and rise again for you; but he shall receive of mine, shall proceed on the foundation I have laid, shall take up my institution and truth and cause, and shall further shew it unto you, and by you to the world," John 16. 15. And then the apostle adds the commendation, or the acceptableness of this witness; because the Spirit is Truth, v. 6. He is the Spirit of God, and cannot lie. There is a copy that would afford us a very suitable reading thus; because, or that, Christ is the Truth. And so it indicates the main text of the Spirit's testimony, the thing which he attests, and that is, the truth of Christ; And it is the Spirit that beareth witness that Christ is the Truth; and consequently that Christianity, or the Christian religion, is the truth of the day, the truth of God. But it is not meet that one or two copies should alter the text; and our present reading is very agreeable; and so we retain it. The Spirit is Truth. He is indeed the Spirit of truth, John 14. 17. And at the same time, the Witness worthy of all acceptation, appears in that he is a heavenly Witness, or one of the witnesses that in and from heaven bare testimony concerning the truth and authority of Christ. Because (or for) there are three that bare record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And so v. 7. most appositely occurs, as a proof of the authenticity of the Spirit's testimony; he must needs be true, or even truth itself, if he be not only a Witness in heaven, but even one (not in testimony only, so for an angel may be, but in being and essence) with the Father and the Word.

But here we are stopped in our course by the context there is about the genuineness of v. 7. It is alleged that many old Greek manuscripts have it not. We shall not here enter into the controversy. It should seem that the critics are not agreed what manuscripts contain it; and that they insufficiently inform us of the integrity and value of the manuscripts they peruse. Some may be so faulty, as I have an old printed Greek Testament so full of errata, that one would think no critic would establish a various lection thereupon. But let the judicious collators of copies manage that business. There are some rational surmises that seem to support the Spirit's testimony, which contains, 1. If we admit v. 8. in the room of v. 7. it looks too like a tautology and repetition of what was included in v. 6. This is he that came by water and blood, not by water only, but by water and blood, and it is the Spirit that beareth witness. For there are three that bear witness; the Spirit, the water, and the blood. This does not assign near so noble an introduction of these three witnesses as our present version.

2. It is observed, that many copies read that distinctive clause, upon the earth; There are three that bear record upon the earth: now this bears a visible opposition to some witness or witnesses elsewhere, and therefore we are told, by the adversaries of the text, that this clause must be supposed to be omitted in most books that want v. 7. But it should for the same reason be so in all. Take we v. 6. This is he that came by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. It would not now naturally and properly be added, for there are three that bear record on earth; unless we should suppose that the apostle would tell us that all the witnesses are such as are upon the earth, which is what we must suppose to be infallibly true, or even Truth itself.

3. It is observed, that there is a variety of reading even in the Greek text, as in v. 7. Some copies read αὐτῷ—are one; others (at least the Complutian) ἦν τῷ—τῷ are to one, or agree in one; and in v. 8. (in that part that is supposed should be admitted,) instead of the common ἐν τῷ—ἐν τῷ, the Complutian reads ἐν τῷ τῷ, which seems to show that this edition depended upon some Greek authority, and not merely, as some would have us believe, upon the authority either of the vulgar Latin, or of Thomas Aquinas; though his testimony may be added thereto.

4. V. 7. is very agreeable to the style and the theology of our apostle; as,

(1.) He delights in the title—The Father; whether he indicates thereby God only, or a divine person of the triune God, you and I, the Father.

(2.) The name, the Word, is known to be almost (if not quite) peculiar to this apostle. Had the text been, as it is, Witness of the World, it would not have appeared so obvious, from the form of baptism, and the common language of the church, to have used the name Son instead of that of the Word. As it is observed, that Tertullian and Cyprian use that name, even when they refer to this verse; or it is made an objection against their referring to this verse, because they speak of the Son, not the Word; and yet Cyprian's expression seems to assume that the acknowledgment of Facundus and others.

Quod Iohannis ostensi testimonium B. Cypriani, Carthaginigis antiquus et martyris, in caristola sive libro, quem de Trinitate scripsit, de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu sancto dicitur intelligens; etsi enim, Dicit Dominus, Ego et Pater uniunum sumus; et iterum de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu sancto scriptum est, Et hi tres unum sunt. —Blessed Cyprian, the Carthaginian Bishop and Martyr, in his embassy to the Trinity, he added the testimony of the apostle John as relating to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; for he says, The Lord says, I and the Father are one; and, again, These three are one. Now it is no where written that these are one, but in v. 7. It is probable then that St. Cyprian, either depending on his memory, or rather intending things more words than words, persons more names, certain persons by the names set, the Father, and the Holy Ghost, that by the Spirit, which in v. 6. is said to be Truth, and in the gospel is called the Spirit of truth, the apostle meant the person of the father; though he is no where else so called when joined with the Son and the Holy Ghost. We require good proof that the Cartaginensis father could so understand the apostle. He who so understands him, must believe too that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are said to be three Witnesses on earth.

[3.] Facundus acknowledges that St. Cyprian says, that of his three it is written, Et hi tres unum sunt—and these three are one. Now these are the words, not of v. 8. but of v. 7. They are not used concerning the three on earth, the Spirit, the word, and the blood: three in the text, three in the Father, and the Word, and the Holy Ghost. So we are told that the author of the book De baptismo hiereticorum, allowed to be contemporary with Cyprian, cites St. John’s words, agreeably to the Greek manuscripts and the ancient versions, thus, Ait enim Iohannes de Domino nostro in epistolis nostros docens, Hic est qui venit per aquam et sanguinem, Jesus Christus, non in aqua tantum, sed et in spirito et in sanguine; et Spiritus est qui testimonium habebit, guia Spiritus est veritas; quia tres testimonium perhibent, Spiritus et aqua et sanguis, et isti tres in unum sunt—For John, in his epistles, says concerning our Lord, This is he, Jesus Christ, who came by water and blood, not in water only, but in water and blood; and it is the Spirit that bears witness, because the Spirit is Truth; for there are three that bear witness, the Spirit, the Word, and the Father, and these three are one. If all the Greek manuscripts and ancient versions say concerning the Spirit, the water, and the blood, that. in unum sunt—they agree in one, then it was not of them that Cyprian spoke, whatever variety there might be in the copies in the text, when he said it is written, unum sunt—they are one. And therefore Cyprian’s words seem still to be a firm testimony to v. 7. and all the rest of this verse, and likewise, that a forger of the text would have scarcely so exactly hit upon the apostolical name for the second witness in heaven, the Word. Then,

(3.) As this apostle only records the history of the water and blood flowing out of the Saviour’s side, so it is he only, or he principally, who registers to us the Saviour’s promise and prediction of the Holy Spirit’s coming to glorify him, and to convince the world of his own unbelief, and of his righteousness, as in his gospel, ch. 14. 16, 17, 26.—15. 26.—16. 7—15. It is most suitable then to the diction and to the gospel of this apostle, thus to mention the Holy Ghost as a Witness for Jesus Christ. Then,

5. It was far more easy for a transcription, by turning away his eye, or by the obscurity of the copy, it being obliterated or defaced on the margin of a page, or worn away in such materials as the ancients had to write upon, to lose and omit the passage, than for an interpolator to devise and insert it; he must be very bold and impudent, who could hope to escape detection and shame; and profane too, who durst venture to make an addition to a supposed sacred book. And,

6. It can scarcely be supposed, that, when the apostle is speaking of the strength of the Christian faith in overcoming the world, and the foundation it relies upon in adhering to Jesus Christ, and the various testimony that was given to Jesus Christ in the world, he should omit the supreme testimony that attended him, especially when we consider that he meant to infer, as he does, (v. 9.) If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this that he had rehearsed before, is the witness of the Father, by which he hath testified of his Son. Now in the three witnesses on earth, there is neither all the witness of God, nor indeed any witness who is truly and immediately God. The Antitrinitarian opposers of the text will deny that either the Spirit, or the water, or the blood, are God himself; and others may say that the Spirit here is some created angel of God; but, upon our present reading, it is a noble enumeration of the several witnesses and testimonies supporting the truth of the Lord Jesus, and the divinity of his institution; here is the most excellent abridgment or breviate of the motives to faith in Christ, of the credentials the Saviour brings with him, and of the evidences of our Christianity, that is to be found, I think, in the book of God; whilst which sublime account, even waving the doctrine of the strange Trinity, the entire text is worthy of all acceptance.

Having these rational grounds on our side, we proceed. The apostle, having told us that the Spirit that bears witness to Christ is truth, shews us that he is so, by assuring us that he is in heaven, and that there are others also who cannot but be true, or truth itself, concurring in testimony with him. For as the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one, v. 7. Here is a Trinity of heavenly Witnesses; such as have testified and vouched to the world the veracity and authority of the Lord Jesus in his office and claims, where the first that occurs in order, is, the Father; he set his seal to the commission of the Lord Christ all the while he was here; more especially, (1.) In proclaiming and witnessing at his resurrection and exaltation, confirming his character at the transfiguration, Matt. 17. 5. Then, (3.) In accompanying him with miraculous power and works; If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; but if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him, John 10. 37, 38. (4.) In avouching at his death, Matt. 27. 54. (5.) In raising him from the dead; Acts 2. 33. (6.) In sending him, Acts 1. 4, 5. In short, he convince the world—of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more, John 16. 10. and Rom. 1. 4. The second Witness is the Word; a mysterious name, importing the highest nature that belongs to the Saviour Jesus Christ; wherein he existed before the world was, whereby he made the world, and whereby he was truly God with the Father. He stands between God and the human nature of the man Christ Jesus in such a manner, as if he redeemed and saved us; and he bore witness, [1.] By the mighty works that he wrought; (John 5. 17.) My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. [2.] In confessing a glory upon him at his transfiguration; And we beheld his glory, the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father, John 1. 14. [3.] In raising him from the dead; (John 2. 19.) Destroy therefore the temple which was in three days will I raise it. The third Witness is the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Spirit; an august, venerable name, the Possessor, Proprietor, and Author of holiness. True and faithful must he be, to whom the Spirit of holiness sets his seal and solemn testimony. So he did to the Lord Jesus, the Head of the Christian world; and that in such instances as these; First, In the miraculous production of his immaculate human nature in the Virgin’s womb; The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, Luke 1. 35, &c. Secondly, In the visible descent upon him at his baptism; The Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape, Luke 3. 22, &c. Thirdly, In an effectual conquest of the spirits of hell and darkness; If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come into you, Matt. 12. 28. Fourthly, In the visible potent descent upon the apostles, to furnish them with gifts and graces to preach him and his gospel to the world after he himself was gone to heaven, Acts 1. 4, 5. 2. 4, &c. Fifthly, In supporting the name, gospel, and interest of Christ, by miraculous gifts and operations by and upon the disciples, and in the churches, for two hundred years, 1 Cor. 12. 7. Concerning which see Dr. Whitby's excellent discourse in the preface to the second volume of his Commentary on the New Testament. These are witnesses in heaven; and they bear record to this hour. 8. One. It should seem not only in testimony, (for that is implied in their being three witnesses, to one and the same thing,) but upon a higher account, as they are in heaven; they are one in their heavenly being and essence; and, if one with the Father, they must be one God.

To these there is opposed; though with them concerned, a trinity of witnesses on earth, such as continue here below; And there are three that bear witness on earth, the spirit, the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one, v. 8. Of these witnesses the first is the spirit. This must be distinguished from the person of the Holy Ghost, who is in heaven. We must say then, with the Saviour, (according to what is reported by this apostle,) that which is born of the spirit, is spirit, John 3. 6.

The disciples of the Saviour are, as well as others, born after this manner. They are born, that is, they are endued with a corrupt carnal disposition, which is enmity to God. This disposition must be mortified and abolished. A new nature must be communicated. Old lusts and corruptions must be eradicated, and the true disciple become a new creature. The regeneration and renovation of souls are a testimony to the Saviour. It is his actual, though initial salvation. It is a testimony on earth, because it abounds with the church there, and is not performed in that conspicuous astonishing manner in which signs from heaven are accommodated. To this Spirit belong not only the regeneration and conversion of the church, but its progressive sanctification, victory over the world, her peace and love and joy, and all that grace by which she is made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Then the second is the water. This the Saviour administers as a means of salvation, now as a testimony to the Saviour himself, and intimates his purity and purifying power. And so it seems to comprehend, 1. The purity of his own nature and conduct in the world; he was holy, harmless, and undefiled. 2. The testimony of John's baptism, who bore witness of him, prepared a people for him, and referred them unto him, Mark 1. 4, 7, 8.

3. The profession of him by the three who bore the same, that bear witness on earth, the spirit, the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one, v. 8. 4. The actual and active purity and holiness of his disciples. His body is the holy catholic church. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit, 1 Pet. 1. 22. And this signed and sealed by, 5. The baptism that he has appointed for the initiation or introduction of his disciples to the Saviour. Except I wash thee, thou hast no part in me. Not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God, 1 Pet. 3. 21.

The third witness is, the blood; this he shed; and this was our ransom. This testifies for Jesus Christ: (1.) In that it sealed up and finished the sacrifices of the Old Testament; Christ, our Passover, was sacrificed for us, 6. (2.) In that it imparted to his disciples the comfort and encouragement of all his ministry and doctrine, John 18. 37. (3.) In that it shewed unparalleled love to God, in that he would die a sacrifice to his honour and glory, in making atonement for the sins of the world, John 14. 30, 31. (4.) In that it demonstrated unspeakable love to us: and none will deceive those whom they entirely love, John 14. 13—15. (5.) In that it demonstrated the disinterestedness of the Lord Jesus as to any secular interest and advantage. No impostor and deceiver ever proposes to himself contempt and violent cruel death, John 18. 36. (6.) In that it lays obligation on his disciples to suffer and die for him. No deceived will invite proselytes to his side and interest at the rate that the Lord Jesus did. Ye shall be hated of all men for my sake. They shall deliver you out of your synagogues; and the time comes that whosoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God service, John 16. 2. He frequently calls his servants to a conformity with him in sufferings. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach; (Heb. 13. 13.) which shews that neither he nor his kingdom is of this world. Then, (7.) The benefits accruing and procured by his blood, (we have already shewn,) must impartially demonstrate that he is indeed the Saviour of the world.

And then, (8.) These are signified and sealed in the institution of his own supper; This is my blood of the New Testament, (which ratifies the New Testament,) which is shed for many, for the remission of sins, Matt. 26. 28. Such are the witnesses on earth. Such is the various testimony given to the Author of our religion. No wonder if the rejecter of all this should be esteemed a blasphemer of the Spirit of God, and be left to perish without remedy in his sins. These three witnesses (being more different than the three former) are not so properly said to be one, as to be for one; to be for one and the same purpose and cause; or to agree in one; in one and the same thing among themselves, and in the same testimony with those who bear record from heaven.

The apostle justly concludes, If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God, that he hath testified of his Son, v. 9. Here we have, [1.] A supposition well founded upon the premises. Here is the witness of God; the witness whereby God hath testified of his Son; which surely must intimate some immediate irrefragable testimony, and that of the Father concerning his Son; he has by himself proclaimed and avouched him to the world. [2.] The authority and acceptableness of his testimony; and that argued from the less to the greater; *If we receive the witness of men, (and such testimony is and must be admitted in all judicatories and in all nations,) the witness of God is greater. It is truth itself, of highest authority and most unquestionable infallibility. And then there is, [3.] The application of the rule to the present case; For this is the testimony of God, and is more certain in his name, John 13. 1. The very witness of God even of the Father, as well as of the Word and Spirit, which he hath testified of, and wherein he hath attested, his Son. God, that cannot lie, hath given sufficient assurance to the world, that Jesus Christ is his Son; the Son of his love, and Son by office, to reconcile and recover the world unto himself; he testified therefore the truth and divine original of the Christian religion, and that it is the sure appointed way and means of bringing us to God.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. 11. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. 12. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 13. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.
In these words we may observe,
I. The privilege and stability of the real Christian; \textit{He that believeth on the Son of God, hath been prevailed with unfeignedly to cleave to him for salvation, hath the witness in himself, v. 10.} He hath not only the outward evidence that others have, but he hath in his own heart a testimony for Jesus Christ. He can allege what Christ and the truth of Christ have done for his soul, and what he has seen and found in him. As, He has deeply seen him in his sin, and guilt, and misery, and his abundant need of such a Saviour. 2. He has seen the excellency, beauty, and office of the Son of God, and the incomparable suitableness of such a Saviour to all his spiritual wants and sorrowful circumstances. 3. He sees and admires the wisdom and love of God in preparing and sending such a Saviour to deliver him from sin and hell, and to raise him to pardon, peace, and comfort, but not that the man that formerly he was. 7. He finds yet such a conflict with himself, with sin, with the flesh, the world, and invisible wicked powers, as is described and provided for in the doctrine of Christ. 8. He finds such prospects and such strength afforded him by the faith of Christ, that he can despise and overcome the world, and travel on towards a better world, and seek to the far other perfection. He must believe in this God, and must cleave to this God, and must cleave to this power of the word and doctrine of Christ, humbling, humbling, healing, quickening, and comforting his soul. 5. He finds that the realization of Christ, as it is the greatest discovery and demonstration of the love of God, so it is the most apt and powerful means of kindling, fomenting, and inflaming love to the holy blessed God. 6. He is born of God by the truth of Christ, and must cleave to this truth, and must take this love, disposition, and delight, and must be the man that formerly he was not. 7. He finds yet such a conflict with himself, with sin, with the flesh, the world, and invisible wicked powers, as is described and provided for in the doctrine of Christ. 10. He is begotten again to a lively hope, to a holy confidence in God, in his good will and love; to a pleasant victory over terrors of conscience, dread of death and hell; to a comfortable prospect of life and immortality, being enriched with the earnest of the Spirit, and of sure possession of the glory of God. So assurance has the gospel believer; he has a witness in himself. Christ is formed in him, and is growing up to the fulness and perfection, or perfect image of Christ in heaven.

II. The aggravation of the unbeliever’s sin; the sin of unbelief; \textit{He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar.} He does, in effect, give God the lie; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son, v. 11. If he had not sent his Son into the world, when he has given us such manifold evidence that he did; or that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God, when all that evidence relates to and terminates upon him; or that he sent his Son to deceive the world, and to lead it into error and misery; or, if he permits men to devise a religion, which, in all the parts of it, is a delusion and the lie, and is not worthy to be embraced by the reason of mankind, and yet is but a delusion and a lie; and then lends them his Spirit and power to recommend and obtrude it upon the world: which is to make God the Father, the Author, and Abettor of the lie.

III. The matter, the substance, or contents of all this divine testimony concerning Jesus Christ; \textit{And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son, v. 11.} This is the sum of the gospel. This is the sum and epitome of the whole record given us by all the aforesaid six witnesses. 1. \textit{That God hath given to us eternal life.} He has designed it for us in his eternal purpose. He has prepared all the means that are necessary to bring this thing. He has made it over to us by his covenant and promise. And he actually confers a right and title thereto on all who believe on and actually embrace the Son of God. Then, 2. \textit{This life is in the Son.} The Son is Life; eternal life in his own essence and person, John 1. 4. 1 John 1. 2. He is eternal Life to us; the Spring of our spiritual and glorious life, Col. 3. 4. From him life is communicated to us, both here and in heaven. And thereupon it must follow, \textit{(1.) He that hath the Son, hath life, v. 12.} He that is united to the Son, is united to Life. He who hath a title to the Son, hath a title to Life, to eternal Life. Such honour hath the Father put upon the Son: such honour must we put upon him too. We must come and kiss the Son, and we shall have life. \textit{(2.) He that hath not the Son of God, hath not life, v. 12.} He continues under the condemnation of the law; (John 3. 36.) he refuses the Son, who is Life itself, who is the Provider of Life, and the Way to it; he provokes God to deliver him over to endless death for making him a liar; since he believes not this record that God hath given concerning his Son.

IV. The end and reason of the apostle’s preaching this to believers. \textit{1. For their satisfaction and comfort; These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, v. 13.} Upon all this evidence, all these witnesses, it is but right that there should be those who believe on the name of the Son of God. God increase their number! How much testimony from heaven has the world to answer for! And to three witnesses in heaven must the world be accountable. These believers have eternal life. They have it in the covenant of the gospel; in the beginning and first-fruits of it, in the world; and in their lives, by the power of the Spirit, in the world. These believers may come to know that they have eternal life, and should be quickened, encouraged, and comforted, in the prospect of it: and they should value the scriptures, which are so much written for their consolation and salvation. 2. For their confirmation and progress in their holy faith; \textit{And that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God, (v. 13.)} may go on believing. Believers must persevere, in their lives, and in their profession and belief on the name of the Son of God, is to renounce eternal life, and to draw back unto perdition. Therefore the evidences of religion and the advantage of faith are to be presented to believers, in order to hearten and encourage them to persevere to the end.

14. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. 15. And if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him. 16. If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: \textit{I do not say that, he shall pray for it.} 17. All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin not unto death.
II. The advantage accruing to us by such privilege; If we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we devired of him, v. 15. Great are the deliverances, miracles, and blessings, which the holy petitions needs. To know that his petitions are heard or accepted, is as good as to know that they are answered; and therefore that he is so pitied, pardoned, counselled, sanctified, assisted, and saved, (or shall be so,) as he is allowed to ask of God.
III. Direction in prayer, in reference to the sins of others; If any man see his brother sin in a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for the sin. If we know, of sincere Christian unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it, v.
16. Here we may observe, 1. We ought to pray for others as well as for ourselves; for our brethren of mankind, that they may be enlightened, converted, and saved; for our brethren in the Christian profession, that they may be sincere, that their sins may be pardoned, and that they may be delivered from evils and the chastisements of God, and preserved in Christ. 2. A sin is so defined as those which are the heinousness and guilt of sin; There is a sin unto death, (v. 16.) and there is a sin not unto death, v.
17. (1.) There is a sin unto death. All sin, as to the merit and legal sentence of it, is unto death. The wages of sin is death; and cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law, to do them, Gal. 5. 10. But there is a sin unto death, in opposition to such sin as is called a sin not unto death. Therefore (2.) A sin not unto death. That surely must be all such sin as by divine or human constitution may consist with life; in the human constitution with temporal or corporal life, in the divine constitution with corporal or with spiritual evangelical life. [1]
There are sins which, by human righteous constit-tution, are not unto death; as divers pieces of injustice, which shall be compensated without the death of the delinquent. In opposition to which there are others which, by righteous constitution, are to death, or to a legal forfeiture of life; such as we call capital crimes. Then there are sins which, by divine constitution, are unto death; and that either death corporal, or spiritual and evangelical; First, Such as are, or may be, to death corporal. Such may the sins be either of gross hypocrites, as Ananias and Sapphira, or, for an instance, of the house of similar brethren; as when the apostle says of the offending members of the church of Corinth; For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep, 1 Cor. 11. 30. There may be sin unto corporal death among those who may not be condemned with the world. Such sin, I said, is, or may be, to corporal death. The divine, penal constitution in the gospel, does not positively and peremptorily threaten death to the more visible sins of the members of Christ, but only some gospel-chastisement;
for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth; and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth, Heb. 12. 6.
There is room left for divine wisdom or goodness, or even gospel-severity, to determine how far the chastisement or the scourge shall proceed. And we cannot say but that sometimes it may (in terrorem—for warning to others) proceed even to death. Then, Secondly, There are sins which, by divine constitution, are unto death spiritual and evangelical, that is, are inconsistent with spiritual and evangeli-kal life; with spiritual life in the soul, and with an evangelical right to life above. Such are total impenitence and unbelief for the present; final impenitence and unbelief are infallibly to death eternal; as also a blasphemy of the Spirit of God in his testimony that he has given for Christ in this gospel, and a total apostasy from the light and conevincing evidence of the truth of Christian religion.
These are sins deriving the guilt of everlasting death. Then comes,
IV. The application of the direction for prayer, according to the different sorts of sin thus distinguisished. The prayer is supposed to be for life; He shall be answered, (v. 20.) Life is to be asked of God; he is the God of life; he gives it when and to whom he pleases, and takes it away, either by his constitution or providence, or both, as he thinks meet. In the case of a brother's sin, which is not (in the manner already mentioned) unto death, we may in faith and hope pray for him; and particularly for the life of soul and body. But in case of the sin unto death in the forementioned ways, we have no assurance of God's answering of our unfor-got's expression, I do not say, He shall pray for it, we may intend no more than, "I have no promise for you in that case; no foundation for the prayer of faith." 1. The laws of punitive justice must be executed, for the common safety and benefit of mankind: and even an offending brother in such a case must be resigned to public justice, (which in the foundation of it is divine,) and at the same time also to the mercy of God. The removal of evan-geletic punishment, (as they may be called,) or the prevention of death, (which may seem to be so consequent upon, or instructed, for some particular sin,) can be prayed for only conditionally or provisionally, that is, with proviso that it consist with the wisdom, will, and glory of God that they should be removed, and particularly such death prevented. 3. We cannot pray that the sins of the impenitent and unbelieving child, while they are such, should be removed; or that any mercy of life or soul, that supposes the forgiveness of sin, should be granted to them, while they continue such. But we may pray for their repentance, (supposing them but in the common case of the impenitent world,) for their being enriched with faith in Christ, and thereupon for all other saving mercies. 4. In case it should appear that any have committed the irremissible blasphemy or Christ, we cannot for any reason or consideration of the illuminating convictive powers of the Christian religion, it should seem that they are not to be prayed for at all. For, what remains but a certain fearful expectation of judgment, to consume such adversaries? Heb. 10. 27. And these last seem to be chiefly intended by the apostle by the names of sins unto death. Then, 5. The apostle seems to say, when he says, (v. 17.) All unrighteousness is sin; and all unrighteousness unto death, (since we have all some unrighteousness toward God or man, or both, in omitting and neglecting something that is their due,) then we were all peremptorily bound over to death:
but since it is not so, (the Christian brethren, generally speaking, having right to life,) there must be sin that is not to death. Though there is not venial sin, (in the common acceptance,) there is penal and sin; sin that does not derive a plenary obligation to eternal death. If it were not so, there could be no justification or continuance of the justified state.
The gospel-constitution or covenant abbreviates, abridges, or rescinds the guilt of sin.
18. We know that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. 19. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. 20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life. Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

Here we have,

I. A recapitulation of the privileges and advantages of the sound Christian believers:

1. They are secured against sin, against the fullness of its dominion, or the fullness of its guilt: We know whosoever is born of God, (and the believer in Christ is born of God, v. 1.) sinneth not; (v. 18.) that is, the wicked one may not touch him, to death. It seems not to be a bare narration of the duty or the practice of the regenerate; but an indication of their power by virtue of their regeneration; they are thereby prepared and principled against the fatal touches, the sting, of the wicked one; he touches not their souls, to infuse that venom there that he does to others, or to expel that regenerate principle that is an antidote to his poison, or to induce them to that sin that by the gospel constitution conveys an indissoluble obligation to eternal death; he may prevail too far with them, to draw them to some acts of sin; but it seems to be the design of the apostle to assert that their regeneration secures them from such assaults of the Devil as will bring them into the same case and actual condemnation with the Devil.

2. They are fortified against the Devil’s destructive attempts; He that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, that is, is enabled to guard himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not; (v. 18.) that is, the wicked one may not touch him, to death. It seems not to be a bare narration of the duty or the practice of the regenerate; but an indication of their power by virtue of their regeneration; they are thereby prepared and principled against the fatal touches, the sting, of the wicked one; he touches not their souls, to infuse that venom there that he does to others, or to expel that regenerate principle that is an antidote to his poison, or to induce them to that sin that by the gospel constitution conveys an indissoluble obligation to eternal death; he may prevail too far with them, to draw them to some acts of sin; but it seems to be the design of the apostle to assert that their regeneration secures them from such assaults of the Devil as will bring them into the same case and actual condemnation with the Devil.

3. They are on God’s side and interest, in opposition to the state of the world; And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, v. 19. Mankind are divided into two great parties or dominions, that which belongs to God, and that which belongs to wickedness, or to the wicked one. The Christian believers belong to God; they are of God, and from him, and to him, and for him; they succeed into the right and room of the ancient Israel of God, of whom it is said, The Lord’s people is his portion, his estate in this world; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance, the dividend that is fallen to him by the lot of his own determination; (Deut. 32. 9.) while, on the contrary, the whole world, the rest, being by far the major part, lieth in wickedness, in the dominion and dominion of the wicked one. These are indeed, were we to consider the individuals, many wicked ones, many wicked spirits, in the heavenly or the terrestrial places; but they are united in wicked nature, policy, and principle, and they are united also in one head; there is the prince of the devils and of the diabolical kingdom; there is a head of the malignity and of the malignant world; and he has such sway there, that he is called the god of this world. Strange, that such a knowing spirit should be so immeasurably incensed against the Almighty and all his interests, when he cannot but know that it must end in his own overthrow and everlasting damnation! How tremendous is the judgment of God upon that wicked one! May the God of the Christian world continually demolish his dominion in this world, and translate souls into the kingdom of his dear Son!

4. They are enlightened in the knowledge of the true eternal God; And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, v. 20. The Son of God is come into our world, and we have seen him, and know him by all the evidence that has already been asserted; he hath revealed unto us the true God, (as John 1. 18.) and he hath opened our minds too to understand that revelation; given us an internal light in our understandings, whereby we may dwell in the glories of the true God; and we are assured that it is the true God that he hath discovered to us; he is infinitely superior in purity, power, and perfection, to all the gods of the Gentiles; he has all the excellencies, beauties, and riches, of the living and true God; it is the same God that, according to Moses’s account, made the heavens and the earth; the same who took our fathers the patriarchs into peculiar covenant with himself; the same who brought our ancestors out of Egypt, who gave us the fiery law upon mount Sinai; who gave us his holy oracles, and promised the call and conversion of the Gentiles; by his counsels and works, by his love and grace, by his terrors and judgments, we know that he, and he alone, in the fulness of his being, is the living and true God. It is a great happiness to know the true God; and we know him in Christ.

17. 3. It is the glory of the Christian revelation, that it gives the best account of the true God, and administers the best eye-salve for our discerning of the living and true God.

5. They have a happy union with God and his Son; And we are in him that is true, even (or and) in his Son Jesus Christ, v. 20. The Son leads to the Father, and we are in both: And the true and favour of both; in covenant and federal alliance with both; in spiritual conjunction with both by the inhabitation and operation of their Spirit: and that you may know how great a dignity and felicity this is, you must remember, that this true one is the true God and eternal Life; (or rather, as it should seem a more natural construction;) This same Son of God and the Father, and we are in both: And the true and favour of both; in covenant and federal alliance with both; in spiritual conjunction with both by the inhabitation and operation of their Spirit: and that you may know how great a dignity and felicity this is, you must remember, that this true one is the true God and eternal Life; (John 1. 1. and here, ch. 1. 2.) so that in union with either, much more with both, we are united to the true God and eternal Life. Then we have,

II. The apostle’s concluding monition; Little children, dear children, as it has been interpreted, keep yourselves from idols, v. 21. Since ye know that the true God, and are in him, let your light and love guard you against all that is advanced in opposition to him, or competition with him; flee from the false gods of the heathen world; they are not comparable to the God whose you are, and whom you serve; adore not your God by statues and images which share in his worship; your God is an incomprehensible Spirit, and is disgraced by such sordid representations; do not make one communion with your heathen neighbours in their idolatrous worship; your God is jealous, and would have you come out, and be separated from among them; mortify the flesh, and be crucified to the world, that they may not usurp the throne and dominion in the heart, which is due only to God; the God whom you have known, is he who made you, who redeemed you by his Son, who has sent his gospel voice; who has provided your souls, begotten you unto himself by his Spirit, and given you eternal life; cleave to him in faith, and love, and constant obedience, in opposition to all things that would alienate your mind and heart from God. To this living and true God be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.
AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

SECOND EPISTLE OF JOHN.

Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds.

HERE we find a canonical epistle inscribed, principally, not only to a single person, but to one also of the softer sex. And why not to one of that sex? In gospel-redemption-privilege and dignity, there is neither male nor female; they are both one in Christ Jesus; our Lord himself neglected his own repast, to commune with the woman of Samaria, in order to shew her the fountain of life; and when almost expiring upon the cross, he would with his dying lips bequeth his blessed mother to the care of his beloved disciple, and thereby instruct him to respect female disciples for the future; it was to one of the same sex that our Lord chose to appear first after his return from the grave, and to send by her the news of his resurrection to this as well as to the other apostles: and we find afterwards a zealous Priscilla, so well acquitting herself in her Christian race, and particularly in some hazardous service toward the apostle Paul, that she is not only often mentioned before her husband, but to her as well as to him, not only the apostle himself, but also all the Gentile churches, were ready to return their thankful acknowledgments. No wonder then that a heroine in the Christian religion, honoured by divine providence, and distinguished by divine grace, should be dignified also by an apostolical epistle.

II. JOHN.

The apostle here salutes an honourable matron and her children, v. 1-3. Recommends to them faith and love, v. 5, 6. Warns them of deceivers, (v. 7.) and to take heed to themselves, v. 8. Teaches how to treat those who bring not the doctrine of Christ, v. 9, 11. And, referring other things to personal discourse, concludes the epistle, v. 12, 13.

1. THE elder unto the elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth; 2. For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever.

Ancient epistles began, as here, with salutation and good wishes: religion consecrates, as far as may be, old forms, and turns compliments into real expressions of life and love. Here we have, as usually, 1. The saluter; not expressed by name, but by a chosen character—The elder. The expression, and style, and love, intimate that the penman was the same with that of the foregoing epistle; he is now the elder, emphatically and eminently so; possibly, the oldest apostle now living; the chief elder in the church of God. An elder in the ancient house of Israel was reverend, or to be reverenced; much more he who is so in the gospel-Israel of God. An old disciple is honourable, an old apostle and leader of disciples is more so. He was now old in holy service and experience, had seen and tasted much of heaven, and was much nearer than when at first he believed.

2. The saluted; a noble Christian matron, and her children—To the elect lady, and her children. A lady, a person of eminent quality for birth, education, and estate; it is well that the gospel has got among such; it is pity but lords and ladies should be acquainted with the Lord Christ and his religion; they owe more to him than others do; though usually not many noble are called. Here is a pattern for persons of quality of the same sex; the elect lady; not only a choice one, but one chosen of God; it is lovely and beautiful to see ladies, by holy walking, demonstrate their election of God: and her children; probably, the lady was a widow, she and her children then are the principal part of the family, and so this may be styled an economical epistle. Families may well be written to and encouraged, and further directed in their domestic love, and order, and duties. We see that children may well be taken notice of in Christian letters, and they should know it too, it may avail to their encouragement and caution; they who love and commend them, will be apt to inquire after them; this lady and her children are further notified by the respect paid them, and that, (1.) By the apostle himself; whom I love in the truth, or in truth; whom I sincerely and heartily love. He who was the beloved disciple, had learnt the art of exercise of love; and he especially loved those who loved him, that Lord who loved him. (2.) By all her Christian acquaintance, all the religious who knew her; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth. Virtue and goodness in an elevated sphere shine bright; truth demands acknowledgment; and they who see the evidences of pure religion, should confess and attest them; it is a good sign and great duty to love and value religion in others. Then here is the ground of this love and respect thus paid to this lady, and her children; for the truth's sake, (or true religion's sake,) which dwelleth in him shall be everlasting. For this reason, Christ love is founded upon the appearance of Christian vital religion; likeness should beget affection; they who love truth and piety in themselves, should love it in others too, or love others upon the account of it: the apostle and the other Christians loved this lady, not so much for her honour as her holiness; not so much for her bounty as her serious Christian walk. Shew the like in your fits and stands; certain moods and moons; but religion should still dwell within us, in our minds and hearts, in our faith and love. It is to be hoped that where religion once truly dwells, it will abide for ever. The Spirit of Christianity, we may suppose, will not be totally extinguished: which shall be with us for ever.
II. JOHN.

3. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love. 4. I rejoiced greatly, that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

Here we see, 1. The salutation, which is indeed an apostolical benediction; Grace be with you, mercy and peace be from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love. Sacred love pours out blessings upon this honourable Christian family; to them who have, more shall be given: these blessings are craved. (1.) From God the Father, the God of all grace: he is the Fountain of blessedness, and of all the blessings that must bring us thither. (2.) From the Lord Jesus Christ; he is also Author and Communicator of these heavenly blessings, and he is distinguished by this emphatical character—the Son of the Father; such a Son as none else can be; such a Son as is the Brightness of the Father's glory, and the express Image of his person; who, with, the Father, is also eternal Life. 1 John 1. 2. From these divine persons the apostle prays, in grace—grace, by your good-will, the spring of all good things; it is grace indeed, that any spiritual blessing should be conferred on sinful mortals. [2.] Mercy—free pardon and forgiveness; they who are already rich in grace, have need of continual forgiveness; [3.] Peace—tranquility of spirit and serenity of conscience, in an assured reconciliation with God, together with all safe and sanctified outward prosperity. Such do, in truth and love, grow in profession, by sincere and ardent affection in the saluter, (in faith and love he prays them—from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ,) or as productive of continued truth and love in the saluted; these blessings will continually preserve true faith and love in the elect lady, and her children; and may they do so!

2. The congratulation upon the prospect of the exemplary behaviour of other children of this excellent lady. Happy parent, who was blessed with such a numerous religious offspring! I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, as we have received commandment from the Father. Possibly, the lady's sons travelled abroad, either for accomplishment and acquaintance with the world, or on the account of their own business or the common affairs of the family, and in their travels might come to Ephesus, where the apostle is now supposed to reside, and might there happily converse with him. See how good it is to be trained up to early religion! Though religion is not to be founded upon education, yet education may be, and often is, blessed, and is the way to fortify youth against irreligion in later years. Hence it is wise for children to learn to carry their religion along with them, and not either leave it at home, or learn the ill customs of the countries where they come. It may be observed also, that sometimes election runs in a direct line; here is an elect lady, and her elect children; children may be beloved for their parents' sake; but both by virtue of free grace. From the apostle's joy herein we may observe, that it is pleasant to see children walking in this light, and they who see this, may well congratulate their parents thereupon, and that both to excite their thankfulness to God for, and to enlarge their comfort in, so great a blessing. How happy a lady was this, who had brought forth so many children for heaven and for God! And how great a joy must it be to her ladyship, to hear so good an account of them from so good a judge. And we may further see, that it is just that the old ministers, and accordingly other good old disciples, to see a hopeful rising generation, who may serve God and support religion in the world when they are dead and gone. We see here also the rule of true walking; the commandment of the Father. Then is our walk true, our converse right, when it is managed by the word of God.

5. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

We come now more into the design and substance of the epistle; and here we have, 1. The apostle's request; Now I beseech thee, lady, considering what it is that he entreats, the way of address is very remarkable; it is not any particular boon or bounty to himself, but common duty and observance of divine command; here he might command or charge; but harsher methods are worse than needless, where milder will prevail; and the apostolical spirit is, of all other, the most tendereating, and endearing. Whether out of deference to her ladyship, or apostolical meekness, or both, he condescends to beseech; And now I beseech thee, lady. He may be supposed speaking as another apostle does to a certain master to whom he writes; Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ, (and according to the power with which Christ hath entrusted me,) to entreat thee that which is convenient, yet, for love's sake, I rather beseech thee, being such an aged, the elder. Love will avail where authority will not; and we may often see that the more authority is urged, the more it is slighted. The apostolical minister will love and beseech his friends into their duty.

2. The thing requested of the lady, and her children—Christian sacred love; that we love one another. They that are eminent in any Christian virtue, have yet room to grow therein. But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. But we beseech you, brethren, (and sisters,) that ye increase more and more, 1 Thess. 4. 9, 10. This love is, (1.) Recommended, [1.] From the obligation thereby;—the command
Divine command should sway our mind and heart. (2.) From the antiquity of the obligation; not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, v. 5. This commandment of mutual Christian love may be said to be a new one, in respect of its new enaction and sanction by the Lord Christ; but yet, as to the nature of it, it is as old as the world, and as old as the covenant of love, which was made between God and man, his natural, Jewish, or Christian religion; this commandment must every where attend Christianity, that the disciples of it must love one another. Then this love is, (2.) Illustrated from the fruitful nature of it; And this is love, that we walk after his commandments, v. 6. This is the test of our love to God, our obedience to him. This is love to ourselves, to our own souls, that they may walk in obedience to divine commands. In keeping them there is great reward. This is love to one another, to engage one another to walk in holiness; and this is the note of our sincere, mutual, Christian love— that we (in other things) walk after God's commands. There may be mutual love that is not religious and Christian; but we know our's to be so, by our attendance to all other commands beside that of mutual love. Universal obedience is the proof of the goodness and sincerity of Christian virtues; and they that aim at all Christian obedience, will be sure to attend to Christian love; that is a fundamental duty in the gospel-charter. This is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it, (v. 6.) that is, walk in this love. The foresight of the decay of this love, as well as of other apostasy, might engage the apostle to inculcate this duty, and this primordial command, the more frequently, the more earnestly.

7. For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist. 8. Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. 9. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

In this principal part of the epistle we find, 1. The ill news communicated to the lady; seducers are abroad; For many deceivers are entered into the world. This report is introduced by a particle that bespeaks a reason of the report; "Ye have need to maintain your love, for there are destroyers of it in the world; who subvert the faith, destroy the love; the common faith is one ground of the common love; or, "You must secure your walk according to the commands of God, that will secure you; your stability is likely to be tried, for many deceivers are entered into the world." Sad and suddening news may be communicated to our Christian friends; not that we should love to make them sorry; but to forewarn is the way to fore-arm them against their trials. Now here is, (1.) The description of the deceiver and his deceit; he confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh; (v. 7.) he brings some error or other concerning the person of the Lord Jesus; he either confesses not that Jesus Christ is the same person, or, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ, the Anointed of God, the Messiah promised of old for the redemption of Israel, or, that the promised Messiah and Redeemer are come in the flesh, or into the flesh; into our world and into our nature; such a one preents that he is yet to be expected. Strange, that after such evidence, any should deny that the Lord Jesus is the Son of God and Saviour of the world! (2.) The aggravation of the case; such a one is a deceiver and an antichrist; (v. 7.) he deludes souls, and undermines the glory and kingdom of the Lord Christ; he must be an impostor, a wilful deceiver, after all the light that has been afforded, and all the evidence that Christ hath given concerning himself, and the attestation God hath given concerning his Son; and he is a wilful opposer of the person and honour and interest of the Lord Christ, and as such shall be reckoned with when the Lord Christ comes again; let us not think it strange that there are deceivers among the successors of the Lord Christ's name and dignity now, for there were such of old, even in the apostles' times.

2. The counsel given to this elect household hereupon. Now care and caution is needful; Look to yourselves, (v. 8.) The more deceivers and deceits abound, the more watchful the disciples must be. Delusions may so prevail, the even the elect may be endangered thereby. Two things they must beware of: (1.) That they lose not what they had wrought, (v. 8.) what they have done, or what they have gained. It is pity that any religious labour should be in vain; some begin well, but at last lose all their pains; the hopeful gentleman, who had kept the commands of the second table from his youth up, lost all for want of less love to the world, and more love to Christ. Professors should take care not to lose what they have received; they have not only gained a fair reputation for religion, but much light therein, much conviction of the evil of sin, the vanity of the world, the excellency of religion, and the power of God's word; they have even tasted of the powers of the world to come, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit; and yet at last lose all. Ye did run well, who hindered you, that ye should not be made perfect (or be made obedient) to obey the truth? Sad it is, that fair splendid attainments in the school of Christ should all be lost at last. (2.) That they lose not their reward, none of it, no portion of that honour, or praise, or glory that they once stood fair for; that ye (or ye, as in some copies) receive a full reward; Secure ye as full a reward as will be given to any in the church of God; if there are degrees of glory, lose none of that grace (that light or love or peace) which is to purchase you for the higher elevation in glory; have faith that whatever you do (in faith and hope and a good conscience,) that no man take thy crown; that thou neither lose it, nor any jewel out of it," Rev. 3. 11. The way to attain the full reward, is, to abide true to Christ, and constant in religion to the end.

3. The reason of the apostle's counsel, and of their care and caution about themselves; which is still hold: (1.) The danger and evil of departure from gospel-light and revelation; it is in effect and reality a departure from God himself; Whosoever transgresseth, (transgresseth at this dismal rate,) and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. It is the doctrine of Christ that is appointed to guide us to God; it is that whereby God draws souls to salvation and to himself; they who revolve from thence, in so doing revolt from God. (2.) The advantage and happiness of firm adherence to Christian truth; it unites us to Christ, (the Object or Subject of that truth,) and thereby to the Father also; for they are one. He that abideth, (rooted and grounded) in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. By the doctrine of Christ we are enlightened in the knowledge of the Father and the Son; by it we are sanctified for the Father and the Son; and thereby we are enriched with holy love to the Father and the Son; and thereby prepared for the endless enjoyment of the Father and the Son. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken to you, John 15. 3. That purity makes meet for heaven. The great God, as he has set his seal to, so he puts a value upon, the doctrine of Christ. We must retain that holy doctrine in faith and love, as we hope or desire to arrive at blessed communion with the Father and the Son.
II. JOHN.

10. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: 11. For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

1. Upon due warning given concerning seducers, the apostle gives direction concerning the treatment of such; they are not to be entertained as the ministers of Christ; the Lord Christ will distinguish them from such, and so would he have his disciples.

The direction is negative: (1.) “Support them not; If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, (concerning Christ as the Son of God, the Messiah and Anointed of God, for our redemption and salvation,) receive him not into your house.” Possibly, this lady was like Gaius, whom we read of in the next epistle, a generous housekeeper, and hospitable entertainer of travelling ministers and Christians. These deceivers might possibly expect the same reception with others, or with the best who came there; (as the blind are often bold enough;) but the apostle allows it not; “Do not welcome them into your family.” Doubtless, such may be relieved in their pressing necessities; but not encouraged for ill service. Deniers of the faith are destroyers of souls; and it is supposed that even ladies themselves should have good understanding in the affairs of religion. (2.) “Bless not their enterprises; Neither bid him God speed. Attend not their service with your prayers and good wishes.” Bad work should not be consecrated or recommended to the divine benediction. God will be no patron of falsehood, seduction, and sin. We ought to bid God speed to evangelical ministration; but the propagation of fatal error, if we cannot prevent, we must not dare to countenance. Then,

2. Here is the reason of such direction, forbidding the support and patronage of the deceiver; For he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds. Favour and affection partake of the sin. We may be sharers in the iniquities of others. How judicious and how cautious should the Christian be. There are many ways of sharing the guilt of other persons’ transgressions; it may be done by culpable silence, indolence, unconcernedness, private contribution, public countenance and assistance, inward approbation, open apology and defence. The Lord pardon our guilt of other persons’ sins.

12. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full. 13. The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen.

The apostle concludes this letter, 1. With an adjournment of many things to personal conference; Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full. Here it is supposed that some things are better spoken than written. A pen and ink may be a mercy and a pleasure; but a personal interview may be more so; the apostle was not yet too old for travel, nor consequently for travelling service. The communion of saints should be by all methods maintained; and their communion should tend to their mutual joy. Excellent ministers may have their joy advanced by their Christian friends; That I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me, Rom. 1. 13.

2. With the presentation of service and salutation from some near relations to the lady; The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Grace was abundant toward this family; here are two elect sisters, and, probably, their elect children. How will they admire this grace in heaven! The apostle confides in the insertion of their duty, (as we would call it,) or dutiful salutation to their aunt. The duty of inferior relations is to be cherished. Doubtless, the apostle was easy of access, and would admit all friendly and pious communication, and was ready to enhance the good lady’s joy in her nieces as well as her children. May there be many such gracious ladies rejoicing in their gracious descendants and other relations! Amen.
AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

THIRD EPISTLE OF JOHN.

Completed by Mr. T. Reynolds.

CHRISTIAN communion is exerted and cherished by letter. Christians are to be commended in the practical proof of their professed subjection to the gospel of Christ. The animating and countenancing of generous and public-spirited persons, is doing good to many.—To this end, the apostle sends this encouraging epistle to his friend Gaius, in which also he complains of the quite opposite spirit and practice of a certain minister, and confirms the good report concerning another more worthy to be imitated.

III. JOHN.

In this epistle the apostle congratulates Gaius upon the prosperity of his soul; (v. 1, 2.) upon the same he had among good Christians; (v. 3, 4.) and upon his charity and hospitality to the servants of Christ, v. 3, 6. He complains of contemptuous treatment by an ambitious Diotrephes, v. 9, 10. Recommends Demetrius, v. 12. And hopes to visit Gaius shortly, v. 13, 14.

1. THE elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

2. Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

Here we see, 1. The sacred penman who writes and sends the letter; not here indeed notified by his name, but a more general character—The elder; he that is so by years and by office: honour and deference are due to both. Some have questioned whether this were John the apostle or no: but his style and spirit seem to shine therein. They that are beloved of Christ, will love the brethren for his sake. Gaius could not question from whom the letter came. The apostle might have assumed many more illustrious characters, but it becomes not Christ's ministers to affect swelling pompous titles. He almost levels himself with the more ordinary pastors of the church, while he styles himself—The elder. Or, possibly, most of the extraordinary ministers, the apostles, were now dead, and this holy survivor would countenance the continued standing ministry, by assuming the more common title—The elder. The elders I exhort, who am also an elder, 1 Pet. 5. 1.

2. The person saluted and honoured by the letter; the former was directed to an elect lady, this to a choice gentleman; such are worthy of esteem and value: he is notified, (1.) By his name, Gaius. We read of several of that name, particularly of one whom the apostle Paul baptised at Corinth, who possibly might be also the apostle's host and kind entertainer there; (Rom. 16. 23.) if this be not he, it is his brother in name, estate, and disposition. Then, (2.) By the kind expressions of the apostle to him—the well-beloved, and whom I love in the truth. Love expressed is wont to kindle love. Here seems to be either the sincerity of the apostle's love, or the religion of it; the sincerity of it—whom I love in truth, whom I truly cordially love; the religion of it—whom I love in the truth, for the truth's sake, as abiding and walking in the truth, as it is in Jesus. To love our friends for the truth's sake, is true love, religious gospel-love.

3. The salutation or greeting; containing a prayer, introduced by an affectionate compellation—Beloved, thou beloved one in Christ. The minister who would gain love, must shew it himself. Here is, (1.) The apostle's good opinion of his friend, that his soul prospered. There is such a thing as soul-prosperity—the greatest blessing on this side heaven; this supposes regeneration, and an inward fund of spiritual life; this stock is increasing, and while spiritual treasures are advancing, the soul is in a fair way to the kingdom of glory. (2.) His good wish for his friend, that his body may prosper and be in health as well as his soul. Grace and health are two rich companions; grace will improve health, health will employ grace; it frequently falls out that a rich soul is lodged in a crazy body; grace must be exercised in submission to such a dispensation; but we may well wish and pray that they who have prosperous souls, may have healthful bodies too; there grace will shine in a larger sphere of activity.

3. For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth.

4. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth. 5 Beloved, thou dost faithfully whatsoever thou dost to the brethren, and to strangers; 6. Who have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: 7. Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. 8. We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helper's to the truth.
III. JOHN.

In these verses we have, 1. The good report that the apostle had received concerning this friend of his; The brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, (v. 3.) who have borne witness of thy charity before the church, v. 6. Where we may see, (1.) The testimony or thing testified concerning Gaius—the truth that was in him; the reality of his faith, the sincerity of his religion, and devotedness to God; and this evinced by his charity, which includes his love to the brethren, kindness to the poor, hospitality to Christian strangers, and readiness to accommodate them for the service of the gospel. Faith should work by love; it gives a lustre in and by the offices of love, and induces others to commend its integrity. (2.) The witnesses—the brethren that were at Ephesus, testified and bore witness. A good report is due from those who have known good; though a good name is but a small reward for costly service, yet it is better than precious ointment, and will not be refused by the ingenuous and religious. (3.) The auditory, or judiciary before which the report and testimony were given—before the church; this seems to be the church at which the apostle now resided; what church that was, we are not sure; what occasion they had thus to testify his faith and love before the church, we cannot tell; possibly out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaks; they could not but testify what they found and felt; possibly, they would engage the church's prayer for the continued life and usefulness of such a patron, that he might prosper and be in health as his soul prospered.

2. The report the apostle himself gives of him, introduced by an endearing appellation again; Beloved, thou dost faithfully whatsoever thou dost to the brethren, and to strangers, v. 5. (1.) He was hospitable, good to the brethren, even to strangers; it was enough to recommend them to Gaius's house, that they belonged to Christ; or he was good to the brethren of the same church with himself, and to those who came from far; all of the household of faith were welcome to him. (2.) He seems to have been of a catholic spirit; he could overlook the petty differences among serious Christians, and be communicative to all who bore the image and did the work of Christ. And, (3.) He was conscientious in what he did; Thou dost faithfully (thou makest faultful work of) whatsoever thou dost; thou dost it as a faithful servant; and from the Lord Christ may we claim the reward of the inheritance. Such faithful souls can hear their own praises without being puffed up; the commendation of what is good in us, is designed, not for our pride, but for our encouragement to continue therein, and should be accordingly improved.

3. The apostle's joy therein, in the good report itself, and the good ground of it; I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and testified of thee, that we have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth, in the precepts of the Christian religion. The best evidence of our having the truth, is, our walking in the truth. Good men will greatly rejoice in the soul-prosperity of others; and they are glad to hear of the grace and goodness of others; They glorified God in me. Love envieth not, but rejoiceth in the good name of other folks. As it is joy to good parents, it will be joy to good ministers to see their children evidence their truth in religion, and adorn their profession.

4. The direction the apostle gives his friend concerning further treatment of the brethren that were with him; whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well. It seems to have been customary in these days of love, to attend travelling ministers and Christians, at least some part of their road, 1 Cor. 16. 6. It is a kindness to a stranger, to be good to him in his way; and a pleasure to travellers, to meet with suitable company: this is a work that may be done after a godly sort, in a manner worthy of God, suitable to the deference and relation we bear to God. Christians should consider not only what they must do, but what they may do; what they may most honourably and laudably do: the liberal mind deviseth liberal, generous things. Christians should do even the common things as if they were good works; he who doeth good, as serving God therein, and designing his glory. Then, 5. The reasons of this directed conduct; these are two: (1.) Because that for his name's sake these brethren went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. It appears thus that these were ministerial brethren; that they went forth to preach the gospel and propagate Christianity; possibly, they might be sent out by this apostle himself; they went forth to propagate this Gospel, and these went forth for God and his name's sake; this is the minister's highest end, and should be his principal spring and motive, to gather and to build up a people for his name; they went forth also to carry a free gospel about with them; to make it unexpensive where they came; taking nothing of the Gentiles; these were worthy of double honour. There are those who are not called to preach the gospel themselves, who yet may much contribute to the progress of it. The gospel should be made without charge to those to whom it is first preached; they who know it not, cannot be expected to value it; the churches and Christian patriots ought to concur to support the propagation of holy religion in the Pagan countries; public spirits should concur according to their several capacities; they who are freely and generously supported to the propagation of Christ's gospel, should be assisted by those who are communicative of their purses. (2.) We ought therefore to receive such, that we may be fellow-helper's to the truth, to true religion. The institution of Christ is the true religion, it has been attested by God; that they are true in it and true to it, will earnestly desire, and pray for, and contribute to, its propagation in the world; many ways may the truth be befriended and assisted; they who cannot minister in a Christian's gospel, should minister in God's, accompany, help, and countenance those who do.

9. I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not. 10. Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and cast eth them out of the church. 11. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good, is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

1. Here is a very different example and character; an officer, a minister in the church, less gene rous, catholic, and communicative than the private Christians. Ministers may sometimes be out-shone, out-done. In reference to this minister, we see, (1.) His name—a Gentile name—Diotrephes, attended with an unchristian spirit. (2.) His temper and spirit—full of pride and ambition; He loves to have the pre-eminence. This ferment sprang and wrought betimes. It is an ill unbecoming character of Christ's ministers, to love pre-eminence, to affect presidency and precedence in the church of God. (3.) His contempt of the apostle's authority and letters. (1.) Of his conduct. The deeds which he doeth contrary to our appointment, fretting against us with malicious words. Strange, that the contempt should run so high! But ambition will breed malice against those who oppose it. Malice and ill-will in the heart will be apt to vent itself by the lips. The heart and mouth are both to be watched. (2.) Of his letter; "I wrote to the church, (v. 9.) in recommendation of such and such brethren. But Diotrephes receiveth us not; admits not our letter and testimony therein." This seems to be the church of which Gaius was a member. A gospel-church seems to be such a society as to which a letter may be written and communicated. Gospel-churches may well expect and be allowed credentials with the strangers who desire to be admitted among them. The apostle seems to write by and with these brethren. To an ambitious aspiring spirit, apostolical authority or epistle signifies but little. (3.) Of his friend, the brethren he recommended; Neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would; and casteth them out of the church, v. 10. There might be some differences or different customs between the Jewish and the Gentile Christians. Pastors should seriously consider what differences are tolerable. The pastor is not at absolute liberty, nor lord over God's heritage. It is bad to do no good ourselves; but it is worse to hinder those who would Church-power and church-censures are often abused. Many are cast out of the church, who should be received there with satisfaction and welcome. But woe to those who cast out the brethren whom the Lord Christ will take into his own communion and kingdom! (4.) The apostle's menace of this proud dominator: Where are, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth; (v. 10.) will remember to censure them. This seems to intimate apostolical authority. But the apostle seems not to hold an episcopal court, to which Diotrephes must be summoned; but will come to take cognizance of this affair in the church, which it befits. Acts of ecclesiastical domination and tyranny ought to be animadverted upon. May it be better agreed to whom that power belongs!
III. JOHN.

2. Here is counsel upon that different character, dissuasion from copying such a pattern, and indeed any evil at all; Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good, v. 11. Imitate not such unchristian, pernicious evil; but pursue the contrary good, in wisdom, purity, peace, and love. Caution and counsel are not needless to those who wish to have those cautions and counsels are most likely to be accepted, that are seasoned with love. Beloved, follow not that which is evil; to this caution and counsel a reason is respectively subjoined. (1.) To the counsel; Follow that which is good. For, he that doeth good, (naturally and genuinely doeth good, as delighting therein,) is of God, is born of God. The practice of goodness is the evidence of our filial happy relation to God. (2.) To the caution; Follow not that which is evil. He that doeth evil, (with bent of mind pursues it,) hath not seen God, is not duly sensible of his holy nature and will. Evil-workers vainly pretend or boast an acquaintance with God.

12. Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record, and ye know that our record is true. 13. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee; 14. But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Here we see, 1. The character of another person, one Demetrius; not much known otherwise. But here his name will live. A name in the gospel a fame in the churches, is better than that of sons and daughters. His character was his commendation. His commendation was, (1.) General; Demetrius has a good report of all men. Few are well spoken of by all; and sometimes it is ill to be so. But universal integrity and goodness are the way to lead to the Son of God. Sometimes obtain the universal applause. (2.) Deserved and well founded; And of the truth itself, v. 12. Some have a good report, but not of the truth itself. Happy they whose spirit and conduct commend them before God and men. (3.) Confirmed by the apostle's and his friends' testimony; Yea, and we also bear record; and that with an appeal to Gaius's own knowledge. And ye (you and your friends) know that our record is true. Probably, this Demetrius was known to the church where the apostle now resided, and to that where Gaius was. It is good to be well known, or known for good. We must be ready to bear our testimony to those who are good: it is a debt to virtue and goodness. It is well for those who are commended, when those who commend them can appeal to the consciences of those who know them most. The counsel of the epistle; in which we may observe, (1.) The referring of some things to personal interview; I have many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen, but I trust I shall shortly see thee, v. 13, 14. Many things may be more proper for immediate communication, than for letter. A little personal conference may spare the time, trouble, and charge, of many letters; and good Christians may well be glad to see one another. (2.) The benediction; Peace be to you; all felicity attend you. They that are good and happy themselves, wish others so too. (3.) The public salutation sent to Gaius; Our friends salute thee. A friend to the propagation of religion deserves a common remembrance. And these pious persons shew their friendship to religion as well as to Gaius. (4.) The apostle's particular salutation of the Christians in Gaius's church or vicinity; Greet the friends by name. I doubt they were not versal appeals, but to be so personally saluted. But we must learn humility as well as love. The lowest in the church of Christ should be greeted. And they may well salute and greet one another on earth, who hope to live together in heaven. And the apostle who had lain in Christ's bosom, lays Christ's friends in his heart.
AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

GENERAL EPISCLE OF JUDE

Completed by Mr. J. Billingsley.

THIS epistle (as some few others are) is styled general or catholic, for that it is not immediately directed to any particular person, family, or church, but to the whole society of Christians of that time, lately converted to the faith of Christ, whether from Judaism or Paganism; and it is, and will be, of standing, lasting, and special use in and to the church as long as Christianity, that is, as time, shall last.

Some of the chief things contained in it summarily, are, 1. An account of the penman of it, a character of the church, the blessings and privileges of that happy society, v. 1, 2. 2. The occasion of writing this epistle, v. 3. 3. A character of evil and perverse men, who were already sprung up in that infant state of the church, and would be succeeded by others of the like evil spirit and temper in after-times, v. 4. 4. A caution against heartenking to and following after such, from the severity of God toward the unbelieving murmuring Israelites at their coming out of Egypt, the angels that fell, the sin and punishment of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 5—7. 5. To these the apostle likens the seducers against whom he was warning them, and describes them at large, from v. 8 to 13, inclusive. 6. Then (as specially suitable to his argument) he cites an ancient prophecy of Enoch foretelling and describing the future judgment, v. 14, 15. 7. Enlarges on the seducers’ character, and guards against the offence which honest minds might be apt to take at the so early permission of such things, by shewing that it was foretold long before that so it must be, v. 16—19. 8. Exhorts them to perseverance in the faith, fervency in prayer, watchfulness against falling from the love of God, and a lively hope of eternal life, v. 20, 21. 9. Directs them how to act toward the erroneous and scandalous, v. 22, 23. And, 10. Closes with an admirable doxology in the two last verses.

This epistle (as most of the rest do) consists of,

I. A preface or introduction, v. 1, 2.

II. The body of the epistle, v. 3 to 23, inclusive.

The general scope of it is much the same with that of the second chapter of the second epistle of Peter, which having been already explained, the less will need to be said on this.

It is designed to warn us against seducers and their seduction, to inspire us with a warm love to, and a hearty concern for, truth, (evident and important truth,) and that in the closest conjunction with holiness, of which charity, or sincere unbiased brotherly-love, is a most essential character and inseparable branch.

he truth we are to hold fast, and endeavour that others may be acquainted with and not depart from, has two special characters.

1. It is the truth as it is in Jesus, Eph. 4. 21.

2. It is true after (or which is according to,) godliness, Tit. 1, 1.

I he gospel is the gospel of Christ; he has revealed it to us, and he is the main Subject of it; and therefore we are indispensably bound to learn from thence all we can of his person, natures, and offices: indifference as to this, is inexcusable in any who call themselves Christians; and we know from what fountain we are wholly and solely to draw all necessary saving knowledge.

Further, it is also a doctrine of godliness: whatever doctrines favour the corrupt lusts of men, cannot be of God, let the pleas and pretensions for them be what they will. Errors dangerous to the souls of men soon sprung up in the church. The servant slept, and tares were sown. But such were the wisdom and kindness of Providence, that they began sensibly to appear and shew themselves, while some, at least, of the apostles were yet alive to confute them, and warn others against them. We are apt to think, If we had lived in their times, we should have been abundantly fenced against the attempts and artifices of seducers; but we have their testimony and their cautions, which is sufficient; and if we will not believe their writings, neither have we believed or regarded their sayings, if we had lived among them and conversed personally with them.

We come now first to consider the preface or introduction to this epistle, v. 1, 2.
1. Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called: 2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

Here we have,

I. An account of the penman of this epistle, Jude, or Judas, or Judah. He was name-sake to one of his ancestors, the son of Jacob, though not the first-born of his sons; out of whose loins (lineally, in a most direct succession) the Messiah came. This was a name of worth, eminency, and honour; yet, 1. He has a wicked name-sake. There was one Judas, (one of the twelve,) surnamed Iscariot, (from the place of his birth,) who was a vile traitor, the betrayer of his and our Lord. The same names may be common to the best and worst persons. It may be instructive to be called after the names of eminently good men, but there can be no inference drawn thence what we shall prove, though we may even thence conclude what sort of persons our good parents or progenitors desired and hoped we should be. But, 2. Our Judas was quite another man. He was an apostle, so was Iscariot; but he was a sincere disciple and follower of Christ, so was not the other. He was a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, the other was his betrayer and murderer; therefore here the one is very carefully distinguished from the other. Dr. Manton's note upon this, is, that God takes great care of the good name of his sincere and useful servants. Why then should we be prodigal of our own or one another's reputation and usefulness? Our apostle here calls himself a servant of Jesus Christ, esteeming that a most honourable title. It is more honourable to be a sincere and useful servant of Christ than to be an earthly king, how potent and prosperous soever. He might have claimed kinder to Christ according to the flesh, but he waves that, and rather glorifies in being his servant.

Observe, It is really a greater honour to be a faithful servant of Jesus Christ than to be akin to him according to the flesh. Many of Christ's natural relations are hardly writers, not on account from want of natural affection in him as Man, but from infidelity and obstinacy in themselves; which should make the descendants and near relatives of persons most eminent for sincere and exemplary piety, jealous over themselves with a godly jealousy. A son of Noah may be saved in the ark from a flood of temporal destruction, and yet be overwhelmed at last in a deluge of divine wrath, and suffer the vengeance of eternal fire. Christ himself tells us, that he that heareth his word, and doeth it, that is, he only, is as his brother, and sister, and mother, that is, more honourably and advantageously related to him than the nearest and dearest of his natural relatives, considered merely as such. See Matt. 12. 48-50.

II. Not further. In that the apostle Jude styles himself a servant, though an apostle, a dignified officer in Christ's kingdom: it is a great honour to the meanest sincere ministers, and is proportionable as to every upright Christian,) that he is the servant of Christ Jesus. They were servants before they were apostles, and they were but servants still. Away then with all pretensions in the ministers of Christ to lordly dominion either over one another, or for the flocks committed to their charge. Let us ever have that of our dear Redeemer in actual view; It shall not be so among you, Matt. 20. 25, 26. And brother of James, to wit, of him whom the ancients style the first bishop of Jerusalem, of whose character and martyrdom Josephus makes mention, and ascribes the horrible destruction of that city and nation to this wicked cruelty, as one of its principal causes.* Of this James, our Jude was brother, whether in the strictest or a larger (though very usual) acceptance, I determine not. He however reckons it an honour to him, that he was the brother of such a one. We ought to honour those who are above us in age, gifts, graces, station; not to envy them, yet neither to flatter them, nor be led merely by their example, when we have reason to think they act wrong. This the apostle Paul withstood his fellow-apostle Peter to the face, notwithstanding the high esteem he had for him, and the affectionate love he bare to him, when he saw that he was to be blamed, that is, really blame-worthy, Gal. 2. 11, and following verses.

III. We are here acquainted to whom this epistle is directed; namely, to all them who are sanctified by God the Father, and called. I begin with the last, called, that is, called Christians, in the judgment of charity, further than which we cannot, nor in justice ought to go, in the judgments or opinions we form or receive of another; for what appears not, is not, nor ought to come into account in our dealings with the censures of one another, whatever abatements the divine goodness may see fit to make for an honest, though misguided zeal. And this is a sure it ought not) to judge of secret or hidden things, (things drawn into the light before the time,) lest our rash and preposterous zeal do more harm than ever it has done good, or I am afraid ever will do. The tares and wheat (if Christ may be Judge) must grow together till the harvest; (Matt. 13. 28-30.) and then he himself will, by proper instruments, take timely care to separate them. We ought to think the best of every man till the contrary appear; not being forward to receive or propagate, much less invent, disadvantageous characters of our brethren. This is the least we can make of the apostle's large and excellent description of charity, (1 Cor. 13.) and this we ought to make conscience of acting up to, which till we do, the Christian churches will, as alas! they are at this day, be filled with envying and strife, confusion and evil work; 1 Cor. 3. 16. Or, the apostle may speak of their being called to be Christians, by the preaching of the word which they gladly received, and professed cordially to believe, and so were received into the society and fellowship of the church, Christ the Head, and believers the members; real believers really, professed believers visibly.

Christians are the called, called out of the world, the evil spirit and power of darkness in the world, to higher and better things, heaven, things unseen and eternal; called from sin to Christ, from vanity to seriousness, from uncleanness to holiness; and this in pursuance of divine purpose and grace; for whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom. 8. 30. Now they who are thus called, are,

1. Sanctified; sanctified by God the Father. Sanctification is usually spoken of in scripture, the perfection of the Holy Spirit; yet here it is ascribed to God the Father, because the Spirit works it as the Spirit of the Father and the Son. Note, All who are effectually called, are sanctified; made partakers of a divine nature; (2 Pet. 1. 4.) for without holiness no man shall see the Lord, Heb. 12. 14.

Observe, Our sanctification is not our own work. If any are sanctified, they are so by God the Father, not excluding Son or Spirit, for they are one, one God. Our corruption and pollution are of ourselves; but our sanctification and renovation are of God and his grace; and therefore if we perish in our iniquity, we must bear the blame; but if we be sanctified and glorified, all the honour and glory must be ascribed to God, and to him alone. I own it is hard to give credit to the notion of this, but we must not deny or disregard necessary truth, because we cannot fully reconcile the several parts of it to each other; for, on that supposition, we might deny that any one of us could stir an inch from the place we are at present in, though we see the contrary every day and hour.

2. The called and sanctified are preserved in Christ Jesus. As it is God who begins the work of grace in the souls of men, so it is he who carries it on, and perfects it. Where he begins he will perfect; though we are fickle, he is constant; he will not forsake the work of his own hands, Ps. 138. 8. Let us not therefore trust in ourselves, nor in our stock of grace already received, but in him, and in him alone; still endeavouring, by all proper and appointed means, to keep ourselves as ever we would hope he should keep us.

Preserved; from the gates of hell, and to the glory of heaven.

Preserved in Christ Jesus. All who are preserved, are preserved in Jesus Christ; in him as their Citadel and Strong-hold; no longer than they abide in him, and solely by virtue of their union with him.

3. The apostolical benediction; Mercy to you, &c. From the mercy, peace, and love of God all over the earth, may our real enjoyment of this life, all our hope of a better.

(1.) The mercy of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for; mercy not only to the miserable, but to the guilty.

(2.) Next to mercy is peace, which we have from the sense of having obtained mercy. We can have no true and lasting peace but what flows from our reconciliation with God by Jesus Christ; who is the Prince of Peace, Ps. 2:12. From peace springs love; his love to us, our love to him, and our brotherly love (forgotten, wretchedly neglected grace) to one another.

These the apostle prays may be multiplied, that Christians may not be content with scraps and narrow scantlings of them; but that souls and societies may be full of them. Note, God is ready to supply us with all grace, and a fullness in each grace. We are not straitened, if we are straitened, in him, but in ourselves.

3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

We have here the design of the apostle in writing this epistle to the lately-converted Jews and Gentiles; namely, to establish them in the Christian faith, and a practice and conversation truly consonant and conformable thereunto, and in an open and bold profession thereof; especially in times of notorious opposition, whether by artful seduction, or violent and inhuman persecution.

But then we must see to it very carefully, that it be really the Christian faith that we believe, profess, propagate, and contend for; not the discriminating badges of this or the other party; not any thing of later date than the inspired writings of the holy evangelists and apostles.

Here observe, 1. The gospel-salvation is a common salvation, that is, in a most sincere offer and tender of it to all mankind to whom the notice of it reaches: for so the commission runs, (Mark 16. 15, 16.) Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, &c. Surely God means as he speaks, he does not delude us with vain words, whatever men do; and therefore none are excluded from the pale of this generous offer of common salva-tions, but they who obstinately, impenitently, finally exclude themselves. Whoever will, may come and drink of the water of life freely, Rev. 22. 17.

The application of it is made to all believers, and only to such; it is made to the weak as well as to the strong. Let none discourage themselves on the account of hidden decrees which they can know little of, and with which they have nothing to do. God's decrees are dark, his covenants are plain.

All good Christians meet in Christ the common "Head, are actuated by one and the same Spirit, "are guided by one rule, meet here at one throne "of grace, and hope shortly to meet in one common "inheritance;" a glorious one to be sure, but what or how glorious, we cannot, nor at present need to know; but such it will be as vastly to exceed all our present hopes and expectations.

2. This common salvation is the subject-matter of the faith of all the saints. The doctrine of it is what they all most heartily consent to; they esteem it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, 1 Tim. 1. 15. It is the faith once, or at once, once for all, delivered to the saints; to which nothing can be added, from which nothing may be detracted, in which nothing more or less should be altered. Here let us abide; here we are safe: if we use a staircase, we are in danger of being either entangled or seduced.

3. The apostles and evangelists all wrote to us of this common salvation. This cannot be doubted by those who have carefully read their writings. It is strange that any should think they wrote chiefly to maintain particular schemes and opinions, especially those as they never did nor could think of. It is enough that they wrote fully and freely to us, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, all that is necessary for every one to believe and do, in order to obtain a personal interest in the common salvation.

4. They who preach or write of the common salvation, should give all diligence to do it well: they should not allow themselves to offer to God or his people that which cost them nothing, or next to nothing; little or no pains or thought, 2 Sam. 24. 24. This were to treat God irreverently, and man unjustly.

The apostle (though inspired) gave all diligence to write of the common salvation. What then will become of those, who (though uninspired) give no diligence, or next to none, but say to the people, even in the name of God, quickly in buccum venerit—what comes next; who, so that they use scripture-words, care not how they interpret or apply them? Those who speak of sacred things, ought always to speak of them with the greatest reverence, care, and diligence.

5. They who have received the doctrine of this common salvation, must contend earnestly for it.

Earnestly, not furiously. They who strive for the Christian faith, or in the Christian course, must strive lawfully, or they lose their labour, and run great hazard of losing their crown, 2 Tim. 2. 5. The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, Jam. 1. 20. Lying for the truth is bad, and scolding for it is not much better. Observe, They who have received the truth, must contend for it. But how? As the apostles did; by suffering patiently and courageously for it, not by making others suffer if they will not presently embrace every notion that we are pleased (prayed or unprovoked) to call faith, or faithfulness. We must not suffer ourselves to be robbed of any essential article of Christian faith, by the cunning, craftiness, or specicious plausible pretences of any who lie in wait to deceive, Eph. 4. 14. The apostle Paul tells us, he preached the gospel (mind it was the gospel) with much contention, (1 Thess. 2. 2.) that is, (as I understand it,) with great earnestness, with a hearty zeal, and a great concern for the success of what he preached. But if we will understand contention in the common acceptation of the word, we must impartially consider with whom the aforesaid contended, and how; the enlarging on which would not be proper for this place.

We have here the occasion the apostle had to write to this purpose; as evil manners give rise to good laws, so dangerous errors often give just occasion to the proper defence of important truths.

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Here observe, 1. Ungodly men are the great enemies of the faith of Christ, and the peace of the church. They who deny or corrupt the one, and disturb the other, are here expressly styled ungodly men. We might have truth with peace, (a most desirable thing,) were there none (ministers or private Christians) in our particular churches and congregations but truly godly men—a blessing scarcely to be looked or hoped for on this side heaven. Ungodly men raise scruples, start questions, cause divisions, widen breaches, merely to advance and promote their own selfish, ambitious, and covetous ends. This has been the plague of the church in all past ages, and I am afraid no age is, or will be, wholly free from such men and such practises as long as time shall last.

The late excellent Mr. Henry's piours and charitable note on this passage (and I wish it were duly laid to heart by all of us who yet survive,) is, that nothing can cut us off from the church, but that which cuts us off from Christ; namely, reneging infidelity and ungodliness.

We must (as he goes on excellently) abhor the thought of branding particular parties; I add, or persons, with this character; especially of doing it without the least proof, or, as it too often happens, the least shadow of it.

Those are ungodly men who live without God in the world, who have no regard to God and conscience. They (as the good man goes on) are to be dreadful, and consequently to be avoided, not only who are wicked by sins of commission, but also who are ungodly by sins of omission; who, for example, restrain prayer before God, who dare not reprove a rich man, when it is the duty of their place so to do, for fear they lose his favour, and the advantage they profit themselves thereby from, who do the work of the Lord negligently, &c.

2. They are the worst of ungodly men, who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, who take encouragement to sin more boldly, because the grace of God has abounded, and still abounds, so wonderfully; who are hardened in their impieties by the extent and fulness of gospel-grace, the design of which is to reduce men from sin, and bring them under God. Thus therefore do we wanton under so great grace, and turn it into an occasion of working all uncleanness with greediness, and hardening ourselves in such a course by that very grace which is the last and most forcible means to reclaim us from it, to render ourselves the vilest, the worst, and most hopeless of sinners.

3. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, do in effect deny the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, (as Mr. Henry well ex presses it,) they deny both natural and revealed religion.

They, as he justly goes on, strike at the foundation of natural religion, for they deny the only Lord God; and they overturn all the frame of revealed religion, for they deny the Lord Jesus Christ. Now this great design in establishing revealed religion in the world, was, to bring us into God.

Note, They who deny our Lord Jesus Christ, do in effect deny the only Lord God. To deny revealed religion is virtually to overcome natural religion, for they stand or fall together, and they naturally yield light and force to each other. Would to God our modern deists, who live in the midst of gospel-light, would seriously consider this, and cautiously, diligently, and steadily examine the thing that hinders their receiving the gospel, while they profess themselves fully persuaded of all the principles and duties of natural religion! Never two tallies answered more exactly to each other than these do, so that it seems absurd to receive the one and reject the other. One would think it were the fairer way to receive both, or reject both; though perhaps the more plausible method, especially in this age, is to act their parts de diversis.

4. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, are ordained unto condemnation; so Mr. Henry, and, no doubt, it is a great truth. They, as he speaks, sin against the last, the greatest, and most perfect remedy; and so are without excuse. They who thus sin, must needs die of their wounds, of their disease; are of old ordained to this condemnation, whatever that expression means. But what if our translators had thought fit to have rendered the word in the original, (which I shall not trouble the English reader with,) of old fore-written of, as persons who would through their own sin and folly become the proper subjects of this condemnation, where had the harm been? Plain Christians had not been troubled with dark, doubtful, and perplexing thoughts about reprobation, which the strongest heads cannot enter far into, can indeed bear but little of, without much loss and damage. Is it not enough that early notice was given by inspired writers, that such seducers and wicked men should arise in later times, and that every one, being forewarned, should be fore-armed against them!

5. We ought to contend earnestly for the faith, in opposition to those who would corrupt or deprave it; such as are crept in unawares; a wretched character, to be sure, but often very ill applied by weak and ignorant people, and even by those who themselves creep in unawares, who think their profession should stand for a law to all their followers and admirers. Surely faithful, humble ministers are helpers of their people's joy, peace, and comfort; not lords of their faith! Whoever attempt to corrupt the faith, we ought to contend earnestly against them. The more busy and crafty the instruments and agents of Satan are, to rob us of the truth, the more solicitous should we be to hold it fast; as if even always provided we be very sure that we fasten no wrong or injurious characters on persons, parties, or sent ments. The fair warning which the apostle, in Christ's name, gives to those, who having professed his holy religion, do afterwards desert and prove false to it.

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. 6. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, who were not pleased with the posts and stations the supreme Monarch of the universe had assigned and allotted to them, but thought (like discontented ministers in our age, I might say in every age) they deserved better; they would, with the title of ministers, be sovereigns, and in effect their Sovereign should be their minister—do all, and only, what they would have him; thus was arried to the main and immediate cause or occasion of their fall.

Thus they quitted their post, and rebelled against God, their Creator and sovereign Lord; but God did not spare them; (high and great as they were,) he would not truckle to them, he threw them off, as a wise and good prince will a selfish and deceitful minister; and the great, the all-wise God, could not be ignorant, as the wise and best of earthly princes often are, what designs they were getting at.

After all, what became of them? They thought to have dared and outfaced Omnipotence itself; but God was too hard for them, he cast them down to hell. They who would not be servants to their Maker and his will in their first state, were made captives to his justice, and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness. Here see what the condition of fallen angels is; it is a state of darkness, and under the divine power and justice, bound over to the judgment of the great day; they are under darkness, who were once angels of light; so horribly in the dark are they, that they continue to fight against God, as if there were yet some small hope at least left them of prevailing and overcoming in the conflict. Dire infatuation! Light and liberty concur, chains and darkness how well do they agree and suit each other.

The devils, once angels in the best sense, are reserved, &c.

Observe, There is, undoubtedly there is, a judgment to come; the fallen angels are reserved to the judgment of the great day; and shall fallen men escape it? Surely no. Let every reader consider this in due time.

Their chains are called everlasting, because it is impossible they should ever break loose from them, or make an escape; they are held fast and sure under them; the decree, the justice, the wrath of God, are the very chains under which fallen angels are held so fast. Hear and fear, O sinful mortals of mankind!

3. The apostle here calls to our remembrance the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 7. Even as, &c. It is in allusion to the destruction of Pentapolis, or the five cities, that the mention of the plagues are set forth by a lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; they were guilty of abominable wickedness, not to be named or thought on but with the utmost abhorrence and detestation; their ruin is a particular warning to all people to take heed of, and fly from, fleshly lusts that war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11.

These lusts consumed the Sodomites with fire from heaven, and they are now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; therefore take heed, imitate not their sins, lest the same plagues overtake you as did them. God is the same holy, just, pure Being now as then; and can the beastly pleasures of a moment make amends for your suffering the vengeance of eternal fire? Stand in awe, therefore, and sin not,” Ps. 4. 4.

The apostle next exhibits a charge against deceived men who were now seducing the disciples of Christ from the profession and practice of his holy religion.

8. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. 9. Yet Michael the archangel, when, contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. 10. But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. 11. Woe unto them! For they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. 12. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

He calls them filthy dreamers, forasmuch as delusion is a dream, and the beginning of, and inlet to, all manner of filthiness.

Note, Sin is filthiness: it renders men odious and vile in the sight of the most holy God, and makes them (sooner or later, as penitent, or as punished to extremity, and without resource) vile in their own eyes, and in a while they become vile in the eyes of all about them.

These filthy dreamers dream themselves into a fool's paradise on earth, and into a real hell at last: Let their character, course, and end, be our seasonable and sufficient warning; like sins will produce like punishments and miscarriages.

1. They defile the flesh: the flesh or body is the immediate seat, and often the irritation occasion, of many horrid pollutions; yet these, though done in and against the body, do greatly defile and grievously maim and wound the soul; fleshly lusts do war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11. and in 2 Cor. 7. 1. We read of filthiness of flesh and spirit, each of which, though of different kinds, defiles the whole man.

2. They despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities; are of a disturbed mind and a scoundrel spirit; forgetting that the powers that be, are ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. God requires us to speak evil of no man; (Tit. 3. 2.) but it is a great aggravation of the sin of evil-speaking, when we say what is pointed at magistrates, men whom God has set in authority over us, by blaspheming or speaking evil of whom, we blaspheme God himself.

3. Or, we see how contemptuous they are with respect to religion, as some do, which ought to have the dominion in this lower world; such evil speakers despise the dominion of conscience, make a jest of it, and would banish it out of the world; and for the word of God, the rule of conscience, they despise that; the revelations of the divine will go for little with them; they are a rule of faith and manners, but not till they have explained them, and imposed their sense of them upon all about them.

Or, as others account for the sense of this passage, the people of God, truly and specially so, are the dignities here spoken of or referred to, according to that of the Psalmist, (Psa. 105. 15.) Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

They speak evil of; &c. Religion and its serious professors have been always and everywhere evil spoken of; though there is nothing in religion but what is very good, and deserves our highest regards, both as it is the perfection of our natures, and subservient to our truest and highest interests; yet this sect, as its enemies are pleased to call it, is every where spoken against, Acts 28. 22.

On this occasion the apostle brings in Michael the archangel.

Interpreters are at a loss what is here meant by the body of Moses. Some think, that the Devil contended that Moses might have a public and honourable funeral, that the place where he was interred might be generally known; hoping thereby to draw the Jews, so naturally prone thereto, to a new and fresh instance of idolatry. Dr. Scott thinks that the body of Moses we are to understand the Jewish church, whose defense the Devil was to contend for, as the Christian church is called the body of Christ in the New-Testament style. Others bring other interpretations, which I will not here trouble the reader with.

Though this contest was mighty eager and earnest, and Michael was victorious in the issue, yet he would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil himself; he knew a good cause needed no such weapons to be employed in its defense; it is said, He durst not bring, &c. Why durst he not? Not that he was afraid of the Devil, but he believed God would be offended, if, in such a dispute, he went that way to work; he thought it below him to engage in a trial of skill with the great enemy of God and man, which of them should out-scold or out-rail the other. A memorandum, says good Mr. Henry, to all disputants, never to bring railing accusations into their disputes. Truth needs no supports from falsehood or scurrility. Some say, Michael would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil, as knowing before that he would be too hard for him at that weapon, (Mr. Henry.) Some think the apostle refers here to the remarkable passage we have, Numb. 20. 7-14. Satan would have represented Moses under disadvantageous colours, which he, good man, had at that time, and upon that occasion, given but too much handle for. Now Michael, according to this account, stands up in defence of Moses, and, in the zeal of an upright and bold spirit, says to Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. He would not stand disputing with the Devil, nor enter into a particular debate about the merits of that special cause; he knew Moses was his fellow-servant, a favourite of God, and he would not patiently suffer him to be insulted, much less to be baulked of the victory. And so just indignation cries out, The Lord rebuke thee: like that of our Lord himself, (Matt. 4. 10.) Get thee hence, Satan. Moses was a dignity, a magistrate, one beloved and preferred by the great God; and the archangel thought it insufferable that such a one should be so treated by a vile apostate spirit, of how high an order soever. So the lesson hence is, That we ought to stand up in defence of those whom God owns, as severe severer Satan, as the use of such "instruments are in their censures of them and their conduct." They who censure (in particular) upright magistrates, upon every slip in their behaviour, may expect to hear, The Lord rebuke thee; and divine rebukes are harder to be borne than careless sinners now think for.

V. 10. But these speak evil of the things which they know not, &c. They who speak evil of it, without goodness, without knowledge, without judgment, which they know not; for if they had known them, they would have spoken well of them; for nothing but good and excellent can be truly said of religion; and it is sad that any thing different or opposite should ever be justly said of any of its professors; a religious life is the most safe, happy, comfortable, and honourable life that is. Observe, Men are most apt to speak evil of those person and things that they know least. How many had never suffered by slanderous tongues, if they had been better known! On the other hand, retirement screens some even from just censure.

But what they know naturally, &c. It is hard, if not impossible, to find any obstruse enemies to the Christian religion, who do not in their stated course live in open or secret contradiction to the very principles of natural religion; this many think hard and uncharitable; but I am afraid it will appear too true to the book of the text. The great righteous judgment of God. The apostle likens such to brute beasts, though they often think and boast themselves, if not the wisest, yet at least the wittiest, part of mankind.

In those things they corrupt themselves; that is, in the plainest and most natural and necessary things; which lie most open and obvious to natural reason and conscience; even in those things they were right, Database, and delie themselves: the fault, whatever it is, lies not in their understandings or apprehensions, but in their depraved wills, and disorderly appetites and affections; they could and might have acted better, but then they must have offered violence to those vile affections which they obstinately chose rather to gratify than mortify.

V. 11. He represents them as followers of Cain, and of the antichristian parties; of a profane people, who thought little, and perhaps believed not much, of God or a future world; as greedy and covetous, who, so they could but gain present worldly advantages, cared not what came next; rebels to God and man, who, like Core, ran into attempts in which they must assuredly perish, as he did.

V. 12. These are spots in your feast of charity— The Captain, or love-feasts, so much spoken of by the ancients; they were happened by whatever means or mischief to be admitted among them, but were spots in them, defiled and defiling. Observe, It is a great reproach, though unjust and incidental, to religion, when they who profess it, and join in the most solemn institution of it, are in heart and life unsuitable, and even contrary to it.

These are spots. Yet how common in all Christian societies here on earth, the very best not excepted? Our love-feasts not the best of things?

The Lord remedied it in his due time and way; not in men's blind and rigorous way of plucking up the wheat with the tares; but in the heaven we are waiting, hoping, and preparing for, there is none of this mad work, there are none of these disorderly doings.

When they feast with you, they find themselves without fear. Arrant gluttony, no doubt, a most licentious licentiousness; as mingled only the gratifying of their appetites with the daintiness and plenty of their fare; they had no regard to Solomon's caution, Prov. 23. 2.

Mr. Henry's note on this passage, is, in common eating and drinking; a holy fear is necessary, much more in feasting; though we may sometimes be more easily and insensibly overcome at a common meal than at a feast; for, in the case supposed, we are less known, and speeded; and, at least to some persons, the plenty of a feast is its own antidote, as to others it may prove a dangerous snare.

Clouds they are without water; which promise rain in time of drought, but perform nothing of what they promise. Such is the case of formal professors, who, at first setting out, promise much, like early-blooming trees in a forward spring; but, in course, bring forth little or no fruit.

Carried about with winds; light and empty, easily driven about this way or that, as the wind happens to sit; such are empty, ungrounded professors, an easy prey to every seducer. It is amazing to hear many talk so confidently of so many things of which they know little or nothing, and yet have not the wisdom and humility to discern and be sensible how little they know. How happy would our world be, if men could know more, or practically knew how little they know!

Trees whose fruit withereth, &c. Trees are for, they are planted in the Lord's vineyard, yet fruitless ones.

Observe, They, whose fruit withereth, may be justly said to be without fruit. It is a sad thing when men seem to begin in the Spirit, and end in flesh, in which at first is almost as common a case as it is an awful one.

The text speaks of such, as being twice dead; one would think to be once dead were enough; we none of us, till grace renew us to a higher degree than ordinary, love to think of dying once, though this is appointed for us all. What then is the meaning of this being twice dead? Take Mr. Henry's answer.

11. In such natural, fallen, lapsed state; but they seem as to recover, and, as a man in a swoon, to be brought to life again, when they took upon them the profession of the Christian religion; but now they are dead again by the evident proofs they have given of their hypocrisy; whatever they seemed, they had nothing truly vital in them.

Plucked up by the roots; as we commonly serve dead trees, to show the likelihood of which we expect no more fruit; they are dead, dead, dead; whyumber the ground? Away with them to the fire.

V. 13. Raging waves of the sea; boisterous, noisy, and clamorous; full of talk and turbulency, but with little (if any) sense or meaning;

Foaming out their own shame; creating much unceremoniousness to men of better sense and calmer tempers, which yet will in the end turn to their own greater shame and just reproach. The Psalmist's prayer ought always to be that of every honest and good man; Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; (Ps. 23. 21.) and if it will not, let us be unpreserved. If honestly signify little now, knavery will signify much less, and that in a very little while.

Raging waves are a terror to sailing passengers, but when they are got to port, the waves are forgotten, as if no longer in being; their noise and terror are past, and never to return.

Wandering stars; planets that are erratic in their motions, keep not that steady, regular course which the fixed ones do, but shift their stations, that one has sometimes much ado to know where to find them. This allusion carries in it a lively emblem of false teachers, who are sometimes here and sometimes there, so that one knows not where nor how to fix them. In the main things at least, one would think something should be fixed and steady; and this might be without infallibility, or any pretensions to it in us poor mortals. In religion and politics, the great subjects of present debate, surely there are certain stamina in which wise and good, honest and disinterested men might agree, without throwing the populace into the utmost anguish and distress of mind, or blowing up their passions into rage and fury without making them know what they say, or whereby they affirm.

To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. False teachers are to expect the worst of punishments in this and a future world; not every one who teaches by mistake any thing that is not exactly true; (for who then, in any public assembly, durst open a Bible to teach others, unless he thought himself equal or superior to the angels of God in heaven?) but every one who prevaricates, dissembles, would lead others into by-paths and side-ways, that he may have opportunity to make a gain or prey of them, or (in the apostle's phrase) to make merchandise of them, 2 Pet. 2. 3. But enough of this. As for the blackness of darkness for ever, I shall only say, that this terrible expression, with all the horror it imports, belongs to false teachers, truly, not slanderously so called, who corrupt the word of God, and betray the souls of men. If this will not make both ministers and people cautious, I know not what will.

The doom of this wicked people is declared.

14. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15. To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. 16. These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men’s persons in admiration because of advantage.

This prophecy of Enoch we have no mention made of in any other part or place of scripture; yet now it is scripture, that there was such prophecy; one plain text of scripture is proof enough of any one point that we are required to believe, especially when relating to a matter of fact; but in matters of faith, necessary saving faith, God has not seen fit, blessed be his holy name he has not, to try us far; there is no fundamental of Christian religion, truly so called, which is not inculcated over and over in the New Testament; by which we may know what the Holy Ghost does, and consequently we ought, to lay the greatest stress upon. Some say that this prophecy of Enoch was preserved by tradition in the Jewish church; others, that the apostle Jude was immediately inspired with the notice of it: be that how it will, it is certain that there was such a prophecy of ancient date, of long standing, and universally received in the Old-Testament church; and it is a main point of our New-Testament creed.

Observe, Christ’s coming to judgment was prophesied of as early as the middle of the patriarchal age, and was therefore even then a received and acknowledged truth.

The Lord cometh with his holy myriads; including both angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. What a glorious time will that be, when Christ shall come with ten thousand of these! And we are told for what great and awful ends and purposes he will come so accompanied and attended, namely, to execute judgment upon all.

Observe, It was spoken of then, so long ago, as a thing just at hand; ‘‘Behold, the Lord cometh; he is just a coming, he will be upon you before you are aware, and, unless you be very cautious and diligent, before you are ready to meet him comfortably. He cometh, 1. To execute judgment upon the wicked. 2. To convince them.

Observe, Christ will condemn none without precedent, trial, and conviction; such conviction as shall at least silence even themselves; they shall have no excuse or apology to make, that they either can or dare then stand by; then every mouth shall be stopped, the Judge and his sentence shall be (by all the impartial, approved and applauded, and even the guilty condemned criminals shall be speechless, though at present they want not bold and specious pleas, which they vent with all assurance and confidence; and yet it is sure that the mock-trials of prisoners in the jail among themselves, and the real trial at the bar before the proper judge, soon appear to be very different things.

I cannot pass this fifteenth verse without taking notice how often, and how emphatically, the word ungodly is repeated in it; no less than four times; ungodly men, ungodly sinners, ungodly deeds, and, as to the manner, ungodly committed. Godly or ungodly signifies little with men now-a-days, unless it be to scoff at and deride even the very expressions; but it is not so in the language of the Holy Ghost.

Observe, Omissions, as well as commissions, must be accounted for in the day of judgment.

Observe further, Hard speeches of one another, especially if ill-grounded, will most certainly come into account at the judgment of the great day. Let us all take care in time. "If thou," says one of our good old puritans, "smite (a miscalled heretic, or) a schismatic, and God find a real saint bleeding, look thou to it, how thou wilt answer it." It may be too late to say before the angel, that it was an error, Ecc. 5. 6. I only here allude to that expression of the divinely inspired writer.

In the sixteenth verse the apostle enlarges further on the character of these evil men and seducers; they are murmurers, complainers, &c.

Observe, A murmuring complaining temper, indulging an ungracious, laid and sour, self-righteous, evil character; such are very weak at least, and for the most part very wicked; they murmur against God and his providence, against men and their conduct; they are angry at every thing that happens, and never pleased with their own state and condition in the world, as not thinking it good enough for them.

Such walk after their own lusts; their will, their appetite, their fancy, are their only rule and law. Mr. Henry’s note here, is, That they who please their sinful appetites, are most prone to yield to their ungovernable passions.

Lastly, The apostle here gives exhortation to those to whom he wrote, which, with the doxology in the two last verses, concludes the epistle.

17. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; 18. How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. 19. These are they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. 20. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, 21. Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. 22. And of some have compassion, making a difference: 23. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, 25. To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.
foretold by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, and consequently, the accomplishment of it in the event, is a confirmation of your faith, instead of being in the least an occasion of shaking and unsettling you therein."

1. They who would persuade, must make it evident that they sincerely love those whom they would persuade; "Bitter words and hard usage never did, nor ever will convince, much less persuade any body."

2. The words which inspired persons have spoken (on which a duly remembered and reflected on, are the best preventative against dangerous errors; this will always be so, till men have learnt to speak better than God himself.

3. We ought not to be offended if errors and persecutions arise and prevail in the Christian church; this was foretold, and therefore we should not think worse of Christ's person, doctrine, or cross, when we see it fulfilled. See 1 Tim. 4. 1. and 2 Tim. 3. 1. and 2 Pet. 3. 3. We must not think it strange, but comfort ourselves with this, that (in the midst of all this confusion) Christ will maintain his church, and make good his promise, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Matt. 16. 18.

4. The more religion is ridiculed and persecuted, the faster hold we should take and keep of it; being fore-warned, we should shew that we are fore-arm'd; under such trials we should stand firm, and not be tossed in the midst of the sea. Thuc. V. 19. These are they who separate, &c. Observe, 1. Sensualists are the worst separatists; they separate themselves from God, and Christ, and his church, to the Devil, the world, and the flesh, by their ungodly courses and vicious practices; and that is a great deal worse than separation from any particular branch of the visible church on account of opinions, or modes and circumstances of external government or worship; though many can patiently hear with the former, while they are plentifully and almost perpetually railing at the latter; as if no sin were damnable, but what they are pleased to call schism. 2. Sensual men have not the Spirit, that is, of God and Christ, the Spirit of holiness, which whoever has not, is none of Christ's, does not belong to him. Rom. 8. 9.

5. The worse others are, the better should we endeavour and approve ourselves to be; the more busy Satan and his instruments are to pervert others in judgment or practice, the more tenacious should we be of sound doctrine and a good conversation, holding fast the faithful word, as we have been (divinely) taught, holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience, Tit. 1. 9. 1 Tim. 3. 9.

Observe, The way to hold fast our profession, is, to hold on in it; having laid our foundation well in a sound faith, and a sincere upright heart, we must build upon it, make further progress continually; and we should take care with what materials we carry on our building, namely, gold, silver, precious stones, not wood, hay, stubble, 1 Cor. 3. 12. Right principles and a regular conversation will stand the test even of the fiercest trial; but whatever we mix of baser alloy, though we be in the main sincere, we shall suffer loss by it; and though our persons be saved, all that part of our work shall be consumed; and if we ourselves escape, it will be with great danger and difficulty, as from a house on fire on every side. Praying in the Holy Ghost. Observe, 1. Prayer is the nurse of faith, the way to build up ourselves in it; when in mind. 2. Prayer, faith, is, to continue instant in prayer, Rom. 12. 12.

2. Our prayers are then most likely to prevail, when we pray in the Holy Ghost, under his guidance and influence, according to the rule of his word, with faith, fervency, and constant persevering importunity; this is praying in the Holy Ghost, whether it be done by, or without a set prescribed form.

V. 21. Keep yourselves, &c. 1. "Keep up the grace of love to God in its lively vigorous acts and exercises in your souls." 2. "Take heed of throwing yourselves out of the love of God to you, or its delightful, cheering, strengthening manifestations; keep yourselves in the way of God, if you would continue in his love.

Looking for the mercy, &c. 1. Eternal life is to be booked up only through mercy; mercy is our only plea, not merit; or if merit, not our own, but another's, who has merited for us what otherwise we could have laid no claim to, nor have entertained any well-grounded hope of.

2. It is said, not only through the mercy of God as our Creator, but through the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ as Redeemer; all who come to heaven, must come therewith through our Lord Jesus Christ; for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved, but that of the Lord Jesus only, Acts 4. 12. compared with v. 10.

3. A believing expectation of eternal life will arm us against the snares of sin; (2 Pet. 3. 14.) a lively faith of the blessed hope will help us to mortify our cursed lusts.

22. And of some have compassion, &c. Observe, 1. We ought to do all we can to rescue others out of the snare of the Devil, that they may be saved from (or recovered, when entangled therein, out of) dangerous errors, or pernicious practices. We are not only (under God) our own keepers, but every man ought to be (as much as in him lies) his brother's keeper; none but a wicked Cain will contradict this, Gen. 4. 9. We must watch over one another, faith and practice being duly directed toward them, not implacable, not averse to reconciliation with them, or admitting them to the friendship they formerly had with us, when they give evident or even strongly hopeful tokens of a sincere repentance; if God has forgiven them, why should not we? We infinitely more need his forgiveness than they do, or can do ours; though perhaps neither they nor we are justly or sufficiently sensible of this.

2. Others save with fear, urging upon them the terrors of the Lord; "Endeavour to frighten them out of their sins; preach hell and damnation to them;" so good Mr. Henry. But what if prudence and caution in administering even the most just and severe reproofs, be what are primarily and chiefly here intimidated; (I do but offer it for consideration;) as if he had said, "Fear lest you frustrate your own good intentions and honest designs by rash and imprudent management, that you do not harden, instead of reclaiming, even where greater degrees of severity are requisite, than in the immediately foregoing instance." We are often apt to over-do, when we are sure we mean honestly, and think we are right in the main; yet the very worst are not necessarily or rashly, or to extremity, to be provoked; lest they be thereby further hardened and set at defiance.

Hating even the garment, &c. that is, keeping yourselves at the utmost distance from what is or appears evil, and designing and endeavouring that others may do so too; avoid, as Mr. Henry speaks, all that leads to sin, or that looks like sin, 1 Thess. 5. 22.

Lastly, The apostle concludes this epistle with solemn ascription of glory to the great God. Note, Whatever is the subject or argument we have been treating of, ascribing glory to God is fittest for us to conclude with, v. 24, 25.

Note further, God is able, and he is as willing as able, to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory; not as those who have never been faulty, (for what has once been done can never be rendered undone, even by Omnipotence itself, for that implies a contradiction,) but as those whose faults shall not be imputed to their ruin, which, but for God’s mercy and a Saviour’s merits, they might most justly have been.

Before the presence of his glory. Observe, 1. The glory of the Lord will shortly be present; we now look upon it as distant, and too many look upon it as uncertain, but it will come, and it will be manifest and apparent, every eye shall see him, Rev. 1. 7. This is now the object of our faith, but hereafter, (and surely it cannot now be long,) it will be the object of our sense; whom we now believe in, him we shall shortly see, to our unspeakable joy and comfort, or inexpressible terror and consternation. See 1 Pet. 1. 8.

Observe, 2. All real sincere believers shall be presented, at the Lord Redeemer’s appearance and coming, by him their glorious Head, to the Father, in order to his approbation, acceptance, and reward; they were given him of the Father, and of all that were so given him he has lost none, nor will lose any one, not an individual, a single soul, but will present them all perfectly holy and happy, when he shall surrender his mediatorial kingdom to his God, and our God; his Father, and our Father, John 6. 39. with ch. 17. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 24.

Observe, 3. When believers shall be presented faultless, it will be with exceeding joy. Alas! now our faults fill us with fears, doubts, and sorrows; but be of good cheer; if we are sincere, we shall be, our dear Redeemer has undertaken for it, we shall be presented faultless; where there is no sin, there will be no sorrow; where there is the perfection of holiness, there will be the perfection of joy. Surely, the God who can and will do all this, is worthy to have glory, majesty, dominion, and power, ascribed to him, both now and for ever! And to this we may well, with the apostle, affix our hearty Amen.

AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE

Completed by Mr. William Tong.

IT ought to be no prejudice to the credit and authority of this book, that it has been rejected by men of corrupt minds, such as Cerdon and Marcion, and doubted of by men of a better character; for that has been the lot of other parts of holy writ, and of the divine Author of the scripture himself. The image and superscription of this book are truly sacred and divine, and the matter of it agreeable with other prophetical books, particularly Ezekiel and Daniel; the church of God has generally received it, and found good counsel and great comfort in it.

From the beginning, the church of God has been blessed with prophecy; that glorious prediction of breaking the serpent’s head, was the stay and support of the patriarchal age; and the many prophecies there were concerning the Messiah to come, were the gospel of the Old Testament. Christ himself prophesied of the destruction of Jerusalem; and about the time in which that was accomplished, he intrusted the apostle John with this book of revelation, to deliver it to the church as a prediction of the most important events that should happen to it; to the end of time, for the support of the faith of his people, and the direction of their hope. It is called the Revelation, because God therein discovers those things which could never have been sifted out by the reasonings of human understanding; those deep things of God, which no man knows, but the Spirit of God, and those to whom he reveals them.
This chapter is a general preface to the whole book, and contains, I. An inscription, declaring the original and the design of it, v. 1. II. The apostolical benediction pronounced on all those who shall pay a due regard to the contents of this book, v. 3. 8. III. A glorious vision or appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ to the apostle John, when he delivered to him this revelation; v. 9, to the end of the chapter.

THE revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: 2. Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

Here we have,

1. What we may call the pedigree of this book.
1. It is the revelation of Jesus Christ; the whole Bible is so; for all revelation comes through Christ, and all centres in him; and especially in these last days God has spoken to us by his Son, and concerning his Son. Christ, as the King of his church, has been pleased thus far to let his church know by what rules and methods he will proceed in his government of the church, as the Prophet of the church, he has made known to us the things that shall be hereafter.
2. It is a revelation which God gave unto Christ. Though Christ is himself God, and, as such, has light and life in himself, yet, as he sustains the office of Mediator between God and man, he receives his instructions from the Father; the human nature of Christ, though endowed with the greatest sagacity, judgment, and penetration, could not, in a way of reason, discover these great events, which, not being produced by natural causes, but wholly depending upon the will of God, could be the object only of divine prescience, and must come to a created mind only by revelation. Our Lord Jesus is the great Trustee of divine revelation; it is to him that we owe the knowledge we have of what we are to expect from God, and what he expects from us.

3. It was signified unto John, who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. It is observable that the historical books of the Old Testament have not always the name of the historian prefixed to them, as in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles; but in the prophetic books the name is always prefixed, as Isaiah, Jeremiah, &c. So in the New Testament, though John did not prefix his name to his first epistle, yet he does to this prophecy, as ready to vouch for and answer for the truth of it; and he gives us not only his name, but his office. He was one who bare record of the word of God in general, and of the testimony of Jesus in particular, and of all things that he saw; he was an eye-witness, and he concealed nothing that he saw. Nothing recorded in this revelation was his own invention or imagination; it was not he that wrote the word of God, and the testimony of Jesus; and as he added nothing to it, so he kept back no part of the counsels of God.

3. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, the words of the prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4. John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are before his throne; 5. And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, 6. And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen. 8. I am Alpha Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

We have here an apostolical benediction on those who should give a due regard to this divine revelation; and this benediction is given more generally and more especially.

I. More generally, to all who either read or hear the words of this book. This blessing seems to be pronounced with a design to encourage us to study this book, and not be weary of looking into it upon the account of the obscurity of many things in it; it will repay the labour of the careful and attentive reader. Observe, 1. It is a blessed privilege to enjoy the oracles of God. This was one of the principal advantages the Jews had above the Gentiles. 2. It is a blessed thing to study the scriptures; the name of God, of the whole Trinity; for this is many, and more. It is a privilege not only to read the scriptures ourselves, but to hear them read by others, who are qualified to give us the sense of what they read, and to lead us into an understanding of them. 4. It is not sufficient to our blessedness, that we read and hear the scriptures, but we must keep the things that are written; we must keep them in our memories, in our minds, in our affections, and in practice, and we shall derive benefit therefrom when we come to the accomplishment of the scriptures, the greater regard we shall give to them. The time is at hand, and we should be so much the more attentive as we see the day approaching.

II. The apostolical benediction is pronounced more especially and particularly to the seven Asian churches, v. 4. These seven churches are named in the Anthology of the Apocalypse, and messages sent to each of them respectively in the chapters following. The apostolical blessing is more expressly directed to these, because they were nearest to him, who was now in the isle of Patmos, and perhaps he had the peculiar care of them, and superintendence over them, not excluding any of the rest of the apostles, if any of them were now living. Here observe,
1. What the blessing is, which he pronounces on the church of each place. He says, Be a peace, holiness and comfort; grace, that is, the good-will of God towards us, and his good work in us; and peace, that is, the sweet evidence and assurance of this grace. There can be no true peace where there is not true grace; and where grace goes before, peace will follow.

2. From whence this blessing is to come. In whose name does the apostle bless the churches? In the Name of God, of the whole Trinity; for this is an act of adoration, and God only is the proper Object of it; his ministers must bless the people in no name but his alone. And here,

(1.) The Father is first named; God the Father, which may be taken either essentially, for God as God, or personally, for the first Person in the ever blessed Trinity; the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as if he saw that day, and to him they are holy, and unchangeable, the same to the Old Testament church which was, and to the New Testament church, which is, and who will be the same to the church triumphant which is to come.

(2.) The Holy Spirit, called the seven spirits, not seven in number, or in nature, but the infinite perfected Spirit of God, in which there is a diversity of gifts and operations. He is before the Throne; for as God made, so he governs, all things by his Spirit.

(3.) The Lord Jesus Christ. He mentions him after the Spirit, because he intended to enlarge more upon the person of Christ, as God manifested in the flesh, whom he had seen dwelling on earth before, and now saw again in a glorious form. Observe the particular account we have here of Christ, v. 5.

[1.] He is the firstbegotten; he was, from eternity a Witness to all the counsels of God, (John 11. 18.) and he was in time a faithful Witness to the revealed will of God, who has now spoken to us by his Son; upon his testimony we may safely depend, for he is a faithful Witness, cannot be deceived, and cannot deceive us.

[2.] He is the First-begotten or First-born, from the dead, of the first Parent and Head of the resurrection, the only one who raised God himself by his power, and who will by the same power raise his people from their graves to everlasting honour; for he has begotten them again to a lively hope by his resurrection from the dead.

[3.] He is the Prince of the kings of the earth; from him they have their authority; by him their power is limited, and their wrath restrained; by him their counsels are accomplished; for him they are accountable. This is good news to the church, and it is good evidence of the Godhead of Christ, who is King of kings and Lord of lords.

[4.] He is the great Friend of his church and people; one who has done great things for them, and this out of pure disinterested affection; he has loved them, and, in pursuance of that everlasting love, he has, First, Washed them from their sins in his own blood: for the soul, a stain of guilt and of pollution; nothing can out this stain but the blood of Christ; and rather than it should not be washed out, Christ was willing to shed his own blood, to purchase pardon and purity for them. Secondly, He has made them kings and priests to God and his Father. Having justified and sanctified them, he makes them kings to his Father; that is, in his Father's account, with his counsel, his time, his power, etc. As kings, they overcome the world, mortify sin, govern their spirits, conquer Satan, have power and prevalency with God in prayer, and shall judge the world. He hath made them priests; given them access to God, enabled them to enter into the holiest, and to offer spiritual and acceptable sacrifices; he has given them an action suitable to this character; and for these high honours and favours they are bound to acquire to himself the most affectionate gratitude.

[5.] He will be the Judge of the world; (v. 7.)
Behold, he cometh, and every eye shall see him.
This book, the Revelation, begins and ends with a prediction of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We should set ourselves to meditate frequently upon the second coming of Christ, and keep it in the eye of our faith and expectation. John speaks of the time, as if he saw that day; “Behold, he cometh;” as sure as if you beheld him with your eyes.
He cometh with clouds, which are his chariot and pal-ion; he will come publicly; every eye shall see him, the eye of his people, the eye of his enemies, every eye, your’s and mine.” He shall come, to the terror of those who pierced him and have not repented; and of all who have wounded and crucified him afresh by their apostasy from him; he shall come, to the astonishment of the pagan world. For he comes to take vengeance on those who know not God, as well as on those that obey not the gospel of Christ.

[6.] This account of Christ is ratified and confirmed by himself, v. 8. Here our Lord Jesus justly challenges the same honour and power that is ascribed to the Father, v. 4. He is the Beginning and the End; all things are from him and for him;
he is the Almighty; he is the same eternal and unchanged. One is the Lord, who has the power to blot out one character of this name of Christ, deserves to have his name blotted out of the book of life. Them that honour him, he will honour; but they who despise him, shall be lightly esteemed.
9. I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. 10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. 12. And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; 13. And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. 14. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; 15. And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. 16. And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. 17. And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last: 18. I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death. 19. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter; 20. The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

We are now come to that glorious vision which the apostle had of the Lord Jesus Christ, when he came to deliver this revelation to him. Where observe,

I. The account given of the person who was favoured with this vision. He describes himself,

1. By his present state and condition. He was the brother and companion of these churches in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Christ. He was, at this time, as the rest of true Christians were, a persecuted man, banished, and perhaps imprisoned, for his adherence to Christ. He was their brother, though an apostle; he seems to value himself upon his relation to the church, rather than his authority in it. Judas may be an apostle, but not a brother in the family of God; he was their companion. The children of God should choose communion and society with each other; he was their companion in tribulation. The persecuted servants of God do not suffer alone, the same trials are accomplished in others; he was their companion in patience, not only a sufferer with them in suffering circumstances, but in suffering graces. If we have the patience of the saints, we should not grudge to meet with their trials. He was their brother and companion in the patience of the kingdom of Christ; a sufferer for Christ's cause, for asserting his kingly power over the church of the world, and for adhering to it against all who would usurp upon it. By this account he gives of his present state, he acknowledges his engagements to sympathize with them, and to endeavor to give them counsel and comfort; and be speaks their more careful attention to what he had to say to them from Christ their common Lord.

2. By the place where he was when he was favoured with this vision. He was in the isle Patmos; he does not say who banished him thither; it becomes Christians to speak sparingly and modestly of their own sufferings. Patmos is said to be an island in the Egean sea, one of those called Cyclades, and was about thirty-five miles in compass; but under this confinement it was the apostle's comfort that he did not suffer as an evil-doer, but that it was for the testimony of Jesus, for bearing witness to Christ as the Immanuel, the Saviour. This was a cause worth suffering for; and the Spirit of glory and of God rested upon this persecuted apostle.

3. The day and time in which he had this vision; it was the Lord's day; the day of days, in which they are separated and set apart for himself, as the eucharist is called the Lord's Supper. Surely this can be no other than the Christian sabbath; the first day of the week, to be observed in remembrance of the resurrection of Christ. Let us who call him our Lord, honour him on his own day; the day which the Lord hath made, and in which we ought to rejoice. 4. The frame that his soul was in at this time; he saw in the Spirit what was in heaven; he was in the midst of the seven candlesticks, when he received the vision, but before he received it; he was in a serious, heavenly, spiritual frame, under the blessed gracious influences of the Spirit of God. God usually prepares the souls of his people for uncommon manifestations of himself, by the quickening, sanctifying influences of his good Spirit. Those who would enjoy communion with God on the Lord's day, must endeavour to abstract their thoughts and affections from flesh and fleshy things, and be wholly taken up with things of a spiritual nature.

II. The apostle gives an account of what he heard when thus in the Spirit. An alarm was given as with the sound of a trumpet, and then he heard a voice, the voice of Christ applying to himself the character before given, the First and the Last, and commanding the apostle to commit to writing the things that were now to be revealed to him, and to send it immediately to the seven Asian churches, whose names are mentioned. Thus our Lord Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, gave the apostle notice of his glorious appearance, as with the sound of a trumpet.

III. We have now an account of what he saw; he turned to see the voice, whose it was, and whence it came; and then a wonderful scene of vision opened itself to his view.

1. He saw a representation of the church under the emblem of seven golden candlesticks, as it is explained in the last verse of the chapter. The churches are compared to candlesticks, because they hold forth the light of the gospel to advantage; the churches are not candles, Christ only is our Light, and his gospel our lamp, but they receive their light from Christ and the gospel, and hold it forth to others; they are golden candlesticks, for they should be precious and pure, comparable to fine gold; not only the ministers, but the members of the churches ought to be such; their light should so shine before men, as to engage others to give glory to God.

2. He saw a representation of the Lord Jesus Christ in the midst of the golden candlesticks; for he has promised to be with his churches always to the end of the world, filling them with light, and life, and love, for he is the very animating, informing Soul of the church. And here we observe,

1. The glorious form in which Christ appeared in several particulars: [1.] He was clad with a garment down to the feet; a princely robe, denoting righteousness and honour. [2.] He was girt about with a golden girdle; the breast-plate of the High-Priest, on which the names of his people are engraved; he was ready girt to do all the work of a Redeemer. [3.] His head and hairs were white like wool or snow; he was the Ancient of days; his hoary head was no sign of decay, but it was indeed a crown of glory. His eyes were as the flame of fire, piercing and penetrating into the very hearts and reigns of men, scattering terrors among his adversaries. [5.] His feet were like unto fine burning brass; strong and steadfast, supporting his own interest, subduing his enemies, and treading them to powder. [6.] His voice was as the sound of many waters; of many rivers falling in together. He can and will make himself heard to those who are as well as those who are not near. His gospel is a profuse and mighty stream, fed by the upper springs of infinite wisdom and knowledge.

2. He had in his right hand seven stars; the ministers of the seven churches, who are under his direction, have all their light and influence from him, and are secured and preserved by him. [8.] Out of his mouth went a two-edged sword; his word, which both wounds and heals, strikes at the heart and hand, and prevents evil. His countenance was as the sun shining; its strength too bright and dazzling for mortal eyes to behold.

3. The condescending goodness of the Lord Jesus to his disciples; (v. 17.) he laid his hand upon him; he raised him up, he did not plead against him with his great power, but he put strength into him, he spake kind words to him. [1.] Words of comfort and encouragement; fear not. He commanded away the slavish fears of his disciples. [3.] Words of instruction; telling him particularly who he was, that thus appeared to him. And here he acquaints him, First, With his divine nature; the First and the Last. Secondly, With his former sufferings; I was dead; the very same that his disciples saw upon the cross dying for the sins of men. Thirdly, With his resurrection and life; I live, and behold the end. /I have conquered death, and opened the grave, and am Partaker of an endless life. Fourthly, With his office and authority; I have the keys of hell and of death; a sovereign dominion in and over the invisible world, opening and none can shut, shutting so that none can open; opening the gates of death when he pleases, and the gates of the eternal world, of happiness or misery, as the Judge of all, from whose sentence there lies no appeal; the gates of heaven and hell. Fifthly, With his will and pleasure; that John should write both the things he had seen, and the things that are, and that should be hereafter. Sixthly, With the meaning of the seven stars, that they are the ministers of the churches; and of the seven candlesticks, that they are the seven churches, to whom Christ would now send by him particular and proper messages.

CHAP. II.

The apostle John, having, in the foregoing chapter, written the things which he had seen, now proceeds to write the things that are, according to the command of God, (ch. 1. 18.) that is, the present state of the seven churches of Asia, which he has a particular acquaintance with, and for which he had a tender concern. He was directed to write to every one of them according to their present state and circumstances, and to inscribe every letter to the angel of that church, to whom he should send the word of it. In this chapter, we have, I. The message sent to Ephesus, v. 1.. 7. II. To Smyrna, v. 8.. 11. III. To Pergamos, v. 12.. 17. IV. To Thyatira, v. 18. to the end.

1. UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; 2. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: 3. And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. 4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. 5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. 6. But this thou hast, that thou hast hated the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. 7. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

We have here,

I. The inscription, where observe,

1. To whom the first of these epistles is directed; to the church of Ephesus, a famous church planted by the apostle Paul, (Acts 19.) and after that watered and governed by St. John, who had his residence very much there. We can hardly think that Timothy was the angel, or sole pastor and bishop of this church at this time, that he who was of a very excellent spirit, and naturally cared for the good state of the souls of the people, should become so remiss as to deserve the rebukes given to the ministry of this church. Observe,

2. From this chapter to Ephesus was sent: here we have one of those titles that were given to Christ in his appearance to John in the chapter foregoing; He that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, and walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, ch. 1. 13. 16. This title consists of two parts.

1. He that holdeth the stars in his right hand. The ministers of Christ are under his special care and protection. It is the honour of God, that he knows the number of the stars, calls them by their names, binds the sweet influences of Pleiades, and looses the bands of Orion; and it is the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ, that the ministers of the gospel, who are greater blessings to the church than the stars are to the world, are in his hand; he directs all their motions, he purposes of them into their several orbs, he fills them with light and influence, he supports them, or else they would soon be falling stars; they are instruments in his hand, and all the good they do, is done by his hand with them. (2.) He walketh in the midst of the golden candlesticks. This speaks his relation to his churches, as the other his relation to his ministers. Christ is in an intimate and covered walk with his churches; he knows and observes their state, he takes pleasure in them, as a man does to walk in his garden; though Christ be in heaven, he walks in the midst of his churches on earth, observing what is amiss in them, and what it is that they want: this is a great encouragement to those who have the care of the churches—that the Lord Jesus has given them upon the palms of his hands.

II. The contents of the epistle, in which, as in most of those that follow, we have,

1. The commendation Christ gave this church, ministers and members, which he always brings in, by declaring that he knows their works, and therefore both his commendation and reprehen sion are to be strictly regarded; for he does not in either speak at a venture, he knows what he says. Now the church of Ephesus is commended, (1.) For their fidelity; (v. 2.) I know thy works, and thy labour. This may more immediately relate to the ministry of this church, which had been laborious and diligent. Dignity calls for duty. Those that are stars in Christ’s hand, had need to be always in motion, dispensing light to all about them; For my name’s sake thou hast laboured, and hast not fainted, v. 3. Christ keeps an account of every day’s work, and every hour’s work, his servants do for him, and their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. (2.) For their patience in suffering; (v. 2.) Thy labour and thy patience. It is not enough that we be diligent, but we must be patient, and endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ. Ministers must have and exercise great patience, and no Christian can be without it. There must be bearing patience, to encounter with the rebukes of God’s providence; and there must be waiting patience, that when they have done the will of God, they may receive the promise; Thou hast borne, and hast patience, v. 3. We shall meet with such difficulties in our way and work, as require patience to go on and finish well.

(3.) For their zeal against what was evil; (v. 2.) Thou canst not bear them that are evil. It consists very well with Christian patience, not to bear with sin, much less allow it; though we must shew all meekness to men, yet we must shew a just zeal against their sins. This their zeal was the more to be commended, because it was according to knowledge, discreet zeal upon a previous trial made of the pretences, practices, and tenets of evil men; Thou hast tried them that say they are apostles, and are not; and hast rebuked them. True zeal proceeds with discretion; none should be cast off till they are tried. Some were risen up in this church, that pretended to be not ordinary ministers, but apostles; their pretensions had been examined, and found to be vain and false; those that impartially search after truth, may come to the knowledge of it. 2. The rebuke given to this church; (v. 4.)Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee. Those that have much good in them, may have something much amiss in them; and our Lord Jesus, as an impartial Master and Judge, takes notice of both; though he first observes what is good, and is most ready to mention that, yet he also observes what is amiss, and will faithfully reprove them for it. The sin that Christ charged this church with, is, their decay in their first love; I will set before thee an open door, which shall be the object of it; but lost the fervent degree of it, that at first appeared.

Observe, (1.) The first affections of men toward Christ, and holiness, and heaven, are usually lively and warm. God remembered the love of Israel’s espousals, when she should follow him withithsoever he went; (2.) These lively affections will abate, and grow cool, if great care be not taken, and diligence used, to preserve them in constant exercise. (3.) Christ is grieved and displeased with his people, when he sees them grow remiss and cold toward him, and he will one way or other make them sensible that he does not take it well from them.

3. The advice and counsel given them from Christ; (v. 5.) Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, &c. (1.) Those that have lost their first love, must remember from whence they are fallen; they must compare their present with their former state, and consider how much better it was with them than then now; how much peace, strength, purity, and pleasure they have lost, by leaving their first love; how much more comfortably they could lie down and sleep at night; how much more cheerfully they could awake in the morning; how much better they could behold flowers, and walk in the fields; becoming, if they could, to enjoy the favours of Providence; how much easier the thoughts of death were to them, and how much stronger their desires and hopes of heaven. (2.) They must repent; they must be inwardly grieved and ashamed for their sinful declining; they must blame themselves, and shame themselves, for it, and humbly confess it in the sight of God, and judge and condemn themselves in holy love and zeal, and turn and do their first works; they must as it were begin again, go back step by step, till they come to the place where they took the first false step; they must endeavour to revive and recover their first zeal, tenderness, and seriousness, and must pray earnestly, and watch as diligently, as they did when they first set out in the ways of God.

Now this good advice is forced and urged, [1.] Like a severe and tender father, and a wise and pitiful shepherd. I will come unto thee quickly, and remove thy candlestick out of its place. If the presence of Christ’s grace and Spirit be slighted, we may expect the presence of his displeasure; he will come in a way of judgment, and that suddenly and surprisingly, upon impenitent churches and sinners; he will unchurch them, take away his gospel, his ministers, and his ordinances from them; and what will the churches or the angels of the churches do when the gospel is removed?

[2.] By an encouraging mention that is made of what was yet good among them; (v. 6.) “This thou hast, that thou hastest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.” Though thou hast declined in thy love to what is good, yet thou retainest thy hatred to what is evil, especially to what is grossly evil. This may be called charity and meekness; but it is not pleasing unto Christ. Our Saviour subjoins this kind commendation to his severe threaten ing, to make the advice more effectual.

III. We have the conclusion of this epistle, in which, as in those that follow, we have,
1. A call to attention; He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Observe, (1.) What is written in the scriptures, is spoken by the Spirit of God. (2.) What is, said to one church, concerns all the churches, in every place and age. (3.) We can never employ our faculty of hearing better than in hearkening to the word of God; and we deserve to lose it, if we do not employ it to this purpose; and they who will not hear the call of God now, will at length they had never had a capacity of hearing any thing at all.

2. A promise of great mercy to those who overcome. The Christian life is a warfare against sin, Satan, the world, and the flesh. It is not enough that we engage in this warfare, but we must pursue it to the end; we must never yield to our spiritual enemies, but fight the good fight, till we gain the victory, as all persevering Christians shall do; and the warfare and victory shall have a glorious triumph and reward. That which is here promised, is, to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God. They shall have that perfection of holiness, and that confirmation therein, that Adam would have had; if he had gone well through the course of his trial, then he would have eaten of the tree of life which was in the midst of paradise, and that Jesus would have been enabled to come to him in his holy and happy state. So all who persevere in their Christian trial and warfare, shall derive from Christ, as the Tree of life, perfection and confirmation in holiness and happiness in the paradise of God; not in the earthly paradise, but the heavenly, ch. 22. 1, 2.

3. And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive. 9. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich,) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan. 10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. 11. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

We now proceed to the second epistle sent to another of the Asiatic churches, where, as before, observe.

1. The preface or inscription in both parts.

2. The subscription, telling us to whom it was more expressly and immediately directed; to the angel of the church in Smyrna, a place well known at this day by our merchants, a city of great trade and wealth, perhaps the only city of all the seven that is still known by the same name, now however no longer distinguished for its Christian church, being overrun with Mahometanism.

3. The subscription containing another of the glorious titles of our Lord Jesus, the First and the Last, he that was dead and is alive, taken out of ch. 1. 17, 18. (1.) Jesus is the First and the Last. It is but a little scantling of time that is allowed to us in this world, but our Redeemer is the First and the Last. He is the First, for by him all things were made; and he was before all things with God, and was God himself. He is the Last, for all things are made for him, and he will be the Judge of all. This surely is the title of God from everlasting and to everlasting, and it is the title of one that is an unchangeable Mediator between God and Man, Jesus, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He was the First, for by him the foundation of the church was laid in the patriarchial state; and he is the Last, for by him the top-stone will be brought forth and laid in the end of time. (2.) He was dead, and is alive. He was dead, and died for our sins; he is alive, for he rose again for our justification, and he ever lives to make intercession for us. He was dead, and by dying purchased salvation for us; he is alive, and by his life applies this salvation to us. And if when we were enemies, we are reconciled by his death, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. His death we commemorate every Sunday-day, his resurrection and life every sabbath-day.

II. The subject matter of this epistle to Smyrna, where, after the common declaration of Christ's omniscience, and the perfect cognizance he has of all the works of men, and especially of his churches, he takes notice,

1. Of the improvement they had made in their spiritual state. This comes in, in a short parenthesis, as a word of comfort. 9. Poor in temporal, but rich in spirituals; poor in spirit, and yet rich in grace; their spiritual riches are set off by their outward poverty. Many who are rich in temporals, are poor in spirituals. Thus it was with the church of Laodicea. Some who are poor outwardly, are inwardly rich; rich in faith, in good works, rich in privileges, rich in bonds and deeds of gift, rich in hope, rich in reversion. Spiritual riches are usually the reward of great diligence; the diligent man makes rich. Where there is spiritual plenty, outward poverty may be better borne; and when God's people are impoverished in temporals, for the sake of Christ and a good conscience, he makes all up to them in spiritual riches, which are much more satisfying and enduring.

2. Of their sufferings; I know thy tribulation and poverty; the prosecution they underwent, even to the spoiling of all their goods; for they who will be faithful to Christ, must expect to go through many tribulations; but Jesus Christ takes particular notice of all their troubles. In all their afflictions he is afflicted, and he will recompense tribulation to those who trouble them, but to them that are troubled, rest with himself.

3. He knows the wickedness and the falsehood of their enemies; I know the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews, but are not; that is, (1.) Of those who pretend to be the only peculiar covenant people of God, as the Jews boasted themselves to be, even after God had rejected them: Or, (2.) Of those who would be setting up the Jewish rites and ceremonies, which were now not only antiquated, but abrogated; these may say that they only are the church of God in the world, when, indeed, they are the Synagogue of Satan. Only, (1.) As Christ has a church in the world, the spiritual church of God, so the Devil has his Synagogue; those assemblies that are set up in opposition to the truths of the gospel, and that promote and propagate damnable errors, those who are set up in opposition to the purity and spirituality of gospel-worship, and promote and propagate the vain inventions of men, those rites and ceremonies which never entered into the thoughts of God, and those assemblies which are set up to revile and persecute the true worship and worshippers of God, these are all synagogues of Satan; he presides over them, he works in them, his interests are served by them, and he receives a horrid homage and honour from them. [2.] For the Synagogues of Satan to give themselves out to be the church or Israel of God, is no less than blasphemy. God is greatly dishonoured, when his name is made use of to promote and patronize the interests of Satan; and he has a high resentment of this blasphemy, and will take a just revenge on those who persist in it.

4. He foreknows the future trials of his people, and forewarns them of them, and fore-arms them against them. He forewarns them of future trials: (v. 10.) The Devil shall cast some of you into prison, and ye shall have tribulation. The people of God must look for a series and succession of troubles in this world, and their troubles usually rise higher; they had been impoverished by their tribulations before, now they must be imprisoned. Observe, It is the Devil that stirs up his instruments, wicked men, to persecute the people of God; these are the Devil's tools, though they gratify their own sinful malignity, and know not that they are actuated by a diabolical malice.

(2.) Christ fore-arms them against these approaching troubles: (1.) By his counsel; Fear none of these things: this is not only a word of command, but of efficacy, not only forbidding slavish fear, but subduing it, and furnishing the soul with strength and courage. Secondly, They should not be universal; it would be some of them, not all, who should be cast into prison; those who were best able to bear it, and might expect to be visited and comforted by the rest. Secondly, They were not to be perpetual, but for a set time, and a short time, ten days; it should not be everlasting tribulation, the time should be shortened for the elect's sake. Thirdly, It should be to try them, not to destroy them; that their faith, and patience, and courage, might be proved and improved, and be found to honour and glory.

1. The suitableness of it; 1. A crown, to reward their poverty, their fidelity, and their conflict. 2. A crown of life, to reward those who are faithful even unto death, are faithful till they die, and who part with life itself, in fidelity to Christ; that life, so wrought out in his service, or laid down in his cause, shall be rewarded with another, and a much better life, that shall be eternal.

III. The conclusion of this message, and that, as before, 1. With a call to universal attention, that all men, all the world, should hear what passes between Christ and his churches; how he commends them, how he comforts them, how he reproveth their failures, how he rewards their fidelity; it concerns all the inhabitants of the earth, and the inhabitants of God's kingdom, with his own people; all the world may learn instruction and wisdom thereby. 2. With a gracious promise to the conquering Christian; (v. 11.) He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. Observe, (1.) There is not only a first, but a second death; a death after the body is dead. (2.) This second death is unspeakably worse than the first death, both in the dying pains and agonies of it, which are the agonies of the body; and the mixture of support, and in the duration—"it is eternal death, dying the death, to die, and to be always dying; this is hurtful indeed, it is fatally hurtful to all who fall under it. (3.) From this hurtful, this destructive death, Christ will save all his faithful servants; the second death shall have no power over those who are partakers of the first resurrection; the first death shall not hurt them, and the second death shall have no power over them.

12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges; 13. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. 14. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. 15. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. 16. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth. 17. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

Here also we are to consider,

1. The inscription of this message. 1. Whom it was sent to; to the angel of the church of Pergamos. Whether this was a city raised up out of the Ruins of old Troy, a Troy nouveau (as our London was once called,) or some other city of the same name, is neither certain nor material; it was a place where Christ had called and constituted a gospel-church by the preaching of the gospel, and the grace of his Spirit making the word effectual. 2. Who it was, that sent this message to Pergamos; the same Jesus who here describes himself as one that hath the sharp sword with two edges; (ch. 1. 16.) out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword.

Some have observed, that, in the several titles of Christ which are prefixed to the several epistles, there is something suited to the state of those churches; as in that to Ephesus, what could be more proper to awaken and recover a drowsy and declining church, than to hear Christ speaking as one that held the stars in his hand, and walked in the midst of the golden candlesticks? &c.

The church of Pergamos was infested with men of corrupt minds, who did what they could to corrupt both the faith and manners of the church; and Christ, being resolved to fight against them by the word of his word, takes the title of him that hath the sharp sword with two edges. (1.) The word of God is a sword; it is a weapon both offensive and defensive, it is, in the hand of God, able to slay both sin and sinners. (2.) It is a sharp sword; no heart is so hard but it is able to wound it, no knot so close tied but it is able to cut it; it can divide asunder between the soul and the spirit, that is, between the soul and those sinful habits that by custom are become another soul, or seems to be essential to it. (3.) It is a sword with two edges; it turns and cuts every way; there is the edge of the law against the transgressors of that dispensation, and the edge of the gospel against the despisers of that dispensation;
there is an edge to make a wound, and an edge to open a festered wound in order to its healing; there is no escaping the edge of this sword; if ye turn aside to the right-hand, it has an edge on that side; if on the left-hand, ye fall upon the edge of the sword on that side; it turns every way.

II. The works of God's servants are usual, when their circumstances, under which they did those works, are duly considered; now that circumstance which added very much lustre to the faith of this church, was, the circumstance of the place where this church was planted, a place where Satan's seat was. As our great Lord takes notice of all the advantages and opportunities we have for duty by the places we dwell, in so he takes notice of all the temptations and discouragements we meet with from the places where we dwell, and makes gracious allowances for them. This people dwelt where Satan's seat was, where he was resident for himself; his circuits of the world, his seat is in some places that are infamous for wickedness, error, and cruelty; some think that the Roman governor in this city was a most violent enemy to the Christians, and the seat of persecution was Satan's seat.

2. He commends their steadfastness; (v. 13.) Thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith. These two expressions are much of the same sense; the former may signify the effect, and the latter the cause or means. (1.) Thou holdest fast my name; thou art not ashamed of thy relation to me, but accountest it thine honour that my name is named on thee, that, as the wife bears the name of the husband, so thou art called by my name; this thou holdest fast, as thine honour and privilege. (2.) That which has made thee thus faithful, is, the grace of faith; thou hast not denied the great doctrines of the gospel, nor departed from the Christian faith, and by that means thou hast been kept faithful. Our faith will have a great influence upon our faithfulness; men who deny the faith of Christ, may boast very much of their sincerity, and faithfulness to God and conscience; but it has been seldom known that those who let go the true faith, retain their fidelity; usually on that rock on which men most trust to themselves, they make shipwreck of a good conscience too; and here our blessed Lord aggravates the fidelty of this church from the circumstance of the times, as well as of the place they lived; they had been steadfast even in those days where Anthias his faithful martyr was slain among them: who this person was, and whether there be any thing mysterious in his name, we have no certain account; he was a faithful disciple of Christ, and suffered for his name. His fidelity to his faith and fidelity with his blood in the place where Satan dwelt; and though the rest of the believers there knew this, and saw it, yet they were not discouraged nor drawn away from their steadfastness: this is mentioned as an addition to their honour.

3. He reproves them for their sinful failures; (v. 14.) But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there those who hold the doctrine of Balaam, &c. and them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. There were some who taught it was lawful to eat things sacrificed to idols, and that simple fornication was no sin; they, by an impure worship, drew men into impure practices, as Balaam did the Israelites. Observe, (1.) The filthiness of the spirit and the filthiness of the flesh often go together; corrupt doctrines and a corrupt worship often lead to a corrupt conversation. (2.) It is very lawful to fix the name of the leaders of any heresy upon those who follow them: it is the shortest way of telling whom we mean. (3.) To continue in communion with persons of corrupt principles and practices, is displeasing to God, draws a guilt and blemish upon the church; they become partakers of other men's sins. Thou hast, has no power to punish the persons of men, either for heresy or immorality, with corporal penalties; yet it has power to exclude them from their holy communion; and if it do not so, Christ, the Head and Lawgiver of the church, will be displeased with it.

4. He calls them to repentance; (v. 16.) Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, &c. Observe (1.) Repentance is the duty of sinners: it is a gospel-duty. (2.) It is the duty of churches and communities as well as particular persons; they who sin together, should repent together. (3.) It is the duty of Christian societies to repent of other men's sins, as far as they have been necessary to them, though but so much as by connivance. (4.) When God comes to punish the corrupt members of a church, he rebukes that church itself for allowing sin in it, and not taking care that the seeds of the storm fall upon the whole society. (5.) No sword cuts so deep, nor inflicts so mortal a wound, as the sword of Christ's mouth; let but the threatenings of the word be set home upon the conscience of a sinner, and he will soon be a terror to himself; let these threatenings be executed, and the sinner is utterly cut off: the word of God will take hold of sinners, sooner or later, either for their conviction or their confirmation.

III. We have the conclusion of this epistle, where, after the usual demand of universal attention, there is the promise of great favour to those that overcome; (v. 17.) They shall eat of the hidden manna, and have the new name, and the white stone, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. 1. The hidden manna, the influences and comforts of the Spirit of Christ in communion with him, coming down from heaven into the soul, from time to time, for its support, to let it taste something how saints and angels live in heaven; this is hidden from the rest of the world; a stranger intermeddles not with this joy; and it is laid up in Christ, the Ark of the covenant, in the holy of holies. 2. The white stone, with a new name engraven upon it: this white stone is absolution from the guilt of sin, ad- lading to the ancient covenant, to give a new name to those acquitted on trial, and a black stone to such condemned. The new name is the name of adoption: adopted persons took the name of the family into which they were adopted: none can read the evidence of a man's adoption but himself; he cannot always read it; but, if he persevere, he shall have both the evidence of sonship and the inheritance.

18. And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write: These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are as fine brass; 19. I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first. 20. Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. 21. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. 22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. 23. And I will kill her children with death: and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. 24. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and who have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden. 25. But that which ye have already hold fast till I come. 26. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: 27. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father. 28. And I will give him the morning star. 29. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

The form of each epistle is very much the same; and in this, as the rest, we have to consider the inscription, contents, and conclusion.

I. The inscription, telling us,

1. To whom it is directed; to the angel of the church of Thyatira, a city of the proconsular Asia, bordering upon Mysia on the north, and Lydia on the south, a town of trade; from whence came the woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, who, being at Philippi in Macedonia, probably, about the business of her calling, heard Paul preach there, and God opened her heart, that she attended to the things that were spoken, and believed, and was baptized, and entertained Paul and Silas there: whether it was by heart, or by grace, we are not told. The gospel was brought into her own city Thyatira, is not certain; but that it was there, and successful to the forming a gospel-church, this epistle assures us.

2. By whom it was sent; by the Son of God, who is here described as having eyes like a flame of fire, and feet like as fine brass; his general title is here, the Son of God, that is, the eternal and only-begotten Son of God, which denotes that he has the same nature with the Father, but with a distinct and subordinate manner of subsistence. The description we have here of him, is in two characters: (1.) That his eyes are like unto a flame of fire, signifying his piercing, penetrating, perfect knowledge, a thorough insight into all persons, and all things; one who searches the hearts, and tries the reins of the children of men, (v. 23.) and will make all the churches to know he does so. (2.) That his feet are like fine brass; that the outgoings of his providence are steady, awful, and all pure and holy; as he judges with perfect wisdom, so he acts with perfect strength and steadiness.

II. The contents, or subject-matter of this epistle, which, as the rest, includes,

1. The honourable character and commendation Christ gives of this church, ministry, and people; and this given by one who was no stranger to them, but well acquainted with them, and with the principles from which they acted. Now in this church Christ makes honourable mention, (1.) Of their charity; either more general, a disposition to do good to all men, or more special, to the household of faith; there is no religion where there is no charity. (2.) Their service, their ministration; this respects chiefly the officers of the church, who had laboured in the word and doctrine. (3.) Their faith, which was the grace that actuated all the rest, both their charity, and their service. (4.) Their patience; for those that are most charitable to others, most diligent in their places, and most faithful, must yet expect to meet with that which will exercise their patience. (5.) Their faithfulness; the last thing known, was that they were better than the first; this is an excellent character; when others had left their first love, and lost their first zeal, these were growing wiser and better: it should be the ambition and earnest desire of all Christians, that their last works be their best works, that they may be better and better every day, and best at last.

3. A formal charge for what was amiss; this is not so directly charged upon the church itself as upon some wicked seducers who were among them; the church's fault was, that she connived too much at these wicked seducers are compared to Jezebel, and called by her name; Jezebel was a persecutor of the prophets of the Lord, and a great patron of idolaters and false prophets; the sin of these seducers was, they attempted to draw the servants of God into fellowship with them; and to attempt the destruction of the church, they call themselves prophets, and so would claim a superior authority and regard to the ministers of that church. Two things aggravated the sin of these seducers, who, being one in their spirit and design, are spoken of as one person: (1.) They made use of the name of God to oppose the truth of his doctrine and worship; this very much aggravated their sin. (2.) They abused the patience of God to harden themselves in their wickedness; God gave them space for repentance, but they repented not. Observe, [1.] Repentance is necessary to prevent the sinner's ruin. [2.] Repentance requires time, a course of time, and time convenient; it is a great work, and a work of time. [3.] Where God gives space for repentance, he expects fruits meet for repentance. [4.] Where the space for repentance is lost, the sinner perishes with a double destruction. Now why should the wickedness of this Jezebel be charged upon the church of Thyatira? Because that church suffered her to seduce the people of that city. But how could they help it? They had not, as a church, civil power to banish or imprison her; but they had ministerial power to censure and to excommunicate her: and it is probable that neglecting to use the power they had, made them sharers in hersin.

3. The punishment of this seducer, this Jezebel, v. 22, 23. In these words is couched a prediction of the fall of Babylon: (1.) I will cast her into a bed, into a bed of pain, not of pleasure, into a bed of flames; and they who have sinned with her, shall suffer with her; but this may yet be prevented by their repentance. (2.) I will kill her children with death, that is, the second death, which does the work effectually, and leaves no hope of future life, no reparation for those things which were done in their first death, but only to shame and everlasting contempt.

4. The design of Christ in the destruction of these wicked seducers; and that was the instruction of others, especially of his churches; All the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and the hearts; and I will give to every one of you according to your works. God is known by the judgments that he executeth; and, by this reproof, he has made all men to know, (1.) His infallible knowledge of the hearts of men, of their principles, designs, frame, and temper; their formality, their indifference, their secret inclinations to symbolize with idolaters. (2.) His impartial justice, in giving every one according to his work, that the name of Christians should be no protection, their churches should be no sanctuaries for sin and sinners.
5. The encouragement given to those who kept themselves pure and undefiled; (v. 24.) But to you I say, and to the rest, &c. Observe, (1.) What these seducers called their doctrines, depths, profound mysteries; amusing the people, and endeavou ring to persuade them that they had a deeper insight into religion than their own ministers had attained to. (2.) What Christ called them, depths of Satan, satanical delusions and devices, diabolical mysteries; for there is a mystery of iniquity, as well as the great mystery of godliness: it is a dangerous thing to despise the mystery of God, and it is as dangerous to receive the mysteries of Satan. (3.) How tender Christ is of his faithful servants! (v. 25.) I will lay upon you no other burden; but that which you have already, hold fast till I come. I will not overburthen your faith with any new mysteries, nor your consciences with any new laws; I only require your attention to what you have received; hold that fast till I come, and I desire no more. Christ is coming to put an end to all the temptations of his people; and if they hold fast faith and a good conscience till he comes, all the difficulty and danger are over.

III. We now come to the conclusion of this message, v. 26—29. Here we have, 1. The promise of an ample reward to the persevering, victorious believers, in two parts. (1.) Very great power and dominion over the rest of the world; power over the nations; which may refer either to the time when the empire should turn Christian, and the world be under the government of the Christian emperor, as in Constantine's time; or to the other world, when believers shall sit down with Christ on his throne of judgment, and join with him in trying and condemning and confining and punishing the enemies of Christ and the church. The upright shall have dominion in the morning. (2.) Knowledge and wisdom, suitable to such power and dominion; I will give him the Morning-star. Christ is the Morning-star: he brings day with him into the soul, the light of grace and of glory; and he will give his people that perfection of light and wisdom, that is requisite to the state of dignity and dominion that they shall have on the morning of the resurrection. This epistle ends with the usual demand of attention; He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. In the foregoing epistles, this demand of attention comes before the concluding promise; but in this, and all that follow, it comes after, and tells us, that we should all attend to the promises as well as to the precepts that Christ delivers to the churches.

CHAP. III.

Here we have three more of the epistles of Christ to the churches: I. To Sardis, v. 1. 6. II. To Philadelphia, v. 7—13. III. To Laodicea, v. 14, to the end.

1. And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. 3. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. 5. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Here is, 1. The preface, shewing, 1. To whom this letter is directed; to the angel of the church of Sardis, an ancient city of Lydia, on the banks of the mountain Tmolus, said to have been the chief city of Asia the Less, and the first city in that part of the world that was converted by the preaching of St. John; and, some say, the first that revolted from Christianity, and one of the first that was laid in its ruins, in which it still lies, without any church or ministry.

2. By whom this message was sent; the Lord Jesus, who here assumes the character of him that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; taken out of ch. 1. 4, where the seven Spirits are said to be before the throne. (1.) He hath the seven Spirits, that is, the Holy Spirit with his various powers, graces, and operations; for he is personally one, though efficaciously various; and may be said here to be sent forth to be the envoys of the church, and of the angels of the churches, to shew that to every minister, and to every church, there is a dispensation and measure of the Spirit given for them to profit withal; a stock of spiritual influence for that minister and church to improve, both for enlargement and continuance; which measure of the Spirit is not ordinarily withdrawn from them, till they forfeit it by misappropriation; churches have their spiritual stock and fund, as well as particular believers; and this epistle being sent unto a languishing ministry and church, therefore they are very fitly put in mind that Christ has the seven Spirits, the Spirit without measure, and in perfection, to whom they may apply themselves for the reviving of his work among them. (2.) He hath the seven stars, the angels of the churches; they are disposed of by him, and committed to that care and power which should make them faithful and zealous. He has his ministers to employ, and spiritual influences to communicate to his ministers for the good of his church; the Holy Spirit usually works by the ministry, and the ministry will be of no efficacy without the Spirit; the same divine hand holds them both.

II. The body of this epistle; there is this observable in it, that whereas in the other epistles Christ begins with commending what was good in the churches, and then proceeds to tell them what was amiss, in this (and in the epistle to Laodicea) he begins,

1. With a reproof, and a very severe one; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Hypocrisy, and a lamentable decay in religion, are the sins charged upon this church, by one who knew them well, and all her works. (1.) This church had gained a great reputation; it had a name, and a very honourable one, for a flourishing church; a name for vital, lively religion, for purity of doctrine, unity among themselves, uniformity in worship, decency, and order; we read not of any unhappy divisions among themselves; every thing appeared well, as to what falls under the observation of men. (2.) This church was not really what it stood reputed to be; they had a name, but they were not; there was a form of godliness, but not the power; a name to live, but not a principle of life; if there was not a total privation of life, yet there was a great deadness in their souls, and in their services; a great deadness in the spirits of their ministers, and a great deadness in their ministrations, in their praying, in their preaching, in their converse; and a great deadness in the people in hearing, in prayer, and in conversation; what little life was yet left among them, was, in a manner, expiring ready to die.

2. Our Lord proceeds to give this degenerate church the best advice; (v. 2.) Be watchful, and strengthen the things, &c. (1.) He advises them to be upon their watch; the cause of their sinful deadness and declension was, that they had let down their watch; whenever we are off our watch, we lose ground, and therefore must return to our watchful state, for we can do no more but watch; this is ever destructive to the life and power of godliness. (2.) To strengthen the things that remain, and that are ready to die. Some understand this of persons; there were some few who had retained their integrity, but they were in danger of declining with the rest. It is a difficult thing to keep up to the life and power of godliness ourselves, when we see a universal deadness and declension prevailing round about us. All may be understood of practices, as it follows, I have not found thy works perfect before God, not filled up; there is something wanting in them; there is the shell, but not the kernel; there is the carcass, but not the soul; the shadow, but not the substance; the inward thing is wanting, thy works are hollow and empty; prayers are not filled up with holy desires, alms-deeds not filled up with true charity, and sacrifices are not found in their very substance, not fitted to God; there are not inward affections suitable to outward acts and expressions; now when the spirit is wanting, the form cannot long subsist. (3.) To recollect themselves, and remember how they have received and heard; (v. 3.) not only to remember what they had received and heard, what messages they had received from God, what tokens of his mercy and favour towards them, what sermons they had heard, but how they had received and heard, what impressions the merces of God had made upon their souls at first, what affections they felt working under the word and ordinances, the love of their espousals, the kindness of their youth, how welcome the gospel and the grace of God were to them when they first received them; where is the blessedness they then spake of? (4.) To hold fast what they had received, that they might not lose again, and sincerely that they had lost so much of the life of religion, and had run the risk of losing all.

3. Christ enforces his counsel with a dreadful threatening in case it should be despised; (v. 3.) I will come unto thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know the hour. Observe, (1.) When Christ leaves a people as to his gracious presence, he comes to them in judgment; and his judicial presence will be very different from the gracious presence. (2.) His judicial approach to a dead declining people will be surprising; their deadness will keep them in security, and, as it procures an angry visit from Christ to them, it will prevent their discerning it, and preparing for it. (3.) Such a visit from Christ will be to their loss; he will come as a thief, to strip them of their remaining enjoyments, not by fraud, but in justice and righteousness, taking the forfeiture they have made of all to him.

4. Our blessed Lord does not leave this sinful people without some comfort and encouragement; in the midst of judgment he remembers mercy, (v. 4.) and here, (1.) He makes honourable mention of the faithful remnant in Sardis, though but small; Thou hast a few names in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; they had not given into the prevailing corruptions and pollution of the day and place in which they lived. God takes notice of the smallest number of those who abide with him; and the fewer they are, the more precious in his sight. (2.) He makes a very gracious promise to them; They shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy; in the white robes of justification and adoption, and comfort; or in the white robes of honour and glory in the other world: they shall walk with Christ in the pleasant walks of the heavenly paradise; and what delightful converse will there be between Christ and them when they thus walk together! This is an honour proper and suitable to their integrity, which their fidelity has prepared them for, and which it is no way unbecoming Christ to communicate to them; the white robes of a gospel-worthiness that is ascribed to them; not merit, but meekness; they who walk with Christ in the clean garments of real practical holiness here, and keep themselves unspotted from the world, shall walk with Christ in the white robes of honour and glory in the other world; this is a suitable reward.

III. We now come to the conclusion of this epistle, in which, as before, we have, 1. A great reward promised to all who are conquering Christians, (v. 5.) and it is very much the same with what has been already mentioned; He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment; the purity of grace shall be rewarded with the perfect purity of glory; holiness, when perfected, shall be its own reward; glory is the perfection of grace, differing not in kind, but in degree; now to this is added another promise very suitable to the case; I will not blot his book out of the book of life, but will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. Observe, (1.) Christ has his book of life, a register and roll of all who shall inherit eternal life. [1.] The book of eternal election: [2.] The book of remembrance of all those who have lived to God, and have kept up the life and power of godliness in evil times. (2.) Christ will not blot the names of his chosen and faithful ones out of this book of life; men may be enrolled in the registers of the church, as baptised, as making a profession, as having a name to live, and that name may come to be blotted out of the roll, when it appears it was but a name, a name to live, without spiritual life; such often lose the very name before they die, they are left of God to blot out their own names by their gross and open wickedness; but the names of those that overcome, shall never be blotted out. (3.) They are enrolled; they are not added to the register of life, but enrolled in the book of life, and confess the names of the faithful who stand there, before God, and all the angels; he will do this as their Judge, when the books shall be opened; he will do that as their Captain and Head, leading them with him triumphantly to heaven, presenting them to the Father; Behold me, and the children that thou hast given me. How great will this honour and reward be! 2. The demand of universal attention finishes the words. This is a demand of universal attention from men; that which may seem more particularly directed to one body of men, has something in it instructive to all.

7. And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth I. I know thy works; behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. 9. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. 10. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. 11. Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. 12. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. 13. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

We are now come to the sixth letter sent to one of the Asiatic churches; where observe,

I. The inscription is shewing, 1. For whom it was more immediately designed; the angel of the church of Philadelphia; this also was a city in the Lesser Asia, seated upon the borders of Mysia and Lydia, and had its name from that brotherly-love for which it was eminent. We can hardly suppose that this name was given to it after it received the Christian religion, and that it was so called from that Christian affection that all believers have, and should have, one for another, as the children of one Father, and the brethren of Christ; but rather that it was its ancient name, on the account of the love and kindness which the citizens had, and shewed, to each other as a civil fraternity; this was an excellent spirit, and, when sanctified by the grace of the gospel, would render them an excellent church, as indeed they were, for here is no one fault found with this church, and yet, doubtless, there were faults in it of some kind or other; but love covers such faults. 2. By whom this letter was signed; even by the same Jesus who is alone the universal Head of all the churches; and here observe by what title he chooses to represent himself to this church; he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, &c. You have his personal character, he that is holy, and he that is true; holy in his nature, and therefore he cannot but be true to his word, for he hath spoken in his holiness; and you have also his political character, he hath the key of David, he openeth, and no man shutteth; he hath the key of the house of David, the key of government and authority in and over the church.

1. Observe the acts of his government: [1.] He openeth. He openeth a door of opportunity to his churches, he openeth a door of utterance to his ministers, he openeth a door of entrance, openeth the heart, he openeth a door of admission into the visible church, laying down the terms of communion, and he openeth the door of admission into the church triumphant, according to the terms of salvation fixed by him. [2.] He shuts the door; when he please, he shuts the door of opportunity, and the door of utterance, and leaves obstinate sinners shut up in the hardness of their hearts; he shuts the door of church fellowship against unbelievers and profane persons, and he shuts the door of heaven against the foolish virgins who have slept away their day of grace, and against the workers of iniquity, how vain and confident soever they may be. (2.) The way and manner in which he performs these acts, and that is absolute sovereignty, independent upon the will of men, and irresistible by the power of men; He openeth, and no man shutteth; he shutteth, and no man openeth; he works to will and to do, and when he works, none can let. These were proper characters for him, when speaking to a church that had endeavoured to be conformed to Christ in holiness and truth, and that had enjoyed a wide door of liberty and opportunity under his care and government.

II. The subject-matter of this epistle; where, 1. Christ puts them in mind of what he had done for them; (v. 8.) I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it. I have set it open, and kept it open, though there be many adversaries. Learn here, (1.) Christ is to be acknowledged as the Author of all the liberty and opportunity his churches enjoy. (2.) He takes notice, and keeps account, how long he has preserved their spiritual liberties and privileges for them. (3.) Wicked men envy the people of God their door of liberty, and would be glad to shut it against them. (4.) If we do not provoke Christ to shut this door against us, men cannot do it. 2. This church is commended; (v. 8.) Thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. In this there seems to be a twofold description of this church; (1.) It was a small and weak church; I have heard, a little strength. (2.) It was examined and kept in order, and not turned from the right word, and not denied his name. In this there seems to be a twofold description of this church; (1.) It was a small and weak church; I have heard, a little strength. (2.) It was examined and kept in order, and not turned from the right word, and not denied his name. When God is pleased to bless, he will give grace and comfort to them that are examined before he commends. 3. Christ gives them a promise of grace; (v. 9.) If any man have an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. (1.) He gives them a promise of grace; If any man have an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. (2.) He gives them a promise of grace; If any man have an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. (3.) He gives them a promise of grace; If any man have an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

3. Here is a promise of the great favours God would bestow on this church, v. 9, 10. This favour consists in two things: (1.) Christ lets them know this church's enemies subject her to. [1.] Those enemies are described to be such as said they were Jews, but lied in saying so; pretended to be the only and peculiar people of God, but were really the synagogue of Satan. Assemblies that worship God in spirit and in truth, are the Israel of God; assemblies that either worship false gods, or the true God in a false manner, are the synagogues of Satan: they were a great and strong body, and they were so called, by the power of Satan and by the power of God. [2.] Their subjection to the church is described; They shall worship at thy feet; not pay a religious and divine honour to the church itself, or to the ministry of it, but shall be convinced that they have been in the wrong, that this church is in the right, and is beloved of Christ, and they shall desire to be taken into communion with her, and that they may worship the same God after the same manner. How shall this great change be wrought? By the power of God upon the hearts of his enemies, and by signal discoveries of his peculiar favour to his church; They shall know that I have loved thee. Observe, First, The greatest honour and happiness any church can enjoy, consist in the peculiar love and favour of Christ. Secondly, Christ can discover this his favour to his people in such a manner that their very enemies shall see it, and be convinced of its truth and power. Thirdly, This will, by the grace of Christ, soften the hearts of their enemies, and make them desirous to be admitted into communion with them.

(2.) Another instance of favour that Christ promises to this church, is persevering grace in the most trying times, (v. 10.) and this as the reward of their past fidelity; To him that hath, shall be given. Here observe, [1.] The gospel of Christ is the word of his patience; it is the fruit of the patience of God to a sinful world, it sets before men the example of Christ in all his sufferings for men, it calls those who receive it to the exercise of patience in conformity to Christ. [2.] This gospel should be carefully kept by all that enjoy it; they must keep up to the faith and practice and worship prescribed in the gospel. [3.] After a day of patience we must expect an hour of temptation; a day of gospel-peace and liberty is a day of God's patience, and it is seldom seen, we improve and should be therefore more thankful; and often followed by an hour of trial and temptation. [4.] Sometimes the trial is more general and universal; it comes upon all the world, and when it is so general, it is usually the shorter. [5.] They who keep the gospel in a time of peace, shall be kept by Christ in an hour of temptation; by keeping the gospel they are prepared for the trial; and the same divine grace that has made them fruitful in times of peace, will make their faith fruitful in these times of trial.

4. Christ calls the church to that duty which he before promised he would enable her to do, and that is, to persevere, to hold fast that which she had. (1.) The duty itself; "Hold fast that which thou hast; that faith, that truth, that strength of grace, that zeal, that love to the brethren; thou hast been possessed of this excellent treasure, hold it fast." (2.) The motives taken from the speedy appearance of Christ; "Behold, I come quickly. See, I am just a coming to relieve them under the trial, to reward their fidelity, and to punish those who fall away; they shall lose that crown which they once seemed to have a right to, which they hoped for, and pleased themselves with the thoughts of; the persevering Christian shall win the prize from backsliding professors, who once stood fair for it."

III. The conclusion of this epistle, v. 12, 13. Here, after his usual manner, our Saviour promises a glorious reward to the victorious believer, in two things: 1. He shall be a monumental pillar in the temple of God; not a pillar, to support the temple, (heaven needs no such props,) but a monument of the free and powerful grace of God, a monument that shall never be defaced nor removed, as many stately pillars erected in honour to the Roman emperors and generals are. 2. Of this monumental pillar there shall be an honourable inscription, as in those cases is usual: (1.) The name of God, in whose cause he engaged, whom he served, and for whom he suffered in this warfare; and the name of the city of God, the church of God, the new Jerusalem, which came down from heaven; on this pillar shall be recorded all the services the believer did to the church of God, how he asserted her rights, enlarged her borders, maintained her purity and honour; this will be a greater name than Antiochus, or Africada; a soldier under God in the wars of the church. And then another part of the inscription is, (2.) The new name of Christ, the Mediator, the Redeemer, the Captain of our salvation; by this it will appear under whose banner this conquering believer was enlisted, under whose conduct he acted, by whose example he was encouraged, and under whose triumphs he rejoiced, and came off victorious. The epistle is closed up with the demand of attention; He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches, how Christ loves and values his faithful people, how he commends, and how he will crown their fidelity.

14. And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Beginning of the creation of God; 15. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. 16. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. 17. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. 18. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see. 19. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. 20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. 21. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

22. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

We are now come to the last and worst of all the seven Asian churches, the reverse of the church of Philadelphia; for as there was nothing reproved in that, here is nothing commended in this; and yet this was one of the seven golden candlesticks; for a corrupt church may be still a church. Here we have, as before, I. The inscription, to whom, and from whom: 1. To whom; to the angel of the church of Laodicea; this was once a famous city near the river Lycus, had a wall of vast compass, and three marble theatres, and, like Rome, was built on seven hills. It seems, the apostle Paul was very instrumental in planting the gospel in this city, and from hence he wrote a letter, which he mentions in the epistle to the Colossians, the last chapter, and sends salutations to them, as being not above twenty miles distant from Colosse. In this city was held a council in the fourth century, but it has been long since demolished, and lies in its ruins to this day, an awful monument of the wrath of the Lamb.

2. From whom was this message sent; here our Lord Jesus styles himself the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the Beginning of the creation of God. (1.) The Amen, one that is steady and unchangeable in all his purposes and promises, which is a suitable name for a church, and all amen. (2.) The faithful and true Witness, whose testimony of God to men ought to be received and fully believed, and whose testimony of men to God will be fully believed and regarded, and will be a swift but true witness against all indifferent lukewarm professors. (3.) The Beginning of the creation of God, either of the first creation, and so he is the Beginning, that is the First Cause, the Creator, and the Governor of it; or of the second creation, the church; and so he is the Head of that body, the First-born from the dead, as it is in ch. 1. 5. from whence these titles are taken. Christ, having raised up himself by his own divine power, as the Head of a new world, raises up dead souls to be a living temple and church to himself.

II. The subject-matter; in which observe,
REVELATION, III.

1. The heavy charge drawn up against this church, ministers and people, by one who knew them better than they knew themselves; (v. 15.) Thou art neither cold nor hot, but worse than either; I would thou were cold or hot. Lukewarmness or indifference in religion is the worst temper in the world. If religion be a real thing, it is the most excellent condition; nothing less should be in good earnest in it; if it be not a real thing, it is the vilest imposture, and we should be earnest against it. If religion be worth any thing, it is worth every thing; an indifference here is inexcusable; Why halt ye between two opinions? If God be God, follow him; if Baal, (be God,) follow him. Here is no room for neutrality. An open enemy shall have fairer quarters than a perfidious neutral; and there is more hope of a happy issue of such. Christ expects that men should declare themselves in earnest either for him or against him.

2. A severe punishment threatened; I will smite thee out of my mouth. As lukewarm water turns the stomach, and provokes to a vomit, lukewarm professors turn the heart of Christ against them; he is sick of them, and cannot long bear them; they may call their lukewarmness charity, meekness, moderation, and a largeness of soul; it is nauseous to Christ, and makes those so that allow themselves in it; they shall be rejected, and finally rejected; for far be it from the holy Jesus to return to that which has been thus rejected.

3. We have one cause of this indifference and inconsistency in religion assigned, and that is, self-conceitiveness and self-delusion; they thought they were very well already, and therefore they were very indifferent whether they grew better or no; (v. 17.) Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, &c. Here observe, what a difference there was between the thoughts they had of themselves, and the thoughts that Christ had of them.

(1.) The high thoughts they had of themselves; Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; rich, and growing richer, and increased to that degree, as to be above all want or possibility of wanting. Perhaps they were well provided for as to their bodies, and that made them overlook the necessities of their souls; or they thought themselves well furnished in their souls; they had learning, and they took it for religion; they had gifts, and they took them for grace; they had wit, and they took it for true wisdom; they had ordinances, and they took up with them instead of the God of ordinances. How careful should we be not to put the cheat upon our own souls! Doubtless, there are many in hell, that once thought themselves to be in the way to heaven. Let us daily beg of God that we may not be left to flatter and deceive ourselves in the concerns of our souls.

(2.) The mean thoughts that Christ had of them, and he was not mistaken. He knew, though they knew not, that they were wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; this he knew, and the least. For, [1.] They were poor; really poor, when they said and thought they were rich; they had no provision for their souls to live upon; their souls were starving in the midst of their abundance; they were vastly in debt to the justice of God, and not a jot or tittle paid. [2.] They were blind; they could not see their state, nor their way, nor their danger; they could not see into themselves; they could not look before them; they were blind, and yet they thought they saw; the very light that was in them, was darkness; and then how great must that darkness be! They could not see Christ, though evidently set forth, and crucified, before their eyes; they could not see God by faith, though always present in them; they could not see death, though it was just before them; they could not look into eternity, though they stood upon the very brink of it continually. [3.] They were naked; without clothing, and without house and habitation for the body, and without garments of righteousness, without the garment of justification, nor of sanctification; their nakedness both of guilt and pollution had no covering; they lay always exposed to sin and shame; their righteousnesses were but filthy rags; they were rags, and would not cover them; filthy rags, and would defile them; and they were naked, without house or habitation, for they were without God, and he has been the Dwelling-place of his people in all ages; in him all the holiness of the heavenly city, the temple, and the temple of safety, and all suitable accommodations. The riches of the body will not enrich the soul; the sight of the body will not enlighten the soul; the most convenient house for the body will not afford rest or safety to the soul; the soul is a different thing from the body, and must have accommodation suitable to its nature, or else in the midst of bodily prosperity it will be wretched and miserable.

What was given by Christ to this sinful people, and that is, that they drop their vain and false opinion they had of themselves, and endeavour to be that really which they would seem to be; (v. 18.) I counsel thee to buy of me, &c. Observe, (1.) Our Lord Jesus Christ continues to give good counsel to those who have cast his counsellors behind their backs. (2.) The condition of sinners is never desperate, while they enjoy the gracious calls and counsels of Christ. (3.) Our blessed Lord, the Counsellor, always gives the best advice, and that which is most suitable to the sinner's case; as here, [1.] These people were poor; Christ counsels them to buy of him gold tried in the fire, that they might be rich; he lets them know where they might have true riches, and how they might have them; where they might have them—from himself; he sends them not to the streams of Potosi, nor to the mines of Potosi, but invites them to himself, the Pearl of great price. And how must they have this true gold from him? They must buy it. That seems to be unsaying all again. How can they that are poor, buy gold? Just as they may buy of Christ wine and milk, that is, without money and without price, Isai. 55. 1. Something indeed must be parted with, but it is nothing of a valuable consideration, it is only to make room for receiving true riches, Part with sin and self-sufficiency, and come to Christ with a spirit of penitence and emptiness, that you may be filled, with his hidden treasure." [2.] These people were naked; Christ tells them where they might have clothing, and such as would cover the shame of their nakedness. This they must receive from Christ; and they must only put off their filthy rags, that they might put on the white raiment that he had purchased and provided for them; his own poor rags, and put them on themselves, and be clothed with the most beautiful and excellent objects, and this light would be marvellous to them who were but just now delivered from the powers of darkness. This is the wise and good counsel Christ gives to careless souls; and if they follow it, he will judge himself bound in honour to make it effectual.
5. Here is added great and gracious encouragement to this sinful people to take the admonition and advice well that Christ had given them, v. 19, 20. He tells them, (1.) It was given them in true and tender affection; Whom I love, I rebuke and chasten; you may think, I have given you harsh words and severe reproofs; it is all out of love to your souls. I would not have thus openly rebuked and corrected your sinful lukewarmness and vain confidence, if I had not been a Lover of your souls; had I hated you, I would have let you alone, to go on in sin till it had been your ruin. Sinners ought to take the rebukes of God's word and rod as tokens of his good-will to their souls, and should accordingly be careful to improve the means and methods by which he enlightens them; better are the frowns and wounds of a friend than the flattering smiles of an enemy. {2.} If they would comply with his admonitions, he was ready to make them good to their souls; {v. 20.} Behold, I stand at the door and knock, &c. Here observe, (1.) Christ is graciously pleased by his word and Spirit to come to the door of the heart of sinners; he draws near to them in a way of mercy, ready to make them a kind visit. {2.} He finds this door shut against him; the heart of man is by nature shut up against Christ by ignorance, unbelief, sinful prejudices. {3.} When he finds the heart shut, he does not immediately withdraw, but he waits to be gracious, even till his head be filled with the dew. {4.} He uses all proper means to awaken sinners, and to cause them to open to him; he calls by his word, he purposes by the impulses of his Spirit the several their conscience. {5.} They who open to him, shall enjoy his presence, to their great comfort and advantage; he will sup with them, he will accept of what is good in them, he will eat his pleasant fruit, and he will bring the best part of the entertainment with him; if what he finds would make but a poor feast, what he brings will make up the deficiency; he will give fresh supplies of grace and comforts, and never any thing but fresh, firing of fire, fires of love, and delight; and in all this Christ and his repenting people will enjoy pleasant communion with each other. Alas! what do careless, obstinate sinners lose by refusing to open the door of the heart to Christ? III. We now come to the conclusion of this epistle; and here, as before, 1. The promise made to the overcoming believer. (1.) It is here implied, that though they shall be visited by trials, and shall overcome with lukewarmness and self-confidence, yet it was possible that by the reproofs and counsels of Christ they might be inspired with fresh zeal and vigour, and might come off conquerors in their spiritual warfare. (2.) That if they did so, all former faults should be forgiven, and they should have a great reward. And what is that reward? They shall sit down with me on my throne, as I also sat down with my Father on his throne, v. 21. Here it is intimated, {1.} That Christ himself had met with his temptations and conflicts. {2.} That he overcame them all, and was more than a conqueror. {3.} That, as the reward of his conflict and victory, he is sat down with God the Father on his throne, possessed of that glory which he had with the Father from eternity, but which he was pleased very much to conceal on earth; leaving it, as it were, in the hands of the Father, and reserving that he would fulfil the work of a Saviour before he re-assumed that manifestative glory; and having done so, then pugnae refoscit—he demands the pledge, to appear in his divine glory equal to the Father. {4.} That those who are conformed to Christ in his trials and victories, shall be conformed to him in his glory; they shall sit down with him on his throne, on his throne of judgment, at the end of the world, on his throne of glory to all eternity, shining in his beams by virtue of their union with him, and relation to him, as the mystical body of which he is the Head. 2. All is closed up with the general demand of attention, {v. 22.} putting all to whom these epistles shall come, in mind, that what is contained in them, is not of private interpretation, not intended only for the instruction, reproof, and correction of these particular churches, but of all the churches of Christ in all ages and parts of the world: and as there will be a resemblance in all succeeding churches to these, both in their graces and sins, so they may expect that God will deal with them as he dealt with these, which are patterns to all ages, what faithful and fruitful churches may expect to receive from God, and what those who are unfaithful may expect to suffer from his hand; yea, that God's dealings with his churches may afford useful instruction to the rest of the world, to put them upon considering, If judgment begin at the house of God, what shall the end of them be that do not obey the gospel of Christ? 1 Pet. 4. 17. Thus end the messages of Christ to the Asian churches; the epistolary part of this book. We now come to the prophetical part.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, the prophetical scene opens and as the epistolary part opened with a vision of Christ, (ch. 1.) so this part is introduced with a glorious appearance of the great God, whose kingdom is his house, and who is sitting upon his throne, in the holy city, Jerusalem. This discovery was made to John, and in this chapter he, 1. Records the heavenly sight he saw, v. 1. 7. And then, II. The heavenly songs he heard, v. 8 to the end.

1. AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. 2. And immediately I was in the Spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. 3. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine-stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. 4. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. 5. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunders and voices. And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God. 6. And before the throne there was a sea of glass, like unto crystal. And in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts, full of eyes before and behind. 7. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

We have here an account of a second vision, with which the apostle John was favoured. "After this," that is, "not only after I had seen the vision of Christ walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks, but after I had taken his messages from his mouth, and written and sent them to the several churches, according to his command, after this, I had another vision." Those who well improve the
The preparation made for the apostle’s having this vision. 1. A door was opened in heaven. Whence we learn, (1.) Whatever is transacted on earth, is first designed and settled in heaven; there is the model of all the works of God; all of them are therefore before his eye, and he lets the inhabitants of heaven see as much of them as is fit for them. (2.) The door was opened to the author of future events, that what God is pleased to discover as they are within the veil, till God opens the door. But, (3.) So far as God reveals his designs to us, we may and ought to receive them, and not pretend to be wise above what is revealed. 2. To prepare John for the vision, a trumpet was sounded, and he was called up into heaven, to have a sight there of the things which were to be hereafter. He was called into a thundershower. (1.) To a pleasant way opened into the holiest of all, into which the sons of God may enter by faith and holy affections now, in their spirits when they die, and in their whole persons at the last day. (2.) We must not intrude into the secret of God’s presence, but stay till we are called up to it. 3. To prepare for this vision, the apostle was in the Spirit; he was in a rapture, as before; (ch. 1. 10.) whether in the body, or out of the body, we cannot tell; perhaps he himself could not; however, all the time was suspended, and his spirit was possessed with the spirit of prophecy, and wholly under a divine influence. The more we abstract ourselves from all corporeal things, the more fit we are for communion with God; the body is a veil, a cloud and clog to the mind in its transactions with God. We should as it were forget it when we go in before the Lord in duty, and be willing to drop it, that we may go up to him in heaven. This was the aphantasia to the vision. Now observe.

II. The vision itself; it begins with the strange sights that the apostle saw, and they were such as these. 1. He saw a throne set in heaven, the seat of honour, and authority, and judgment. Heaven is the throne of God; there he resides in glory, and from thence he gives laws to the church, and to the whole world; and all earthly thrones are under the judgment of heaven. 2. He saw a glorious One upon the throne. The throne was not empty; there was one in it who filled it, and that was God, who is here described by those things that are most pleasant and precious in our world; his countenance was like a jasper and a sardine-stone; he is not described by any human features, so as to be represented by an image, but only by his transcendent brightness. The jasper is a transparent stone, which yet offers to the eye a variety of the most vivid and dazzling hues, signifying the glorious perfections of God; the sardine-stone is red, signifying the justice of God; that essential attribute which he never divests himself of in favour of any, but gloriously exerts it in the government of the world, and especially of the church, through our Lord Jesus Christ. This attribute is displayed in pardoning as well as in punishing, in saving as well as in destroying the sinner. 3. He saw a rainbow around the throne, like unto an emerald. This rainbow was the seal and token of the covenant of providence that God made with Noah and his posterity with him, and is a fit emblem of that covenant of promise that God has made with Christ as the Head of the church, and all his people in him; which covenant is as the waters of Noah unto God, an everlasting covenant ordered in all things, and sure. This rainbow looked like the emerald; the most prevailing colour was a pleasant green, to show the reviving and refreshing nature of the new covenant. 4. He saw four and twenty seats round about the throne, not empty, but filled with four and twenty elders, presbyters, representing, very probably, the whole church of God, both in the Old Testament and in the New Testament state; all the ministers of the church, but rather the representatives of the people. Their sitting denotes their honour, rest, and satisfaction; their sitting about the throne, signifies their relation to God, their nearness to him, the sight and enjoyment they have of him, and their continual regard to him. They are invested with greater vestments, the righteousness of the saints, both imputed and inherent; they had on their heads crowns of gold, signifying the honour and authority given them of God, and the glory they have with him. All these may in a lower sense be applied to the gospel-church on earth, in its worshipping assemblies; and in the higher sense, to the church triumphant in heaven. 5. He perceived lightnings and voices proceed out of the throne; that is, the awful declarations that he makes to his church of his sovereign will and pleasure. Thus he gave forth the law on mount Sinai; and the gospel has not less glory and authority than the law, though it be of a more spiritual nature. 6. He saw seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are explained to be the seven Spirits of God. 5. The various gifts, graces, and operations of the Spirit of God in the churches of Christ, and twenty and one that are dispensed according to the will and pleasure of him who sits upon the throne. He saw before the throne a sea of glass, like unto crystal. As in the temple there was a great vessel of brass filled with water, in which the priests were to wash when they went to minister before the Lord; and this was called a sea; so in the gospel-church, the sea or laver for purification is the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, who cleanses from all sin, even from sanctuary-sins. In this all those must be washed, that are admitted into the gracious presence of God on earth, or his glorious presence in heaven. 8. He saw four animals, living creatures, between the throne and the circle of the elders, (as seems most probable,) standing between God and the people; these seem to signify the ministers of the gospel, not only because of this their situation nearer to God, and between him and the elders or representatives of the Christian people, and because fewer in number than the people; but as they are here described, (1.) By their names, ready to execute the sacred ministration, they represent the lion-like courage, their great labour and diligence, in which they resemble the ox; their prudence and discretion becoming men, and their sublime affections and speculations, by which they mount up with wings like eagles toward heaven, (v. 7.) and these wings full of eyes within, to shew that in all their meditations and ministrations they are to act with knowledge and discernment; (2.) They are well acquainted with themselves and the state of their own souls, and see their own concern in the great doctrines and duties of religion, watching over their own souls as well as the souls of the people. (5.) By their continual employment, and that is, praising God, and not ceasing to do so night and day. The elders sit, and are ministered unto; they are fed, and minister, they rest not night and day. This now leads to the other part of the representation.

8. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within; and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. 9. And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever. 10. The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

12. We have considered the sights that the apostle saw in heaven: now let us observe the songs that he heard, for there is in heaven not only that to be seen, which will highly please a sanctified eye, but there is that to be heard, which will greatly delight a sanctified ear. It is true concerning the church of Christ here, which is a heaven upon earth, and it will be eminently so in the church made perfect in the heaven of heavens. 1. He heard the song of the four living creatures, of the ministers of the church, which refers to the prophet Isaiah’s vision, ch. 6. And here, (1.) They adore one God, the one only, the Lord God Almighty, unchangeable and everlasting. (2.) They adore three Holies in this one God, His Father, His Son, and the Holy Spirit; and these are one infinitely Holy and Eternal Being, who sits upon the throne, and lives for ever and ever. In this song the prophet saw Christ, and spake of him. 2. He heard the adorations of the four and twenty elders, that is, of the Christian people represented by them; the ministers led, and the people followed, in the praises of God, v. 10, 11. Here observe, (1.) The object of their worshipping was the same with that was worshiped, him that sat on the throne, the eternal, ever-living God. The true church of God has one and the same object of worship. Two different objects of worship, either co-ordinate or subordinate, would confound the worship, and divide the worshippers. It is unlawful to join in divine worship with those who either mistake or multiply the object. There is but one God, and he alone, as God, is worshipped by the church on earth and in heaven. (2.) The acts of adoration. [1.] They fell down before him that sat on the throne; they discovered the most profound humility, reverence, and godly fear. [2.] They cast down their crowns before the throne; they gave the glory of the holiness wherewith he had crowned their souls on earth, and the honour and happiness with which he crowns them in heaven. They owe all their graces and all their glories to him, and acknowledge that his crown is infinitely more glorious than their’s, and that it is their glory to glorifying God. (3.) The words of adoration: they said, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, v. 11. Observe, [1.] They do not say, We give thee glory, and honour, and power; for what can any creature pretend to give unto God? But this they say, Thou art worthy...; for God is to be adored, he is the Creator of all things; all things have been created by the will and power of God, and no dependent being must be set up as an object of religious worship. It is the part of the best dependent beings, to be worshippers, not to be worshipped. [2.] He is the final Cause of all things; for thy pleasure they are and were created. It was his will and pleasure to create all things; he was not put upon it by the will of another; there is no such thing as a subordinate creator, that acts under and by the will and power of another; and if there were, he ought not to be worshipped. As God made all things at his pleasure, he made them for his pleasure; to deal with them as he pleases, and to multiply his favours to them one way or other. Though he delights not in the death of sinners, but rather that they should turn and live, yet he hath made all things for himself; Prov. 16. 4. Now if these be true and sufficient grounds for religious worship, as they are proper to God alone, Christ must needs be God, one with the Father and Spirit, and be worshipped as such; for we find the same causality ascribed to him; (Col. 1. 16, 17.) All things were created by him, and for him, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

CHAP. V.

In the foregoing chapter, the prophetical scene was opened, in the sight and hearing of the apostle, and he had a sight of God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son, the King of the church. He saw God on the throne of glory and government, surrounded with his holy ones, and receiving their adorations. Now the counsels and decrees of God are set before the apostle, as in a book, which God held in his right hand; and this book is represented, 1. As sealed in the hand of God, v. 1. 6. II. As taken into the hand of Christ the Redeemer, to be unsealed and open ed, v. 6, to the end.

1. AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals. 2. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? 3. And no man in heaven, nor in earth, nor under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. 4. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. 5. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

Hitherto the apostle had only seen the great God, Governor of all things; now, 1. He is favoured with a sight of the model and methods of his government, as they are all written down in a book which he holds in his hand; and this we are now to consider as shut up and sealed in the hand of God. Observe, (1.) The designs and methods of Divine Providence are written towards the church: and the world are stated and fixed; they are resolved upon and agreed to, as that which is written in a book. The great design is laid, every part adjusted, all determined and every thing passed into decree, and made a matter of record. The original and first draught of this book, is the book of God’s decrees, laid up in his own cabinet, in his eternal mind: but there is a transcript of so much as was necessary to the book of the Gentiles in general, in the prophetical part of scripture especially, and in this prophecy in particular. (2.) God holds this book in his right hand, to declare the authority of the book, and his readiness and resolution to execute all the contents thereof, all the counsels and purposes therein recorded. (3.) This book in the hand of God is shut up and sealed; it is known to none but himself, till he allows it to be opened. Known unto God, and to him alone, are all his works, from the beginning of the world; but it is his glory to conceal the matter as he pleases. The times and seasons, and their great events, he hath kept in his own hand and power. (4.) It is sealed with seven seals. This tells us of that inscrutability in his counsels of God are laid, how impenetrable by the eye and intellect of the creature; and also points to us seven several parts of this book of God's counsels; each part seems to have its particular seal, and, when opened, discovers its proper events; these seven parts are not unsealed and opened at once, but successively, one scene of Providence introducing another, and explaining it, till the whole mystery of God's counsel and conduct be finished in the world.

2. He heard a declaration made concerning this sealed book. (1.) The crier was a strong angel: not that there are any weak ones among the angels in heaven, though there are many among the angels of the churches. This angel seems to come out, not only as a crier, but as a champion, with a challenge to any, or all the creatures, to try the strength of their wisdom in opening the counsels of God; and as a champion, he cried, Expose your wisdom, that every creature might hear. (2.) The crier or challenge proclaimed was, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? v. 2. If there be any creature that thinks himself sufficient either to explain or execute the counsels of God, let him stand forth, and make the attempt. (3.) None in heaven or earth could accept the challenge, and undertake the task: none in heaven; none of the glorious creatures, chosen to sit upon the throne of God, and the ministers of his providence; they with all their wisdom cannot dive into the decrees of God: none on earth; no man, the wisest or the best of men; none of the magicians and soothsayers; none of the prophets of God, any further than he reveals his mind to them: none under the earth; none of the fallen angels, none of the spirits of men departed, though they should return to our earth when opened; nor himself, when all his sublimity, cannot do it; the creatures cannot open it, nor look on it; they cannot read it, God can only do it. 3. He felt a great concern in himself about this matter; the apostle wept much; it was a great disappointment to him. By what he had seen in him who sat upon the throne, he was very desirous to see and know more of his mind and will: this desire, when not presently gratified, filled him with sorrow, and fetched many tears from his eyes. Here observe, (1.) Those who have seen most of God in this world, are most desirous to see more; and those who have seen his glory, desire to know his will. (2.) Good men may be too eager and too hasty to look into the mysteries of divine conduct. (3.) Such desires, not presently answered, turn to grief and sorrow; hope deferred makes the heart sick. The apostle was weeping when he was engaged to hope this sealed book should yet be opened. Here observe, (1.) Who it was, that gave St. John the hint; one of the elders. God had revealed it to his church. If angels do not refuse to learn from the church, ministers should not disdain to do it. God can make his people to instruct and inform their teachers when he pleases. (2.) Who it was, that would do the thing; the Lord Jesus Christ, called, the Mediator of the New Covenant, the Lion of Judah, and the root of David, according to his divine nature, though a branch of David, according to the flesh. He who is a middle person, God and man, and bears the office of Mediator between God and man, is fit and worthy to open and execute all the counsels of God toward men. And he is doth so in his mediatorial state and capacity, as the Root of David, and the Offspring of Judah; and as the King and Head of the Israel of God; and he will do it, to the consolation and joy of all his people.

6. And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. 7. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. 8. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints. 9. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain; and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; 10. And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. 11. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; 12. Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. 13. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. 14. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

Here, 1. The apostle beholds this book taken into the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ, in order to its being opened and executed by him. Where Christ is described, 1. By his place and station; in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and of the elders. 2. He was on the same throne with the Father; he was nearer to him than either the elders or ministers of the churches. Christ, as Man and Mediator, is subordinate to God the Father, but is nearer to him than all the creatures, for in him all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily. The ministers stand between God and the people. Christ stands as Mediator between God and both ministers and people. 3. The form in which he appeared. Before, he is called a Lion; here, he appears as a Lamb slain. He is a Lion, to conquer Satan; a Lamb, to satisfy the justice of God. He appears with the marks of his sufferings upon him, to shew that he intercedes in heaven, in the virtue of his satisfaction. He appeared as a Lamb, having seven horns and seven eyes; perfect power to execute all the will of God, and perfect wisdom to understand it all, and to do it in the most effectual manner; for he hath the seven Spirits of God, he has received the Holy Spirit without measure, in all perfection of light, and life, and power, by which he is able to teach and rule all parts of the earth. 3. He is described by his act and deed; He came, and took the book, and opened the Book of the hand of him that sat on the throne; (v. 7.) not by violence, nor by fraud, but he prevailed to do it, (as v. 5.) he prevailed by his merit and worthiness, he did it by authority, and by the Father's appointment. God very willingly and justly put the book of his eternal counsels into the hand of Christ, and Christ as readily and gladly took it into his hand; for he delights to reveal and to do the will of his Father.

4. The apostle observes the universal joy and thanksgiving that filled heaven and earth upon this transaction. No sooner had Christ received this book out of the Father's hand, than he receives the applause and adorations of angels and men, yea, of every creature. And indeed, it is just matter of joy to all the world, to see that God does not deal with men in a way of absolute justice, and accept justice, but in a way of infinite mercy and grace through the Redeemer. He governs the world, not merely as a Creator and Lawgiver, but as our God and Saviour. All the world has reason to rejoice in this.

The song of praise that was offered up to the Lamb on this occasion, consists of three parts; one part sung by the church, the other by the church and the angels, the third by every creature.

1. The church begins with the doxology, as being more immediately concerned in it; (v. 8.) the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, the Christian people, under their minister, they lead up the chorus; where observe, (1.) The object of their worship—the Lamb, the Lord Jesus Christ; it is the declared will of God, that all men should honour the Son as they honour the Father; for he has the same. (2.) Their posture; they fell down before him; gave him worship, and adoration, and thefirst part of worship, the first fruits of adoration. (3.) The instruments used in their adorations; harps and vials; the harps were the instruments of praise, the vials were full of odours or incense, which signify the prayers of the saints; prayer and praise should always go together. (4.) The matter of their song; it was suited to the new state of the church, the gospel-state introduced by the Son of God. [1.] They acknowledge the infinite fitness and worthiness of the Lord Jesus for this great work of opening and executing the counsel and purposes of God; (v. 9.) Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; every way sufficient for the work, and deserving of the honour. [2.] They mention the grounds and reasons of this worthiness; and though they do not exclude the dignity of his person as God, without which he had not been sufficient for it, yet they set it down as the merit of his sufferings, which he had endured for them; these more sensibly struck their souls with thankfulness and joy. Here, First, They mention his suffering; Thou wast slain, slain as a Sacrifice, thy blood was shed. Secondly, The fruits of his sufferings: 1. Redemption to God; Christ has redeemed his people from the bondage of sin, guilt, and Satan; redeemed the church, the Lamb; set them liberty to serve him, and to enjoy him. 2. High exaltation; Thou hast made us to our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth, v. 10. Every ransomed slave is not immediately preferred to honour, he thinks it a great favour to be restored to liberty; but when the elect of God were made slaves by sin and Satan, in every nation of the world, Christ not only purchased their liberty for them, but the highest honour and preference, made them kings and priests; kings, to rule over their own spirits, and to overcome the world, and the evil one; and he has made them priests, given them access to himself, and liberty to offer up spiritual sacrifices, and they shall reign on the earth; they shall with him judge the world at the great day.

This doxology, thus begun by the church, is carried on by the four living creatures and the forty and two elders in conjunction with the church; (v. 11.) they are said to be innumerable, and to be the attendants on the throne of God, and guardians to the church; though they did not need a Saviour themselves, yet they rejoice in the redemption and salvation of sinners; and they agree with the church in acknowledging the infinite merits of the Lord Jesus as dying for sin, that he has made them kings and priests, and given them riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. (1.) He is worthy of that office and that authority which require the greatest power and wisdom, the greatest fund, all excellency, to discharge them aright; and, (2.) He is worthy of all honour, and glory, and blessing, because he is sufficient for the office, and faithful in it.

3. This doxology, thus begun by the church, and carried on by the angels, is resounded and echoed by the whole creation; (v. 13.) heaven and earth ring with the high praises of the Redeemer, the whole creation fared the better for Christ, by him all things consist; and all the creatures, had they sense and language, would adore that great Redeemer who delivers the creature from that bondage under which it groans, through the corruption of men, and the just curse denounced by the great God upon the world; death (a part of the old world) is made for the whole creation, is a song of blessing, and honour, and glory, and power; (1.) To him that sits on the throne, to God, as God; or to God the Father, as the first Person in the Trinity, and in the first in the economy of our salvation; and, (2.) To the Lamb, as the second Person in the Godhead, and the Mediator of the new covenant; not that the worship paid to the Lamb is of another nature, and inferior worship, for the very same honour and glory are in the same words ascribed to the Lamb, and to him that sits on the throne; their essence being the same, but their parts in the work of our salvation being distinct, they are distinctly adored. We worship and glorify one and the same God for our creation, and for our redemption.

We see how the church that began the heavenly anthem, most obviously; the propositions of this book are, in a manner, as still leaves the predictions very abstruse, and difficult to be understood. Hitherto, the waters of the sanctuary have been as those in Ezekiel's vision, only to the ankles, or to the knees, or to the middle; but in this book, it begins to be a river that cannot be passed over; the visions which John saw, the epistles to the churches, the songs of praise, in the two foregoing chapters, had some things dark and hard to be understood, yet intelligible in some part, yet leave it great for strong men; but now we are to launch into the deep, and our business is not so much to fathom it, as to let down our net to take a draught. We shall only limit at what seems most obvious; the prophecies of this book, that divided into seven seals opened, seven trumpets sounding, and seven vials poured out. It is supposed that the opening of the seven seals discloses those providences that concerned the church in the three first centuries, from the ascension of our Lord and His return, to the reign of Constantine, was in a book rolled up, and sealed in several places, so that when one seal was opened, you might read so far of it, and so on, till the whole was unfolded. Yet are we not here told what was written in the book, but that John saw figures emblematical and hieroglyphic; and it is not for us to pretend to know the times and the seasons which the Father has put in his own power. In this chapter, six of the seven seals are opened, and the visions connected with them related; the first seal in v. 1, 2. the second seal in v. 3, 4. the third seal in v. 5, 6. the fourth seal in v. 7, 8. the fifth seal in v. 9. 11. the sixth seal in v. 12, 13, &c.

1. And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts, saying, Come and see. 2. And I saw, and beheld a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

Here, 1. Christ, the Lamb, opens the first seal; he now enters upon the great work of opening and accomplishing the purposes of God toward the church and the world. 2. One of the ministers of the church calls upon the apostle, with a voice like thunder, to come near; and observe what then appears. We have the vision itself, v. 2.

1. (1.) The Lord Jesus appears riding on a white horse: white horses are generally refused in war, because they make the rider a mark for the enemy; but our Lord Redeemer was sure of the victory and a glorious triumph, and he rides on the white horse of a pure but despised gospel, with great swiftness through the world.

2. (2.) He had a bow in his hand; the convictions impressed by the word of God are sharp arrows, they reach at a distance; and though the ministers of the word draw the bow at a venture, God can and will direct it to the joints of the harness; this bow, in the hand of Christ, abides in strength, and, like that of Jonathan, never returns empty.

3. (3.) A crown was given him, importing, that all who receive the gospel, must receive Christ as a King, and must be his loyal and obedient subjects; he will be glorified in the success of the gospel.

When Christ was going to war, one would think a helmet had been more proper than a crown; but a crown is given him as the earnest and emblem of victory.

4. (4.) He went forth conquering, and to conquer. As long as the church continues vigilant, Christ will be conquering; when he has conquered his enemies in one age, men go on opposing, and Christ goes on conquering; and his former victories are pledges of future victories; he conquers his enemies in his people; their sins are their enemies, and his enemies; when Christ comes with power into their soul, he begins to conquer these enemies, and he goes on conquering, in the progressive work of sanctification. He conquers his enemies in the world, wicked men, some by bringing them to his feet, others by making them his footstool.

Observe, From this seal opened, [1.] The successful progress of the gospel of Christ in the world is a glorious sight, worth beholding, the most pleasant and welcome sight that a good man can see in this world. [2.] Whatever convulsions and revolutions happen in the states and kingdoms of the world, the kingdom of Christ shall be established and enlarged in spite of all opposition. [3.] A morning of opportunity usually goes before a night of calamity; the gospel is preached before the plagues are poured forth. [4.] Christ's work is not all done at once; we are ready to think, when the gospel goes forth, it should carry all the world before it, but it often meets with their hatred, and moves slowly; however, Christ will do his own work effectually, in his own time and way.

3. And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. 4. And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword. 5. And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. 6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for frr a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine; 5 has made some expositors think this was not a vision of famine, but of plenty; but if we consider the quanty of their merits, and the value of their penny, at the time of this prophecy, the objection will be removed;

their measure was but a single quart, and their penny was our sevenpence-halfpenny, and that is a large sum to give for a quart of wheat; however, it seems this famine, as all others, fell most severely upon the poor;
whereas the oil and the wine, which were dainties of the rich, were not hurt; but if bread, the staff of life, be broken, dainties will supply the want of it. Here observe, (1.) When a person وحت their spiritual food, God may justly deprive them of their daily bread. (2.) One judgment seldom comes alone, and the judgment of war naturally draws after it that of famine; and those who will not humble themselves under one judgment, must expect another, and yet greater; for when God contends, he will prevail. The famine of bread is a terrible judgment; but the famine of the word is more so, though careless sinners are not sensible of it.

3. Upon opening the fourth seal, which John is commanded to observe, there appears another horse, of a pale colour; where observe, (1.) The name of the rider—Death, the king of terrors; the pestience, which is death in its empire, death reigning over a place or nation, death on horseback, marching about, and making fresh conquests every hour. (2.)
The attendants or followers of this king of terrors —heaven, a state of eternal misery to all those who die in their sins; and, in times of such a general destruction, multitudes go down unprepared into the valley of destruction. It is an awful thought, and enough to make the whole world to tremble, that eternal damnation immediately follows upon the death of an impenitent sinner. Observe, [1.] There is a natural as well as judicial connexion between one judgment and another: war is a wasting calamty, and draws scarcity and famine after it; and fa-nine, not allowing men proper sustenance, and forcing them to take that which is unhomelike, often draws the pestilence after it. [2.] God’s quiver is full of arrows; he is never at a loss for ways and means to punish a wicked people. [3.] In the book of God’s counsels he has prepared judgments for souls as well as manners for returning sinners. In the book of his transactions with men, he has given themselves against the wicked as well as promises to the righteous; and it is our duty to observe and believe the threatenings as well as the promises.

4. After the opening of these seals of approaching judgments, and the distinct account of them, we have his general observation, that God gave power to them, over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth, v. 8. He gave them power, that is, those instruments of his anger, or those judgments themselves; he who holds the winds in his hand, has all public calamities at his command, and they can only go when he sends them, and no further than he permits. To the three great judgments, of war, famine, and pestilence, is here added the beasts of the earth, another of God’s sore judgments, mentioned Ezek. 21. and 24. and 25. and 26. The last because, when a nation is depopulated by the word, famine, and pestilence, the small remnant that continued in a waste and howling wilderness, courage the wild beasts to make head against them, and they become an easy prey. Others, by the beasts of the field, understand brutish, cruel, savage men, who, having divested themselves of all humanity, de-light to be the instruments of the destruction of others.

9. And when he had opened the fifth seal,
I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: 10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? 11. And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled. 12. And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; 13. And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island were removed out of their places. 15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; 16. And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:
17. For the great day of his wrath is come;
and who shall be able to stand?

In the remaining part of this chapter, we have the opening of the fifth and the sixth seals.

1. The fifth seal; here is no mention made of any one who called the apostle to make his observation, either because the decorum of the vision was to be observed, and each of the four living creatures had discharged its duty of a monitor before; or because the events here opened lay out of the sight, and beyond the time, of the present ministers of the church; or because it does not contain a new prophecy of any future events, but rather opens a spring of suffrage and consolation to those who had been, and still were under great tribulation for the sake of Christ and the gospel. Here observe,

1. The sight this apostle saw at the opening of the fifth seal; it was a very affecting sight; (v. 9.) I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; or, peradventure, the souls of those who were slain, (v. 1.) Observe, (1.) Where he saw them—under the altar; at the foot of the altar of incense, in the most holy place; he saw them in heaven, at the foot of Christ.
Hence note, [1.] Persecutors can only kill the body, and after that there is no more that they can do, their souls live. [2.] God had provided a good place in the better world for those who are faithful to death, and are not allowed a place any longer on earth. [3.] Holy martyrs are very near to Christ in heaven, they have the highest place there. [4.] It is not their own death, but the sacrifice of Christ, that gives them a reception into heaven, and a reward there; they do not wash their robes in their own blood, but in the blood of the Lamb. (2.) What was the cause in which they suffered—the word of God, and the testimony which they held; for believing the word of God, and testifying against the
2. The cry he heard; it was a loud cry, and contained terrible expostulation about the long delay of avenging justice against their enemies; How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? v. 10. Observe, (1.) Even the spirits of just men made perfect retain a proper resentment of the wrong they have sustained by their cruel enemies; and though they die in charity, praying, as Christ did, that God would forgive them, yet they are desirous, that for the honour of God, as Christ, and the gospel, and for the terror and conviction of others, God will take a just revenge upon the sin of persecution, even while he pardons and saves the persecutors. (2.) They commit their cause to him to whom vengeance belongeth, and leave it in his hand; they are not for avenging themselves, but leave all to God. (3.) There will be joy in heaven and Gladness among the angels over the destruction of sinners. When Babylon falls, it will be said, Rejoice over her, O thou heavens, and ye holy apostles and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her, Rev. 18. 20.

3. He observed the kind return that was made to this cry; (v. 11.) both what was given them, and what was said to them: (1.) What was given to them: the white robes, the robe of victory and of honour; their present happiness was an abundant recompense of their past sufferings. (2.) What was said to them—that they should be satisfied, and easy in themselves, for it would not be long but the number of their fellow-sufferers should be fulfilled; this is a language rather suited to the imperfect state of the saints in this world than to the perfection of their state in heaven; there is no impatience, no unaequility, no need of admonition; but in this world there is great need of patience. Observe, (1.) A number of Christians are known to God, who are appointed as sheepl for the slaughter, set apart to be God's witnesses. (2.) As the measure of the sin of persecutors is filling up, so is the number of the persecuted martyred servants of Christ. (3.) When this number is fulfilled, God will take a just and glorious revenge upon their cruel persecutors; he will recompense them, and their state trouble them, and those that are troubled, full and uninterrupted rest.

II. We have here the sixth seal opened, v. 12. Some refer this to the great revolutions in the empire in Constantine's time, the downfall of paganism; others, with great probability, to the destruction of Jerusalem, as an emblem of the general judgment, and destruction of the wicked, at the end of the world. Many of the events of this event are so much the same with those signs mentioned by our Saviour, as foreboding the destruction of Jerusalem, that it hardly leaves any room for doubting but that the same thing is meant in both places; though some think that event was past already. See Matt. 24. 29, 30. Here observe,

I. The tremendous events that were hastening; and here are several occurrences that contribute to make the day snec unutterably dreadful.

There was a great earthquake; this may be taken in a political sense; the very foundations of the Jewish church and state would be terribly shaken, though they seemed to be as stable as the earth itself. (2.) The sun became black as sackcloth of hair; either naturally, by a total eclipse, or politically, by the fall of the chief rulers and governors of the land. (3.) The moon should become as blood; the inferior officers, or their military men, they should be all wallowing in their own blood. (4.) The stars of heaven should fall to the earth, (v. 13.) and that as a fig-tree casteth her unripe figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. The stars may signify all the men of note and influence among them, though in lower spheres of activity; there should be a general desolation.

(5.) The heaven should depart as a scroll when it is rolled togethers. That may intend, Their ecclesiastical state shall be rolled up, and be laid aside for ever. (6.) Every mountain and island shall be moved out of their places. The destruction of the Jewish nation should affect and afflict all the nations round about, those who were highest in honours, and those who seemed to be best secured; it would be a judgment that should astonish all the world. This leads to

2. The dread and terror that would seize upon all sorts of men in that great and awful day, v. 15. Neither authority, nor grandeur, nor riches, nor valour, nor strength, would be able to support men at that time; yea, the very poor slaves, who, one would think, had nothing to fear, because they had nothing to lose, would be all in amazement at that day. Observe, (1.) The degree of their terror and astonishment would prevail so far as to make them, like distracted desperates, to throw down the mountains to fall upon them, and to the hills to cover them; they would be glad to be no more seen; yea, to have no longer any being. (2.) The cause of their terror, and that was, the angry countenance of him that sits on the throne, and the wrath of the Lamb. Observe, (1.) That which is matter of displeasure to Christ, is so to God; they are so entirely one, that what please or displeases one, pleases or displeases the other. (2.) Though God be invisible, he can make the inhabitants of this world sensible of his awful frowns. (3.) Though Christ be a Lamb, yet he can be angry, even to wrath, and the wrath of the Lamb is exceeding dreadful; for if the Redeemer, that appeaseth the wrath of God, himself be our wrathful enemy, where shall we have a friend to plead for us? They perish without remedy, who perish by the wrath of the Redeemer. (4.) As men have their day of opportunity, in the seasons of grace, so God has his day of righteous wrath: and when that day comes, the most stout-hearted sinners will not be able to stand before him; all these terrors actually fell upon the sinners in Judea and Jerusalem in the day of their destruction, and they will all, in the utmost degree, fall upon impenitent sinners, at the general judgment of the last day.

CHAP. VII.

The things contained in this chapter came in after the opening of the six seals, which foretold great calamities in the world; and before the sound of the seven trumpets, which gave notice of great corruptions arising in the church: between these comes in this comfortable chapter, which secures the greatest things of mercy and comfort to the people of God in times of common calamity. We have, I. An account of the restraint laid upon the winds, v. 1. II. The sealing of the servants of God, v. 4. 8. III. The songs of angels and events on this occasion, v. 9. IV. Description of the honour and happiness of those who had faithfully served Christ, and suffered for him, v. 13, &c.

1. And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. 2. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God; and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, 3. Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

Here we have an account of the restraint laid upon the winds. By these winds we suppose are meant those errors and corruptions in religion which would occasion a great deal of trouble and mischief to the church of God: sometimes the Holy Spirit is compared to the wind; here the spirits of error are compared to the four winds, contrary one to another, but doing much hurt to the church, the garden and vineyard of God, breaking the branches, and blasting the fruits of his plantation: the Devil is called the prince of the power of the air; he, by a great wind, overthrew the house of Job's eldest son;
errors are as wind, by which they who are unstable, are shaken, and carried to and fro, Eph. 4. 14.
Observe, 1. These are called the winds of the earth, because they blow only in these lower regions near the earth; heaven is always clear and free from them. 2. They are restrained by the ministry of angels, standing on the four corners of the earth;
in-timating, that the spirit of error cannot go forth till God permits it, and that the angels minister to the good of the church by restraining its enemies. 3.
Their restraint was only for a season, and that was,
till the servants of God were sealed in their fore-heads. God has particular care and concern for his own servants in times of temptation and corruption, and he has a way to secure them from the common infection; he first establishes them, and then he tries them; he has the timing of their trials in his own hand.

4. And I heard the number of them who were sealed; and there were sealed a hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. 5. Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand.
Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed double thousand. Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephtalim were sealed twelve thousand.
Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand. 7. Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand.
Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand. 8. Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand.
Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

We have here an account of the sealing of the servants of God; where observe, 1. To whom this work was committed—to an angel, another angel; while some of the angels were employed to restrain Satan and his agents, another angel was employed, and thus much of the faithful servants of God. 2. How they were distinguishing —the seal of God was set upon their foreheads, a seal known to him, and as plain as if it appeared in their foreheads; by this mark they were set apart for mercy and safety in the worst of times. 3. The number of those that were sealed; where observe, (1.) A particular account of those that were sealed of twelve tribes of Israel—twelve thousand out derived from every tribe, the whole sum amounting to a hundred and forty-four thousand: in this list the tribe of Dan is omitted, perhaps because they were greatly addicted to idolatry; and the order of the tribes is altered, perhaps according as they had been more publicly marked out and distinguished to God. Some take in his to be a select number of the Jews who were reserved for mercy at the destruction of Jerusalem; others think that time was past, and therefore it is to be more generally applied to God's chosen remnant in the world; but if the destruction of Jerusalem was not yet over, (and I think it is hard to prove that it was,) it seems more proper to understand this of the remnant of that people which God had reserved for himself and his church. According to the election of the church there must have been a definite number for an indefinite. (2.) A general account of those who were saved out of other nations;
(t. 9.) a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues: these though are not said to be sealed, yet they were selected by God out of all nations, and brought into his church, and there stood before the throne. Observe, [1.] God will have a greater harvest of souls and glory than he had among the Jews; more are the children of the desolate than of the married woman. [2.] The Lord knows who are his, and he will keep them safe in times of dangerous temptation. [3.] Though the church of God is but a little flock, in comparison of the wicked world, yet it is no contemptible society, but really large, and to be still more enlarged.

9. After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; 10. And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. 11. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12. Saying, Amen. Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. Here we have the songs of saints and angels on this occasion; where observe,
1. The praises offered up by the saints, (and, as it seems to me, by the Gentile believers,) for the care of God in reserving so large a remnant of the Jews, and saving them from infidelity and destruction. The Jewish church prayed for the Gentiles before their conversion, and the Gentile churches have reason to bless God for his distinguishing mercy to so many of the Jews, when the rest were cut off. Here observe, (1.) The posture of these praising saints; they stood before the throne, and before the Lord; before the Creator, and the Mediator. In acts of religious worship we come nigh to God, and are to conceive ourselves as in his special presence; and we must come to God by Christ; the throne of God would be inaccessible to sinners, were it not for a Mediator. (2.) Their habit; they were clothed with white robes, and had palms in their hands; they were invested with the robes of justification, holiness, and victory, and had palms in their hands, as conquerors used to appear in their triumphs; such a glorious appearance will the faith ful servants of God make at last, when they have fought the good fight of faith, and finished their course. (5.) Their employment; they cried with a loud voice saying, Salvation to our God, who sit-eth upon the throne, and to the Lamb. This may be understood either as a hosannah, wishing well to the interest of God and Christ in the church, and in the world, or as a hallelujah, giving to God and the Lamb the praise of the great salvation; both the Father and the Son are joined together in these praises; the Father contrived this salvation, the Son purchased it; and they who enjoy it, must and will bless the Lord and the Lamb; and they will do it publicly, and with becoming fervour.

2. Here is the song of the angels; (v. 11, 12.) where observe, (1.) Their station—before the throne of God, attending on him, and about the saints, ready to serve them. (2.) Their posture, which is very humble, and expressive of the greatest rever-ence— they fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God. Behold the most excellent of all the creatures, who never sinned, who are free from all sin, not only covering their faces, but falling down on their faces before the Lord! What humility then, and what profound reverence, become us vile, frail creatures, when we come into the presence of God! We should fall down before him; there should be both a reverential frame of spirit, and a humble behaviour, in all our addresses to God. (3.) Their praises; they comprized all the praises of the saints, said their Amen thereto; there is in heaven a perfect harmony between the angels and saints; and then they added more of their own, saying, Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. Here, [1.] They acknowledge the glorious attributes of God, wisdom, power, and majesty, and health; [2.] They declare that for these his divine works he ought to be blessed, and praised, and glorified, to all eternity; and they confirm it by their Amen. We see what is the work of heaven, and we ought to begin it now, to get our hearts tuned for it, to be much in it, and to long for that world where our praises, as well as happiness, will be perfected.

13. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they? 14. And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. 15. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne, shall dwell among them. 16. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. 17. For the Lamb, who is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living foun-tains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Here we have a description of the honour and happiness of those who have faithfully followed the Lord Jesus Christ, and suffered for him; where observe, 1. A question asked by one of the elders, not for his own information, but for John’s instruction: ministers may learn from the people, especially from aged and experienced Christians; the lowest saint in heaven knows more than the greatest apostle in the world. Now the question has two parts: (1.) What do these that are arrayed in white robes? (2.) Where came they? It seems to be spoken by way of admiration, as Cant. 6. 6. Who that cometh out of the wilderness? Faithful Christians deserve our notice and respect; we should mark the upright. 2. The answer returned by the apostle, in which he tacitly acknowledges his own ignorance, and sues to this elder for information; Thou knowest. Those who would gain knowledge, must not be ashamed to own their ignorance, nor to desire instruction from any that are able to give it. 3. The account given to the apostle concerning that noble army of martyrs who stood before the throne of God with white robes, and palm of victory in their hands; and notice is taken here, of (1.) The low and deso-late state they had formerly been in; they had been in great tribulation, persecuted by men, tempted by Satan, sometimes troubled in their own spirits; they had suffered the spoiling of their goods, the imprison-ment of their persons, reproaches, and want. The way to heaven lies through many tribulations; but tribulation, how great soever, shall not separate us from the love of God. Tribulation, when gone through well, will make heaven more welcome and more glorious. (2.) The means by which they had been prepared for the great honour and happiness they now enjoyed; (v. 14.) they had washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. It is not the blood of the saints themselves, but the blood of the Lamb, that can wash away sin, and make the soul pure and clean in the sight of God; other bloodstains, this is the only blood that makes the robes of the saints white and clean. (3.) The blessedness to which they are now advanced, being thus prepared for it. [1.] They are happy in their station, for they are before the throne of God, and sit with the Lord and angels among them; they are in that presence where there is fulness of joy. [2.] They are happy in their em-ployment, for they serve God continually, and that without weakness, drowsiness, or weariness; heav-en is a state of service, though not of suffering; it is a state of rest, but not of sloth; it is a pleasing, de-lightful rest. [3.] They are happy in their free-dom from all the inconveniences of this present life; First, From want, For they hunger and thirst no more; all their wants are supplied, and all the uneasiness caused thereby is re moved. Secondly, From all sickness and pain; They shall never be scorched by the heat of the sun any more. [4.] They are happy in the love and conduct of the Lord Jesus; He shall feed them, he shall lead them to living fountains of waters, he shall put them into the possession of everything that is pleasant and lovely, and to their souls’ life itself, he shall hunger and thirst no more. [5.] They are happy in being delivered from all sorrow, or occasion of it; God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. They have formerly had their sorrows, and shed many tears, both upon the account of sin and affliction; but God himself, with his own gentle and gracious hand, will wipe those tears away. They shall have them no more for ever; and they would not have been without those tears, when God comes to wipe them away; in this he deals with them as a tender father who finds his beloved child in tears, he comforts him, he washes his eyes, and turns his sorrow into rejoicing; this would moderate the Christian’s sorrow in his present state, and support him under all the troubles of it; for they that sow in tears, shall reap in joy; and they that now go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing their sheave with them.
CHAP. VIII.

We have already seen what occurred upon opening six of the seals; we now come to the opening of the seventh, which introduced the sounding of the seven trumpets; a direful scene now opens. Most expositors agree, that the seven seals represent the interval between the apostle's time and the reign of Constantine, but that the seven trumpets are designed to represent the rise of antichrist, some time after the Christian dispensation. In chapter vii. we have, I. The preface, or prologue, to the sounding of the trumpets, v. 1. 6. II. The sounding of four of the trumpets, v. 7, &c.

1. AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. 2. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets. 3. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. 4. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. 5. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. 6. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

In these verses we have the prelude to the sounding of the trumpets in several parts: 1. The opening of the last seal; this was to introduce a new set of prophetical omens and events; there is a continued chain of providence, one part linked to another, (where one ends, another begins,) and though they may differ in nature and in time, they all make up one wise, well-connected, and uniform design in the hand of God. 2. A powerful silence in heaven for the space of half an hour, which may be understood either, (1.) Of the silence of peace, that for this time no complaints were sent up to the ear of the Lord God of sabaoth, all was quiet and well in the church, and therefore all silent in heaven; for whenever the church on earth cries, through oppression, that cry comes up to heaven, and resounds there; or, (2.) A silence of expectation; great things were then to be done in heaven, and the church prepared themselves to receive the proclamation. 3. The trumpeters were delivered to the angels, who were to sound them. Still the angels are employed as the wise and willing instruments of Divine Providence, and they are furnished with all their materials and instructions from God our Saviour. As the angels of the churches are to sound the trumpet of the gospel, the angels of heaven are to sound the trumpet of Providence, and every one has his part given him. 4. To prepare for this, another angel must first offer incense, v. 3. It is very probable that this other angel is the Lord Jesus, the High Priest of the church, who is here described in his sacred office, having a golden censer, and much incense, a fulness of merit in his own glorious person, and this incense he was to offer up, with the prayers of all the saints, upon the golden altar of his divine nature. Observe, (1.) All the saints are a praying people; none of the children of God are born dumb, a Spirit of grace is always a Spirit of adoption and supplication, teaching us to cry, Abba, Father, Ps. 32. 6. For this, shall every one that is godly pray unto thee. (2.) Times of danger should be praying times, and so should times of great expectation; both our fears and our hopes should put us upon prayer; and where the interest of the church of God is deeply concerned, the hearts of the people of God in prayer should be greatly enlarged. (3.) The prayers of the saints themselves stand in need of the intercession and intercession of Christ to make them acceptable and effectual, and there is provision made by Christ for that purpose; he has his incense, his censor, and his altar; he is all himself to his people. (4.) The prayers of the saints come up before God in a cloud of incense; no prayer, thus recommended, was ever denied audience and acceptance. (5.) These prayers that were thus accepted in heaven, produced great changes upon earth, in return to them; the same angel that in his censor offered up the prayers of the saints, in the same censor took of the fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth, and this presently caused strange commotions, voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake; these were the answers God gave to the prayers of the saints, and tokens of his anger against the world, and that he would give great things to avenge himself and his people of their enemies; and now all things being thus prepared, the angels discharge their duty.

7. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of the trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up. 8. And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood; 9. And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. 10. And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning, as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; 11. And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter. 12. And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise. 13. And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpets of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

Observe, 1. The first angel sounded the first trumpet, and the events which followed were very dismal; (v. 7.) There followed hail and fire mingled with blood, &c. Here was a terrible storm; but whether it is to be understood of a storm of heresies, a mixture of monstrous errors falling on the church, (for in that age Arianism prevailed,) or a storm or tempest of war falling on the civil state, expositors are not agreed. Mr. Mede takes it to be meant of the Gothic inundation that broke out in the empire in the year 395, the same year that Theodosius died, when the northern nations, under Alaric, king of the Goths, brake in upon the western part of the empire. However, here we suppose it was a very terrible storm—fire, and hail, and blood; a strange mixture! (2.) The limitation of it; it fell on the third part of the trees, and on the third part of the grass, and blasted and burnt it up; that is, say some, upon the third part of the clergy, and the third part of the laity; or, as others who take it to fall upon the civil state, upon the third part of the great men, and upon the third part of the land of the Roman empire itself, which was a third part of the then known world, or upon a third part of that empire. The most severe calamities have their bounds and limits set them by the great God.

2. The second angel sounded, and the alarm was followed, as in the first, with terrible events; (v. 8.) a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea. Great mountains, as we have before showed, were proverbially those mountains which were the seats of the idols of the heathens; this mountain some understand the leader or leaders of the heretics; others, as Mr. Mede, the city of Rome, which was five times sacked by the Goths and Vandals, within the compass of 137 years; first by Alaric, in the year 410, with great slaughter and cruelty. In these calamities, a third part of the people (called here the sea or collection of waters) were destroyed: here was still a limitation to the third part, for the Goths and Vandals, who took these mountains, were the third of the Roman empire.

3. The third angel sounded, and the alarm had the like effects as before; (v. 10.) There fell a great star from heaven, &c. Some take this to be a political star, some eminent governor, and they apply it to Augustus, who was forced to resign the empire to Octavian, in the year 42 B.C. Others take it to be an ecclesiastical star, some eminent person in the church, compared to a burning lamp, and they fix it upon Pelagius, who proved about this time a falling star, and greatly corrupted the churches of Christ. Observe, (1.) Where this star fell—upon a third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters, v. 10. (2.) What effect it had upon them; it turned those springs and streams into wormwood, made them bitter to drink, so that men were poisoned by them; either the laws, which are springs of civil liberty, and property, and safety, were poisoned by arbitrary power; or the doctrines of the gospel, the springs of spiritual life, refreshment, and vigour, to the souls of men, were so corrupted and embittered by a mixture of dangerous errors, that the souls of men found their ruin where they sought for their refreshment.

4. The fourth angel sounded, and the alarm was followed with further calamities. Observe, (1.) The nature of this calamity; it was darkness; it fell therefore upon the great luminaries of the heaven, that give light to the world—the sun, and the moon, and the stars; either the guides and governors of the church, or of the state, who are placed in higher orbs than the people, and are to dispense light and benign influences to men. (2.) The limitation; it was confined to a third part of these luminaries; there was some light both of the sun by day, and of the moon and stars by night, but it was only a third part of what they had before. Without determining what is matter of controversy in these points among learned men, we rather choose to make these plain and practical remarks: [1.] Where the gospel comes to a people, and is but coldly received, and has not its proper effects upon their hearts and lives, it is usually followed with dreadful judgments. [2.] God gives warning to men of his judgments before he sends them; he sounds an alarm by the written word, by ministers, by men's own consciences, and by the signs of the times; so that if a people be surprised, it is their own fault. [3.] The anger of God against a people makes dreadful work among them; it embitters all their comforts, and makes even life itself bitter and burthensome. [4.] God does not in this world stir up all his wrath, but sets bounds to the most terrible judgments. [5.] Corruption of doctrine and worship in the church, are themselves great judgments, and the usual causes and tokens of other judgments coming on a people.

5. Before the other three trumpets are sounded, here is solemn warning given to the world, how terrible the calamities would be, that should follow them, and how miserable those times and places would be, on which they fell, v. 13. First, The messenger was an angel flying in the midst of heaven, as in haste, and coming on an awful errand. Secondly, The message was a denunciation of further and greater woe and misery than the world had hitherto endured. Here are three woes, to shew how much the calamities coming should exceed those that had been already, or to hint how every one of the three succeeding trumpets should introduce its particular and distinct calamity. If lesser judgments do not take effect, but the church and the world grow worse under them, they must expect greater; and God will be known by the judgments that are come upon the nations; and he expects, when he comes to punish the world, the inhabitants thereof should tremble before him.

cap. ix. In this chapter, we have an account of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, the appearances that attended them, and the events that were to follow; the fifth trumpet, v. 1. 12. the sixth, v. 13, &c.

1. And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. 2. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. 3. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. 4. And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. 5. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. 6. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. 7. And the shapes of the locusts were like... unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men. 8. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. 9. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. 10. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months. 11. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon. 12. One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

Upon the sounding of this trumpet, the things to be observed are, 1. A star falling down from heaven to the earth. Some think this star represents some eminent bishop in the Christian church, some angel of the church; for in the same way of speaking by which pastors are called stars, the church is called heaven; but who this is, expositors do not agree. Some understand it of Boniface the third bishop of Rome, who assumed the title of universal bishop, by the favour of the emperor Phocas, who, being a usurper and tyrant in the state, allowed Boniface to be so in the church, as the reward of his flattery. 2. To this fallen star was given the key of the bottomless pit. Having now conveyed us to a New Jericho, the Antichrist, the minister of the Devil; and by the permission of Christ, who had taken from him the keys of the church, he becomes the Devil's turnkey, to let loose the powers of hell against the churches of Christ. 3. Upon the opening of the bottomless pit there arose a great smoke, which darkened the sun and the air. The devils are the powers of darkness, hell is the place of darkness. The Devil carries on his designs by blinding the eyes of men, by extinguishing their natural knowledge, and promoting ignorance and error; he first deceives men, and then destroys them; wretched souls follow him in the dark, or they durst not follow him. 4. Out of this dark smoke there came a swarm of locusts, one of the plagues of Egypt, the Devil's emissaries headed by antichrist, all the rout and rabble of antichristian orders, to promote superstition, idolatry, error, and cruelty; and these had, by the just permission of God, power to hurt those who had not the mark of God in their foreheads. 5. The hurt they were to do them, was not a bodily, but a spiritual hurt; they should not in a military way destroy all by fire and sword; the trees and the grass should be untouched, and those they hurt, should not be slain; it should not be a persecution, but a secret poison and infection in their souls, which should rob them of their purity, and afterward of their peace. Hereby is a poison in the soul, working slowly and secretly, but will be bitterness in the end. 6. They had no power so much as to hurt those who had the seal of God in their foreheads. God's electing, effectual, distinguishing grace will preserve his people from total and final apostasy. 7. The power given to these factors for hell is limited in point of time, three months, a certain season, and but a short season, though short we cannot tell: gospel-seasons have their limits, and times of seduction are limited too. 8. Though it would be short, it would be very sharp, insomuch that those who were made to feel the malignity of this poison in their consciences, would be weary of their lives; v. 6. A wounded spirit who can bear? 9. These locusts were of a monstrous size and shape, v. 7, 8, &c. They were equipt for their work like horses prepared to battle. (1.) They pretended to great authority, and seemed to be assured of victory; They had crowns like gold on their heads; it was not true, but a counterfeit authority. (2.) They had the shew of wisdom and sagacity, the face of men, though the spirit of devils. (3.) They had all the allurements of seeming beauty, to insnare and deceive the minds of men, hair like women; their way of worship was very gaudy and ornamental. (4.) Though they appeared with the tenderness of women, they had the teeth of lions, were really cruel creatures. (5.) They had the defence and protection of earthly powers, breastplates of iron. (6.) They made a mighty noise in the world, they flew from one country to another, and the noise of their motion was like that of an army with chariots and horses. (7.) Though at first they soothed and flattered men with a fair appearance, there was a sting in their tails; the cup of their abominations contained that, which, though luxurious at first, would at length bite like a serpent, and sting like an adder. (8.) The king and commander of this hellish squadron is here described, as an angel, so he was by nature an angel, once one of the angels of heaven. [2.] The angel of the bottomless pit; an angel still, but a fallen angel, fallen into the bottomless pit, vastly large, and out of which there is no recovery. [3.] In these infernal regions he is a sort of prince and governor, and has the powers of darkness under his rule and command. [4.] His true name is Abaddon, Apollyon—a destroyer, for that is his business, his design, and employment, to which he diligently attends, in which he is very successful, and takes a horrid hellish pleasure; it is about this destroying work that he sends out his emissaries and armies to destroy the souls of men. And now here we have the end of one woe; and where one ends, another begins.

13. And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, 14. Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. 15. And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men. 16. And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them. 17. And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinet, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone. 18. By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire and by the smoke and by the brimstone which issued out of their mouths. 19. For their power is in their mouths, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.
And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: 21. Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

Here let us consider the preface to this vision, and then the vision itself.

I. The preface to this vision; (v. 13, 14.) A voice was heard from the horns of the golden altar; where observe, 1. The power of the church’s enemies restrained all God gives the word to have them turned loose. 2. When nations are ripe for punishment, those instruments of God’s anger that were before restrained, are now let loose upon them, v. 14. 3. The instruments that God makes use of to punish a people, may sometimes lie at a great distance from them, so that no danger may be apprehended from them. These four messengers of divine judgment lay bound in the river Euphrates, a great way from the European part of the Turkish power, till the time was come when they should make their work. The last of these, the angel {v. 14,} that gives the name to this chapter, signifies the last of all the plagues, and points out the time of the end, or the consummation of all things. For he was by the spirit that went over the four rivers, the four quarters of the world, and the means were prepared for the great work of vengeance, and the time was at hand when this work should come home to men, and bring death and destruction on them. The meaning of the voice, ^I.~ is, God will in due time set loose his power, and then his vengeance will fall on his enemies, who are now restrained.

II. The vision itself; (v. 15, 16.) And the four angels that had been bound in the great river Euphrates, were now loosed. And here observe, 1. The time of their military operations and executions is limited to an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. Prophetic characters of time are hardly to be understood by those that endure in faith, and the time is fixed to an hour, when it shall begin, and when it shall end; and how far the execution shall prevail, even to a third part of the inhabitants of the earth. God will make the wrath of man praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. 2. The army that was to execute this great commission, is mustered, and the number found to be of homesteads to two hundred thousand and thousand; but the are left to guess what the infantry might be. In general, it tells us, the armies of the Mahometan empire should be vastly great; and so it is certain they were. 3. Their formidable equipage and appearance, v. 17. As the horses were fierce, like lions, and eager to rush into the battle; so they who sat upon them, were clad in bright and costly armour, with all the ensigns of martial courage, zeal, and resolution. 4. Their artillery, by which they made such slaughter, described by fire, smoke, and brimstone, issuing out of the mouths of their horses, and the stings that were in their tails. It is Mr. Mede’s opinion, that this is a prediction of great guns, those instruments of destruction which were used to make such destruction: he observes, These were first used by the Turks at the siege of Constantinople, and, being new and strange, were very terrible, and did great execution. However, here seems to be an allusion to what is mentioned in the former vision, that, as antichrist had his forces of a spiritual nature, like scorpions poisoning the minds of men with error and idolatry; so the Turks, who were raised up against antichrist to bind his power, had their scorpions and their stings too, to hurt and kill their bodies, who had been the murderers of so many souls. 5. And lastly, Observe the impenitency of the antichristian generation under these dreadful judgments; (v. 20.) the rest of the men who were not killed, repented not, they still persisted in those sins for which God was so severely punishing them; which were, (1.) Their idolatry; they would not cast away their images, though they could do them no good, could neither see, nor hear, nor walk. (2.) Their murders, (v. 21.) which they had committed upon the saints and servants of Christ. Popery is a bloody religion, and seems resolved to continue such. (3.) Their sorceries; they have their charms, and magic arts, and rites in exorcism and other things. (4.) Their fornication; they allow both spiritual and carnal impurity, and promote it in themselves and others. (5.) Their thefts; they have by unjust means heaped together a vast deal of wealth, to the injury and impoverishing of families, cities, princes, and nations. These are the flagrant crimes of antichrist and his agents; and though God has revealed his wrath from heaven against them, they obstinate, hardened, and impenitent, and judicially so, for they must be destroyed. From this sixth trumpet learn, [1.] God can make one enemy of the church to be a scourge and plague to another. [2.] He who is the Lord of hosts, has vast armies at his command, to serve his own purposes. [3.] The most formidable powers have limits set them, which they cannot transgress. [4.] When God’s judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants thereof should repent of sin, and turn to righteousness. [5.] Impunity under divine judgments is an iniquity that will be the ruin of sinners; for where God judges, he will overcome.

CHAP. X.

This chapter is an introduction to the latter part of the prophecies of this book. Whether what is contained between this and the sounding of the seventh trumpet, (ch. 11. 15.) be a distinct prophecy from the other, or only a more general account of some of the principal things included in the other, is disputed by our curious inquirers into these abstruse writings. However, here we have, I. A remarkable description of a very glorious angel with an open book in his hand, v. 1. 2. 3. II. An account of seven thunders which the apostle heard, as echoing to the voice of this angel, and communicating some discoveries, which the apostle was not yet allowed to write, v. 4. 3. The solemn oath taken by him who had the book in his hand, v. 5. 6. 7. IV. The charge given to the apostle, and observed by him, v. 8. 11.

1. AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire: 2. And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth, 3. And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices. 4. And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not. 5. And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, 6. And sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer: 7. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

Here we have an account of another vision the apostle was favoured with, between the sounding of the sixth trumpet and that of the seventh. And we observe,

1. The person who was principally concerned in communicating this discovery to John—an angel from heaven, another mighty angel; who is so set forth as would induce one to think it could be no other than our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. (1.) He was clothed with a cloud; he vails his glory, which is too great for mortality to behold; and he throws a veil upon his dispensation, like a cloudy and thick curtain, v. 1. (2.) A rainbow was upon his head; he is always mindful of his covenant; and when his conduct is most mysterious, yet it is perfectly just and faithful. (3.) His face was as the sun, all bright, and full of lustre and majesty, ch. 1. 16. (4.) His feet were as pillars of fire; all his ways, both of grace and providence, are pure and steady.

2. His station and posture; he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth; to shew the absolute power and dominion he had over the world. And he held in his hand a little book opened, probably the same that was before sealed, but was now opened, and gradually fulfilled by him.

3. His awful voice; He cried aloud, as when a lion roareth; v. 3. and his awful voice was echoed by seven thunders, seven solemn and terrible ways of discovering the mind of God.

4. The prohibition given to the apostle, that he should not publish, but conceal, what he had learned from the seven thunders, v. 4. The apostle was for preserving and publishing every thing he saw and heard in these visions, but the time was not yet come.

5. The solemn oath taken by this mighty angel. (1.) The manner of swearing; he lifted up his hand to heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever; by himself, as God often has done; or by God, as God, to whom he, as Lord, Redeemer, and Ruler of the world, now appeals. (2.) The matter of the oath, that there shall be time no longer; either, (1.) That there shall be now no longer delay in fulfilling the predictions of this book, than till the last angel should sound; then every thing should be put into speedy execution, the mystery of God shall be finished, v. 7. or, (2.) That when this mystery of God is finished, time itself shall be no more, as being the measure of things that are in a mutable changing state; but all things shall be at length for ever fixed, and so time itself swallowed up in eternity.

6. And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. 9. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. 10. And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. 11. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Here we have, 1. A strict charge given to the apostle, which was, (1.) That he should go and take the little book out of the hands of that mighty angel mentioned before. This charge was given, not by the angel himself who stood upon the earth, but by the same voice from heaven. And in this place he had lain an injunction upon him not to write what he had discerned by the seven thunders.

2. To eat the book; this part of the charge was given by the angel himself, hinting to the apostle, that before he should publish what he had discovered, he must more thoroughly digest the predictions, and be in himself suitably affected with them.

And the charge given of the truth and relihs which this little book would have, when the apostle had taken it in; at first, while in his mouth, sweet. All persons feel a pleasure in looking into future events, and in having them foretold; and all good men love to receive a word from God, of what import soever it be. But when this book of prophecy was more thoroughly digested by the apostle, the contents would be bitter; these were things so awful and terrible, such grievous persecutions of the people of God, and such desolation made in the earth, that the foresight and forknowledge of them would not be pleasant, but painful to the mind of the apostle: thus was Ezekiel's prophecy to him, ch. 3. 3.

3. The apostle's discharge of the duty he was called to; (v. 10.) He took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up, and he found the relish to be as was told him. (1.) It becomes the servants of God to digest in their own souls the messages they bring to others in his name, and to be suitably affected therewith themselves. (2.) It becomes them to deliver every message with which they are charged, whether pleasing or unpleasing to men. That which is least pleasing, may be most profitable; however, God's messengers must not keep back any part of the counsel of God.

4. The apostle is made to know that this book of prophecy which he had now taken in, was not given him merely to gratify his own curiosity, or to affect him with pleasure or pain, but to be communicated by him to the world; here his prophetic commission seems to be renewed, and he is ordered to prepare for another embassy, to convey those declarations of the mind and will of God, which are of great importance to all the world, and to the highest and greatest men in the world, and such should be read and recorded in many languages; this indeed is the case; we have them in our language, and are all obliged to attend to them, humbly to inquire into the meaning of them, and firmly to believe that every thing shall have its accomplishment in the proper time; and when the prophecies are fulfilled, the sense and truth of them will appear, and the omniscience, power, and faithfulness of the great God will be adored.

CHAP. XI.

In this chapter, we have an account, I. Of the measuring reed given to the apostle, to take the dimensions of the temple, v. 1. 2. II. Of the two witnesses of God, v. 3. 13. 14. III. Of the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and what followed upon it, v. 15, &c.

1. And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. 2. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.
This prophetic passage about measuring the temple, is a plain reference to what we find in Ezekiel's vision, Ezek. 40. 3, 8c. But how to understand either the one or the other, is not so easy; it should seem, the design of measuring the temple in the former case, was in order to the rebuilding of it, and that with advantage; the design of this measure seems to be either, 1. For the preservation of it in those times of public danger and calamity that are here foretold; or, 2. For its trial; that it may be seen how far it agrees with the standard, or pattern in the mount; or, 3. For its reformation; that what is redundant, deficient, or changed, may be regulated according to the true model. Observe,

1. How much was to be measured. (1.) The temple; the gospel-church in general; whether it be so built, so constituted, as the gospel rule directs; whether it be too narrow, or too large; that door to wide, or narrow; or, (2.) The altar. To God which was the place of the most solemn acts of worship, may be put for religious worship in general; whether the church has the true altars, both as to substance and situation; as to substance, whether they take Christ for their Altar, and lay down all their offerings there; and in situation, whether the Altar be in the holiest; that is, whether they worship God in the Spirit and in truth; (3.) This worship is to be most suitable; whether they make God's glory their end, and his word their rule, in all their acts of worship; and whether they come to God with suitable affections, and whether their conversation be as becomes the gospel.

2. What was not to be measured, (v. 2.) and why it should be left out. (1.) What was not to be measured; the court which is without the temple, measured not. Some say that Herod, in the additions made to the temple, built an outer court, and called it, the court of the Gentiles. Some tell us, that Adrian built the city and an outer court, and called it Elia, and gave it to the Gentiles. (2.) Why was not the outer court mentioned? This was no part of the temple, according to the model either of Solomon or Zerubbabel, and therefore God would have no regard to it. He would not mark it out for preservation as designed for the Gentiles, to bring Pagan ceremonies and customs, and to annex them to the gospel-churches, so Christ abandoned it to them, to be used as they pleased; and both that and the city were trodden under foot for a certain time; forty and two months; which some would have to be the whole time of the reign of antichrist. They who worship in the outer court, are either such as worship in a false manner, or with hypocritical hearts; and these are rejected of Christ, and shall be found among his enemies. From the whole observe, (1.) God will have a temple and an altar in the world, till the end of time. (2.) He has a strict regard to this temple, and observes how every thing is managed in it. (3.) Those who worship in the outer court, will be rejected; and only those who worship within the wall, accepted. (4.) The holy city, the gospel-church, was very much upon the world. But, (5.) The desolations of the churches are for a limited time, and for a short time, and she shall be delivered out of all her troubles.

And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. 4. These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. 5. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceed out of their mouth, and devour their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. 6. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. 7. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. 8. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. 9. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. 10. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another, because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. 11. And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. 12. And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them. 13. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

In this time of treading down, God has reserved to him his faithful witnesses, who will not fail to attest the truth of his word and worship, and the excellency of his ways. Here observe,

1. The number of these witnesses; it is but a small number, and yet it is sufficient. (1.) It is but small; many will own and acknowledge Christ in times of prosperity, who will desert and deny him in times of persecution; one witness, when the cause is upon trial, is worth many at other times. (2.) It is a sufficient number; for in the mouth of two witnesses every cause shall be established. Christ sent out his disciples two by two, to preach the gospel. Some think these two witnesses are Enoch and Elias, who are to return to the earth for a time: others, the church of the believing Jews, and that of the Gentiles; it should rather seem, they are God's eminent faithful ministers, who shall not only continue to profess the Christian religion, but to preach it, in the worst of times.

2. The time of their prophesying, or bearing their testimony for Christ; a thousand two hundred and threescore days; that is (as many think) to the period of the reign of antichrist; and if the beginning of that interval could be ascertained, this number of prophetical days, taking a day for a year, would give us a prospect when the end shall be.

3. Their habit, and posture; they prophesy in sackcloth, as those that are deeply affected with the low and distressed state of the churches and interest of Christ in the world.
4. How they were supported and supplied during the discharge of their great and hard work; they stood before the God of the whole earth, and he gave them power to prophesy. He made them to be like Zerubbabel and Joshua, the two olive-trees and candlestick in the vision of Zechariah, ch. 4. 3, &c. God gave them the oil of holy zeal, and courage, and strength, and comfort; he made them olive-trees, and their lamps of profession were kept burning by the oil of inward gracious principles, which were fed from God. They had oil not only in their lamps, but in their vessels; habits of spiritual life, light, and zeal.

5. Their security and defence during the time of their prophesying; (v. 5.) If any attempted to hurt them, fire proceeded out of their mouths, and devoured them. Some think this alludes to Elias’s calling for fire from heaven, to consume the captains and their chariots, 2 Kings 2. 12. God promised the prophet Jeremiah, (ch. 5. 14.) Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people shall be wood, and it shall devour them. By their praying and preaching, and courage in suffering, they shall gall and wound the very hearts and consciences of many of their persecutors, who shall go away self-condemned, and be even terrors to themselves; like Pashur, at whose mouth fire was, Isaiah 5. 4. They shall have that free access to God, and that interest in him, that, at their prayers, God will inflict plagues and judgments upon their enemies, as he did on Pharaoh, turning their rivers into blood; and restraining the dews of heaven, shutting heaven up, that no rain shall fall for many days, as he did at the prayers of Elias, 1 Kings 17. 1. God has ordained his arrows for the persecutors, and is often plaguing them while they are persecuting his people; they find it hard work to kick against the pricks.

6. The slaying of the witnesses, to make their testimony more strong; they must seal it with their blood. Here observe, (1.) The time when they should be killed; when they have finished their testimony. They are immortal, they are invulnerable, till their work be done. Some think it ought to be rendered, when they were about to finish their testimony, because they were prophesied in sackcloth the greatest part of the 1260 years, then they should feel the last effect of antichristian malice. (2.) The enemy that should overcome and slay them; the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit. Antichrist, the great instrument of the Devil, should make war against them, not only with the arms of subtle and sophistical learning, but chiefly with open force and violence; and God would permit his enemies to fell against his witnesses for a time. (3.) The barbarous usage of these slain witnesses; the malice of their enemies was not satiated with their blood and death, but pursued even their dead bodies. [1.] They would not allow them a quiet grave; their bodies were cast out in the open street, the high street of Babylon, or in the high road leading to the city. This city is spiritually called Sodom, for monstrous wickedness; and Egypt for idolatry and tyranny; and here Christ in his mystical body has suffered more than in any place in the world. [2.] Their dead bodies were insulted by the inhabitants of the earth, and their death was a matter of mirth and joy to the antichristian world, v. 10. They were glad to be rid of these witnesses, who by their doctrine and example had teased, terrified, and tormented the conscience; and of their false idolatries and spiritual weapons cut wicked men to the heart, and fill them with the greatest rage and malice against the faithful.

7. The resurrection of these witnesses, and the consequences thereof. Observe, (1.) The time of their rising again; after they had lain dead three days and a half, (v. 11.) a short time in comparison of that in which they had prophesied. Here may be a reference to the resurrection of Christ, who is the Resurrection and the Life. Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Or, there may be a reference to the resurrection of Lazarus on the fourth day, when they thought it impossible. God’s witnesses may be slain, but they shall arise and shine in their spiritual resurrection; but in their successors. God will revive his work, when it seems to be dead in the world. (2.) The power by which they were raised; The spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet. God put not only life, but courage into them; God can make the dry bones to live; it is the Spirit of life from God that quickens dead souls, and shall quicken the dead bodies of his people, and his dying interest in the world.

8. The ascension of the witnesses into heaven, and the consequences thereof, v. 12, 13. Observe, (1.) Their ascension. By heaven we may understand, either some more eminent station in the church, the kingdom of grace in this world, or a high place in the kingdom of glory above. The former seems to be the meaning; They ascended to heaven in a cloud, in a figurative, not in a literal sense, and their enemies saw them. It will be no small part of the punishment of persecutors, both in this world, and at the great day, that they shall see the faithful servants of God greatly honoured and advanced. To this honour they did not attempt to ascend, till God called them, and said, Come up hither. The Lord’s witnesses must wait for their advancement, both in the church, and in heaven, till God calls them; they must not be weary of suffering and service, nor too hastily grasp at the reward; but stay till their Master calls them, and then they may gladly ascend to him. (2.) The consequences of their ascension; a mighty shock and convulsion in the antichristian empire, and the fall of a tenth part of the city. Some refer this to the beginning of the reformation from popery; when many princes and states fell off from their subjection to Rome. This great work met with great opposition; all the western world felt a great concussion, and the antichristian interest received a great blow, and lost a great deal of ground and interest. [1.] By the sword of war, which was then drawn; and many of those who fought under the banner of antichrist, were slain by it. [2.] By the sword of the Spirit; The fear of God fell upon many. They were convinced of their errors, superstition, and idolatry; and by true repentance, and embracing the truth, they gave glory to the God of heaven. Thus when God’s work and witnesses revive, the Devil’s work and witnesses fall before him.

14. The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. 15. And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. 16. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17. Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, who art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. 18. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them who destroy the earth. 19. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament, and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and great hail.

We have here the sounding of the seventh and last trumpet, which is ushered in by the usual warning and demand of attention; The second woe is past, and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly. Then the seventh angel sounded. This had been suspended for some time, till the apostle had been made acquainted with some intervening occurrences of very great moment, and worthy of his notice and observation. But what he before expected, he now heard— the seventh angel sounding. Here observe the effects and consequences of this trumpet, thus sounded.

1. Here were loud and joyful acclamations of the saints and angels in heaven. Observe, (1.) The manner of their adorations; they rose from their seats, and fell upon their faces, and worshipped God; they did it with reverence and humility. (2.) The matter of the adorations. [1.] They thankfully recognise the right of our God and Saviour, to rule and reign over all the world; (v. 15.) The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. They were always so in title, both by creation and purchase. [2.] They thankfully observe his actual possession of them, and reign over them; they give him thanks because he had taken to him his great power, asserted his rights, exercised them, and made them title into possession. [3.] They rejoice that this his time shall never end; He shall reign for ever and ever, till all enemies be put under his feet; none shall ever wrest the sceptre out of his hand. 2. Here were angry resentments in the world, at these just appearances and actings of the power of God; (v. 18.) The nations were angry; not only had been so, but were so still; their hearts rose up against God, they met his wrath with their own anger. It was a time when God was taking a just revenge upon the enemies of his people, recompensing tribulation to those who had troubled them. It was a time in which he was beginning to reward his people's faithful services and sufferings; and their enemies could not bear it, they fretted against God, and so increased their guilt, and hastened their destruction.

3. Another consequence was, the opening of the temple of God in heaven. By this may be meant, that here is now a more free communication between heaven and earth; prayer and praises more freely and frequently ascending, and graces and blessings plentifully descending. But it rather seems to intend the church of God on earth, a heavenly temple. It is an allusion to the various circumstances of things in the time of the first temple, under idolatrous and wicked princes, it was shut up and neglected; but under religious and reforming princes, it was opened and frequented. So, during the power of antichrist, the temple of God seemed to be shut up, and was so in a great degree; but now it was opened again. At this opening of it, Observe, (1.) What was seen there; the ark of God's testament. This was in the holy of holies; in this ark the tables of the law were kept. As before Josiah's time, the law of God had been lost, but was then found; so in the reign of antichrist, God's law was laid aside, and made void by their traditions and decrees; the scriptures were locked up from the people, and they must not look into these divine oracles; now they are opened, now they are brought to the views of all. This was an unanswerable and invaluable privilege; and this, that the ark of that testament, was a token of the presence of God returned to his people, and his favour towards them in Jesus Christ the Propitiation.

(2.) What was heard and felt there; Lightnings, voices, thunders, an earthquake, and great hail. The great blessing of the reformation was attended with so very awful providences; and by terrible things in righteousness, God would answer those prayers that were presented in his holy temple now opened. All the great revolutions of the world are concerted in heaven, and are the answers of the prayers of the saints.

CHAP. XII.

It is generally agreed by the most learned expositors, that the narrative we have here in these closing chapters, from the sounding of the seventh trumpet to the opening of the vials, is not a prediction of things to come, but rather a recapitulation and representation of things past; which as God would have the apostle to foresee while future, he would have him to review now that they were past, that he might have a more perfect idea of them in his mind, and might observe the agreement between the prophecy and that Providence that is always fulfilling the scriptures. In this chapter, we have an account of the contest between the church and antichrist; the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent. 1. As it was begun in heaven, v. 1. 14. As it was carried on in the wilderness, v. 15, &c.

1. AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: 2. And she being with child, cried, travelling in birth, and pained to be delivered. 3. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. 4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman who was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. 5. And she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days. 7. And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, 8. And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. 9. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. 10. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, who accused them before our God day and night. 11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

Here we see that early prophesy eminently fulfilled, in which God said he would put enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, Gen. 3. 15. You will observe,

1. The attempts of Satan and his agents to prevent the increase of the church, by devouring her offspring. (1.) As a woman, the weaker part of the world, but the spouse of Christ, and the mother of the saints. (2.) As clothed with the sun, the imputed righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ; having put on Christ, who is the Sun of righteousness. She, by her relation to Christ, is invested with holiness, rights, and privileges, shew'd in his rays. (3.) As having the moon under her feet; that is, the world; she stands upon it, but lives above it; her heart and hope are not set upon sublunary things, but on the things that are in heaven, where her Head is. (4.) As having on her head a crown of twelve stars, that is, the doctrine of the gospel preached by the twelve apostles, which is a crown of glory to all believers. (5.) As bearing travail, crying out, and pained to be delivered; she was pregnant, and now in pain to bring forth a holy progeny to Christ; desirous that what was begun in the conviction of sinners, might end in their conversion; and when the children were brought to the birth, there might be strength to bring forth, and she might see of the travails of her soul.

2. How the grand enemy of the church is represented. (1.) As a great red dragon; a dragon, for strength, and power, and wisdom; a red dragon, for fierceness and crueltly. (2.) As having seven heads, that is, placed on seven hills, as Rome was; and therefore it is probable that pagan Rome is here meant. (3.) As having ten horns, divided into ten provinces, as the Roman empire was by Augustus Caesar. (4.) As having seven crowns upon his head, which is after expounded to be seven kings, ch. 17. 10. (5.) As drawing with his tail a third part of the stars in heaven, and casting them down to the earth; turning the ministers and professors of the Christian religion out of their places and privileges, and making them as weak and useless as he could. (6.) As standing before the woman, to devour her child as soon as it should be born; very vigilant to crush the Christian religion in its birth, and entirely to prevent the growth and continuance of it in the world. (7.) As cast out of heaven, and cast off from the church; for, 1. She was safely delivered of a man-child; (v. 5.) by which some understand Christ, others Constantine; but others, with greater propriety, a race of true believers, strong and united, resembling Christ, and designed, under him, to rule the nations with a rod of iron; that is, to judge the world by their doctrine and lives now, and as assessors with Christ at the great day. 2. Care was taken of this child; it was caught up to God, and to his throne; that is, taken into his special, powerful, and immediate protection. The Christian religion has been from its infancy the special care of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. 3. As brought up to heaven, and displayed there as the man-child, he engaged all the powers of heaven against him; (v. 7.) There was war in heaven; heaven will espouse the quarrel of the church. Here observe, 1. The seat of this war—in heaven; in the church, which is the kingdom of God on earth; under the care of heaven, and in the same interest. 2. The parties—Michael, and his angels, on one side; and the dragon, and his angels, on the other; Christ, the great Angel of the covenant, and his faithful followers; and Satan and all his instruments. This latter party would be much superior in number and outward strength to the other; but the strength of the church lies in having the Lord Jesus for the Captain of their salvation. 3. The success of the battle; The dragon and his angels fought, and prevailed not; there was a great struggle on both sides, but the victory fell to Christ and his church, and the dragon and his angels were not only conquered, but cast out; the Pagan idolatry, which was worshipping devils, was exterminated out of the empire in the time of Constantine. 4. The triumphant song that was composed and used on this occasion, v. 10, 11. Here observe,

(1.) How the conqueror is adored; Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: Now God has shewed himself to be a strong and mighty Saviour; his own arm has brought salvation, and now his kingdom will be greatly enlarged and established. The salvation and strength of the church are all to be ascribed to the King and Head of the church.

(2.) How the conquered enemy is described; [1.] By his malice; he was the accuser of our brethren, and accused them before our God night and day. He appeared before God as an adversary to the church, continually bringing in accusations and accusations against them, whether true or false; thus he accused Job, and thus he accused Joshua the high priest, Zech. 3. 1. Though he hates the presence of God, yet he is willing to appear there, to accuse the people of God. Let us therefore take heed that we give him no cause of accusation against us; and then God may said, we were continually go in before the Lord, and accuse and condemn ourselves, and commit our cause to Christ as our Advocate. [2.] By his disappointment and defeat he and all his accusations are cast out, the indictments quashed, and the accuser turned out of the court with just indignation.

(3.) How the victory was gained; the servants of God overcame Satan, [3.] By the blood of the Lamb, as the meritorious cause. Christ by dying destroyed him that hath the power of death, that is, the Devil. [2.] By the word of their testimony, as the great instrument of war; the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; by a resolute, powerful preaching of the everlasting gospel, which is mighty, through God, to fell down strong-holds; by their courage and patience in sufferings; they loved not their lives so well, but they could give them up to death, could lay them down in Christ's cause; their love to their own lives was overcome by stronger affections of another nature; and this their courage and zeal helped to confound their enemies, to convince many of the spectators, to confirm the souls of the faithful, and so contributed greatly to this victory.

12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. 13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child. 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. 15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. 16. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. 17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

We have here an account of this war, so happily finished in heaven, or in the church, as it was again renewed and carried on in the wilderness, the place to which the church was fled, and where she had been for some time secured by the special care of her God and Saviour. Observe I. The warning given of the distress and calamity that should fall upon the inhabitants of the world in general, through the wrath and rage of the Devil. For though his malice is chiefly bent against the servants of God, yet he is an enemy and hater of mankind as such; and being defeated in his designs against the church, he is resolved to give all the disturbance he can to the world in general (v. 12.) Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and the sea. The rage of Satan grows so much the greater, as he is limited both in place and time; when he was confined to the wilderness, and had but a short time to reign there, he comes with the greater wrath. 11. His second attempt upon the church now in the wilderness; He persecuted the woman, which brought forth the man-child, v. 13. Observe, 1. He knew that God had taken of his church; he had conveyed her, as on eagle's wings, into a place of safety provided for her, where she was to continue for a certain space of time; couched in prophetic characters, taken from Dan. 7. 25. 2. The continual malice of the dragon against the church; her obscurity could not altogether protect her; the old subtle serpent, which at first lurked in paradise, now follows the church into the wilderness, and casts out a flood of water after her, to carry her away. This is thought to be meant of a flood of error and heresy, which was breathed by Arius, Nestorius, Pelagius, and many more, by which the church of God was in danger of being overwhelmed and carried away. The church of God is in more danger from heretics than from persecutors; and heresies are as certainly from the Devil as open force and violence.

3. The seasonable help provided for the church in this dangerous juncture; (v. 16.) The earth helped the woman, and opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood. Some think, we are to understand the swarms of Goths and Vandals that invaded the Roman empire, and found work for the Arian rulers, who otherwise would have been as furious persecutors as the Pagan had been, and had exercised great cruelties already; but God opened a way of war, and the flood was in a manner swallowed up thereby, and the church enjoyed some respite. God often sends the sword to avenge the quarrel of his covenant; and when men choose new gods, then there is danger of war in the gates; in testicle broils and contentious often end in the invasions of a common enemy.

4. The Devil, being thus defeated in his designs upon the universal church, now turns his rage against particular persons and places; His face against the woman pushes him on to make war with the remnant of her seed. Some think hereby are meant the Albigenenses, who were first by Dioclesian driven up into barren and mountainous places, and afterward cruelly murdered by Popish rage and power, for several generations; and for no other reason than because they kept the commandments of God, and held the testimony of Jesus Christ. Their fidelity to God and Christ, both in doctrine, worship, and practice, was that which exposed them to the rage of Satan and his instruments; and such fidelity will expose men still, less or more, to the end of the world, when the last enemy shall be destroyed.

CHAP. XIII.

We have, in this chapter, a further discovery and description of the church's enemies; not other enemies than are mentioned before, but described after another manner, that the methods of their enmity may more fully appear: they are represented in two beasts; the first you have an account of, v. 1-10, the second, v. 11-13. We have first some understand Rome Pagan, and by the second, Rome Papal; but others understand Rome Papal to be represented by both these beasts; by the first in its secular power, by the second in its ecclesiastical.

1. And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his head the name of blasphemy. 2. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. 3. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast. 4. And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast; and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him? 5. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. 6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven. 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. 8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

9. If any man have an ear, let him hear. 10. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

We have here an account of the rise, figure, and progress of the first beast; and observe,

1. From what situation the apostle saw this monster; he seemed to himself to stand upon the seashore, though, it is probable, he was still in a rapture; but he took himself to be in the island Patmos, though, whether in the body, or out of the body, he could not tell.

2. From whence this beast came—out of the sea, and yet, by the description of it, it should be more likely to be a land monster; but the more monstrous and extraordinary thing about it was, the more proper an emblem it would be to set forth the mystery of iniquity and tyranny.

3. What was the form and shape of this beast; it was for the most part like a leopard, but its feet were like the feet of a bear, and its mouth as the lion of a bear; it had seven heads, and ten horns, and upon its heads the name of blasphemy; a most horrid, hidden monster! In some part of this description here seems to be an allusion to Daniel's vision of the four beasts, which represented the four monarchies, Dan. 7. 1—3, 16. One of those beasts was like a lion, another like a bear, and another like a leopard; this beast was a sort of composition of those three, with the fierceness, strength, and swiftness, of them all; the seven heads and the ten horns seem to design its several powers; the ten crowns of its tributary princes: the word blasphemy on its forehead, proclaims its direct enmity and opposition to the glory of God, by promoting idolatry.

4. The source and spring of his authority—the dragon; he gave him his power, and seat, and great authority; he was set up by the Devil, and supported by him to do his work, and promote his interest; and he lent him all the assistance he could.

5. A dangerous wound given him, and yet unexpected. Some think that by this wounded head we are to understand the abolishing of pagan idolatry; and by the healing of the wound, the introducing of the popish idolatry, the same in substance with the former, only in a new dress, and which as effectually answers the Devil's design as that did.

6. The honour and worship paid to this infernal monster healed. v. 2d Some think that after the beast, they did admire his power, and policy, and success, and they worshipped the dragon that gave power to the beast, and they worshipped the beast, they paid honour and subjection to the Devil and his instruments, and thought there was no power able to withstand them; so great were the darkness, degeneracy, and madness of the world.

7. How he exercised his infernal power and policy; he had a mouth, speaking great things, and blasphemies; he blasphemed God, the name of God, the tabernacle of God, and all them that dwell in heaven; and he made war with the saints, and overcame them, and gained a sort of universal empire in the world. His malice was principally levelled at the God of heaven, and his heavenly attendance; at God, in making images of him that is invisible, and in worshipping them; at the tabernacle of God, that is, say, some, at the human nature of the Lord Jesus Christ, in which God dwells as in a tabernacle; this is dishonoured by their doctrine of transubstantiation, that will not suffer his body to be a true body, and will put the power of every priest to appear a body for Christ; and against them that dwell in heaven, the glorified saints, by putting them into the place of the pagan demons, and praying to them, which they are so far from being pleased with, that they truly judge themselves wronged and dishonoured by it; thus the malice of the Devil shews itself against heaven, and the blessed inhabitants of heaven; these are above the reach of his power; for he can do, is, to blaspheme them; but the saints on earth are more exposed to his cruelty, and he sometimes is permitted to triumph over them, and trample upon them.

8. The limitation of the devil's power and success, and that both as to time and persons. (1.) He is limited in point of time; his reign is to continue forty and two months, (v. 5.) suitable to the other prophetic characters of the reign of antichrist. (2.) He is limited as to the persons and people that he shall entirely subject to his will and power; it will be only those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life. Christ had a chosen remnant, redeemed by his blood, recorded in his book, sealed by his Spirit; and though the Devil and antichrist might overcome their bodily strength, and take away the natural life, they could never conquer their souls, nor prevail with them to forsake their Saviour, and revolt to his enemies.

9. Here is a demand of attention to what is here discovered of the great sufferings and troubles of the church, and an assurance given, that when God has accomplished his work on mount Zion, his refining work, then he will turn his hand against the enemies of his people, and they who have killed with the sword, shall themselves fall by the sword, (v. 10.) and they who led the people of God into captivity, shall also be delivered into captivity, and not that which will be proper exercise for the patience and faith of the saints; patience under the prospect of so great sufferings, and faith in the prospect of so glorious a deliverance.

11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them who dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. 13. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. 14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. 15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. 16. And he causeth all, both small and great, and rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: 17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and this number is Six hundred threescore and six.

Those who think the first beast signifies Rome pagan, by this second beast would understand Rome papal, that does promote idolatry and tyranny, but in a more soft and lamb-like manner: those that understand the first beast of the secular power of the papacy, take the second to intend its spiritual and ecclesiastical powers, which act under the mask of religion and charity to the souls of men. Here observe,

1. The form and shape of this second beast; he had two horns like a lamb, but a mouth that spake like the dragon: all agree that this must be some great impostor, who under a pretence of religion shall deceive the souls of men: the papists would have it to be Antichrist: Tyranus; but Dr. More has rejected that opinion, and fixes it upon the desecrated powers of the papacy. The pope shows the horns of a lamb, pretends to be the vicar of Christ upon earth, and so to be vested with his power and authority; but his speech bewrays him; for he gives forth those false doctrines, and cruel decrees, which shew him to belong to the dragon, and not to the Lamb.

2. The power which he exercises; all the power of the former beast; (v. 12.) he promotes the same interest, pursues the same design in substance, which is, to draw men off, from worshipping the true God, to worship those who by nature are no gods, and subject the souls and consciences of men to the will and authority of men, in opposition to the will of God; this design is promoted by popery as well as by paganism, and by the crafy arts of popery as well as by the secular power. He Fake secret and liberal interests of the Devil, though in a different manner.

3. The methods by which this second beast carried on his interests and designs; they are of three sorts; (1.) Lying wonders, pretended miracles, by which they should be deceived, and prevailed with to worship the former beast in this new image or shape that was now made for him; they would pretend to bring down fire from heaven, as Elias did; and cause a great smoke to rise to reach the clouds, as the magicians of Egypt, to do things that seem very wonderful, and by which unwary persons may be deluded: it is well known that the papal kingdom has been long supported by pretended miracles. (2.) Excommunications, anathemas, severe censures; by which they pretend to cut men off from Christ, and cast them into the power of the Devil, but these are not as they pretend them to be the secular power, that they may be put to death; and notwithstanding their vile hypocrisy, they are justly charged with killing those whom they cannot corrupt. (3.) By disfranchisement; allowing none to enjoy natural, civil, or municipal rights, who will not worship that papal beast, that is, the image of the pagan beast. It is made a qualification for buying and selling the rights of nature, as well as for places of profit and trust, that they have the mark of the beast in their forehead, and in their right hand; and that they have the name of the beast, and the number of his name: it is probable that the mark, the name, and the number of the beast, may all signify the same thing—that they make an open profession of their subjection and obedience to the papacy, which is receiving the mark in their forehead, and that they oblige themselves to use all their interest, power, and endeavour, to promote the papal authority, which is receiving the mark in their right hands. We are told that pope Martin V. in his bull added to the council of Constance, prohibits Roman catholics to suffer any heretics to dwell in their countries, or to make any bargains, use any trades, or bear any civil offices; which is a very absurd interpretation of this prophecy.

4. We have here the number of the beast, given in such a manner, as shews the infinite wisdom of God, and will sufficiently exercise all the wisdom and accuracy of men; The number is the number of a man, computed after the usual manner among men, and it is 666. Whether this be the number of the errors and heresies that are contained in popery, or rather, as others, the number of the years from its rise to its fall, is not certain, much less what that period is, which is described by these three numbers: the most admired dissertation on this intricate subject, is that of Dr. Potter, where the curious may find sufficient entertainment: it seems to me to be one of those seasons which God has reserved in his own power; only this we know, God has written Mene Tekel upon all his enemies; he has numbered their days, and they shall be finished, but his own kingdom shall endure for ever.

CHAP. XIV.

After an account of the great trials and sufferings which the servants of God had endured, we have now a more pleasant scene opening, the day begins now to dawn; and here we have represented, 1. The Lord Jesus at the head of his faithful followers, v. 1. 6. 11. Three angels seat successively to proclaim the fall of Babylon, and the antecedent and consequent to so great an event, v. 6. 13. 13. The vision of the harvest, v. 14. kc.

1. And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him a hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. 2. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: 3. And they sang as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, who were redeemed from the earth. 4. These are they who were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. These are they who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. 5. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God. Here we have one of the most pleasing sights that can be viewed in this world—The Lord Jesus Christ at the head of his faithful adherents and attendants. Here observe,

1. How Christ appears; as a Lamb standing upon Mount Sion. Mount Sion is the gospel-Church, Christ is with his church, and in the midst of her in all her troubles, and therefore she is not consumed.
It is his presence that secures her perseverance; he appears as a Lamb, a true Lamb, the Lamb of God: a counterfeit lamb rose out of the earth in the last chapter, which was really a dragon; here Christ appears as the true Passchal Lamb, to show that his mediatorial government is the fruit of his sufferings, and the cause of his people's safety and fidelity.

2. How his people appear; very honourably: (1.) As to the numbers, they are many, even all who were sealed; not one of them lost in all the tribulations through which they had gone. (2.) Their distinguishing badge; they had the name of God written in their foreheads, they made a bold and open profession of their faith in God and Christ; and this being followed by suitable acts, they are known and approved. (3.) Their congratulations and songs of praise, which were peculiar to the redeemed; (v. 5.) their praises were loud as the thunder, or as the voice of many waters; they were melodious, as of harpers; they were heavily, before the throne of God; the song was new, suited to the new covenant, and unto that new and gracious dispensation of Providence under which they now were; and their song was a secret to others, strangers intermeddled not with their joy; others might repeat the words of the song, but they were strangers to the true sense and spirit of it. (4.) Their character and description: [1.] They are clothed with white raiment, and have names written on their foreheads, who were made of harpers; they were heavenly, before the throne of God; the song was new, suited to the new covenant, and unto that new and gracious dispensation of Providence under which they now were; and their song was a secret to others, strangers intermeddled not with their joy; others might repeat the words of the song, but they were strangers to the true sense and spirit of it. (2.) By their loyalty and steadfast adherence to Christ; they follow the Lamb whithersoever he goes; they follow the conduct of his word, Spirit, and providence, leaving it to him to lead them into what duties and distresses it must please him to appoint for them. (3.) By their former designation to this honour; these were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits to God, and to the Lamb. v. 4. Here is plain evidence of a special redemption; they were redeemed from among men; some of the children of men are, by redeeming mercy, distinguished from others; they were the first-fruits to God, and to the Lamb, his choice ones, those but in a small way, yet the name of many more who should be followers of these, are given to them. [4.] By their universal integrity and conscientiousness; there was no guile found in them, and they were without fault before the throne of God; they were without any prevailing guilt, any allowed fault, their hearts were right with God; and as for their human infirmities, they were freely pardoned in Christ; this is the happy remnant who attend upon the Lamb, Jesus as their Head and Lord; he is glorified in them, and they in him.

6. And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people; 7. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. 8. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city; because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. 9. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, 10. The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: 11. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. 12. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

In this part of the chapter we have three angels or messengers sent from heaven, to give notice of the fall of Babylon, and of those things that were antecedent and consequent to that great event.

1. The first angel was sent on an errand antecedent to it, and that was, to preach the everlasting gospel, v. 6, 7. Observe, (1.) The gospel is an everlasting gospel; it is so in its nature, and shall be in its dispensation. (2.) It is a gospel which was given by the word of the Lord endureth for ever. (2.) It is a work fit for an angel, to preach this everlasting gospel; such is the dignity, and such is the difficulty of that work! And yet we have this treasure in earthen vessels. (3.) The everlasting gospel is of great concern to all the world; and, as it is the concern of all, it is very much to be desired that it should be made known to all, even to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. (4.) The gospel is the great means whereby men are brought to fear God, and to give glory to him. Natural religion is not sufficient to keep up the fear of God, nor to secure to him glory from men; it is the gospel that revives the fear of God, and retrieves his glory in the world. (5.) When idolatry creeps into the churches of God, it is by the preaching of the gospel, attended by the power of the Holy Spirit, that men are turned from idolatry to serve the living God, as the Creator of the heaven and the earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters, v. 7. To worship any God be side him who created the world, is idolatry. 2. The second angel follows the other, and proclaims the actual fall of Babylon. The preaching of the everlasting gospel had shaken the foundations of antichristianism in the world, and hastened its downfall. By Babylon is generally understood Rome, which was before called Sodom and Egypt, for wickedness and cruelty; and is now first called Babylon, for her pride and idolatry. Observe, (1.) What God has fore-ordained and foretold shall be done as certainly as if it were done already. (2.) The greatness of the papal Babylon will not be able to prevent her fall, but will make it more dreadful and remarkable. (3.) The wickedness of Babylon, is so corrupting, debauching, and intoxicating, that notions round about her, will make her fall just, and will declare the righteousness of God in her utter ruin, v. 8. Her crimes are recited as the just cause of her destruction.

3. A third angel follows the other two, and gives warning to all of that divine vengeance which would overtake all those that obstinately adhered to the antichristian interests after God had pronounced his judgments against them. v. 9, 10. If after this, (this threatening denounced against Babylon, and in part already executed,) any should persist in their idolatry, professing subjection to the beast, and promoting his cause, they must expect to drink deep of the wine of the wrath of God, they shall be for ever miserable in soul and body, Jesus Christ shall inflict this punishment upon them, and the holy angels shall behold it, and approve of it. Idolatry, both pagan and papist, is a damming sin in its own nature, and will prove fatal to those who persist in it, after fair warning given by the word of Providence; they who refuse to come out of Babylon, when thus called, and resolve to partake of her sins, must receive of her plagues; and the guilt and ruin of such incorrigible idolaters will serve to set forth the excellency of the patience and obedience of the saints; these graces shall be rewarded with salvation and glory; when the treachery and rebellion of others shall be punished with everlasting destruction, they who refuse to escape, shall, by their wickedness, be driven, to the honour of the faithful, (v. 12.) Here is the patience of the saints; you have before seen their patience exercised, now you see it rewarded.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them. 14. And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. 15. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. 16. And he that sat on the cloud, thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped. 17. And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he having also a sharp sickle. 18. And another angel came out from the altar, who had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. 19. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. 20. And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

Here we have the vision of the harvest and vintage, introduced with a solemn preface. Observe, 1. The preface, v. 13. Here note, 1. From whence this prophecy about the harvest came; it came down from heaven, and not from men, and therefore it is of certain truth and great authority. 2. How it was to be preserved and published—by writing; it was to be matter of record, that the people of God might have recourse to it for their support and comfort upon all occasions. 3. What it principally intended, and that is, to shew the blessedness of all the faithful saints and servants of God, both in death and after death; Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, &c. Here observe, (1.) The description of those that are, and shall be, blessed—such as die in the Lord, either die in the cause of Christ, or rather die in a state of vital union with Christ, such as are found in Christ when death comes. (2.) The demonstration of this blessedness—they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them. [1.] They are blessed in their rest, they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them; there the wicked cease from troubling, there the weary are at rest. [2.] They are blessed in their recompense, their works follow them; they do not go before them as their title, or purchase, but follow them as their evidence of having lived and died in the Lord; and the memory of them will be pleasant, and the reward glorious, far above the merit of all their services and sufferings. [3.] They are happy in the time of their dying, when they have lived to see the cause of God reviving, the peace of the church returning, and the wrath of God falling upon their idolatrous cruel enemies; such times are good times to die in; they have Simeon's desire; Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. And all this is ratified and confirmed by the testimony of the Spirit witnessing with their spirits, and with the wise man. 2. The vision of the harvest, and the vintage. I. We have the vision itself, represented by a harvest and a vintage. 1. By a harvest; (v. 14, 15.) an emblem that sometimes signifies the cutting down of the wicked, when ripe for ruin, by the judgments of God; and sometimes the gathering in of the righteous, when ripe for heaven, by the mercy of God. This seems to be here intended. (2.) God's judgments against the wicked: and here observe, (1.) The Lord of the harvest—one so like unto the Son of man, that he was the same, even the Lord Jesus, who is described, [1.] By the chariot in which he sat—a white cloud; a cloud that had a bright side turned to the church, how dark soever it might be to the wicked. [2.] By the ensign of his power—on his head was a golden crown, authority to do all that he did, and whatsoever he would do. [3.] By the instrument of his providences—in his hand a sharp sickle. [4.] By the solicitation he had from the temple to perform this great work; what he did was desired to be done by his people; and though he was resolved to do it, he would not have this thing sought unto by them, and so it should be in return to their prayers. (2.) Observe the harvest-work; which is, to thrust the sickle into the earth, and cast into the wine-press the clusters of God's justice; the field is the world, reaping is cutting the inhabitants of the earth down, and carrying them off. (3.) The harvest-time; and that was when the corn is ripe, when the measure of the sin of men is filled up, and they are ripe for destruction. The most inveterate enemies of Christ and his church are not destroyed, till by their sin they are ripe for ruin, and then he will spare them no longer; he will thrust in his sickle, and the earth shall be reaped. 2. A vintage, v. 17. Some think that these two are only different emblems of the same judgment; others, that they refer to distinct events of Providence before the end of all things. Observe, (1.) To whom this vintage-work was committed—to an angel, another angel that came out of the altar, that is, from the holiest of all in heaven. (2.) At whose expense was the vintage-work was undertaken; it was, as before, at the cry of an angel out of the temple, the ministers and churches of God on earth. (3.) The work of the vintage; which consists of two parts, [1.] The cutting off, and gathering, the clusters of the vine, which were now ripe and ready, fully ripe, v. 18. [2.] Casting these grapes into the wine-press; (v. 19.) here was the place of judgment; What was the wine-press; it was the wrath of God, the fire of his indignation, some terrible calamity, very probably the sword, shedding the blood of the wicked. Secondly, Where was the place of the wine-fires—without the city, where the army lay, that came against Babylon. Thirdly, The quantity of the wine, that is, of the blood that was drawn forth by this judgment; it was, for depth, up to the horses' bridles, and for breadth and length, a thousand and six hundred furlongs; (v. 20.) that is, say some, 200 Italian miles, which is thought to be the measure of the holy land, and may be meant of the patrimony of the holy see, encompassing the city of Rome: but here we are left to doubtful conjectures; perhaps, this great event has not yet had its accomplishment, but the vision is for an appointed time; and therefore, though it may seem to tarry, we are to wait for it. But who shall live when the Lord does this?

CHAP. XV.

Hitherto, according to the judgment of very eminent expositors, God had represented to his servant John, I. The state of the church under the pagan powers, in the six seals opened; and then, II. The state of the church under the papal powers, in the vision of the six trumpets that began to sound upon the opening of the seventh seal: and then is inserted, III. A more general and brief account of the past, present, and future state of the church, in the little book, &c. He now proceeds, IV. To shew him how antichrist should be destroyed, by what steps that destruction should be accomplished, and how it should be declared, or proclaimed, to the world. This chapter contains an awful introduction or preparation for the pouring out of the vials; in which we have, I. A sight of those angels in heaven, who were to have the execution of this great work, and who, at the declaration of the seven seals, applauded the great design, v. 1-5. 2. A sight of these angels coming out of heaven to receive these vials which they were to pour out, and the great commotions that this caused in the world, v. 6, &c.

1. AND I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God. 2. And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. 3. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. 4. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

Here we have the preparation of matters for the pouring out of the seven vials, which was committed to seven angels; and observe,

How these angels appeared to the apostle in heaven; it was in a wonderful manner, and that upon the account, 1. Of the work they had to do; which was, to finish the destruction of antichrist. God was now about to pour out his seven last plagues upon that interest; and as the measure of Babylon's sins was filled up, they should now find the full measure of antichrist's vindictive wrath. 2. The spectators and witnesses of this their commission—all that had gotten the victory over the beast, &c. These stood on a sea of glass, representing this world, as some think, a brittle thing, that shall be broken to pieces; or, as others, the gospel-covenant, alluding to the brazen sea in the temple, in which the priests were to wash: the faithful servants of God stand upon the foundation of the righteousness of Christ; or, as others, the Red Sea, that stood as it were concealed while the Israelites went through; and the pillar of fire reflecting light upon the waters, they would seem to have fire mingled with them; and this to shew that the fire of God's wrath against Pharaoh and his horses should dissolve the concealed waters, and destroy them. Moreover; to which there seems to be an allusion, by their singing the song of Moses; in which, (1.) They extol the greatness of God's works, and the justice and truth of his ways, both in delivering his people, and destroying their enemies; they rejoiced in hope, and the near prospect they had of this, though it was not yet accomplished. (2.) The call upon all nations to render unto God the fear, glory, and worship, which were due to such a discovery of his truth and justice; (v. 4.) Who shall not fear thee?

5. And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened: 6. And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. 7. And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials, full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever. 8. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Observe, 1. How these angels appeared; coming out of heaven to execute their commission; (v. 3.) The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened. Here is an allusion to the holiest of all, in the tabernacle and temple, where was the mercy-seat, covering the ark of the testimony, where the high priest made intercession, and God communed with his people, and heard their prayers. Now by this, as it is here mentioned, we may understand, (1.) That in the judgments God was now about to execute upon the antichristian interest, he was fulfilling the prophecies and promises of his word and covenant, which was there always before him, and of which he was ever mindful. (2.) That in this work he was answering the prayers of the people, which were offered to him by their great High Priest. (3.) That he was herein avenging the quarrel of his own Son, and our Saviour Jesus Christ, whose offices and authority had been usurped, his name dishonoured, and the great designs of his death opposed, by antichrist and his adherents. (4.) That he was opening a wider floor of liberty for his people, to worship him in numerous solemn assemblies, without the fear of their enemies.

2. How they are equipped and prepared for their work; where observe, (1.) Their array; they were clothed with pure and white linen, and had their breasts girded with golden girdles, v. 6. This was the habit of the high priests when they went in to inquire of God, and came out with an answer from him: this showed that these angels were acting all things under the divine appointment and direction, and that they were going to prepare a sacrifice to the Lord, called the sufferer of the great God, ch. 19. 17. The angels are the ministers of divine justice, and they do every thing in a pure and holy manner. (2.) Their artillery, what it was and from whence they receive it; their artillery, by which they were to do this great execution, was, seven vials filled with the wrath of God; they were armed with the wrath of God against his enemies: the meanest creature, when it comes armed with the anger of God, will be too hard for any man in the world; but much more an angel of God. This wrath of God was not to be poured out all at once, but divided into seven parts, which shall succeed one another successively fall upon the antichristian party. Now from whence did the angels receive these vials? From one of the four living creatures, one of the ministers of the true church, that is, in answer to the prayers of the ministers and people of God, and to avenge their cause, in which the angels are willingly employed.

3. The impressions these things made upon all who stood near the temple; they were all, as it were, wrapt up in clouds of smoke, which filled the temple, from the glorious and powerful presence of God; so that no man was able to enter into the temple, till the work was finished. The interests of antichrist were so interwoven with the civil interests of the nations, that he could not be destroyed without giving a great shock to all the world; and the people of God would have but little rest and leisure to assemble themselves before him, while this great work was a doing; for the present, their sabbaths would be interrupted, ordinances of public worship intermitted, and all thrown into a general confusion. God himself was now preaching to the church, and to all the world, by terrible things in righteousness; but when this work was done, then the churches would have rest, the temple would be opened, and the solemn assemblies gathered, edified, and multiplied; the greatest deliverances of the church are brought about by awful and astonishing steps of Providence.

CHAP. XVI.

In this chapter, we have an account of the pouring forth of these vials that were filled with the wrath of God; they were poured out upon the whole antichristian empire, and on every thing appertaining to it: I. Upon the earth, v. 2. II. Upon the sea, v. 3. III. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters, v. 4. Here the heavenly host proclaims and applauds the righteousness of the judgments of God. IV. The fourth vial was poured out upon the sun. V. The fifth on the seat of the beast. VI. The sixth on the river Euphrates. VII. The seventh in the air; upon which, the enemies of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God.

1. AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. 2. And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men who had the mark of the beast, and upon them who worshipped his image. 3. And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea. 4. And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. 5. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, who art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus: 6. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets; and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. 7. And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

We had in the foregoing chapter the great and solemn preparation that was made for the pouring out of the vials; now we have the performance of that work. We shall ever observe.

I. That though every thing was made ready before, yet nothing was to be put in execution without an immediate positive order from God; and this he gave out of the temple, answering the prayers of his people, and avenging their quarrel.

II. No sooner was the word of command given, than it was immediately obeyed; no delay, no objection made. We find that some of the best of men, as Moses and Jeremiah, did not so readily come in and comply with the call of God to their work; but the angels of God excel not only in strength, but in a readiness to do the will of God. God says, Go your ways, and pour out the vials; and immediately the work is begun. We are taught to pray, that the will of God may be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

We have here a reference and allusion to several of the plagues of Egypt, such as the turning their waters into blood, and smiting them with boils and sores. Their sins were alike, and so were their punishments.

2. These vials have a plain reference to the seven trumpets, which represented the rise of antichrist; and we learn hence, that the fall of the church's enemies shall bear some resemblance to their rise; and that God can bring them down in such ways as they chose to exalt themselves. And the fall of antichrist shall be gradual; as Rome was not built in one day, so neither shall it fall in one day, but it falls by degrees; it shall fall so as to rise no more.

3. The fall of the antichristian interest shall be universal. Every thing that any ways belonged to them, or could be serviceable to them, the premises, and all their appurtenances, are put into the writ for destruction; their earth, their air, their sea, their rivers, their cities, all consigned over to ruin, all accursed for the sake of the wickedness of that people. The whole creation groans and suffers through the sins of men. Now we proceed to

(1.) The first angel who poured out his vial: (v. 2.) observe, [1.] Where it fell—upon the earth; that is, say some, upon the common people; others, upon the body of the Romish clergy, who were the basis of the papacy, and of an earthly spirit, all carrying on earthly designs. [2.] What it procured—now we and numerous sorrows on all who had the mark of the beast. They had marked themselves by their sin, now God marks them out by his judgments. This sore, some think, signifies some of the first appearances of Providence against their state and interest, which gave them great uneasiness, as it discovered their inward distemper, and was a token of further evil; the plague-tokens appeared.

(2.) The second angel poured out his vial; and here we see, [1.] Where it fell—upon the sea; that is, say some, upon the jurisdiction and dominion of the papacy; others, upon the whole system of their religion, their false doctrines, corrupt glosses, their superstitious rites, their idolatrous worship, their pardons, indulgences, a great confux of wicked in-revelations and institutions, by which they maintain a trade and traffic advantageous to themselves, but injurious to all who deal with them. 2. What it produced—it turned the sea into blood, as the blood of a dead man, and every living soul died in the sea. God discovered not only the vanity and falsehood of their religion, but the pernicious and deadly nature of it—that the souls of men were poisoned by that which was pretended to be the sure means of their salvation.

3. The next angel poured out his vial, and we are told, [1] Where that fell—upon the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; that is, say some very learned men, upon their emissaries, and especially the Jesuits, who, like streams, conveyed the venom and poison of their errors and idolatries from the spring-head through the earth. 2. What effect it had upon them—it turned them into blood; and some expect princes to take a just revenges upon them that had been the great incendiaries of the world, and had occasioned the shedding of the blood of armies, and of martyrs: the following doxology favours this sense; (v. 5, 6.) the instrument that God makes use of in this work, is called the angel of the waters, who extols the righteousness of God in this retaliation. They have shed the blood of thy saints, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy: to which another angel answered by full consent, v. 7.

8. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. 9. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, who hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory. 10. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain. 11. And blasphemed the God of Heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

In these verses we see the work going on in the appointed order. The fourth angel poured out his vial, and that fell upon the sun; who is, say some, upon some eminent prince of popish communion, who should renounce their false religion a little while before its utter downfall; and some expect princes to take a just revenges upon them that had been the great incendiaries of the world, and that had occasioned the shedding of the blood of armies and of martyrs. They have shed the blood of thy saints, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy: to which another angel answered by full consent, v. 7.

The sixth angel poured out his vial; and observe, 1. Where it fell, upon the great river Euphrates. Some take it literally, for the place where the Turkish power and empire began: and they think this is a prophecy of the destruction of the Turkish monarchy and idolatry, which they suppose will be effected about the same time with that of the papacy, as another antichrist, and that thereby a way shall be made for the convenience of the Jews, those princes of the east. Others take it for the river Tiber; for as Rome is mystical Babylon, Tiber is mystical Euphrates. And when Rome is destroyed, her river and merchandise must suffer with her. 2. What did this vial produce? (1.) The drying up of the river, which furnished the city with wealth, provisions, and all sorts of accommodations. (2.) A way is hereby prepared for the kings of the east. The idolatry of the church of Rome had been a great hindrance both to the conversion of the Jews, who have been long cured of their inclination to idols, and of the Gentiles, who are hardened in their idolatry, by seeing that which so much symbolizes with it, among those called Christian nations. The drying up of the river is therefore very probable that the downfall of popery, removing these obstructions, will open a way for both the Jews and other eastern nations to come into the church of Christ. And if we suppose that Mahometanism shall fall at the same time, there will be still a more open communication between the western and eastern nations, which may facilitate the conversion of both Jews and of the Gentiles. And when this work of God appears, and is about to be accomplished, no wonder if it occasion another consequence, which is, (3.) The last effect of the great dragon; he is resolved to have another push for it, that, if possible, he may retrieve the rumour posture of his affairs in the world. He is now rallying his forces, recalling all his spirits, to make one desperate sally before all be lost. This is occasioned by the pouring out of the sixth vial.

Here observe, [1] The instruments he makes use of to engage the powers of the earth in his cause and quarrel—three unclean spirits like frogs come forth, one out of the mouth of the dragon, another out of the mouth of the beast, and a third out of the false prophet. Hell, the secular power of antichrist.
and the ecclesiastical power, all combined to send their several instruments, furnished with hellish malice, with worldly policy, and with religious falsehood and deceit; and these should muster up the Devil's forces for a decisive battle.

[2.] The means these instruments would use to engage the powers of the earth in this war— they should work pretended miracles; the old stratagem of him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, 2 Thess. 2. 9, 10. Some think, that a little before the fall of apostasy, the popish pretence of power to work miracles will be revived, and will very much amuse and deceive the world.

[3.] The field of battle—a place called Armageddon; that is, say some, the mount of Megiddo, near to which, by a stream issuing from thence, Barak overcame Sisera, and all the kings in alliance with him, Judges 5. 19. And in the valley of Megiddo Josiah was slain. This place had been famous for two events of a very different nature, the first very happy for the church of God, the latter very unhappy; but it should now be the field of the last battle in which the church shall be engaged, and she shall be victorious. This battle required time to prepare for it, and therefore the further account of it is suspended till we come to the nineteenth chapter, v. 19, 20.

[4.] The warning which God gives of this great and decisive trial, to engage his people to prepare for it, v. 15. It would be sudden and unexpected, and therefore Christians should be clothed, and armed, and ready for it, that they might not be surprised and ashamed. When God's cause comes to be tried, and his battles to be fought, all his people should be ready to stand up for his interest, and be faithful and valiant in his service.

17. And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. 18. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. 19. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. 20. And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. 21. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

Here we have an account of the seventh and last angel pouring forth his vial, contributing his part toward the accomplishment of the downfall of Babylon, which was the finishing stroke. And here, as before, there is a plenitude of blessings.

Where this plague fell—on the air, upon the prince of the power of the air, that is, the Devil. His powers were restrained, his policies confounded, he was bound in God's chain, the sword of God was upon his eye and upon his arm; for he, as well as the powers of the earth, is subject to the almighty power of God. He had used all possible means to preserve the antichristian interest, and to prevent the fall of Babylon; all the influence that he has upon the minds of men, blinding their judgments, and perverting them, hardening their hearts, raising up their enemies against them, and working them to the gospel as high as could be. But now here is a vial poured out upon his kingdom, and he is not able to support his tottering cause and interest any longer.

2. What it produced. (1.) A thankful voice from heaven, pronouncing that now the work was done. The church triumphant in heaven saw it, and rejoiced; the church militant on earth saw it, and became triumphant. It is finished. (2.) A mighty commotion on the earth—earthquake, so great as never was before, shaking the very centre; and this ushered in by the usual concomitant of thunder and lightnings. (3.) The fall of Babylon, which was divided into three parts, called the cities of the nations; (v. 19.) having had rule over the nations, and taken in the idolatry of the nations, incorporating into her religion something of the Jewish, something of the Pagan, and something of the Christian religion, and so was three cities in one. God now remembered this great and wicked city; though for some time he had seemed to have forgotten her idolatry and cruelty, yet now he gives unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And this downfall extended further than to the seat of antichrist; it reached from the centre to the circumference; and every island, and every mountain, that seemed to be a natural and situation the most secured, were carried away in the deluge of this ruin.

3. How the antichristian party were affected with it: though it fell upon them as a dreadful storm, as if the stones of the city, tossed up into the air, came down upon their heads, like hail-stones of a talent weight each, yet they were so far from repenting, that they blasphemed that God who thus punished them. Here was a dreadful plague of the heart, a spiritual judgment more destructive than any carnal one than all the rest. Observe, (1.) The greatest calamities that can befall men, will not bring them to repentance without the grace of God working with them. (2.) Those that are not made better by the judgments of God, are always the worse for them. (3.) To be hardened in sin and enmity against God by his righteous judgments, is a certain token of utter destruction.

CHAP. XVII.

This chapter is another representative of those things that had been revealed before, concerning the wickedness and ruin of antichrist. This antichrist had been before represented as a beast, and is now described as a great whore. And here, I. The apostle is invited to see this vile woman, v. 1, 2. II. He tells us what an appearance she made, v. 3. 6. III. The mystery of it is explained to him, v. 7. 12. And, IV. Her ruin foretold, v. 13, &c.

1. And there came one of the seven angels who had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters: 2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. 3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. 4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: 5. And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth. 6. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

Here we have a new vision, not as to the matter of it, for that is contemporary with what came under the three last visions; but as to the manner of description, &c. Observe, 1. The invitation given to the apostle to take a view of what was here to be represented; (v. 1.) Come hither, and I will shew thee the judgment of the great whore, &c. This is a name of great infamy. A whore, in this passage, is one that is married, and has been false to her husband's bed, has forsaken the guide of her youth, and broken the covenant of God; she had been a prostitute to the kings of the earth, whom she had intoxicated with the wine of her fornication. 2. The appearance she made; it was gay and gaudy, like such sort of creatures; (v. 4.) She was arrayed in purple, and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls. Here were all the allurements of worldly honour and riches, pomp and pride, suited to sensual and worldly minds.

3. Her principal seat and residence—upon the beast that had seven heads and ten horns; that is to say, Rome, the city on seven hills, infamous for idolatry, tyranny, and blasphemy. 4. Her name, which was written on her forehead. It was the custom of impudent harlots to hang out signs, with their names, that all might know what they were. Now in this observe, (1.) She is named from her place of residence—Babylon the great. But that we might not take it for the old Babylon literally so called, we are told there is a mystery in the name; it is some other great city resembling the old Babylon. (2.) She is named from her infamous way and practice; not only a harlot, but a murderess of harlots; breeding up harlots, and nursing and training them up to idolatry, and all sort of lewdness and wickedness; the parent and nurse of all false religion and filthy conversation. 5. Her diet; she satiated herself with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus. She drank their blood with such greediness, that she intoxicated herself with it; it was so pleasant to her, that she could not tell when she had enough of it: she was satiated, but never satisfied.

7. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. 3. The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they beheld the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. 9. And here is the mind that hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. 10. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. 11. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. 12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, who have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. 13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

Here we have the mystery of this vision explained. The apostle wondered at the sight of this woman: the angel undertakes to open this vision to him, it being the key of the former visions; and he tells the apostle what was meant by the beast on which the woman sat; but it is so explained, as still to need further explanation. 1. This beast was, and is not, and yet is; that is, it was a seat of idolatry and persecution; and is not, that is, not in the ancient form, which was pagan; and yet it is, it is truly the seat of idolatry and tyranny, though of another sort and form. It ascends out of the bottomless pit: idolatry and cruelty are the issue and product of hell, and they shall return thither, and go into perdition. 2. This beast has seven heads, which have a double significan. (1.) Seven mountains—the seven hills on which Rome stands; and, (2.) Seven kings—seven sorts of government. Rome was governed by kings, consuls, tribunes, decemviri, dictators, emperors who were pagan, and emperors who were Christian; five of these were extinct when this prophecy was written; one was then in being, that is, the pagan emperor; and the other, that is, the Christian emperor, was yet to come, v. 10. This beast, the papacy, makes an eighth governor, and sets up idolatry again. 3. This beast had ten horns; which are said to be ten kings which have as yet received no kingdom; as yet, that is, as some, shall not rise up till the Roman empire be broken in pieces; or, as others, shall not rise up till near the end of antichrist's reign, and so shall reign as it were with his power, but shall for that time be very unanimous and very zealous in that interest, and entirely devoted to it, divesting themselves of their prerogatives and revenues, (things so dear to princes,) out of an unaccountable fondness for the papacy.

14. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him, are called, and chosen, and faithful. 15. And he said unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. 16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire. 17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. 18. And the woman whom thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth. Here we have some account of the downfall of Babylon, to be more fully described in the following chapter.

1. Here is a war begun between the beast and his followers, and the Lamb and his followers. The beast and his army, to an eye of sense, appear much stronger than the Lamb and his army: one would think an army with a Lamb at the head of them could not stand before the great red dragon. But here is a victory gained. The Lamb shall overcome; Christ must reign till all enemies be put under his feet; he will be sure to meet with many enemies, and much opposition, but he will also be sure to gain the victory.

2. Here is a victory gained. The Lamb shall overcome; Christ must reign till all enemies be put under his feet; he will be sure to meet with many enemies, and much opposition, but he will also be sure to gain the victory.

3. Here is the ground and reason of the victory assigned; and that is taken, (1.) From the character of the Lamb; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords. He has, both by nature and by office, supreme dominion and power over all things; all the powers of earth and hell are subject to his check and control. (2.) From the character of his followers; they are called, and chosen, and faithful; they are called out by commission to this warfare, they are chosen and fitted for it, and they will be faithful in it. Such an army, under such a Commander, will at length carry all the world before them.

4. The victory is justly agrandiz'd, (1.) By the vast multitude who paid obedience and subjection to the beast and to the whore. She sat upon (that is, presided over) many waters; and these waters were so many multitudes of people, and nations, of all languages; yea, she reigned not only over kingdoms, but over the kings, and they were tributaries and vassals, v. 15, 18. (2.) By the powerful influence which God hereby shewed he had over the minds of great men; their hearts were in his hand, and he turned them as he pleased; for, [1.] It was of God, and to fulfil his will, that these kings agreed to give their kingdom unto the beast; they were judicially blinded and hardened to do so. And, [2.] It was of God, that afterward their hearts were turned against the whore, to hate her, and to make her desolate and naked, and to eat her flesh, and burn her with fire; they shall at length see their folly, and how they have been bewitched and enslaved by the papacy, and, out of a just resentment, shall not only fall off from Rome, but shall be made the instruments of God's providence in her destruction.

CHAP. XVIII.

We have here, I. An angel proclaiming the fall of Babylon, v. 1, 2. II. Assigning the reasons of her fall, v. 3, 3. III. Giving warning to all who belonged to God, to come out of her, (v. 4, 5,) and to assist in her destruction, v. 6, 8. IV. The great lamentation made for her by those who had been her peculiar pleasures in her useful pleasures and profits, v. 9, 11. V. The great joy that there would be among others at the sight of her irrecoverable ruin, v. 20, Sc.

1. AND after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. 2. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. 3. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

The downfall and destruction of Babylon form an event so fully determined in the counsels of God, and of such consequence to his interests and glory, that the visions and predictions concerning it are repeated.

1. Here is another angel sent from heaven, attended with great power and lustre, v. 1. He had not only light in himself, to discern the truth of his own prediction, but to inform and enlighten the world about that great event; and not only light to discern it, but power to accomplish it.

2. This angel publishes the fall of Babylon, as a thing already come to pass; and this he does with a mighty strong voice, that all might hear the cry, and might see how well this angel was pleased to be the messenger of such tidings. Here seems to be an allusion to the prediction of the fall of pagan Babylon, (Isa. 21. 9.) where the word is repeated as it is here, is fallen, is fallen. Some have thought a double fall is hereby intended, first her apostasy, and then her ruin; and they think the words immediately following, favour their opinion; (v. 2.) She is become the dwelling of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird. But this is also borrowed from Isa. 21. 9. and seems to describe not so much her sin of entertaining idols, which are truly called devils, as her punishment; it being a common notion, that unclean spirits, as well as your ominous and hateful birds, used to haunt a city or house that lay in its ruins.

3. The reason of this ruin is declared; for though God is not obliged to give any account of his matters, yet he is pleased to do so; especially in those dispensations of Providence that are most awful and tremendous. The wickedness of Babylon had been very great; for she had not only forsaken the true God herself, and set up idols, but had with great art and industry drawn all sorts of men into the spiritual adultery, and by her wealth and luxury had retained them in her interest, v. 3.

4. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. 5. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. 6. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. 7. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. 8. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burnt with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

Here is fair warning given to all that expect mercy from God, that they should not only come out of her, but be assisting in her destruction, v. 4, 5. Here observe, 1. God may have a people even in Babylon, some who belong to the election of grace. 2. God's people shall be called out of Babylon, and called effectually. 3. Those that are resolved to partak-with wicked men in their sins, must receive of their plagues. 4. When the sins of a people reach up to heaven, the wrath of God will reach down to the earth. 5. Though private revenge is forbidden, yet God will have his people act under him, when called to it, in pulling down his and their inveterate and implacable enemies, v. 5. God will proportion the punishment of sinners to the measure of their wickedness, pride, and security, v. 7. 7. When destruction comes on a people suddenly, the surprise is a great aggravation of their misery, v. 8.

9. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning. 10. Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

11. And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth her merchandise any more: 12. The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble. 13. And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. 14. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. 15. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for fear of her torment, weeping and wailing. 16. And saying, Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! 17. For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every ship-master, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off. 18. And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city? 19. And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea, by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

Here we have a doleful lamentation made by Babylon's friends for her fall; and here observe,

1. Who are the mourners; those who had been bewitched by her fornication, those who had been sharers in her sensual pleasures, and those who had been gainers by her wealth and trade — the kings, and the merchants of the earth; the kings of the earth, whom she had flattered into idolatry, by allowing them to be arbitrary and tyrannical over their subjects, while they were obsequious to her, and the merchants, that is, those who trafficked with her for indulgences, pardons, dispensations, and preferments; these will mourn, because by this craft they got their wealth.

2. What was the manner of their mourning, (1.) They stood afar off, they durst not come nigh her; even Babylon's friends will stand at a distance from her fall; though they had been partakers with her in her sins, and in her sensual pleasures and profits, they were not willing to bear the reproofs in her plagues. (2.) They made a grievous outcry, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! (3.) They wept, and cast dust upon their heads, v. 19. The pleasures of sin are but for a season, and they will end in dismal sorrow; all those who rejoice in the success of the church's enemies, will share with them in their downfall; and those who have most indulged themselves in pride and pleasure, are the least able to bear calamities; their sorrows will be excessive, as their pleasure and jollity were before.

3. What was the cause of their mourning; not their sin, but their punishment. They did not lament their fall into idolatry, and luxury, and persecution, but their fall into ruin — the loss of their traffic, and of their wealth and power. The spirit of antichrist is a worldly spirit, and their sorrow is a mere worldly sorrow; they do not lament for the anger of God, that was now fallen upon them, but for the loss of their outward comforts. We have a large schedule and inventory of the wealth and merchandise of this city, all which was suddenly lost, (v. 12, 13,) and lost irrecoverably, v. 14. "All things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

The church of God may fall for a time, but she shall rise again; but the fall of Babylon will be an utter overthrow, like that of Sodom and Gomorrah. Godly sorrow is some support under affliction, but worldly sorrow adds to the calamity.

20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her. 21. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. 22. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and of trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee: 23. And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived: 24. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

We have here an account of the joy and triumph there was both in heaven and earth at the irrecoverable fall of Babylon: while her own people were bewailing her, the servants of God are called to rejoice over her, v. 20. Here observe, 1. How universal this joy would be; heaven and earth, an
AND after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2. For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, who did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. 3. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever. 4. And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

The fall of Babylon being fixed, finished, and declared to be irrecoverable, in the foregoing chapter, this begins with a holy triumph over her, in assurance of the order given forth, (ch. 18. 20.) Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy angels and prophets. They now gladly answer the call; and here you have, 1. The form of their thanksgiving, in that heavenly and most comprehensive word, Alleluia, praise ye the Lord: with this they begin, with this they go on, and with this they end; (v. 4.) their prayers are now turned into praises, their hosannas end in halleluia. 2. The matter of their thanksgiving, the praise here for the chapter, and the righteousness of his providential conduct, especially in this great event—the ruin of Babylon, who had been a mother, nurse, and nest of idolatry, lewdness, and cruelty; (v. 2.) for which signal example of divine justice, they ascribe salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto our God. 3. The effect of these their praises: when the angels and saints said, Alleluia, her fire burned more fiercely, and her smoke ascended for ever and ever, v. 3. The surest way to have our deliverances continued and completed, is, to give God the glory of what he has done for us: praising God for what we have, is praying in the most effectual manner for what is yet further to be done for us; the praises of the saints blow up the fire of God's wrath against the common enemy. 4. The blessed harmony between the angels and the saints in this triumphant song; (v. 4.) the churches and their ministers take the melodious sound from the angels, and repeat it; falling down, and worshipping God, they cry, Amen; Alleluia.

5. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

6. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. 7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. 8. And to her was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. 9. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God. 10. And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

The triumphant song being ended, an epithalamic or marriage-song, begins, v. 6. Here observe,

I. The concert of heavenly music; the chorus was large and loud, as the voice of many waters, and mighty thunders. God is fearful in praises; and there is no music in heaven; the morning-stars sing together; no jarring string, or key untuned, but pure and perfect melody.

II. The occasion of this song; and that is, the reign and dominion of that omnipotent God who has redeemed his church by his own blood, and is now in a more public manner betrothing her to himself; (v. 7.) The marriage of the Lamb is come. Some think this refers to the conversion of the Jews, which they suppose will succeed the fall of Babylon; others, to the general resurrection: the former seems more probable.

1. You have here a description of the bride, how she appeared; not in the gay and gaudy dress of the mother of harlots, but in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints; in the robes of Christ's righteousness, both imputed for justification, and imparted for sanctification, the white robe of redemption, adoption, and infradition; and the white robe of purity, and universal holiness; she had washed her robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and these her nuptial ornaments she did not purchase by any price of her own, but received them as the gift and grant of her blessed Lord.

2. The marriage-feast, which, though not particularly described, (as Matt. 22. 4.) yet is declared to be such as would make them all happy, who were called to it, so called as to accept the invitation, a feast made up of the promises of the gospel, the true saying of God, v. 9. These promises, opened, applied, sealed, and earnested by the Spirit of God, in holy, eucharistical ordinances, are the marriage feast; and the whole collective body of all those who partake of this feast, is, the bride, the Lamb's wife; they eat into one body, and drink into one Spirit, and are not mere spectators or guests, but coalesce into the espoused party, the mystical body of Christ.

3. The transport of joy which the apostle felt in himself at this vision; he fell down at the feet of the angel, to worship him; supposing him to be more than a creature, or having his thoughts at the time of his seeing the vision, overpowered by the vertemency of his affections; where observe, (1.) What honour he offered to the angel; he fell at his feet, to worship him; this prostration was a part of external worship, it was a posture of proper adoration. (2.) How the angel refused it, and that was with some resentment; "See thou do it not; have a care what thou dost, thou art doing a wrong thing." (3.) He gave a very good reason for his refusal; "I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; I am a creature, thin equal in office, though not in nature; I, as an angel and messenger of God, have the testimony of Jesus, a charge to be a witness for him, and to testify concerning him; and thou, as an apostle, having the Spirit of prophecy, hast the same testimony to give in; and therefore we are in this brethren, and fellow-servants." (4.) He directs him to this end, and only Object of religious worship; and that is, God; "Worship, God, and him alone." This fully condemns the practice both of the papists in worshipping the elements of bread and wine, and saints, and angels; and the practice of the Socinians and Arians, who do not believe that Christ is truly and by nature God, and yet pay him religious worship; and this shews what wretched fig-leaves all their evasions and excuses are, which they offer in their own vindication; they stand hereby convicted of idolatry by a messenger from heaven.

11. And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12. His eyes were as a flame of fire; and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called, The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven, followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15. And out of his mouth went a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

16. And he bath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

17. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. 19. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. 20. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

No sooner was the marriage solemnized between Christ and his church by the conversion of the Jews, than the glorious Head and Husband of the church is called to the new expediency, which seems to be the great battle that was to be fought at Armageddon, foretold ch. 16. 16. And here observe,

1. The description of the great Commander; (1.) By the seat of his empire; and that is heaven: his throne is there, and his power and authority are heavenly and divine. (2.) His equipage; he is again described as sitting on a white horse, to shew the equity of the cause, and certainty of success. (3.) His attributes, his character and name is faithful and true; and promise, he is righteous in all his judicial and military proceedings, he has a penetrating insight into all the strength and stratagems of his enemies, he has a large and extensive dominion, many crowns, for he is King of kings, and Lord of lords. (4.) His armour; and that is a vesture dipped in blood; either his own blood, by which he purchased this mediatorial power; or the blood of his enemies, over whom he has always prevailed. (5.) His name: The Word of God; a name that none fully known but himself; only this we know, that this Word was God manifest in the flesh; but his perfections are incomprehensible by any creature.

2. The army which he commands; (v. 14.) a very large one, made up of many armies; angels and saints followed his conduct, and resembled him in their equipage, and in their armour of purity and righteousness; chosen, and called, and faithful.

3. The weapons of his warfare—a sharp sword proceeding from his mouth, (v. 15.) with which he smites the nations; either the threatening of the written word, which now he is going to execute, or rather, his word of command, calling on his followers to take a just revenge on his and their enemies, who are now put into the wine-press of the wrath of God, to be trodden under foot of this Christ, who shall tread them with a rod of iron, and treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God:

4. The ensigns of his authority, his coat of arms—a name written on his vesture and thigh, King of kings, and Lord of lords; asserting his authority and power, and the cause of the quarrel, v. 16.

5. An invitation given to the fowls of heaven, that they should come and see the battle, and share in the spoil and pillage of the field; (v. 17, 18.) intimating that this great decisive engagement should leave the spoil of the church a feast for the birds of prey, and that all the world should have cause to rejoice in the issue of it.

6. The battle joined; the enemy falls on with great fury, headed by the beast, and the kings of the
7. The victory gained by the great and glorious Head of the church; the beast and the false prophet, the leaders of the army, were taken prisoners, both he who led them by power, and he who led them by policy and falsehood, there are taken and cast into the burning lake, made incapable of molesting the church of God any more; and their followers, whether officers or common soldiers, are given up to military execution, and made a feast for the fowls of heaven. Though the divine vengeance will chiefly find its object among their leaders, and those who had counselled them, yet it will be no excuse to those who fight under their banner, that they only followed their leaders, and obeyed their command; since they would fight for them, they must fall and perish with them. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye rulers of the earth; kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, Ps. 2. 10, 12.

1. AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. 2. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, 3. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed for a little season.

We have here a prophecy of the binding of Satan for a certain term of time, in which he should have much less power, and the church much more peace than before. The power of Satan was broken in part by the setting up of the gospel-kingdom in the world, it was further reduced by the empire’s becoming Christian, it was yet further broken by the downfall of the mystical Babylon; but still this serpent had many heads, and when one is wounded, another has life remaining in it. Here we have a further limitation and diminution of his power, where observe, 1. To whom this work of binding Satan is committed—to an angel from heaven. It is very probable that this angel is no other than the Lord Jesus Christ; the description of him will hardly agree with any other; he is one who has power to bind the strong man armed, to cast him out, and to spoil his goods; and therefore must be stronger than he. 2. The means he makes use of in this work; he has a chain, and a key; a great chain to bind Satan, and the key of the prison in which he was to be confined. Christ never wants proper powers and instruments to break the power of Satan, for he has the powers of heaven, and the keys of hell. 3. The execution of this work, v. 2, 3. (1.) He laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan. Neither the strength of the dragon, nor the subtlety of the serpent, was sufficient to rescue him out of the hands of Christ; he caught hold, and kept his hold. And, (2.) He cast him into the bottomless pit; cast him down with force, and with a just vengeance, to his own place and prison, from which he had been permitted to break out, and disturb the churches, and deceive the nations; now he is brought back to that prison, and there laid in chains. (3.) He is shut up, and a seal set upon him; Christ shuts, and none can open; he shuts by his power, seals by his authority; and his lock and seal even the devils themselves cannot break open. (4.) We have the term of this confinement of Satan—a thousand years; after which, he was to be loosed again for a little season. The church should have a considerable time of peace and prosperity, but all her trials were not yet over.

4. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. 5. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. 6. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

We have here an account of the reign of the saints for the same space of time, in which Satan continued bound; and here observe, 1. Who they were, that received such honour—those who had suffered for Christ, and all who had faithfully adhered to him, not receiving the mark of the beast, nor worshipping his image; all who had kept themselves clear of pagan and papal idolatry. 2. The honour bestowed upon them; (1.) They were raised from the dead, and restored to life. This may be taken ever of spiritual and temporal life, or in a civil and political sense dead, and had a political resurrection; their liberties and privileges were revived and restored. (2.) Thrones, and power of judgment, were given to them; they were possessed of great honour, and interest, and authority; I suppose, rather of a spiritual, than of a secular nature. (3.) They reigned with Christ a thousand years. They who suffer with Christ, shall reign with Christ; they shall reign with him in his spiritual and heavenly kingdom, in a glorious conformity to him in wisdom, righteousness, and holiness, beyond what had been known before in the world; this is called the resurrection, which none but those who have served Christ, and suffered for him, shall be favoured with. As for the wicked, they shall not be raised up, and restored to their power again, till God shall let loose; this may be called a resurrection, as the conversion of the wicked to be life from the dead. 3. The happiness of these servants of God is declared. (1.) They are blessed and holy, v. 6. None can be blessed but they that are holy; and all that are holy shall be blessed. These were holy as a sort of first-fruits to God in this spiritual resurrection, and as such blessed by him. (2.) They are secured from the power of the second death. We know something of what that death is, and it is awful; but we know not what this second death is; it must be much more dreadful; it is the death of the soul, eternal separation. from God. The Lord grant we may never know what it is by experience; they who have had experience of a spiritual resurrection, are saved from the power of the second death.

7. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. 9. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. 10. And the devil, that deceived them, was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

Here we have an account of the return of the church's troubles, and another mighty conflict; very sharp, but short and decisive. Observe, 1. The restraints laid for a long time on Satan, are at length taken off. When was Satan's power to flourish in the world, but when we would least expect it? Satan's power is not to be wholly destroyed; it may be limited and lessened, but he will have something still to do for the disturbance of the people of God. 2. No sooner is Satan let loose, than he falls to his old work, deceiving the nations, and so stirring them up to make a war with the saints and servants of God, which they would never do, if he had not first deceived them; they are deceived both as to the cause they engage in, they believe it to be a good cause, when it is indeed a very bad one; and they are deceived in the issue, they expect to be successful, but are sure to lose the day. 3. His last efforts seem to be the greatest; the power now permitted to him, seems to be more unlimited than before; he has now liberty to beat up for his volunteers in all the four quarters of the earth, and he raised a mighty army, the number of which was as the sand of the sea. 4. We have the names of the principal commanders of this army under the description of Gog and Magog. We need not be too inquisitive as to what particular powers are meant by these names, since the army was gathered from all parts of the world: these names are found in other parts of scripture. Magog we read of in Gen. 10. 2. He was one of the sons of Japheth, and peopled the country called Syria, from which his descendants spread into many other parts. Of Gog and Magog together we read only in Ezek. 38. 2: a prophecy from whence this in the Revelation borrows many of its images. 5. We have the march and military disposition of this formidable army; (v. 9.) They went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, that is, the spiritual Jerusalem, in which the most precious interests of the people of God are lodged, and therefore to them a beloved city. The word translated compassed is as described as drawn forth out of the city, and lying under the walk of the city; they were encamped about Jerusalem; but the army of the enemy was so much superior to that of the church, that they compassed them and their city about. 6. You have an account of the battle, and the issue of this war: Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured the enemy. Thus the ruin of Gog and Magog is foretold; (Ezek. 38. 22.) I will rain upon him, and upon his bands an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, and fire and brimstone. God would, in an extraordinary and more immediate manner, fight this last and decisive battle for his people, that the victory might be complete, and the glory redound to himself. 7. The doom and punishment of the grand enemy, the Devil; he is now cast into hell, with his two great officers, the beast and the false prophet, tyranny and idolatry, and that not for any term of time, but to be there tormented night and day, for ever and ever.

11. And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. 12. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. 13. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. 14. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. 15. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

The utter destruction of the Devil's kingdom very properly leads to an account of the day of judgment, which will determine every man's everlasting state; and we may be assured there will be a judgment, when we see the prince of this world is judged, John 16. 11. This will be a great day, the great day, then all shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. The Lord help us firmly to believe this doctrine of the judgment to come! It is a doctrine that made Felix tremble. Here we have a description of it; where observe, 1. We behold the throne, and tribunal of judgment, great and white, very glorious, and perfectly just and righteous. The throne of iniquity, that establishes wickedness by a law, has no fellowship with this righteous throne and tribunal. The appearance of the Judge, and that is, the Lord Jesus Christ, who then sits on such majesty and terror, that the earth and the heaven fled from his face, and there was no place found for them; there is a dissolution of the whole frame of nature, 2 Pet. 3. 10. 3. The persons to be judged; (v. 12.) the dead, small and great; both young and old, low and high, poor and rich. None are so mean but they have some talents to account for; and none so great as to avoid the jurisdiction of this court; not only those that die at the coming of Christ, but all who have died before; then all shall appear before the tribunal, and surrender the bodies of men, hell shall surrender the souls of the wicked, the sea shall surrender the many who seemed to have been lost in it. All these are the king's prisoners, and he will cause them to set forth their prisoners. 4. The rule of judgment settled; the books were opened. What books? The book of God's omniscience, which is greater than our consciences, and knows all things. There is a book of remembrance with him both for good and bad; and the book of the sinner's conscience, which, though formerly secret, will now be opened; and another book shall be opened—the book of the scriptures, the statute-book of heaven, the rule of life; this book is opened, as containing the law, the touchstone by which the hearts and lives of men are to be tried; this book determines matter of right, the other books give evidence of matters of fact; some, by the other book, called the book of life, understand the book of God's eternal counsels; but that does not seem to belong to the affair of judgment; in eternal election God does not act judicially, but with absolute, sovereign freedom. 5. The cause to be tried; and that is, the works of men, what they have done, and whether it be good or evil; by their works men shall be justified, or condemned; for though God knows their state and their principles, and looks chiefly at these, yet, being to approve himself to angels and men as a righteous God, he will try their principles by their practices, and so will be justified when he speaks, and clear when he judges. 6. The issue of the trial and judgment; and that will be according to the evidence of fact, and rule of judgment; all those who have made a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell, shall then be condemned with their infernal confederates, cast with them into the lake of fire, as not being entitled to eternal life, according to the rules of life laid down in the scripture; but those whose names are written in that book, that is, those that are justified and acquitted by the gospel, shall then be justified and acquitted by the Judge, and shall enter into eternal life, having nothing more to fear from death, or hell, or wicked men; for these are all destroyed together. Let it be our great concern to see on what terms we stand with our Bibles, whether they justify us or condemn us now; for the Judge of all will proceed by that rule; Christ shall judge the secrets of all men according to the gospel. Happy are they who have so ordered and stated their cause according to the gospel, as to know beforehand that they shall be justified in the great day of the Lord!

CHAP. XXI.

Hitherto, the prophecy of this book has presented to us a very remarkable mixture of light and shade, prosperity and adversity, mercy and judgment, in the conduct of Divine Providence toward the church in the world: now, at the close of all, the day breaks, and the shadowy tree away; a new world now appears, the former being passed away. Some are willing to understand all that is said in these two last chapters, of the state of the church even here on earth, in the glory of the latter days; but the more proper place to take as a representation of the perfect and triumphant state of the church in heaven. Let but the faithful saints and servants of God wait a while, and they shall not only see, but enjoy, the perfect holiness and happiness of that state. In the last chapter, you have, I. An introduction to the vision of the new Jerusalem, v. 1. 2. The vision itself, v. 10. &c.

1. AND I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. 2. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. 3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. 4. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. 5. And he that sat upon the throne, said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

6. And he said unto me, It is done: I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst, of the fountain of the water of life freely. 7. He that overcometh, shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. 8. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

We have here a more general account of the happiness of the church of God in the future state, by which it seems most safe to understand the heavenly state.

1. A new world now opens to our view; (v. 1.) I saw a new heaven and a new earth; that is, a new universe; for we suppose the world to be made up of heaven and earth. By the new earth, I understand a new state for the bodies of men, as well as a heaven for their souls. This world is not now newly created, but newly opened, and filled with all those who were the heirs of it. The new heaven, and the new earth, will not then be distinct; the very earth of the saints, their glorified bodies, will now be spiritual and heavenly, and suited to those pure and bright mansions. To make way for the commencement of this new world, the old world, with all its troubles and commotions, passed away.

2. In this new world the apostle saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from heaven, not locally, but as to its original: this new Jerusalem is the church of God in its new and perfect state, set up as a bride adorned for her husband, beautified with all perfection of wisdom and holiness, meet for the full fruition of the Lord Jesus Christ in glory.

3. The blessed presence of God with his people is here proclaimed and admired; (v. 3.) I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, &c. Observe, (1.) The presence of God with his church is the glory of the church. (2.) It is matter of wonder that a holy God should ever dwell with any of the children of men. (3.) The presence of God with his people in heaven will not be interrupted as it is on earth, but he will dwell with them continually. (4.) In the covenant, interest, and relation, that there are now between God and his people, will be filled up and perfected in heaven. They shall be his people; their souls shall be assimilated to him, filled with all the love, honour, and delight in God, that their relation to him requires; this shall be their perfect holiness, and he will be their God; God himself will be their God: his immensity, his many, his infinite love, with them, his love fully manifested to them, and his grace which is upon them, will be their perfect happiness; then he will fully answer the character of the relation on his part, as they shall do on their part.

4. This new and blessed state will be free from all trouble and sorrow; for, (1.) All the effects of former trouble shall be done away: they have been caused in tears, by reason of sin, of affliction, of the calamities of the church, and of all tears shall be wiped away; no signs, no reminiscence of former sorrows shall remain, any further than to make their present felicity the greater. God himself, as their tender Father, with his kind hand, shall wipe away the tears of his children; and they would not have been without those tears, when God shall come and wip them away. (2.) All the causes of future sorrow shall be for ever removed; There shall be neither death, nor pain; and therefore no sorrow.
nor crying: these are things incident to that state in which they were before, but now all former things are joined and united.

5. The truth and certainty of this blessed state are ratified by the word and promise of God, and ordered to be committed to writing, as matter of perpetual record, v. 5, 6. The subject-matter of this vision is so great, and of so great importance to the church and people of God, that they have need of the fullest assurances of it; and God therefore from heaven repeats and ratifies the truth thereof. Besides, many ages must pass between the time when this vision was given forth, and the accomplishment of it, and many great trials must intervene; and therefore God would have it committed to writing, for perpetual memory, and continual use to his people. Observe, (1.) The certainty of the promise averred; These words are faithful and true; and it follows, It is done; as sure as if it were done already. We may and ought to take God's promise as present payment; if he has said, he makes all things new; it is done. (2.) He gives us his titles of honour as a pledge or surety of the full performance, even those titles of Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. As it was his glory, that he gave the rise and beginning to the world, and to his church, it will be his glory to finish the work begun, and not to leave it imperfect. As his power and will were the first cause of all things, his pleasure and glory are the last end, and he will not lose his design; for then he would no longer be the Alpha and Omega. Many men may begin designs which they can never bring to perfection; but the counsel of God shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. (3.) The desires of his people toward this blessed state, are another evidence of the truth and certainty of it; they thirst after a state of sinless perfection, and the uninterrupted enjoyment of God; and God has wrought in them these longing desires which cannot be satisfied with any thing else, and therefore would be the torment of the soul if it were denied; but those desires would be inconsistent with the goodness of God, and his love to his people, to create in them holy and heavenly desires, and then deny them their proper satisfaction; and therefore they may be assured, when they have overcome their present difficulties, he will give them of the fountain of the water of life freely.

6. The greatness of this future felicity is declared and illustrated, (1.) By the freeness of it; it is the free gift of God; he gives of the water of life freely: this will not make it less, but more grateful to his people. (2.) The fulness of it; the people of God then lie at the fountain-head of all blessedness, they inherit all things; (v. 7.) enjoying God, they enjoy all things, he is All in all. (3.) By the tenure and title by which they enjoy this blessedness; by right of inheritance, as the sons of God; a title of all other possessions, as of all the earth, is founded on this near and endeared a relation to God himself, the most sure and indefeasible, that can no more cease than the relation from which it results. (4.) By the vastly different state of the wicked; their misery helps to illustrate the glory and blessedness of the saints, and the distinguishing goodness of God toward them, v. 8. Here observe, [1.] The sins of those who perish, among which are first mentioned their corruption, or unbelief. The fearful lead the van in this black list; they thrust into unconquered, the difficulties of religion, and their slavish fear proceeded from their unbelief; but those who were so dastardly as not to dare to take up the cross of Christ, and discharge their duty to him, were yet so desperate as to run into all manner of abominable wickedness—murder, adultery, sorcery, idolatry, and lying. [2.] Their punishment: They have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone: which is the second death. First, They could not burn at a stake for Christ, but they must burn in hell for sin. Secondly, They must die another death after their natural death; the agonies and terrors of the first death will consign them over to the far greater terrors and agonies of eternal death; to die and to be always dying. Thirdly, This misery will be their proper part and portion, what they have justly deserved, what they have in effect chosen, and what they have prepared themselves for by their sins. Thus the misery of the damned will illustrate the blessedness of those that are saved, and the blessedness of the saved will aggravate the misery of those that are damned.

9. And there came unto me one of the seven angels who had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. 10. And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, 11. Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal; 12. And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: 13. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. 14. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. 15. And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. 16. And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. 17. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel. 18. And the building of the wall of it was of jasper; and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. 19. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; 20. The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysolaprus; the eleventh, a jacint; the twelfth, an amethyst. 21. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

We have already considered the introduction to the vision of the new Jerusalem in a more general idea of the heavenly state; we now come to the vision itself; where observe,
I. The person that opened the vision to the apostle—one of the seven angels, that had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, v. 9. God has a variety of work and employment for his angels; sometimes they are to sound the trumpet of Divine Providence, and give fair warning to a careless world; sometimes they are to pour out the vials of God’s anger upon impenitent sinners; and sometimes to discover things of a heavenly nature to those that are the heirs of salvation; they readily execute every commission they receive from God; and when this world shall be at an end, yet the angels shall have to give an account of the great work God in proper pleasure has wrought to all eternity.

II. The place from which the apostle had this glorious view and prospect; he was taken, in ecstasy, into a high mountain; from such situations men usually have the most distinct views of adjacent cities; they who would have clear views of heaven, must get near heaven as they can, into the mount of vision, the mount of meditation and faith, from where God will shew the future state.

III. The subject-matter of the vision—the bride, the Lamb’s wife, (v. 10.) that is, the church of God in her glorious, perfect, triumphant state, under the resemblance of Jerusalem, having the glory of God shining in its lustre, as uxor splendens raditæ maritï— the bride comely through the comeliness put on her by her husband; glorious in her relation to Christ, in his image now perfected in her, and in his favour shining upon her; and now we have a large description of the church triumphant under the emblem of a city, far exceeding in riches and splendour all the cities of this world; and this new Jerusalem is here represented to us, both in the exterior and the interior part of it.

1. The exterior part of the city—the wall, and the gates; the wall for security, and the gates for entrance.

(1.) The wall for security. Heaven is a safe state; those that are there, are inclosed with a wall, that separates them, and secures them from all evils and enemies: now here, in the account of the wall, we observe, [1.] The height of it, which, we are told, is very high, seventy yards, (v. 17.) sufficient both for ornament and security. [2.] The matter of it; it is not made of stone, but of Jasper; a most precious stone, for firmness and lustre; (v. 11.) this city has a wall that is impregnable as well as precious. [3.] The form of it was very regular and uniform; it was four-square, the length as large as the breadth. In the new Jerusalem all shall be equal in purity and perfection; there shall be an absolute uniformity in the church triumphant; a thing wanted and wished for on earth, but not to be expected till there. [4.] The walking of the wall; (v. 15, 16.) twelve thousand furlongs each way, each side, which is forty-eight thousand furlongs in the whole compass, or fifteen hundred German miles; here is room sufficient for all the people of God; many mansions in their Father’s house.

[5.] The foundation of the wall, for heaven is a city that hath her foundations; (v. 19.) the promise and promise-fulfilling Jehovah God, Christ, are the strong foundations of the church’s stability, and blessedness; the foundations are described by their number, and by their matter; by their number—twelve; alluding to the twelve apostles, (v. 14.) whose gospel-doctrines are the foundations upon which the church is built, Christ himself being the chief Corner-stone; and as to the matter of these foundations, it was various and precious, set forth by twelve sorts of precious stones, denoting the variety and excellency of the doctrines of the gospel, or of the graces of the Holy Spirit, or the personal excellences of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(2.) The gates for entrance. Heaven is not inaccessible; there is a way opened into the holiest of all; there is a free admission to all those that are sanctified; they shall not find themselves shut out. Now as to these gates, observe, [1.] Their number; they are twelve gates, answering to the twelve tribes of Israel. All the true Israel of God shall have entrance into the new Jerusalem, as every tribe had into the earthly Jerusalem. [2.] Their guards which were placed upon them—twelve angels; to admit and receive the several tribes of the spiritual Israel, and to keep out others. [3.] The inscription on the gates—the names of the twelve tribes. They have a right to the tree of life, and to enter through the gates into the city. [4.] The situation of the gates. As the city had four equal sides, answering to the four quarters of the world, east, west, north, and south; so in each side there were three gates, signifying that from all quarters of the earth there shall be some who shall get safe to heaven and be received there, and that there is as free entrance from one part of the world as from the other; for in Christ there is neither Jew, nor Greek, Barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free; men of all nations, and languages, who believe on Christ, have by him access to God in grace here, and in glory hereafter. [5.] The materials of these gates; they were all of pearls, and yet with great variety, every gate one pearl; either one single pearl of that vast bigness, or one single sort of pearl. Christ is the Pearl of great price, and he is our Way to God. There is nothing magnificent enough in this world fully to set forth the glory of heaven. Could we, in the glass of a strong imagination, contemplate such a city as is here described, even as to the exterior part of it, such a wall, and such gates, how wondrous, how glorious, would the prospect be! And yet this is but a faint and dim representation of what heaven is in itself.

22. And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. 23. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. 24. And the nations of them which are saved, shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. 25. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. 26. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. 27. And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they who are written in the Lamb’s book of life.

Now we come to take a view of the interior part of the new Jerusalem. You have seen its strong wall, and stately gates, and glorious guards; now we are to be led through the gates into the city itself; and the first thing which we observe there is, the street of the city, which was pure gold, like transparent glass, v. 21. The saints in heaven tread upon gold. The new Jerusalem has its several streets. There is the most exact order in heaven; every saint has his proper mansion. There is converse in heaven; the saints are then at rest; but it is not a mere passive rest; it is not a state of sleep, and inactivity, but a state of delightful motion; the nations that are saved, walk in the light of it; they walk with Christ in white; they have communion not only with God, but with one another; and all their steps are firm and clean, they are pure and clear as gold and transparent glass.

1. The temple of the new Jerusalem, which was no sooner set up in the midst of the earth by the Lord, than they washed in the blood of the Lamb, which was shed, and the blood of God Almighty; and there was no more night; and there was no more death, or sickness, or corruption, or curse; and the temple of God was the Light thereof. There the saints are above the need of ordinances, which were the means of their preparation for heaven. When the end is attained, the means are no longer useful. Perfect and immediate communion with God will more than supply the place of gospel-institutions.

2. The light of this city. Where there is no light, there can be no lustre, nor pleasure. Heaven is the inheritance of the saints in light. But what is that light? There is no sun nor moon shining there, v. 23. Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun. What a dismal world would this be, if it were not for the light of the sun! What is there in heaven, that supplies the want of it? There is no want of the light of the sun. For it is God's glory and perfection, and the Lamb is the Light thereof. God in Christ will be an everlasting Fountain of knowledge and joy to the saints in heaven; and if so, there is no need of the sun or moon, any more than we here need to set up candles at noon day, when the sun shineth in its strength.

3. The inhabitants of this city; they are described here several ways. (1.) By their numbers—whole nations of saved souls; some out of all nations, and many out of some nations, who were sealed on earth, are saved in heaven. (2.) By their dignity—some of the kings and princes of the earth; great kings. God will have some of all ranks and degrees of men to fill the heavenly mansions, high and low; and when the greatest kings come to heaven, they will see all their former honour and glory swallowed up of this heavenly glory that so much excels. (3.) Their continual adoration and entrance into this city; The gates shall never be shut. There is no night, and therefore no need of shutting up the gates. Some one or other is coming in every hour and moment; and those that are sanctified, always find the gates open; they have an abundant entrance into the kingdom.

4. The accommodations of this city; all the glory and honour of the nations shall be brought into it; whatever is excellent and valuable in this world, shall be there enjoyed in a more refined kind, and to a far greater degree; brighter crowns, a better and more enduring substance, more sweet and satisfying feasts, a more glorious attendance, a truer sense of honour, and far higher posts of honour, a more glorious temper of mind, and a form and a countenance more glorious than ever were known in this world.

And lastly, the unmixed purity of all who belong to the new Jerusalem, v. 27. (1.) There the saints shall have no impure thing remain in them. In the article of death they shall be cleansed from every thing that is of a defiling nature. Now they feel a sad mixture of corruption with their graces, which hinders them in the service of God, interrupts their communion with him, and intercepts the light of his countenance; but, at their entrance into the house of God, they shall be washed in the laver of Christ's blood, and presented to the Father without spot. (2.) There the saints shall have no impure persons admitted among them. In the earthly Jerusalem there will be a mixed communion, after all the care that can be taken; some roots of bitterness will spring up to trouble and defile Christian societies; but in the new Jerusalem there is a society perfectly pure; free, [1.] From such as are openly profane. There are none admitted into heaven, who work abominations. In the churches on earth, sometimes abominable things are done, solemn ordinances profaned, and prostituted to men openly vicious, for worldly ends; but no such abominations can have place in heaven. [2.] Free from hypocrites, such as make lies, say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie. These will creep into the churches of Christ on earth, and may lie concealed there a long time, perhaps all their days; but they cannot intrude into the new Jerusalem, which is wholly reserved for those that are called, and chosen, and faithful; who are all written, not only in the register of the visible church, but in the Lamb's book of life.

CHAP. XXII.

In this chapter, we have, I. A further description of the heavenly state of the church, v. 1. 5. 11. A confirmation of this and all the other visions of this book, v. 6. 19. III. The conclusion, v. 20, 21.

1. AND he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. 2. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side the river, was there the tree of life, which bear twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. 3. And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: 4. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. 5. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever.

The heavenly state which was before described as a city, and called the new Jerusalem, is here described as a paradise; alluding to the earthly paradise which was lost by the sin of the first Adam; here is another paradise restored by the second Adam. A paradise in a city, or a whole city in a paradise! In the first paradise there were only two persons to behold the beauty and taste the pleasures of it; but in this second paradise whole cities and nations shall find abundant delight and satisfaction. And here observe,

1. The river of paradise: the earthly paradise was well watered; no place can be pleasant or fruitful that is not so. This river is described, (1.) By its fountain-head—the throne of God, and the Lamb. All our springs of grace, comfort, and glory, are in God; and all our streams from him, through the mediation of the Lamb. (2.) By its quality—pure, and clear as crystal. All the streams of earthly comfort are muddy; but these are clear, salutary, and refreshing, giving life, and preserving life, to those who drink of it.

2. The tree of life, in this paradise. Such a tree there was in the earthly paradise, Gen. 2. 9. This far excels it. And now as to this tree, observe, (1.) The situation of it—in the midst of the street, and on either side the river; or, as it might have been better rendered, in the midst between the terras walk and the river. This tree of life is fed by the pure waters of the river that comes from the throne of God. The presence and perfections of God furnish out all the glory and blessedness of heaven. (2.) The fruitfulness of this tree. [1.] It brings forth many sorts of fruit, twelve sorts, suited to the refined taste of all the saints. [2.] It brings forth fruit at all times; yieldeth its fruit every month; this tree is never empty, never barren; there is always fruit upon it. In heaven there is not only a variety of pure and satisfying pleasures, but a continuance of them, and always fresh. [3.] The tree is not only pleasant, but wholesome. The presence of God in heaven is the health and happiness of the saints; there they find in him a remedy for all their former maladies, and are preserved by him in the most healthful and vigorous state.

3. The perfect freedom of this paradise from every thing that is evil; (v. 3.) There shall be no more curse; no accursed serpent to be seen there, as there was in the earthly paradise. Here is the great excellency of this paradise—the Devil has nothing to do there; he cannot draw the saints from serving God to be subject to himself, as he did our first parents, nor can he so much as disturb them in the service of God.

4. The supreme felicity of this paradiseiscal state. (1.) There the saints shall see the face of God; there they shall enjoy the beatific vision. (2.) God will own them, as having his seal and name on their foreheads. (3.) They shall reign with him for ever; their service shall be not only freedom, but honour and dominion. (4.) All this shall be with perfect knowledge and joy. They shall be full of wisdom and comfort, continually walking in the light of the Lord; and this not for a time, but for ever and ever.

6. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. 7. Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of this book. 8. And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel who shewed me these things. 9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them who keep the sayings of this book: worship God. 10. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand. 11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. 12. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. 13. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last. 14. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. 15. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. 16. I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offpring of David, and the bright and morning star. 17. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of this prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: 19. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

We have here a solemn ratification of the contents of this book, and particularly of this last vision; though some think it may not only refer to the whole book, but to the whole New Testament, yea, to the whole Bible, completing and confirming the canon of scripture. And here, 1. This is confirmed by the most natural and obvious consequence of these discoveries; he is the Lord God, faithful and true, and so are all his sayings. 2. By the messengers he chose to reveal these things to the world; the holy angels shewed them to holy men of God; and God would not employ his saints and angels in deceiving the world. 3. They will soon be confirmed by their accomplishment; they are things that must shortly be done; Christ will make haste, he will come quickly, and put all things out of doubt; and then they will prove the wise and happy of those who have believed and kept his words. 4. By the integrity of that angel who had been the apostle's guide and interpreter in these visions; that integrity was such, that he not only refused to accept religious adoration from John, but once and again reproved him for it. He who was so tender of the honour of God, and so displeased with what was a wrong to God, would never come in his name to lead the people of God into mere dreams and delusions: and it still is a further confirmation of the sincerity of this apostle, that he confesses his own sin and folly, into which he had now again relapsed, and he leaves this his falling on perpetual record; this shews he was a faithful and an impartial writer. 5. By the order given to leave the book of the prophecy open, to be read and known, that all, that they might labour to understand it, that they might make their hearts to go to it, and compare the prophecy with the event; God here deals freely and openly with all; he does not speak in secret, but calls every one to witness to the declarations here made, v. 10. 6. By the effect this book, thus kept open, will have upon men; those that are filthy and unjust, will take that occasion from thence to be more so, but it will confirm, strengthen, and add colour to that which is true. Further, those that are upright with God, it will be a savour of life to them, and of death to others, and so will appear to be from God, v. 12. 7. It will be Christ's rule of judgment at the great day; he will dispense rewards and punishments to men according as their works agree or disagree with the word of God; and therefore that word itself must needs be faithful and true. 8. It is the word of him who is the Author, Finisher, and Governor of the world, with a seal of his own, v. 13, 14. He is the First and the Last, and the Saviour of men from first to last, and so is his word too; and he will by this word give to his people, who conform them selves to it, a right to the tree of life, and an entrance into heaven: and this will be a full confirmation of the truth and authority of his word, since it contains the title and evidence of that confirmed state of holiness and happiness that remains for his people in heaven. 9. It is a book that condemns and excludes... from heaven all wicked, unrighteous persons, and particularly those that love and make lies, (v. 15.) and therefore can never be itself a lie. 10. It is confirmed by the testimony of Jesus, who is the Spirit of prophecy. And this Jesus, as God, is the Root of David, though, as Man, his Offspring: a Person in whom all uncreated and created excellences meet; too great and too good to deceive his churches and the world. He is the Fountain of all light, the bright and the morning Star; and as such has given to his churches this morning light of prophecy, to assure them of the light of that perfect day that is approaching. 11. It is confirmed by an open and general invitation to all, to come and partake of the promises and privileges of the gospel, those streams of the water of life; these are tendered to all who feel in their souls a thirst which nothing in this world can quench. 12. It is confirmed by the joint testimony of the Spirit of God, and that gracious spirit that is in all the true members of the church of God; the Spirit and the bride join in testifying the truth and excellency of the gospel. 13. Lastly, It is confirmed by a most solemn sanction, condemning and cursing all who should dare to corrupt or change the word of God, either by adding to it, or taking from it; (v. 18, 19.) He that adds to the word of God, draws down upon himself all the plagues written in this book; and he who takes any thing away from it, cuts himself off from all the promises and privileges of it; this sanction is like a flaming sword, to guard the canon of the scripture from profane hands. Such a fence as this, God set about the law, (Deut. 4. 2.) and the whole Old Testament, (Mal. 4. 4.) and now in the most solemn manner about the whole Bible; assuring us that it is a book of the most sacred nature, divine authority, and of the last importance, and therefore the peculiar care of the great God.

20. He who testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. 21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

We are now come to the conclusion of the whole; and that in three things; 1. Christ's farewell to his church. He seems now, after he had been discovering these things to his people on earth, to take leave of them, and return to heaven; but he parts with them in great kindness, and assures them it shall not be long before he comes again to them; Behold, I come quickly: as when he ascended into heaven after his resurrection, he parted with a promise of his gracious presence, so here he parts with a promise of a speedy return. If any say, "Where is the promise of his coming, when so many ages are now past since this was written?" Let them know he is not slack to his people, but long-suffering to his enemies; his coming will be sooner than they are aware, sooner than they are prepared, sooner than they desire; and to his people it will be seasonable; the vision is for an appointed time, and will not tarry; he will come quickly; let this word be always sounding in our ear, and let us give all diligence, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot or blameless. 2. The church's hearty echo to Christ's promise: (1.) Declaring her firm belief of it; Amen, so it is, so it shall be. (2.) Expressing her earnest desire of it; Even so, come Lord Jesus; make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like a roe, or like a young hart on the mountains of spices. Thus beats the pulse of the church, thus breathes that gracious Spirit which actsuates and informs the mystical body of Christ; and we should never be satisfied, till we find such a Spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for the blessed hope, and glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; this is the language of the church of the first-born, and we should join with them, often putting ourselves in mind of his promise. What comes from heaven in a promise, should be sent back to heaven in a prayer. "Come, Lord Jesus, put an end to this state of sin, sorrow, and temptation; gather thy people out of this present evil world, and take them up to heaven, that state of perfect purity, peace, and joy, and so finish thy great design, and fulfill all that word in which thou hast caused thy people to hope." 3. The apostolical benediction which closes the whole; The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen. Here observe, (1.) The Bible ends with a clear proof of the Godhead of Christ, since the Spirit of God teaches the apostle to bless his people in the name of Christ, and to beg from Christ a blessing for them; this is a proper act of adoration. (2.) Nothing should be more desired by us than that the grace of Christ may be with us in this world, to prepare us for the glory of Christ in the other world. It is by his grace that we must be kept in a joyful expectation of his glory, fitted for it, and preserved to it; and his glorious appearance will be welcome and joyful to those that are partakers of his grace and favour here; and therefore to this most comprehensive prayer we should always add our hearty Amen; most earnestly thirsting after greater measures of the gracious influences of the blessed Jesus in our souls, and his gracious presence with us, till glory has perfected all his grace towards us, for he is a Sun and a Shield, he gives grace, and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.
